Iuno et the Paragon of Cardinals Pyramus and Thisbie.

To the moste puissaunt prince, and our moste redoubted Souereigne Edwarde the sixthe, by the Grace of God Kyng of Englande, Fraunce, and Irelande, defendour of the feith, and on yearth next & immediately vnder God, of the churches of Englande and Irelande the supreme head, your moste humble, louyng, & obedient subiecte, Nicolas Udal wisheth all grace and peace from God, with long & thesame moste prosperous Reigne ouer vs, in all honour, health, and condigne felicitee.

MOste noble & moste woorthie Soueraigne it might in me so basse and simple a persone, appere no small presumpcion to wryte vnto your Emperiall Maiestee, wer not the cause of our publique gratulacions so iust and so great, that no man, what euer he bee, hauyng occasion to wryte, maie thynke hymselfe void of eryme, if he should omitte to declare and testifie the vnestimable coumforte and ioye, whiche your vniuersall moste louyng and obedient subiectes dayly more and more dooe take of your Maiestees singular good procedynges and moste excellent towardenesse. For where by the space of many yeres vntill it pleased the goodnesse of God to sende you vnto vs, the earnest praiers of all Englande was, that we might haue a Prince: and after the tyme of your natiuitee, whan God had so graciously heard our petitions, we eftsons praied that ye might haue grace to folowe the godly steppes and procedynges of your moste noble father, euerie man seeth now in your maiestee suche towardenesse of vertue and godly zele, that we haue conceiued no lesse then an vndoubted hope, that ye will (by Goddes gouernaunce) ferre passe your said father, to whom our daily wysshinges and praiers thought it enough to haue you eguall. We all see in your highnesse suche liuely sparkes of vertue and Christian regimente toward, that we cannot but thynke Englande the moste fortunate Royalme that euer was, to whom God hath geuen suche a Kyng, as in his minoritee of tendre babehood, learneth to haue mynde on his function, and to consider whose ministre he is. If Royalmes (after the sayyng of Plato) are than and neuer els in blissed state, whan either

Philosophiers, that is to saie, suche as knowe and loue God, dooe reigne ouer thesame, ozels the kynges geue theimselfes to philosophie, that is to saie to the due knowelage of God, to the discipline of vertue, and to the vpright execucion of their office towardes all people: how happie are we Englishemen of suche a kyng in whose childehood appereth as perfect grace, vertue, godly zele, desire of litterature, grauitee, prudence, iustice, and magnanimitee, as hath heretofore been found in moste kynges of mature age, of full discrecion of auncient reigne, and of passyng high estimacion. But suche is the goodnesse of God, that to a people eagrely houngreyng and thirstyng his iustice, earnestly sekyng the waies of his trueth, tendrely enbracyng his moste holy woorde, readily acceptyng the grace of his ghospell, willyngly conformyng theimselfes to the syncere doctrine of his commaundementes, he forgeatteth not to geue a sapient kyng and gouernour. And that God hath of a singular fauour and mercie towardes this Royalme of Englande sent your grace to reigne ouer vs, the thyng self by the wholle processe dooeth declare: the summe wherof I shall in a shozt discourse no mozе but briefly touche and passe ouer, leste I might semerather to haue sought an occasion in the waie of flaterie to extolle you and your progenie, then as this present cause enforceth me, to geue due testimonie of the trueth. In dede your singuler excellencie in all kyndes of princely towardenesse is suche, that no place, no tyme, no cause, no booke, no persone either in publique audience ozels in priuate compaignie maketh any mencion of your Maiestee, but he thynketh hymself euen of a verai conscience bound to powdre thesame with manyfold praises of your incompatable vertues and giftes of grace. All whiche praises and magnifiyng though thei bee in dede muche inferiour to your moste woorthie desertes hithertoo, yet your Maiestee must take and repute, not as a matier of insolencie by your moste louyng and feithfull subiectes ministred vnto you, but rather as a thyng wrought in theim by the instincte of God to admonisshe you of the Regall estate that he hath called you vnto: not as a prouocacion of worldely glozіyng in your self, but as an instrumente of admonicion to continue you in remembraunce of thankes geuyng and of dischargeyng your office: not as the baites of flaterie menyng to fede your Maiestee in any conceipte of pryde, but rather as a glasse wherin to beholde yourself what ye are, and how ye ought to continue: not as the pleasaunt tickeyng oz clawyng of adulacion, but rather as a caucion that ye dooe nothyng in all your lyfe whereby ye maie bee found oz thought vnwoorthie the laude that is geuen you: and finally, not as a nourishemente of any humain vanitee, but rather as a spurre of exhortacion, not onely to beware that ye goe not backe, ne degenerate, oz decline from the godly trade of religion, of vertue, of litterature, of prudence, of benignitee, of iustice, of princely regimente that ye are now entreed into: but also that ye procede as ye haue begoonne, and still goe forward encreaceyng in all godlynesse, that your procedynges and consummacion maie bee answerable to your most princely and Christian begynnynges. Neither is there any subiecte of yours woorthie lyke, which would to any other ende oz purpose attempte to magnifie you in this

tendre age, but in hope, that if ye bee not alreadie come to the perfectiō propouned vnto you, ye will labour and cōtende (as age maie suffre,) to growe and reache vnto it. For if Philip of Macedone beeyng an ethnike and a pagane kyng, whan he was railled at and muche euill spoken of by the Atheniens tooke therof an occasion well to reigne and gouerne his people, alle geyng hymself to bee enforced and constreigned therunto, that he might proue his enemies vntrue men of their reportes: how muche more ne cessitee of well dooyng is incoumbent to your highnesse that ye maie in tyme cum-myng verifie the praises and commendations, whiche the publique consent of the worlde dooeth now attribute vnto you. How bee it we your moste feithfull louyng subiectes dooe nothyng doubte, but that God beeyng the geuer of all good giftes, the father of all mercie, and the God of all coumforte, who of his infinite goodnesse hath prouided you to reigne ouer vs, wyll also in suche wyse directe all your wayes that he will euidently declare hymself by his eternall wyse dome, and by his counsaill inscrutable, to haue purposely ordeined and appoynted you to dooe high thynges, whom he hath by his mightifull arme so woondrefully sent. For where your moste noble father of famous memorie kyng Henry the eight beeyng otherwyse by all tokens of naturall constitucion, a man hable and also lykely to haue children, had alreadie by the twoo moste fair blossomes and moste freashe floures of the worlde, the ladie Maries Grace and the ladie Elizabethes Grace your Maiestees moste noble and moste dere sisters yet liuyng, declared hymself apte to bee verai fruictefull of procreacion: yet had he continued eight and twentie yeres kyng of this Royaulme ere he had any soonne in lawfull matrimonie begotten, to whom he might leaue the succession of this his Emperiall croune and sceptre. In the meane tyme kyng Henry as a moste vigilaunt pastour ceasseth not with perpetuall trauaill to procure for the commoditees and welth of Englande, he ceasseth not by moste politique and moste holsome lawes to prouide for the establishyng of Englande in peace and tranquillitee. And because by the diligent readyng and meditacion of holy scriptures he found and obserued the true blessynges of God, and the fountaine of all grace and prosperitee to procede of the knowe lage of God, and the due obseruacion of his lawes: lyke a moste christian Prince and a true defendour of the feith, he conuerted and employed all his studie and cogitacions to the redresse of suche abuses in religion as by the moste corrupt doctrine of the Romishe papacie had by degrees crept in to Christes churche, and prauailyng through continuaunce of yeres, wer now so confirmed and established throughout all parties of Christen-dome, that the Romishe Nabugodonozor held vs in suer subiection, then euer was Israel holden in the captiuitee of old Babylon, and so should we haue still continued, had it not pleased almightie God of his votonlie mercie, to rise vp a Christian Cyrus your moste puissaunt father, to restore vs again to our freedome in Christes bloud. For the Romishe Nabu-godonozor had by wrestyng and peruertyng the holy scriptures of God to the establishyng and maintenaunce of his vsurped supremitee clymed so high: that he was not now contented to sitte in the chaire of Moses, but had moste blasphemously exalted hymself aboue all that is called God, that is to saie, had made Goddes woorde frustrate, that his moste corrupt and moste pestilent doctrine might take place. He had by his deuilishe inuecions cast suche a foggie miste of ignorannce ouer Goddes moste holy Bible, he had with his Pharisaicall interpretacions in suche wyse polluted the synceritee of Christes doctrine, he had so infected the clere fountaine of Goddes woorde with the suddes of humain tradicions, and the dregges of vain ceremonies, he had by meane of papistical troumperie so peruerted the vnderstandyng of holy scriptures, he had so defaced the puritee of the feith with the beggerly patched cloke of superstitious weorkes not commaunded by Goddes lawe, he had so perplexed the grace of the ghospell with the falsefeigned merites and weorkes of supererogacion, he had so mangled the Christian profession with mo then an hundred soondrie sectes of counterfaict cloistreers of Antichristes owne generacion, liuyng like idle loitreers & verai dranes, and vnder the pretense of religion deuouryng the cõmon weales that would maintein theim, he had so oppressed the true religion & worshippyng of God with pilgremages to dead stockes and stones of mãnes handie weorke, with transferryng the honour whiche was due to God alone, vnto Sainctes and to feigned miracles, with other kyndes of idolatrie innumerable, & with a purgatorie of materiall fyer, and (to make some ende of speakyng in a matier of itself infinite,) he had so clene subuerted all good & godly cõuersacion & doctrine, that Satã had no more power of the world whan Christe came down to yearth for to redeme mankynde, then religion was now brought out of frame by the tyrannie of the Romishe Babylon, nor God and his soonne Jesus Christe any where lesse found, then whan he was moste buisily named and spoken of in pulpites. Beeyng vnder ỹ title and name of Christe, the most eagre aduersarie of Christe and his ghospel,

1. kyng. xvii. he ioyned hymself to the Philistines, and beeyng their Goliah more nere sixtene thẽ six cubites high, neither feared, ne shamed to shewe hymself in plain batail of defiaunce, ne spared to opẽ his blasphemous mouthe, ne to drawe his tyrãnous sweorde, ne to shake his huige mourdreyng speare against ỹ true Israelites of Christes littell selie flocke, and moste presumptreously to braggue against all that euer would profesle the synceere & vpright doctrine of Goddes woorde, till it pleased God to reise vp vnto vs an Englishe David your moste noble father, who without any armour or weapon of iron and stele, without any harnesse of mannes makyng, without displeighyng any hammers in arate of humain batail, should out of the shyng of his Regall autorite cast the corner stone of Goddes woorde, whiche lightyng vpon the forehead of the said Goliah, felled his papacie stone dead & crushed it to poudre, neuer to bee hable any more to nope or to face Englishe Israel.

Our said David kyng Henry the eight had learned by the booke of Deuteronomie (in whiche booke the feithfull seruaunte of God Moses charged Deuteronomie. xvii. d. that whomsoeuer Israel should make kyng ouer theim, the same from the tyme that he wer settre in his Regal throne, should al ỹ daies of his life haue continuall meditacion, and should still reade therin, to the entente he might learne to feare the Lorde his God, for to kepe all the woordes of his lawe, and his ordeinaunces for to dooe theim, and that he should not turne from the commaundementes either to the right hande or to the left, that bothe

he

he and his children might prolong their daies in his kyngdome:) he had (I ſaie) learned in the ſame booke, on the one ſyde the bleſſynges of God promiſed to all ſuche princes as on their owne parties would for the loue and feare of God walke vpprightely in the execucion of the ſaid commaundementes, and would partely by their good exaumple prouoke their ſubiectes to doo the ſame, and partely by due execucion of iuſtice make them aſhamed and alſo afeard to ſwerue or decline from the Lorde their God: and on the other ſyde the terrible maledictions and plagues of Goddes wrathe, threatened to all ſuche as neglected the vpright obſeruyng of all his preceptes and waies. He loued the goodneſſe of God, and feared his ſtroke, he ſawe religion to bee ferre out of frame, he ſawe ſome parte of his moſte earneſt trauailes and endeuour to ſette Englande in moſte quiet and bleſſefull ſtate, to fall of condigne effecte through defaulte of reformacion in matiers of religion. He ſawe and found by experience of his owne manyfold moſte princely entrepriſes, the onely cauſe why Chriſtia Royalmes are plagued with warres, derthes, famins, peſtilences, and other mortall extremitees to come of Goddes indignacion, becauſe the worlde was ſo ferre gon a ſtraigh frō Chriſte, that nothyng was now weared ſo odious or deteſtable as his holy woorde, nothyng reputed ſo blaſphemous, as Chriſtes holy ghoſpell, nothyng ſo light eſtemed as Chriſtes bloud and paſſion. He ſawe the onely waie to Goddes fauour to bee the embracyng of his holy ſcriptures, the brounyng wherof had enforced God to poure his indignacion vpon the Chriſtian worlde. He ſawe and well perceiued that God of his mercie was willyng to ceaſſe his wrathe and vengeaunce, if the Chriſtian people would returne to hym. He perceiued God to offre his grace vnto the worlde by openyng their eyes, if leauyng their errour and ignorauncе thei would embrace the clere lighte of the ghoſpell. He ſawe moreouer that his moſte louyng ſubiectes of Englande, (whom his godly exaumple had prouoked to rendre & ſeke the glorie of God) did now hongre and thirſte the right knowleſſe of God and the knowelage of his woorde. He plainly ſawe that no waie there was to a reformacion, but by this onely meane, if the autoritee and vſurped ſupremitee of the See of Rome were extirped, aboliſhed, and clene extinct. For he ſawe his countreymen the Engliſhe Iſraelites to bee holden in ſuche extreme bondage within the Romiſhe Egypte, that there was no hope of deliueraunce, but by the onely power and mightifull arme of God reiſyng vp ſome Moſes that would in the face of thatſame moſte cruell Pharao require that Iſrael might bee freely let goe. The huige ſeuenfold headed dragon was to the ſimple inferiour people, ſuche an obſtacle that thei might not come to Chriſte, and to all Chriſten princes ſuche a terrour, that thei durſt not. This dragon beſydes the monſtrous hiſſyng of his curſes and excommunicacions, and beſydes the contagious infection of Idolatrie and ſuperſtition, wherewith he had by his whelpes the carnall papiſtes ſo abblinded the worlde, that he had enwrapped and drounded all Chriſtendome in blyndenеſſe and errour: he had alſo a mortall ſtyng in his taile, wherewith he cralled not ſmal hyndes of deathes and tormentes to deſtroie and mouthe vp manyes would once open their lippes againſt his moſte detestable & moste blasphemous abominacions. This dragon ceassed not Apocal.xii. continually to persecute the woman clothed in the sunne, that is to saie, Christes dere spouse the churche of Englande, but as a rampyng and roryng lyon, he stood euer readie watchyng that he might deuoure hir childre the Christian flocke, whiche she now groned to bryng foorth to Christe, had not the Englishe Michael kyng Henry the eight taken in hande to fight against the said dragon, and been strengthened of God with his Aungels the lordes, and godly prelates, to cast the said dragon that olde serpente and his Aungels out of Englande. This was the great harlot that sitteth vpō many waters with whom the kynges of the yearth haue committed fornicacion, and the inhabiters of the yearth been made dronken with the wyne of hir fornicacion: the woman sittyng vpon the rosecouloured & tenhorned beaste full of names of blasphemie, she sittyng araied in purple & rosecoulour, and decked with golde, precious stones, and perles, and in hir hande a cuppe of golde full of abominacions and filthynesse of hir fornicacion, and in hir forehead a name of great mysterie writen, great Babilon the mother of vvhooredome and abominacions of the yearth: and the same whooze dronken with the blond of Sainctes, and with the bloud of witnesses of Jesus. This was the huge monstre Hydra, (to whom the poetes attribute seuen heades, some eight, and some an hundred heades,) whom aswell kyng Jhon of Englande, as also soondrie other Christen princes had attempted to vanquisshe, but as soone as thei had cutte of one head, three other heades grewe vp forit, so that euerie wounde that was geuen hym was a more confirmacion and encreace of his strength, vntill our Hercules kyng Henry ỹ eight perceiuyng that no power, no puissaūce, no weapō was hable to cōfounde hym sauyng onely the consumyng fyer of Goddes woorde, prouided the Bible to bee sette foorth i the Englishe toungue, and to be sette vp in euerie churche where it might be read of his people. Long tyme endured this conflicte betwene our Englishe Hercules and the Romishe Hydra ere he could her destroied, so fast grewe vp a more noumbre of serpentine heades, whā any one was cutte of. For besydes the manifold moste monstreous heades of idolatrie, pilgremages, superstitions, counterfaicte religions, and vnnumerable abuses mo, whiche kyng Henry had to cutte of, his wheipes the indurate generacion of papistes deuised all meanes possible to kepe his authoritee still in Englande, ne left any engin vnattempted to staighand lette ỹ abolishyng of his vsurped power, abusyng the simple people with all kyndes of delusion and iugleyng of countrefaict miracles, of feigned visiōs, of lyyng in traunces, of raptions, euen vnto the third heauen of sophisticall learnyng, of holy contestacions, of subtilly inuented prophecies, of bold cōminacions and threatenynges, of voices auouched to haue come frō heauē, of peruertyng ỹ sense of scripture to maintein his power, of writyng bookes in derogacio of the kynges procedynges. And to ỹ ende there should not lacke any kynde of wicke vnelle ỹ the said Hydra & his adherētes, moonkes, fryers and other cloistrers wer hable to worke, he found meanes beside many other formes of forain warres and cōspiracies, so ferre to abuse the credulitee of the simple ignoraunt people, that he brought theim half in a detestacion & hatered of Goddes woorde, & seduced theim to auēture with al-

tell blaſt of ſedicio, to diſtourbe the cogitations of ſuch, as a noble and a good kyng beyng thā moſt earneſtely, yea (I maie ſaie) onely ſette in ſtudiyng for the eſtabliſhemente & cōtinuacion of peace & trāquillitee in this Royalme for euer. All whiche terrours could not appalle kyng Henrye's moſte ſtout courage, but that he went through with the reformacion, wiche the ſpirite of God ſo wrought in his herte & conſcience, that he ſawe it to bee neceſſarie, & hymſelf to bee choſen of God to bee the inſtrumente therof. All this whyle Englande, though not yet verai willyngly ne vniuerſally receiuyng ỹ grace of the ghoſpell offreed vnto vs, together with the moſte heauenly iewell & treaſour of Goddes holy ſcriptures in ỹ mother language: yet neuertheleſſe (as our partes & moſte bounden dueties wer) tenderly conſideryng ỹ moſt vigilaunt care and ſtudie and moſte earneſte trauaill of our moſte gracious ſoueraigne emploied for our behouf, & daily beſtowed in fortifiyng all parties of the Royalme againſt the malicious aſſaultes & cōſpiracies of ỹ ſaid Romiſhe Hydra, or any other enemies by his ꝓcuremēte: Englāde (I ſaie) ceaſſed not with continuall ꝓaier to beſeche ỹ goodneſſe of almightie God, to rewarde the godly mynde & dooyng of our kyng now wearyng out his bodye in trauaillyng for vs, & ſpēdyng his life in ꝓcureyng for our wealth & ſafegarde, with a ſoonne, to whō, whā he ſhould departe hence to heauen, he might ſafely committe and leaue his croune, with the gouernaunce of vs his moſte dere beloued ſubiectes: Thus did al Englāde by the ſpace of many yeres perſiſte in cōtinual ꝓaier: but almightie God willyng to ſhewe for what perſones he reſerueth his bleſſynges, as ſoone as we had through better inſtruccions conformed ourſelfes to the expulſyng of the Romiſhe Antichriſte, to ỹ glad embracyng of his woorde, & to ỹ receiuyng of his ghoſpel in all parties: immediately heard our lamentable peticiōs, & ſent your moſte noble mother Quene Jane of famous memorie, whom (as it maie bee thought) his prouidēce & counſailles inſcrutable had purpoſely ordeined, prepaired, & cauſed to bee borne, for none other office, but that ſhe might bee moſte dere wife to ſuche a kyng, & mother to ſuche a Prince. For as ſoone as ſhe had i moſte lawfull matrimonie brought forth your Grace, ſhe departed this worlde: as though ſhe ſhould haue ſaied: I haue doone the office ỹ I was borne for, now fare ye well. The freaſhe floure of my pure virginitie, I haue moſte ſafely cōmitted to my moſte dere ſpouſe kyng Henry for to kepe, & to you his moſte faithful louyng ſubiectes, I leaue behynd me my onely ſoonne, the ſe well that ye haue ſo long deſired, ſo ſore longed for, & ſo often craued of God. As lōg as ye ſhall tēdre his welfare, ye ſhall ſatiſfie my deſire, whō I brought forth for ỹ purpoſe. If it maie pleaſe God to ſend hym long life, I haue the full fruicte of my trauaille, I haue my death abūdauntely recōpēſed, & my roume emōg you euen to my mynde ſupplyed. I haue now no more to doe on yearth. If I haue demerited any loue or thāke at your handes: beſtowe it wholly on my ſoonne, whan I am gon from you. Thus departed the moſte vertuous ladie Quene Jane, whoſe death we haue the leſſe cauſe to lamēte, becauſe that by hope we are aſſured, that ſhe is gon from peine to ioye, frō care to reſt, from ſorowe to bliſſe, frō this tranſitorie worlde to immortalitee. We haue cauſe to ſuppoſe that God for the exceedyng great loue & fauour that he beareth to wardes Englāde, whā ſhe had brought forth to the worlde ſuch a ſoonne, toke hir away immediat-

ly of purpose to reward hir with a croune eternall, for whom all temporall and worldely rewardes were incomparably ouerpasse, ne any yearthly croune sufficient: so, that to lamente hir, is rather to enuie hir felicitee & blisse. And she beeyng now in heauen with hir moste desired loye Christe, muteth and requireth vs that our beneuolent loue and affection whiche must haue been diuided betweene you and hir, maie bee wholly transferred & bestowed on your highnesse, whom to bryng forth she was not onely well cõtented, but also muche desirous to dye. So that we are all double bound to loue your Maiestee, first because your moste dere mother was taken frõ vs ere she might receiue any fruicte of our grate and thankefull hertes for bryngyng forth to hir countrey suche a soonne: and than muche more because ỹ in your moste Royall persone is reposed all the worldely ioye, coumforte, hope, and expectacion bothe of vs that are now liuyng (whom I trust your Grace shall surmount,) and also of our posteritee. Neither can I iustely affirme hir to bee dead, that hath leaft behynd hir suche fruicte of hir bodye, whom to bryng forth (I dare auouche) she thought hir death so well bestowed, that in case she might returne to lyfe again, & bee in hir former state of maide and Quene, she would readily patiche & conuenaunte with God, on the same price to bryng forth your Grace vnto hir countrey. And so great was the ioye and gladnesse of Englande in the natiuitee of your highnesse, that the secrete prouidence of God thought it necessarie to temper our immoderate mirth and reioyeyng with the death of your moste vertuous mother (for neuer was the decease of any Quene in Englande more lamented) leste we might haue been so inebriate with our vnestimable felicitee, that the same might haue made vs proude, and perchaunce haue brought vs in suche flaterie of our selues, that we would haue forgotten, or perchaunce not acknowelaged, no nor espyed you to bee sent vnto vs as well by the moste mightie & moste woonderfull power of Goddes hande, as also of his exceedyng mercie, and fauour towardes Englande. He might haue taken hir awai ere she had come to the bearyng or conceiuyng of you in hir wõbe, if he had not specially loued & tendred our good kyng Henry and vs. It was in his hande & pleasure to haue taken you bothe (whiche thyng God forbidde) if he had not by leauyng the better of the twoo with vs, been willyng bothe manifestely to declare his almightefull power ioyned with his moste gracious mercie & tendre compassion towardes Englande, & also to bridle the insolencie whiche by hauyng you bothe still with vs (suche is mannes frailtee, and readinesse to swerue) he peraduenture forefawe, would haue growen in vs. God in takyng awai yhir at your birth did plainly ministre vnto vs, bothe an earnest warnyng & also a full prouocacõ of vnceassaunt prayeng for ỹ life & prosperous cõtinuance of your Grace beyng of nature & by ỹ cõdicion of your birth mortall as your mother was. The birth of your maiestee was the more swete, because it was so long wished for, so long looked for, & so long craued ere it came. A great benefite is muche ỹ swetter ỹ it is not obteined without great & long suit. The pleasure of a good turne is muche diminished when it is at the first obteined. The desirefulnesse of our myndes muche augmenteth and encreaceth our pleasure. The admirrion also (as who should saie) ỹ sauoryng of pleasures with some sparde of misfortune either afore goyng or in the middes attempered, graceth altogether, & maketh it the more acceptable ptable. Honey is walowethe and ouercaſteth the ſtomake, if it be pleteouſly taken by itſelf alone: but if with vineagre it bee made eagredoulce, than is it not onely delectable and pleaſaunt of relice, but alſo roumfortatiue and holſome too. The death of the moſte vertuous ladie & moſte woorthie Quene Jane your mother beeyng ſuigned with your birth, made ſuche a temperature of ſorowe and ioye together, that bothe our mournyng whiche otherwyſe ſhould ſcarce haue found any ende, was ſoone mitigated: and alſo our moſte tendre deſire of enioying your Maieſtee muche the more encreaced. We had ſo long groned, we had ſo long cryed to God for a Prince: that except he had in the moſte deſired birth of theſame, aſperſed the death of your moſt dere mother: we ſhould by our immoderate felicitee haue tempted, and prouoked hym to take you bothe from vs. It was his goodneſſe þ would not ſuffre vs to falle. For muche ſooner and ſorer dooeth immoderate ioye drounde mannes reaſon, then immoderate dolour. Thus than (as I haue ſaied) as ſoone as we willyngly applyed ourſelfes aldwell to the exilyng of all papiſtrie, as alſo to thenbracyng of the woorde of God, he immediatly fulfilled and ſatiſfied our deſires, by ſendyng your Grace vnto vs after a woondre full ſorte: as if he ſhould in plain woordes haue ſaied: Now that ye haue gladly receiued my woorde, ye ſhall haue that whiche ye cannot but of my gifte obteine, that is to wete, a Prince, and with hym all worldely roumforte, ioye, and ſecuritee, that ye maie wel perceiue bothe that nothing is vnpoſſible to God, and alſo that if ye abyde in me, & my woordes abyde in you, aſke what ye will, and it ſhalbee dooen for you. Whan I ſaie the woorde of God, the lawe, the preceptes, or the commaundementes of God, I mene not fantaſticall dreames of mãnes inuencion, (for theſe thynges are nothyng leſſe then the woorde of God) but I mene the true & liuely woorde of God conteined in holy ſcriptures: I mene his holy ghoſpell & teſtamẽte, purely and ſyncerely taken without the venomous corrupcion of the filthie dregges, or of the ſoure leauen of any the aboue reherſed peſtilencies, accordyng as your moſte noble father our late ſoueraigne lorde kyng Henry the eight with vneſtimable care, ſtudie, and trauaill, mynded and laboured to haue it ſette foorth, and to bee daily preached & taught to his people without any declinyng either to the right hande or to the left. Whiche thyng if he could not ſo throughly accõpliſhe as his moſte earneſte hertes deſire was: I truſt that almightie God who hath prouided and ſent vs your highneſſe a moſte woorthie ſoonne to ſuccede ſuche a woorthie father, will by his eſpeciall grace illumine your herte to proſpere in the wai of trueth, which your father hath opened vnto you, and wil geue you grace all thinges to perfeicte whiche your father moſte godly begãne to your handes. And although to mainteine, vpholde, & cõſerue þ kyng Henry prepared & hath now leaft to your gouernaunce, is of itſelf ſo muche matier of immortall honour and renoume, that it wer enough for any kyng to doo: yet hath God prouided that ye ſhall not haue cauſe to ſaie as Alexander the great cõquerour, whan he conſidered the great and manyfold actes of his father Philip kyng of Macedonie, ſaied: My father will leaue nothyng for me to doo. For God of a verai pietie that he had on kyng Henryes vncomparable & thelame vncreaſſaunt trauailles for the publique behouf and welth of Englande long yeres ſuſteined, tooke hym awai from this troubleous worlde as ſoone as he had prepaired your Grace in a readinesse by due succession of inheritaunce to receiue at his hãdes the sceptre & croune of his royalmes and dominions. God by a speciall dispensacion brake of the course of his lyfe ere all thynges wer brought to a full perfection, because he would declare hymself to haue appoynted your Maiestee not to liue altogether in a carelesse supinitee, but in a perpetuall exercise of all princely vertues, that ye might consummate & finishe suche regall entrepryses as he begoonne, partely in other worldely affaires, & especially concernyng the redresse of abuses in matiers of religion.

Exod. xiii. and. xiiii. Kyng Henry was the Moses whom God elected stoutly to deliuer vs out of the handes of the Romishe Pharao, & to conueigh vs through the read sea of the waueryng iudgementes of men, & the troubleous sourges of the popishe generacion swelling & rageyng against hym, & through the wildrenesse of beeyng left alone destitute of the assistence or coumforte of other Christen princes, whiche in this so noble & so godly an entrepryse might laudably settre in foote with hym, & through this wildrenesse to conducte vs as Deuter. xxi. honey, and to sette vs Englishe men in the lãde of Canaan which is the syncere knowelage & ỳ free exercise of Goddes moste holy woorde. He was the Moses, who by Goddes ordenaunce and dispensacion wrote the booke of Deuteronomie, whan he caused the holy Bible to bee turned into Englishe, and laied it in the tabernacle, whã he cõmaunded the same to bee laied in all and singular the churches throughout his Royalmes & dominions: chargeyng the Leuites, that is, the Bishops, Pastours, & Curates, in ỳ tyme of the free yere, that is, at all due & conuenient seasons, to reade and declare it vnto all the people gathered together, bothe men, weomen & children, yea & the straungiers that wer in any his citees, ỳ thei might heare, learne, & feare their lorde God. But where some of the priestes the soonnes of Leui had now in these last yeres through their ingleyng, their false packyng & their plain sorcerie bewitched kyng Henry with a wrong persuasion, and had so craftily coumpaced and conueighed the matier, that vnder the pretense and coulour of religion thei kept the woorde of God from the yes and eares of the people, beatyng his moste feithfull louyng subiectes frõ the knowelage therof with a mortall whippe made of six deadly knotted chordes, and in the meane tyme kept the booke of the lawe hidden, vntill thei had so ferre obscured, derkened, and oppressed the woorde, that all thynges wer repletc iiii kyng. xxii and. xxiii. with errour and insyncerite: it now euidently appereth your Maiestee to bee the feithfull Josias, in whose tyme the booke of the lawe is found out in the house of the Lorde, and by your moste godly iniunccions reade in the hearyng of all your people, and a couenaũte made with the Lorde that thei shall walke after the Lorde, and shall kepe his commaundementes with all their hertes and all their soules, whereunto all your people moste willyngly dooeth consente by glad receiuyng of all suche good order and reformacion

Your moste noble father was the Dauid, who of a good herte and zele entended, yea and made mocion to builde an house for the Lordes name: but we all trust your highnesse to bee the Salomon, whom God hath appoynted and by speciall dispensacion elected to builde and finishe an house for hym for euer by restoryng and establishyng the true Christian religion. Whiche thyng that your Maiestee maie haue the grace and spirite to dooe, ye lacke not the perpetuall wishynges and prayers of all your moste louyng & obediēt subiectes. The worlde seeyng these your moste princely begynnynges in this your tendre yeres of childehood, is confirmed in a sure hope & expectacio that your Maiestee will in processe of tyme growe to bee in this behalf a verai Phenix emong Christian princes, and a mirrour & spectacle vnto theim all. And certes your Maiestee is in muche other case, then other kynges of Englāde before your tyme haue been. For where (the frowarde veneſſe of fortune beeyng suche, that moste parte of thynges lyke as thei are through hir aide & fauour easie to be achiued, so thesame through hir malignaūt wiekedneſſe are more easie to bee lost again) it deserueth no lesſe but rather more glorie well to kepe & maintein e thynges well gotten, thē to acquire more to it: some of your moste worthie progenitours haue had a readie pathwaie to renoume, & haue had but an easie trauaill to succede & folowe ꝑ princenexte afore goyng in the laudable exaumple of politique regimēte, of woorthie entrepryſes, of Martiall prowesſe, of noble but yet cōmō actes of chiefalrie, of notable & famous entrepryſes, but yet enclosed within the coumpace of mānes reache. But your grace succedyng Henry ꝑ eight, shall not bee hable to satisfie nor aunswer ꝑ earneſte expectacio of ꝑ worlde, onleſſe ye doe excelle. Nothyng maie serue your grace but singularitee. Ye haue in his exaumple suche a marke sette vp vnto you, as without the sweat & labours of Hercules (of whō the Poetes feigne, that he bore vp & staighed heauen self with his shoulders,) ye shall not bee hable to clyme vnto. Ye muſt surmount and paſſe a kyng which was in his tyme pierelesſe, & a matier of publique admiracio to ꝑ vniuersal worlde. And such are your begynnynges alreadie, aswel in Marcial chiefalrie, as also i politique ordeinaūce of ciuile lawes at home, aswell in destruiyng the image of Baal, & rootyng vp of all Idolatrie, as also in settyng a further good ordre for matiers of religion: that it will not suffiseif ye bee but equall to hym. Kyng Henry ꝑ eight besides his felicitee & luckie fortune in all his moste regall entrepryſes aswell by Marciall chiefalrie as also in politique gouernaunce, besides his manyfold conqueſtes & victories in Fraunce, Scotlāde, Irelande, & elswere, besides his vnestimable high triounphes, voiages, & actes dooen bothe at home & beyond ꝑ seaſes, besides his excedyng great & many buildinges of palacies, Honours, Mainours, castels, forteresſes, holdes, blockehouſes, hauens, aswell for ꝑ strēgth and sakegarde of his royalmes & dominions, as also for the commoditee of frendes arriuyng, and the annoyaunce of the enemies, besides the defēse and maintenaūce of al his portes & narowe seaes with Carikes, barkes, hulkes, shippes, galles, & many other high and sumptuous deuiſes of shipwrights, besides ꝑ aboundaunt furnishyng of all and singular the premiſſes with all kyndes of ordeinaunce, artillerie, and other requisite prouision, besides the foūdyng, edifiyng & erectyng of an vncredible noūbre of bishops Sees, cathedrial colleges, lectures, schooles, & other Colleges for studēts i bothe vniuersitees, & so sumpteous endowyng of euerie of theim with landes, possessions, Jewels, ornamētes and all requisite furniture so muche & so large, as euerieone of ꝑ premiſſes particularly might bee iudged an acte sufficiēt in a kynges tyme to bee dooen, besides his moste bigilaunt & carefull studie

about the enactyng of a great volume of right holsome statutes and lawes for the cõmoditee and behouf of the publique weale of Englande and his other dominions, and emõg these his vnecessaunt endeuour about a reformacion in religion, & therin (as a thyng moste necessarie for all cõmon weales tendreyng Christes glorie,) the extirping and abolishyng of ỳ detestable vsurpaciõ of ỳ papacie of Rome, the rootyng vp of all sectes of cloistreers, of all coũtrefaicte religion, & of Idolatrie, together with the settyng forth of the holy Scripture i the vulgare Englishe toungue, besides all these premisses & other his actes mo then a long tyme maie suffise to reherse, King Henry was a Prince of singular prudẽce, of passyng stout courage, of magnanimite incõparable, of inuincible fortitude, of notable actiuitee, of dexteritee woonderfull. He was acõtinuall welling foũtaine of eloquẽce, a verai rare spectacle of hũanitee, of ciuilitee or good nourture an absolute presidẽte, a speciall paterne of clemencie and moderacion, a woorthie exaumple of regall iustice, a botomlesse spryng of largesse & beniguitee. He was in al honest artes & faculltees profoundely seen, in all liberall disciplines eguall with the chiefest, in no kynde of litterature vnexpert. He was to the worlde an ornamente, to his countrey a treasoure, to his frendes a coumforte, to his foes a terrour, to his feithfull and louyng subiectes a tendre father, to innocẽtes a sure protectour, to wilfull malefactours a sharp scourge, to his cõmõ weale and good people a quiete hauen and ancore of safegarde, to the disturbers of the same a rocke of exterminiõ, in hainous and intolerable crymes against the publique weale a seuere iudge, i the lyke offenses cõmitted against hymself a readie porte and refuge of mercie, except to suche as would persiste vncorrigible. A man he was in all giftes of nature, of fortune, and of grace perfecte, & (shortely to breake of in a matier of it self infinite,) a man aboue al praises. Suche a kyng hath God sette vp before your Maiestee for an exaumple, a spectacle, and a paterne of all princely vertues whom egually to matche, wil bee with ỳ verailest that is looked for of these your moste Regall & Christiã begynnynges in this yoũt tẽdre age. For mete it is that lyke as your highnesse is heire & successour of your moste noble fathers croune & treasourrs, euen so and muche more ye bee heire of his most princely vertues: and lyke as ye would employe al possible industrie, and diligẽce to maintein and ampliate the externall possessions of your empier, euen so to augmente the vertues of the mynde, beeyng the more precious possession of the twain. Neither is there in this behalf on our parties your Maiestees moste benevolent and feithful louyng subiectes any lesse hope to bee cõcriued of you for that that is to come, then we dooe alreadie fele ioye & coumforte of that we see present. For suche excellẽt begynnynges beeyng ferthered by the publique and daily praiers of all your feithfull and true herted subiectes, can not but haue still better & better degrees of continuaũce and encreace, especially hauyng suche noble & sapient Coũsaillours as it hath pleased God to prouide for you, and to geue you in this your tẽdre babehood. For that all suche wel dooynges in young kynges, and by reason therof prosperous successe in all thynges, procedeth of feithfull and godly Counsaillours: it maie euidentely appere by the notable exaumples of ỳ twoo young kynges of Israel Manasse and Josias. Whoso will peruse the bookes of the kynges, shall fynde that frõ the begynnyng of Achabs reigne vntill ỳ tyme of good kyng Ezechias chias true holyneſſe, religiõ, right knowelage of God, yea & the verai mynde to worke or ſeke Goddes glorie, laie as a thyng oppreſſed, reiected, buryed, & vttrely extinct, & in ſtede of Godlyneſſe reigned all iniquitee: in lieu of true knowelage, all was poſſeſſed with ignorannce and errour: in place of true worſhippyng of God, ſo ferre prevailled Idolatrie & cõtempte of Goddes lawes, that Iſrael paſſed the Gentiles not onely in their owne gentilitee of worſhippyng Baal and many falſe Goddes, but alſo in all other kyndes of their moſt deteſtable abominaciõs. The craftie & ſubtile iugleyng of Baals prieſtes & of the falſe prophetes for the aduauncyng of their owne lucre and eſtimaciõ, had vnder the coulour and pretenſe of holyneſſe, and of religiõ by litell and litell ſo allured, enueigled, conſured, and bewitched the princes: that thei woer vttrely blynded and ſeduced to condeſcende to ỹ wicked & couetous inuencions of ỹ prieſtes. Thei perſuaded the Princes to their waies by policies, thei beſtowed all their cunnyng clergie, and worke mãſhip of peinted eloquẽce, vntill thei had peruerted theim and drawen theim clene & ſtraigh from all the waies of the Lorde their true God, wel knowyng that the people, some for loue, some for feare, and some through raũple would without any buſſinelle folowe the trace and ledyng of their kyng & gouernour. Thei made the kynges & rewlers ſure on their ſyde, well wetyng that ỹ ſubiectes, ſome for obedience ſake of their owne accorde would, and the reſt by their cruel deuiſes might by tyrãnie bee enforced to draw after their Princes line. Wherof the auncient prouerbe ſaieth that euerie kyng is to his royaline & ſubiectes either a ſingular precious benefite or els a verai pernicious deſtruccio, becauſe that ſuche as euerie kyng is, ſuch will his people bee. Wherfore lyke as a werte or molle ſtãding i a bodies face is a more bleſmiſhe, a greatter deformiter, and a worſe diſgracyng, then if it ſtood in ſome priuie place of the bodye where either the prouidence of nature hydeth it, or manneſ owne reuerence and good prouiſion dooeth kepe it ſecrete ſo is a vice or any euil qualitee a more faulte and a greatter diſhonour in a Prince then in an other priuate perſone, becauſe that euerie his ſaiyng, dooyng, yea and euerie his looke and geſture is taken vp as a publique exaumple and paterne for all his ſubiectes to folowe: ſo that the kynges of Iſrael could not bee euill, but to the verai pernicious enſaumple and corrupcion of all their ſelfe people. But at length came good kyng Ezechias, of whom the Scripture in his due commendacion teſtifieth, that he dyd that pleaſed the Lorde in all thyng, lyke to his forefather and progenitour Dauid. His well dooynges he begoonne with the redreſſe of religion, and the extirpyng of Idolatrie vp by the roote. For whyle Idolatrie reigned, nothyng could he dooe that might bee pleaſyng to God. Firſt of all therefore he putte awaie the hill altares, and brake the images and cutte down the groues, and all to brake the braſen ſerpente that Moſes had made. (For vnto thoſe daies the children of Iſrael dyd burne ſacrifice vnto it.) He truſted in the Lorde God of Iſrael, he claue to the Lorde and departednot from hym, but kept his commaundementes, and the Lorde was with hym, ſo that he proſpered in all thynges whiche he tooke in hande. &c. Thus, duryng the tyme of his reigne by the ſpace of twentie nyne yeres, he renewed religion and reſtored the lawe of God to his perfeccion: he reduced his people to the trade of holy and vpright con-

uersation in the light of God, of walkyng in the commaundementes of the Lorde, detestyng al Idolatrie, & abhorryng all suche abominacios as might sutterly prouoke his wrathe and vengeaunce. All this whyle the subtile and craftie false prophetes and prestes of Baal dissembled and plaied mum, thei folowed the necessitee of the tyme, and for feare of the iron rodde did as the worlde vnder suche a kyng required. But as soone as good kyng Ezechias was ons dead, leauyng behynd hym his sonne Manasse a childe of twelue yeres old to reigne by succession ouer Israel in his stede: than the false prophetes & prestes of Baal thought it a fitte & a propice tyme to shewe theimselfes i their owne colours. As soone as by his death a gappe was opened to their false iugleyng, to their craftie practise, to their wylie driftes, & their subtile conueighaunce: thei anon shewed their affectios as thei wer. Thei leat not slippe their occasio to reduce Israel to the former trade of dooyng sacrifice to þ Idolles wherin thei had learned in þ tyme of wicked Achab, whereby their lustre and aduauntage had a long season come in thikke, and vnder Ezechias vtterly defaced, in whose daies thei wer of force compelled to haue the lawe of God in honour, & the same onely to vse, and to teache to the people. In these priuey thei still continued moste detestable & moste pernicious fauourers, maintainers and worckers of Idolatrie: though thei had for the tyme through hypocrisie and for feare of punishemēte intermitted the same. But the youth of Manasse beyng a babe easie to bee entised, allured, & trained to the lustes of sensualitee through flatteryng persuasions, and beeyng destitute of faithfull and godly Counsaillours that might and would protecte his tendre childehood, & bryng hym vp in the knowelage of God, in the vsage of his preceptes, was for the said false Prophetes, & couetous prestes of Baal & mete praie. Hym therefore thei enueigle with many sweete woordes of flatterie (doubte ye not,) with many woordes of cōfort, with much circūstaūce of glorious painted eloquēce, with allegeyng of many politique considerations, with many ciuile respectes of the state of the worlde þ than was, with many gaie & solemne promises of innumerable & the same right high cōmodites þ should thereby ensue to hym & his cōmon weale, with many assured warauntises of wealth, peace, & tranquillitee if he would vse their counsaill in folowyng þ waies of wyse Achab, beeyng (as thei alleged) a noble Prince, & a politique wyse mā i folowing þ trade of his forefathers, & not of suche a newefound trade of learnyng & religiō as Ezechias had lately inuented & brought vp in Israell, to þ great troubleyng & disquietyng of hymself, the grieuous annoiaunce & vexacion of his subiectes, & the extreme perill of his common weale. For Almanazar kyng of Assyria had in þ daies of Ezechias come vp against Samaria, and besieged it, & woonne it, & had carryed away Israel into Assyria: & after hym Sennacherib kyng of Assyria had come vp against all þ strong cities of Juda, & had take them, albeit God by his power deliuered Ezechias & his people & Cities, & þ Aungell of the Lorde slewe of þ proude blasphemous braggyng Assyrias an hundred fower score & fiue thousand at a clappe. By these meanes þ false ꝓphetes & wicked prestes of Baal cōpace & weigh yōg Manasse though he succeded his owne father beeyng so good & so godly a kyng, as the expresse testimonie of holy scripture cōmendeth with these woordes, that after hym was none lyke hym emōg all þ kynges of Juda, neither wer there any suche beſore hym: yet that not withſtandyng by the ſugremouthed falſe prophetes and by the couetous prieſtes of Baal, through defaulte of good and godly Counſaillours, whom (doubte ye not but this wicked rable found meanes to wryng out of fauour, and to remoue awaie from the Kynges preſence) he was ſo coumpated, weighed, perſuaded, woonne, bewitched, peruerted, and ſo ferre ſeduced: that (as the ſcripture recordeth) he did euill in the ſight of the Lorde euen after the abominations of the heathen. For he went and built the hill altares, whiche Ezechias his father had deſtruied, and he reared vp altares for Baal, and made groues (as did Achab Kyng of Iſrael) and wurſhipped all the hoſte of heauen and ſerued theim. And he built altares in the houſe of the Lorde, of whiche the lorde had ſaied: In Hieruſalem vvill I putte my name. And he built altares for all the hoſte of heauen: euen in twoo Courtes of the Lorde. And he offred his ſoonnes in fyer, and gaue hede vnto witcherafte and ſorcerie, and mainteined weorkers with ſpirites, and tellers of fortunes, and wrought muche wickednelle in the ſight of the Lorde to angre hym. And he putte an image of a groue that he had made, euen in the Temple, of whiche ẏ lorde had ſaied to Dauid and to Salomon his ſoonne: In this houſe and in Hieruſalem, vvhiche I haue choſe out of all trybes of Iſraell, vvill I putte my name for euer. And Manaſſe led theim out of the waie, to dooe more wickedly then did the heathen people, whom the Lorde deſtruied from beſore the children of Iſrael, and he wrought more wickedly then all the Amorites, whiche wer beſore hym, did: and made Juda alſo to ſynne with his Idolles, & did ſhed innocent bloud exceedyng muche, euen till he repleniſhed Hieruſalem frō corner to corner with the bloud of the true Prophetes and of as many as might bee found to bee ẏ true wurſhippers of God, and ſyncere kepers of ẏ lawe. After ſy wicked a father, (who reigned fiftie fiue yeres in Hieruſalem) ſucceded as wicked a ſoonne Amon, beeyng twentie twoo yeres old whā he begoonne to reigne. And lykewyſe did euil in the ſight of the Lorde, as his father Manaſſe had dooen, and walked in all the waie that his father walked in, and ſerued the Idolles that his father ſerued, & wurſhipped theim. And he forſooke the Lorde God of his fathers, and walked not in the waie of the Lorde. &c. Whan Amon was deceaſſed, his ſoonne Joſias was in his ſtede made Kyng. And was but eight yeres old whan he was enoynted Kyng. And where he reigned thirtie one yeres, and begoonne to reigne ſo young: yet (as the ſcripture plainly mencioneth) he did that vvhiche is right in the ſight of the Lorde, and vvalked in all the vvaies of Dauid his forefather, and boughed neither to the right hande ne to the left, vndoubtely through the ſpeciall grace of God, and the helpe of good Gouernours, who well conſidering and pondring the vngodly like & dooynges of Manaſſe, could not of their fidelitee fynde in their hertes to ſuffre ſuche an innocent babe in lyke ſorte to bee ſeduced and abuſed as Manaſſe had been, bothe to his owne perdicion, and alſo to the vtter deſolacion of Hieruſalem and Juda. For behold (ſaied the Lorde) becauſe Manaſſe Kyng of Juda, hath dooen ſuche abominacions. &c. I will bryng ſuche euilles vpon Hieruſalem and Juda, that whoſo heareth of it bothe his eares ſhall tincle: and I will wype out Hieruſalem, as a man wypeth a diſhe, and whan he hath wypedit, turneth it vpsyde down. &c. And to Josias thus aunswereth the Lorde by the Prophetisse in the fowerth of the kynges: Because thyne herte did melt, & because thou hast humbled thy self before me the Lord whã thou heardest what I spake against this place, &c. beholde therefore I will receiue thee vnto thy fathers, and thou shalt bee putte into thy graue in peace, and thyne eyes shall not sée al the euilles which I will bryng vpon this place. Thei wer bothe of theim young kynges, & immediate successours, the one to Ezechias who had extirped idolatrie by the roote, and the other to a worshipper of false Goddes & otherwyse also a verai wicked mã: And yet Manasse thrugh peruerse entiers fel frõ God to all naughtinesse, & Josias beeyng younger of age then he, did by the helpe of feithfull & godly Counsaillours applie hymself to al goodnesse, & thereby prospered. These twoo verai notable exaumples most gracious Souereigne, I haue somewhat the more at large propouned and sette foorth to your Maiestie: that ye maye marke & consider what fruicte and rewarde shal of your godly dooynges redound to yourself, your people, your Royalmes & dominiõs, yea and to your posteritee also for your sake: & partely to declare vnto your highnesse, that nexte to ỹ special gifte of Goddes grace, to bee of your owne good disposicion plyaunt, flexible, and muche enclined to vertue: the chief and principall porcion of all suche good happe is to bee ascribed to the discrete gouernaunce, the sapiẽt direccion, the vertuous trainyng, the vpright guydyng, the godly aduertisementes, the holsome admonicions, and the incorrupt educacion in vertue and litterature ministred vnto a young kyng by feithfull and woorthie Counsaillours. Wherin thyng forasmuche as it so is, how happie and blissed is your Maiestee of Goddes owne hande, who hath prouided your Grace of suche noble and woorthie Counsaillours in this tyme of your minoritee: and how muche are we your moste feithfull louyng subiectes bound to laude praise and magnifie his moste holy name, for that in this so daungerous a tyme he hath so mercifully and graciously prouided for vs, whose welth and safegarde in this worlde must wholly & onely depende of your godly educacion and vertuous trainyng, or our extreme confusion of the contrarie. And certes this your innocent babehood and tendre minoritee is the verai tyme, in whiche it maie euidently bee tryed what persones dooe feithfully tendre your welth, your honour, and your godly procedynges. Thei are aboue all precious Jewells & aboue al worldely treasoures to bee estemed, loued, regarded, thanked, & folowed of your Maiestee, whiche in this your minoritee shewe theimselfes feithful, earnest, diligent and carefull, not onely as touchyng the safegarde and preseruacion of your moste Royall persone, but also concernyng your mynde in thes your tẽdre youngth to bee furnished with litterature, with the due knowelage of God, and with suche disciplines as maie conferme you in all Princely vertues for your honour, welth, and renoume, whan God shall make you a man of yeres and stature, as your moste noble and moste honourable Counsaillours dooe their true and diligent endenour to make you a man in maniers and learnyng. Wherin lyke as Philip kyng of Macedone at the birth of his soonne Alexander the Great, alleiged hymself for twoo causes principally to reioyce, the one because he had now a soonne borne

to ſuccede hym in his croune and ſceptre, and the other becauſe theſame was borne in the tyme of ſo noble a Clerke as Ariſtotell was, to whom the tuicion, gouernaunce, and inſtruccion of Alexander might bee committed: ſo did your moſte noble father, and ſo dooe all we your moſte beneuolent ſubiectes yet ſtill reioyce, that your happe was to bee borne hauyng twoo ſuche woorthie vncles to ſerue and aſſiſte you, and eſpecially ſuche an one as your moſte dere vncle Edward Duke of Somerſetteis, to whom aſwell the gouernaunce and vertuous inſtitucion and trainyng of your moſte Royall perſone, as alſo the protection of all your Royalmes and dominiõs and of all vs your moſte feithfull louyng ſubiectes duryng the tyme of this your minoritie, might bee ſafely committed. Of whoſe fidelitee now a lõg ſeaſon aſwell in kyng Henryes tyme as ſence the begũnyng of your Maieſties moſte noble and victorious Reigne throughly tryed, and theſame aſwell in peace, as alſo in ſoondrie warres approued, neither at home onely but alſo bothe in Fraunce and Scotlande more thẽ once or twyce declared: of whoſe dexteritee aſwell in marciall feactes as alſo in ciuile affaires, and in ordreyng of the common weale: of whoſe fortunate and luckie ſpede in al his woorthie entrepriſes: of whoſe happie & proſperous ſucceſſe in all thynges that he taketh in hande: of whoſe paſſyng great clemencie and moderacion towardes all people in euerie behalf: of whoſe prudence in all ciuile matiers: of whoſe feithfull and vigilaunt adminiſtracion vnder your Maieſtie in your common weale: of whoſe indifferencie in all cauſes of iuſtice to bee miniſtred to your people: of whoſe moſte vpright integritie not onely in ciuile counſailles, but alſo in matiers of religiõ for the woorde of God purely and ſyncerely to bee ſette foorth to Goddes glorie, and to the welth and honour of your Emperiall croune and dignitee, though noman is hable to ſaie ouermuche: yet will I rather abſteine to ſaie that I could and iuſtely might dooe, then I will fille his eares with the troumpe of his owne particular praiſes, whiche I knowe hym to bee nothyng deſirous ne willyng to heare. Onely I ſhall praie almightie God (as all Englande and your other dominions with publique and theſame vnceaſſaunt praiers dooe) to preſerue & kepe hym, vntill ſuche tyme as your Maieſtie beeyng growẽ to full manſtate and abſolute diſcrecion, maie reward hym with condigne thankes for his long and theſame moſte feithfull and diligent ſeruice, and theſame thyng alſo to dooe vnto all the other your moſte noble and godly Counſaillours. For the bliſſeful ſtate that your Maieſtie endeuoureth and daily trauailleth with their aſſente and cõſente to ſette this your Empier inforceth as many as loue either you or God daily to breake out into this acclamacion: O happie kyng, of ſuche woorthie Counſaillours, & o happie Counſaillours of ſuche a towarde kyng. Neither dooe we your moſte beneuolent ſubiectes any thyng doubte, but ỹ your Maieſties godly begynnynges ſo proſperouſly & earneſtely to ſette forth Goddes woorde & glorie, ſhall daily more & more occaſion all Chriſtian kynges and princes not onely to ſpoille the Romiſhe Egypte by reſumyng euerie one his owne moſte due and rightfull title of ſupreme head within his owne Royalmes and dominions, and by aboliſchyng the vſurped primacie of the papacie of Rome with all the Antichriſtian traditions ſtuyng from theſame: but alſo in publishyng the pure and syncere woorde of God to their peoples and subiectes euerie one. And than is it not to bee doubted, but that Christian loue, peace, vnitee, and concorde, whiche hath long and many yeres through the malicious practisyng of the See of Rome been exiled and banished from all parties of Christendome, shall vniuersally in a momente returne agam to the great glorie of God, to the quietyng of the worlde, to the benefite of all Christen common weales, and to the cõfusion and discomfeightyng as wel of the Turkes, as also of al other the enemies of God and good people. And within your Maiesties Royalmes and dominions it is in the meane tyme nothyng to bee mystrusted, but that by your moste gracious prouision suche knowelage of Goddes woorde shall growe: that your people shall bee to all others a perfect ensaumple of all godly conuersacion and behaueour. And where Ezechias and Josias mainteined true religion and the vpright worshippyng of God, but either for his owne tyme and no longer: I trust your Grace shal confirme and establishe it for euer in the hertes and bowels of all your moste tendre louyng subiectes. Wherunto certes there can not be any so readie or so sure a waie, as by publishyng the holy scripture & ghospel of Christe, and by establishyng the vse therof, through moste holsome ordeinaunces, statutes, lawes, iniunccions, syncere preachers, moste godly omelies, and exposicions in the bulgare toungue. And in this behalf, if common writers in trykleyng prophane matiers doe with muche high suit make meanes to obteine and vse the fauourable acceptacion of Princes, vnder whose name, title, and protection any suche woorke maie bee the more commended and the better habled vnto the readers: how muche are we al bound to your highnesse, who of your owne mere good zele and of your owne accorde doe willyngly sette forth inp̃ Englishe toungue suche fruicteful bookes whereby all your people maie bee edified in religiõ. Emong which verily I know not any one booke, whom for this purpose so briefly, pithyly, syncerely, & familiarly expounyng the newe testamente, I maie iustely cõpare, or at leste wyse preferre to this preset Paraphrase of Erasmus, which lyke as the moste vertuous ladie Quene Katerin dowagier late wyfe of your moste noble father, & now of your right dere beloued vncle Sir Thomas Seymour knight, Lorde Seymour of Sudley, & high admerall of your Seas, did right graciously procure to bee trãslated into our bulgare toungue, so your Maiestie more graciously hath by your moste godly iniunccions willed to bee read, vsed, and studied by euerie curate and preste to the vndoubted edifiyng aswell of theim, as of all others p̃ with a desire to knowe God, shal either reade or heare the same. For as a wynnower purgeth the chaffe frõ the corne, & the boulter tryeth out the brãne from the mele: so hath Erasmus scoured out of all the Doctours & cõmentaries vpõ Scripture, p̃ dregges whiche through p̃ faulte of p̃ tymes or places i which those writers liued, had settled itself emong the pure and fine substaunce: he hath tryed out the refuse that cleued in any the woorkes of suche as wrote whan the doctrine begoonne by patchyng and clokyng to decline to insyceritee: the trashe and bagguage stuf that through papisticall tradicions had found a waie to crepe in, this man hath sifted out from the right doctrine: so that aswell in all other moste clerkely writynges, as also moste specially in his Paraphraſes vpon the newe teſtamente ſo auncientely wrytten as cannot bee emended, he bryngeth in and briefly compriſeth the pith of all ỹ myndes & menynges of all the good Doctours of the churche, that euer wrote in iuſtificacion of feith, in honouryng God onely, in repētaunce and puritie of a Chriſten maunes lyfe, in deteſtyng of imagerie and corrupte honouryng of Sauctes, in openyng and defacyng the tyrannie, the blaſphemie, Hypocriſie, the ambicion, the vſurpacion of the See of Rome, in notyng the abuſes of all the abominable ſectes and rables of countrefaicte religious and idle cloiſtrers, in bewraiyng the iugleyng ſleightes and fine practiſe of poperie, in choice of meates, in eſtemyng the differēce of dayes, in manifeſtyng of vain ceremonies vnder the coulour and pretenſe of holyneſſe crept into Chriſtes churche, in reprehendyng pilgremages with all circumſtaunces of idolatrie and ſuperſtiction, in deſcribyng of a Princes office, in teachyng obedience of the people to wardes their rewlers and Gouernours, in declaryng of a paſtours duetie, in ſhewyng the parte of an Euangelicall preācher, and what or how his doctrine ought to bee out of the Scriptures, in blaſyng the Antichriſtian decrees of poperie vnder the name of tradicions and conſtituciōs of our mother churche, in deciſyng the right difference betwene the ſpirite and the lettre, and finally in all other poyuctes or articles of our religion hauyng now of late yeres been in cōtrouerſie, Eraſmus lyke as he is no where ouer vehemente, ſo is he euerie where bothe full and ſyncere. Neither dooeth any wryter more wittily, more earneſtely, more aptely, more finely, more ſubſtancially, more pithyly, more plainly deſcribe and peynete out the vſurped eſtate, preeminence, and pompe of the biſhop of Rome, then he dooeth: aſwell in all other places where iuſt occaſion offreeth itſelf, as alſo directely (though vnder a preatie coulour) in the eleuenth chapitur of the Euangeliſte Marke. Eraſmus ferthermore is woondrefull in comparyng of figures of the olde teſtamente, in appliyng of allegories, in declaryng of parables, in diſcuſſyng of doubtefull queſtions, in ſerchyng and explicatyng of profound myſteries, wherin he euidentely declareth hymſelf, that he was a man of an excellente witte, of muche ſtudie, of exquiſite learnyng, of profound knowelage, of an exact iudgemente, of notable diligence, of wooꝛthie and famous induſtrie, of ſingular peinfulneſſe, of an incomparable memorie, and of an vneſtimable zele towardes the ſettyng furth of Chriſtes moſte holy ghoſpell. And yet dooeth he with ſuche prudence and ſemely circūſpeccion ſo temper his ſtyle, that his verai enemies (as he cānot lacke enemies enough whoſoeuer will bee an opener and teller of the trueth in matiers of religion, he cānot lacke enuie of Satās broode, whoſoeuer will endeuor hymſelf to ferther the knowelage of Goddes woorde, he cannot lacke neither priuie backebytyng nor yet open repꝛoche to ſlaundre hym, to bryng hym out of credite, to deface hym, to trede hym vnder foote, whoſoeuer wyll bee diligent to helpe bryng the ghoſpell to light: he ſhall not auoide to bee openly burdened with falſe crymes, whereby he maie bee vtterly diffamed, whoſoeuer will trauaill to manifeſte the glorie of Chriſtes bloud: he ſhall haue enough to wryte and ſpeake againſt hym, whoſoeuer will attempte to diſcouer the iugleyng caſtes and practiſes of poperie:) his verai enemies (I ſaie) that hated hym because thei hated the veritee, could neuer yet fynde how to geue hym any foile, or how to take thaduauntage of any suche holde against hym, whereby to confounde his doctrine. Neuertheleſſe whan I dooe in my mynde make a comparison of you three together, Erasmus in wrytyng this Paraphrase, Quene Katerine do wagier in procurynge the same to bee turned into Englisshe, and your highnesse in publishyng the same by your godly iniunctions to bee had in vse throughout all parties of the Royalme, me seineth I dooe well note Erasmus to haue dooen the leſte acte of the three. For Erasmus facte dyd helpe onely suche as are lern in latine: the Quenes goodneſſe extendeth to the helpe of the vnlearned also, whiche haue more nede of helpyng forewarde: and your Maiestees benefite it is, that maketh so precious a treasour common to as many as maie take profite or fruicte thereby. And in dede no Christian Prince there is, to whom the tuicion, protection, and publishyng of any suche bookes or weorkes as concerne the pure settyng forth of Christe and his ghospell dooeth so aptely or so duely apperteine, as to your moſte excellent Maieſtee, to whom by a moſte iuſt and right deuolucion and deſcente of inheritaunce of the croune of Englande, Fraunce, and Irelande, the title also of Defendour of the feith, dooeth moſte nerely, moſte peculiarly, moſte specially, and moſte directely belong. Now as touchyng translatours of suche bookes as this, although I haue at this present the leſſe to saie, because I myself haue in a small portion of this weorke fulfilled one roume of some other man that might haue been hable to dooe it better then I haue dooen: yet can I not but wyshe that emong so many your Maiestees moſte ample and bounteous exhibicions, and so many other godly actes to bee dooen, as are daily brought and offered to the gracious direccion of your highnesse, of your moſte dere vncle beeyng Gouernour of your Royall person duryng this tyme of your minoritee, and vnder your Maieſtee our protectour, and of the other your moſte honourable Counsaillours, this thyng also might bee preferred to your considerations, how necessarie a thyng it wer that some hable, woorthie, and mete persones for dooyng suche publique benefite to the common weale as translatyng of good weorkes, and wrytyng of Cronicles, might by some good prouision and meanes haue some condigne sustentacion in the same. For what Royalme almoſte (Englande excepted) hath not all the good authours that euer wrote translated into the mother toungue, whereby the people are made prudent and expert men in the traicte of all affaires, either touchyng any discipline or els any ciuile matiers. And in Germanie, what good weorke of diuinitee is there whiche thei haue not in their owne language to the vnestimable edifiyng of the people in the due knowelage of God. For what hath been or is in any common weale the foundacion of spredyng abrode the knowelage of Goddes woorde, but onely the settyng foorth of the Bible with other good and godly traictises for the declaracion of the same. What thyng hath the whelpes of Romishe Antichriſte so fiercely alwaies barked against, as at the translatyng of scripture and other bookes concernyng matiers of religion into the vulgare tongue for the vse of the people. What any one thyng is there against the whiche there hath in all Christen Royalmes (as long as it might preuaill)

cious ordined, or more terrible execucio of all bynders of tromperies and deuthes inuented, deuiſed, and putte in vre there againſt the ſecrete ſooth of bookes concernyng religion? What one thyng hath papiſtrie all tromperie more eagrely conſpired, more ſubtilly compaſſed, or more craftely practiſed to oppreſſe: then the comyng footh of the ſcripture and other diuine workes in the vulgare tongue, wherof the rude multitude might gather knowelage? Againſt what thyng hath there in theſe laſt yeres, vntill Chriſte (the fyer beeyng hidden vnder wood) wouldnedes mounte vp and appere abrode maugre the head of the Romiſhe Sathana and all his tyrannie, againſt what thyng (I ſaie) hath there been either mo or ſoner thundrebolttes caſt, of deprauyng, of accurſyng, of ſlaundryng, of defacyng, of condemnyng, and of burnyng: then againſt bookes of ſcripture matters, tranſlated or written in the mother language, and againſt the autours of the ſame? vntill the Bible and other good tractiles for the explanacion of the ſame were in Chriſtian regions turned and ſette footh in the vulgare languages: what kynde of Idolatrie, ſuperſtition, poperie, errour, ignorance, or tromperie of religion dyd not reigne? As long as the candelelight of the goſpell was kept hidde vnder the buſhell: what kyng, what prince, what tromperie, what people did not the blynd popiſhe guydes lede (as one that is blyndefold maie be led) till bothe fell in the pitte? But whan and whereſoeuer it hath pleaſed God by his ſpeciall mercie, grace, and prouidence to ſhewe open the light of his goſpell and true doctrine: there hath at once all popiſhe tromperie euen of itſelf banished awai, as a myſte is diſperſed with the heate of the ſunne, as ſmoke is conſumed in the aier, as duſte is blowen and ſcattered abrode with a puffe of wynde, as the night geueth place to the brighte daie, and as derkeneſſe banisheth at the clere lighte of the ſunne. Contrarie wyſe where the woorde of God can not yet gete any entree to take place, ny the bookes of holy Scripture obteine to bee publiſhed to the people, what ſyn doeth not ſee and what Chriſtian herte dooeth not lamente and bleede to conſider in what blyndeneſſe, ſuperſtition, errour, vnquieteneſſe of conſcience, and trouble of mynde, the ſelie people dooe liue? It is therefore no ſmall benefite that ſuche perſones dooe to a common weale, whiche are willyng trauailers in this kynde of wrytyng. For as for newe bookes of trifleyng vanitees and prophane argumentes we nede none, there are daily ſo many wrytten: but to haue ſuche woorkes made commō to the publique vſe of the vnlearned multitude, as are the principall beſt, and haue been wrytten by noble Clerkes of vndoubted learnyng, knowelage, and godlyneſſe: therin conſiſteth ſuche a publique benefite, as (if I ſhould not now bee ſuſpected and demed to hūt for my ſelf) is in myne eſtimacion, woorthie publique thākes and regarde. For (as Erasmus in his third booke of Apophthegmes, aſwell by a ſapient anſwere of Socrates, as alſo by two other prettie ſtories, the one of Leonicenus and thother of Williā Warhā late Archebiſhop of cantorburie dooeth declare) muche more good, and a muche greatter benefite to a common weale dooeth ſuche an one, as tranſlateth or compoſeth any fruiteſull booke or tractiſe which by going abrode throughout a whole royalme maie profite all paſtoures, curates, ſtudētes, and all people vniuerſally: thē any man is hable to dooe by preachyng, teachyng, or graiyng instructions to one onely paigne alone, or in one place or countrey and nomo, thoughe he should neuer so diligently, or neuer so truistie trauaile not to his owne priuate commodite, but to the behouf and publique vse of his countrey: beside that the thyng is suche as muste so throughly occupie and possesse the doer, and muste haue hym so attet to applye that same exercise onely, that he maie not during that season take in hande any other trade of buisinesse whereby to purchase his liuyng: beside that the thyng cannot be doone without diligent studie, and small charges at well of meate, drynke, and bookes, as also of other necessaries: the labour selfe is of itselfe a more painefull and a more tedious thyng, euen for a man to write or pronounce at his owne pleasure without letes or stoppes to make suche discourse as his argumente requirethe: but translatyng muste of force in maner at euerie other woorde staigh and ponder bothe the cogitacion and his penne to looke vpon his autour, to the entent he might in some tyme make thrise so much, as he can bee liable to translate. But whether of bothe a man shall applye hymself to doode, he can in the meane whyle doode nothyng els: he cannot duryng the season betoode hymself on any other occupacion for his liuyng: and his necessities and also charges in the meane tyme neuertheless doode growe as well as other menes. Wherof it commeth to passe, that a noumbre of suche as would bee right willyng and diligent to doode good in the common weale with this kynde of seruice, yet through defaulte of necessarie maintenaunce cannot: and certain that haue bothe liuyng and conuenient tyme enough, forasmuche as they see the peines of this trauaill so great, the hyre nothyng at all, and the rapcidisnesse of some maligners against the truethe so readie to depraue the diligent labour of studious wryters, are for the moste parte of theim better contented (according to the accustomed prouerbe) to plaie for naughte, then to woorke for naught. And by this meanes lye almoste all good bookes hidden from the people, and all discipline vnknowen. But thus hauyng vnder the gracious furtheraunce and correction of your Maiestee the weyed my poore opinion, I surceasse any further to treate of this matter, leste I might leme to speake as myne owne frende, whiche in dede I dooe not, in so muche that hauyng your Maiestees benigne fauour thereunto, I myndo and entende no lesse, then all my lyfe endurying either in wrytyng or translatyng, to employe my simple talente, according to the porcion whiche it hath pleased almightie God to measure vnto me. Albeit in this present woorke, nothyng it is that I dooe or iustely maie take vnto me as myne acte, sauyng the translacion of the paraphrase vpon Luke, and the digestyng and placyng of the texte throughout all the ghospelles, and the actes (except the ghospell of Marke,) to thentente the vnlearned readers maie perceiue where and howe the processe and circumstaunce of the paraphrase answereth to the texte, and howe it toomeeth there with. Whiche my rude and grosse dooyng, if it maie please youe highnesse for the respecte of my good wille and honeste zele to pardone (for as for thanke I confesse myself to haue woorthily deserued none for so rude a thyng:) your Maiesties benigne and gracious fauour shall bee vnto me suche an encouraging geyng and ſpurre to wardes hyther industrie: that emong the ryche iewells of other better learned menues ſtudies, who haue aboundaunce of treaſoures to cõferre and beſtowe to the publique edifyng of the ignoraunt people, I ſhall at no tyme bee ſlacke euen of my penurie a ſcarcitie to bryng my poore ferthyng alſo, and to caſt it into the common boxe of helpyng the ignoraunt multitude to wardes more knowelage of God, for truely there is none ſo good, ſo ſure, ne ſo readie a waie to plante the knowelage of God in mennes herres, to engraue in men true loue and obedience to wardes their Princes & rewlers, to roote vp idolatrie and ſuperſticion out of mennes ſtomakes, to bryng the people in the good mynde to deteſte & abhorre all kynde of naughtineſſe, to bryng all folkes to a perfite ſeuretee of cõſcience in Chriſtes bloud, to reduce the people to an vpright trade of chriſtian religion: as to fede their gredie hunger and thirſt of chriſtes iuſtice with the Bible, with ſuche godly homelies, and with this paraphraſe and other lyke bookes of holſome doctrine, as your Maieſties zele and deuocion to wardes God, hath alreadie moued you to doo. For of this young and grene foundacion beeyng yet but breal newly laied, thus muche good edifyng hath alreadie growen in all perſones cõſcience: that blaſphemie, periurie, mourdre, theft, whoredome, makyng of affraies, and other abhominacions are more deteſted, then they were in the blynd worlde breal late yeres gon: whiche is a token, that chriſte begynneth to dwell emong vs. For as chriſte groweth, ſo ſhal vice weare awai. And by equall degrees ſhall the loue of vertue and the hatered of vice growe in our herres. A great maigme that haue hated matrimonie, and yet haue not hated fornication, inceſte, and aduoutrie, begynne now to abhorre and manifeſtely to ſee theſe and other lyke peſtilences, and to exerciſe the contraries. Whiche thyng if ſome perſones ſhall perceaſe denye and affirme to bee otherwyſe, truly in myne opinion it is not ſo, but becauſe it is in ſo great a nõbre encreaſed, looke where ſuche corruption ſtil remaineth, there doeth it better and more notably appere, as ſtraunge thynges are commonly more wondred at. For all good and godly folke doee now woondre, that Goddes woorde beyng ſpred abrode and beyng now almoſte ineuerie bodyes hande and mouthe ſo commõ, there ſhould bee any creature in whõ any of the enormities afore mencioned ſhould reigne. But by Goddes grace and your Maieſtees moſte holſome prouiſion it is to bee hoped, that through this ſalue of Goddes woorde, and other deuout woorkes for declaracion of theſame ſette forth emõ ỳ people, if any thepe either bee ſcabbie, or els doee yet rẽne aſtraigh, theſame ſhall by the right ledyng of the head bellweather their Prince, and by the whyſtle and voice of their good Paſtours, bee reduced to ſuche a cõcorde and vniformitee, that they will full and wholle goe the ſtreight pathwaie of Chriſtes doctrine, vnder (according to his promiſſe) there ſhall of vs all bee but one folde, and one ſhepeheard, as your moſte excellent Maieſtee by ſetting forth ſuche bookes as maie edifye your people of all ſtates & degrees in the knowelage of Goddes woorde, and innocencie of lyfe doeth labour to haue brought: whiche your godly purpoſe and deſire (if I maie with your gracious pardone ſaie myne opinion) I verely ſuppoſe that no creature is of ſuche wicked herte to hinder, except if any ſuche there bee, (whiche thyng God of his great mercie and grace forbidde) that would not with his good will haue your highneſſe ſo well to proſper, flouriſhe, & growe, as to ỳ honour &

glorye of God, to the comforte and reioycyng of all your well willers, to the terrour and dreade of all your foes, and to the welth and honour of all your Royalmes and dominions (God bee thanked) ye now dooe. And doubte ye not, moste excellēt Soueraigne, but that so long as your Maiestie by thaydde and assistence of your said moste deere vncle and brother your moste honourable counsaillours shal tendrely seke and sette forth Goddes glorye, framyng and trainyng your people to walke in his preceptes: so long will God prosper you in all your affaires, who can no more bee false of his promise, then he can cease to bee God. If ye reade the fifth chapitur of Josue, and the fifth chapitur of Judith, (besydes many places mo as well in the bookes of ꝑ kynges, as also in other bookes of the Scriptures) ye shall plainly fynde how meruaillously God protected, saued, prospered, and preserued the people of Israell, so long as thei walked in his preceptes truely and syncerely, worshippyng hym and kepyng his lawes, against all the force and violence of all their enemies, wer thei neuer so innumerable, neuer so puissaunt, neuer so well appoynted for battaill, nor neuer so fierce. In the fifth chapitur of Judith emong other notable testimonies of Goddes tendrenesse ouer Israel, and by their exaumple ouer all suche as truely serue hym, it is conteined, that whā woorde came to Holofernes Prince and captain generall of the warre of the Assyrians vnder the kyng Nabugodonozor, how the children of Israell prepaired theimselfes to make resistence against hym and his armie Royall, and he had demaunded many questions of the Prince of Moab, and of the captaines of Ammon concernyng the power of the Israelites: Achior ꝑ captain of all the Ammonites, whan he had in a long processe declared vnto Holofernes how wonderfully Israel whā thei truely serued God, had euermore from tyme to tyme been preserued, & had preuailled against all their enemies: and contrarie wyse how God had alwaies plagued theim whansoeuer thei fell from hym to worship false Goddes: thus dooeth he conclude and knitte vp his oracion. Therefore my Lorde (saieth he) make diligent inquisicion: If this people haue dooen wickednesse in the sight of their God, thā leat vs goe vp against theim. For doubtelesse their God will deliuer theim into thy handes, and subdue theim vnto thy power. But if this people haue not displeased their God: we shall not bee able to withstande theim. For their God wil defende theim, and so shall we be a shame to all the worlde. &c. I therefore with all tendrenesse of herte, beseche almightie God that this your godly purpose of setting forth the woorde and glorye of God, (whereunto his moste holy spirite first moued your moste noble father, and hath now more stedyngly & effectually wrought thesame in your Maiestie,) maie neuer slacke. And than I nothyng doubte, but that, accordyng to the moste earnest & thesame vnceassaunt praiers, not onely of all vs your moste feithfull louyng subiectes, but also of all other good & godly people, he shall in all thynges moste ꝓsperously cōtinue your moste noble & moste gracious reigne ouer vs, pouring & heapyng into you as into a vessell of singular prerogatiue peculiarly chose, ꝑ right & true administracio of his lawes & of your cōmō weale, whiche by his speciall grace he gaue vnto Moses & vnto Josue: ꝑ lyke testimonie of feithfulnesse & of beyng a mā chosen after his owne herte, whiche he gaue vnto kyng Dauid: the singular gifte of wysedome, ryches, magnificence, and renoume, where with he notably aboue all others endowed kyng Salomon: the fortunate and prosperous successe in batail (if necessitee of warre must come vnto you) that he sent vnto Abia: no lesse integritee and pureneſſe of liuyng toyned with effectuall takyng awaie of superstition, then the scripture reporteth of good kyng Asa: the same grace to sette your people in good ordre, and to constitute eche where within your Royalmes and dominions, prudent, vpright, and discrete Magistrates to minister iustice, and to haue God with you in all your affaires therefore, as we reade of noble kyng Josaphat: the lyke prosperitee and continuance of moste victorious reignyng that God sent vnto Joathan kyng of Israel: the lyke addicion of yeres to your naturall tyme, that Ezechias had: and finally the luckie and prosperous old age, whiche God gaue vnto Abraham, with semblеable happe for propagacion of sede for your successe sion by suche a noble Sara, as maie bee a condigne spouse to bee coupled with so noble a kyng. Wherũto all true Englishe hertes that shall fortune to reade or heare these presentes I doubte not will with one voice saie. Amen.

To the lentill christian reader

Nicolas Udall wisheth health, grace, and peace in God the father, and in his soonne Jesus Christe our saluecour.

THou hast here good Christian reader the paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the ghospell, that is to saie, a treasour, & in manier a full librarie of all good diuinitee bookes. For whatsoeuer thyng any of the aunciente doctours of the churche leaft behynde hym, whatsoeuer in any catholike writer is cõteined, whatsoeuer any notable good expositour hath sette foorth for the syncere and plain declaracio of the newe testamẽte, the pith & substaunce therof hath this man with a clerkely iudgemente compendiously and briefly, as it wer in a summe, couched together in this one worke. Neither was there euer any worke so easie to bee vnderstanded of the reader, whiche hath had more cummyng shewed int it as by his owne annotacions vpon his translacion of the newe testamente it maie euidentely appere, in whiche annotacions he approueth and declareth himself with suche diligent obseruacion and markyng to haue perused all libraries, all writers, all bookes: as verai fewe studẽtes dooe vse to reade and labour any one autour in any discipline. Accepte this autour therefore deuout reader, and with glad wille embrace so profitable a meane and instrumente, whereby thou maiest (without any ferther trauaill then onely readyng, markyng, and bearyng it awaie,) so easily atteigne to the clere vnderstandyng of the ghospell. Reade it with a pure and a charitable herte, and with a single eye void of almanier parcialite of affeccion or of enuie: and thou shalt espye therin suche edifiyng, as maie bee mete for thy state of knowelage and aptitude, what euer it bee. For lyke as in the moste holy and blissed testamẽte there is both pappe for younglynges in the feith and in knowelage of Goddes woorde, and also sound meate for suche as are well entreed and hable to brooke higher thynges: euen so in this autour are all thynges aptely tempered to enduce and traine the grosse and the rude multitude aswell of Curates and teachers, as also of other priuate readers: to fede the weake with suche doctrine as thei are hable to receiue: to sharpen and make eagre suche as are houngrie of ferther knowelage: and to ministre vnto the learned or eloquent teachers matier sufficient wheron to grounde in suche profound and thesame right Christian doctrine. Accepte it willyngly and rendre thankes first to God, who of his infinite mercie and grace hath in these our daies sent suche a noumbre of suche good writers (and emõg them Erasmus as one of the chief and principall) not onely to geue clere light, but also to open a waie vnto the pure & perfecte knowelage of Goddes woorde, and than to our moste excellent Soueraigne good kyng Edwarde the firt, who emong the other his moste princely and moste Christian actes, dooeth so soone & so effectually begynne first with the promotyng of Goddes worde and glorie, beeyng the fountaine and groũde of all good successe and prospe-

ritee: and thirdely to Quene Katherine dowager, by whose good meanes & procurement this present worke hath been by soondrie menes labours turned into our vulgare toungue, whereby the kynges Maiestie, (whose principall desire & trauaill is to doo al thynges possible, whereby his moste tēderly beloued subiectes knowlage maie be ferthered, their cōsciēce staighed in a syncere doctrine of Christe, with a perfect framyng and confirmyng of the same in a good cōuersacion of life,) might by hauyng so notable a good matier in readinesse, bee the better occasioned to putte foorth so fruictefull an exposicion of the ghospel. For a paraphrase is a plain settyng forth of a texte or sentence more at large, with suche circumstaunce of mo & other woordes, as maie make the sentence open, clere, plain, and familiar, whiche other wyse should perchaūce seme bare, vnfruictefull, hard, straunge, rough, obscure, & derke to bee vnderstanded of any that wer either vnlearned or but meanely entreed. And what is this, but a kynde of exposicion, yea and that of ỳ most pithythie & effectuall sorte? How much therefore art thou boūde deuout Christian reader, (and especially ye priestes & Curates that either haue not been brought vp in studie of lettres and of diuinitee, or els haue not suche store of bookes, as maie be sufficiēt for mainteinyng of your studies) how much are all ye bound (I saie) vnto the kynges moste excellent Maiestie and his most honourable and woorthie Counsaillours, who of a speciall regarde and cōsideraciō of the ignorannce & defaulte of litterature (whiche hath reigned in most parte of the Clergie of Englande aswell to ỳ great detrimente, harme, and decai of religion in the Christian flockes to their spirituall charge committed, as also to their owne intolerable peril and daungier, whan at the generall daie of accoumpte & audite to bee made at ỳ throne of God, it shalbee required at their handes how & what thei haue taught to ỳ ignorant multitude for whose soules (as touchyng their institucion in the feith and in the lawe of God) thei must aunswer before a righfull iudge, whō no man shalbee hable to corrupte, beguyle, deceiue, or escape) haue by their most good policie found a meanes, how bothe ye and all the people maie with a great dele lesse tyme, studie, labour, yea and also charges, thē wer woont to bee bestowed in playyng at tables, boules, cardes, & other vnlawful games, haue in a fewe leaues a wholle librarie of good doctrine, bothe for the priuate edifiyng of euerie one particularly, and also for the enstruccion & teachyng of eche other in commō. Whatsoeuer ignorannt persone is desirous of knowlage & can bee cōtented to learne: whosoeuer is not of an herte so indurate, but that he can abyde such good bookes, as maie ferther Christes doctrine: whosoeuer is not of an extreme malignaūt stomake against the due settyng forth of Goddes woorde: whosoeuer is not suche an enemie to the glorie of God, ỳ he enuieth the benefite of Christes bloud vnto Englāde: whosoeuer is not either of suche blyndenesse that he cānot see the trueth, or of suche peruerse & froward malice that he will not, or of suche cancard obstinacie that he will against the spirite and against his conscience wilfully withstāde and resiste all good thynges whiche maie induce men to the knowelage of God: whosoeuer doeth not hate ỳ light of the ghospell: whosoeuer is i his herte a fauourer of the trueth, & of ỳ kynges Maiesties moste godly procedynges: hath no lesse cause but to enbrace Erasmus, whose doctrine the moste & best parte of all Christian Royalmes and vniuersities hath euermore allowed & iudged to be consonaunt to the trueth: & also is bound with immortall thankes to praie for the kynges moste excellent Maiestee for this his moste gracious settyng foorth and publishyng this present weorke to the vse of suche as haue nede therof. And where ỳ said Erasmus ferre otherwyse thē a great noũbre of the scholasticall sorte and other vnlettred expositours of these last blynd seasons, hath wryten these his paraphrases in as ornate a style as he hath ỳ moste parte of his other volumes: is not (as some barbarous bloũdzeers haue for sake garde & defense of their owne poore honesties alleged) a thyng vnsemyng for bookes of holy scripture matiers. For diuinitie, lyke as it loueth no clokyng, but loueth to bee simple & plain: so dooeth it not refuse eloquence, if the same come without iniurie or violacion of ỳ trueth. For who wryteth more ornately thē the Greke diuines Basilius, Gregorie Nazianzene, Theophylactus, Chrysostome: or who in latine more elegauntely thē Lactātius, Hierome, and diuerse others? Albeit in this Englishe paraphrase ỳ trāslatours haue of purpose studied rather to wryte a plain style, thā to vse their elegaūcie of speche, partely because there cānot i al poyntes be expressed in ỳ Englishe toungue ỳ grace ỳ is in ỳ latine, much lesse (of myself I speake) the pleasauntenesse that is in the style of Erasmus a man of moste excellent learnyng and exquisite eloquence in his kynde (though in dede not altogether a Ciceronian, but yet feacte, pleasaunt, swete, elegaunt, and sensible:) and partely because there was a speciall regarde to bee had to the rude and vnlettered people, who perchaunce through defaulte of atteignyng to the high style, should also there by haue been defrauded of the profite & fruicte of vnderstandyng the sense, whiche thyng that thei might dooe, was the onely purpose why it was first translated, and now by the kynges moste excellent Maiestie willed to be read. For as for the learned are hable enough to helpe theimselfes without any trāslaciōs at all. Neither are these trāslacions to bee depraued, because some reader would perhaps otherwyse haue turned some thynges, thē he shall here readeit. For no twoo enterpreters there bee, that in trāslatyng out of any one toungue into an other would agree in all poyntes of style or ēdityng, as (best for this purpose) it maie appere by the auncīēt fathers of ỳ Churche, whose allegaciōs of places of holy Scripture moste cōmōly varie in woordes, & agree not but in sense. And the same interpreter ỳ would haue trāslated some parte herof better thē it now is, would in some puinctes perchaunce haue dooen it worse. Therefore euerie man ientilly take and interprete an others labours, and beare with his infirmitie, if not in consideracion of his studie and trauaill, yet at leste wyse for respecte of his good zele, and godly entente to further knowelage. If it come to ỳ hādes of suche as can and will without disdeigne or arrogauncie take his penne & emende any thyng that his good and vncorrupt iudgemēte shall see mete to bee corrected: I suppose that besides the reward of God, and the publique thankes of his countrey, he shall also priuately deserue and receiue immortal thankes of the translatours, whose desire is to haue it well. Neither dooe I suppose any to bee of suche mynde that he would disdeigne or bee grieued to see his thyng bettered, as in this great weorke some thinges are in dede here & there otherwyse penned, thē ỳ first trāslatours wrote it. For this is as a common weorke of buildyng, to the whiche are hired many soondrie men of occupacion: and in case some mã bee makyng a doore, a wyndoore, or frame: though an other of thesame occupacion putte his hande to the betteryng & perfectyng of it, yet is not ỹ so dooyng any displeasure nor cause of grutche to the other: but rather a beautifiyng of his dooyng & a cause of rendreyng thankes to the partie that of good wille and zele without presumpcion did putte his helpyng hande to a good purpose. And semblеably in this common weorke of ỹ ghospels vineyarde (for asmuche as euerie labourer hath his iye directed to the onely marke of settyng foorth the glorie of God & his moste holy woorde,) no man meneth any rebuke or derogacion to his felowe, whan he emendeth somethyng that was to bee reformed or altered: but rather semeth to craue the lyke helpe of the other again in his owne dooynges, because it is euidente that any man can further see, and can bee a more indifferent iudge in an other mannes dooynges, then he can bee in his owne. Geuyng therefore first laude, praise, and thankes to God for all his giftes, and than to our moste excellent kyng Edwarde the sixth for so gracious acceptyng, fauouryng, and mainteinyng honest & godly studies: leat euerie man emploie his good talentes that God hath geuen hym, to the publique vse of seruyng and profityng his countrey, and to the common edifiyng eche of other in Iesus Christe our Lorde: to whom together with the father, and with the holy ghoste, bee all honour, laude, and glorie worlde without ende.

parte

Amen.

To the moste vertuous Ladie

Quene Katherine dowagier late wyfe to the moste noble and moste victorious kyng Hēry the eight of moste famous memorie, Nicolas Udall your moste humble seruaunt wisheth health, grace, and consolacion in our Lorde Jesus Christ euerlastyng.

Where your excellent highnesse moste gracious Quene Katherine dowagier, sence the tyme of your firste callyng to the estate & dignitee of espousal and mariage with the moste noble prince that euer reigned kyng Henry the eight, hath neuer ceassed by all possible meanes that in you might lye, to mynde, to auaūce, and to encreace the publique commoditee and benefite of this common weale of Englande: I fynde on euery syde so great, and thesame so worthie matier of gratulacion and thākes geuyng vnto God, that I cannot tell on whose partie firste to commence and begynne thesame: whether on your owne behalf, whom God of his goodnesse did for your singulare and thesame moste notable vertues, without any your expectacion or hope soodainly putte in kyng Henryes mynde to chose, calle, and aduaunce to the dignitee and estate of a Quene: or on kyng Henryes partie, whose good happe it was so aptely to choose suche an one as should afterwarde bee a feithful and continuat coadiutrice vnto him in all his moste deuout and godly procedynges cōcernyng the knowlage of God and his woorde to bee sette foorth to the people: orels for Englandes cause, to whose publique benefite and edifiyng in true religion al these your vnceassaunt peines & trauailles dooe finally redounde. Leauyng therfore the prosecucion of so large a matier as neither my slender witte can well contriue, nor my rude penne is hable to wielde: I shal at this present onely thāke God in you, and you in God, for caulsyng these Paraphrases of Desiderius Erasmus of Roterodam vpon the newe testamente to bee translated into Englishe for the vse and commoditee of suche people, as with an earneste zele & with deuout studie dooe houngre and thirste the simple & plain knowlage of Goddes woorde: not for cōtencious bablepng, but for innocent liuyng: not to bee curious serchers of the high misteries, but to bee feithful executours and dooers of Goddes biddynges: not to bee troubleous talkers of the Byble, but syncere folowers of Goddes preceptes therin conteined: not to bee vnreuerent reasoners in holy scripture for vain settyng out of their peincted sheathe, but to bee humble and lowely woorkers of Goddes glorie: not to bee curious disputers in the ghospel for the defense and mainteinaūce of their inordinate lustes and carnal libertee, but to bee vpright walkers in holy conuersacion of life in the rule of the ghospel prescribed. Whiche kynd of doctrine, forasmuche as no one wryter hath laboured in al puinctes & behalfes more vncorruptely or more plainly to ministre vnto ỹ simple reader, then this autour by a perpetual discourse and continuacion of the texte doeth: your highnesse vndoubtedly in procuryng thesame to bee turned into Englishe, hath not onely after a moste godly sorte bestowed your charges: but also hath in the thing self dooen vnto the comen weale a benefite by so many degrees, surmountyng and passyng any other acte of your great largesse & benignitee, as the solle is better then the bodye, as spirituall edifiyng is aboue temporal supportacion, as ghostely foode and coumforte excedeth corporal relief or cherishyng, and as heauenly treasoures excelle al worldely giftes or richesse. And in ỹ your highnesse for ỹ more spedie expedicion of your moste godly purpose to bryng Gods worde to the more light and to the more clere vnderstandyng, distributed this weorke by portions to soondrie trãslatours, to thentente it might all at once bee finished, ne the deuout Englishe readers any long tyme defrauded of so fruictefull & so profitable a weorke: ye haue therin moste gracious Ladie right well declared bothe how muche ye tendre Goddes honour, and also how earnestely ye mynde the benefite of your countrey. Whiche your countrey, what thei are not hable in facte with condigne thankes to requite, dooe and euer wil, (as thei are moste bounden,) supplye with perpetual cõmendyng your highnesse to God in prayer, whiche I thinke to bee the onely rewarde ye looke for or desire. As touchyng the trãslacions (because thei are of soondrie persones dooynges) though ther appere in them some diuersitee of style and endictyng: yet is there in the wholle weorke no contrarietee of doctrine. Though euerie translatour folowe his owne veine of turnyng the Latin into Englishe: yet dooeth none willyngly swerue or dissente frõ the mynde and sense of his autour. Albeit some goe more nere to the woordes of the lettre, and some vse the libertee of translatyng at large, not so precisely bindyng theimselfes to ỹ streight interpretacion of euerie woorde & syllable, (so the sense bee kept:) yet dooe thei al agree (euerie one as his veine serueth him) in feithfully rendryng the sense of their booke. So that if any persones there bee, either of suche high conceipte and opinion of themselfes that thei can like no mãnes dooynges but their owne, orels of suche vnmentleneſſe that thei will not well enterprete simple mẽnes dooynges, whiche theimselfes can for the moste parte sooner finde faulte withal then amende, orels of suche morositee and waiwardnesse that their stomackes cannot beare with any other mannes labours, bee thei neuer so honestely entended or bestowed: suche are in this behalf rather to bee cõtemned and lefte to their insolente disdeignefulnesse, then either to bee pacified or answered vnto.

The partes of deuout readers are with immortal thankes to receiue & take the fruicion of honeste and godly studies: the office of learned men is without depraueyng or derogacion of other mẽnes diligence, and without any arrogancie on their owne behalfes, to emploie their good talentes to the publique behouf of their countrey, and to the furtheraunce of godly knowelage: the office of euerie studious and diligent wryter is to haue his ye directed to the publique vtilitee onely, and thã to thinke his vpright well dooynges a sufficient price and rewarde of theimselfes, and so without respecte of any worldly rewarde or thãke to referre the fruicte and successe of his labours to God ỹ motioner, the autour, & the weorker of all goodnesse. As touchyng Eraſmus & the doctrine that his bookes dooe lowe, although I haue before this tyme somewhat saied alwel in my

preface vnto your highnesse before the paraphrase vpon the ghospell of Luke as elswhere: yet can I not omitte thus muche to sate in his defence, that in case any persones bee enemies to Erasmus wrytyng, it procedeth more of their envie, of their vnquietnesse of mynde, and of their hatred against the light and grace of the ghospell clerely now arisyng, and plenteously spreding it selfe abrode, then of any faulte or iust deserte in Erasmus. Who so wyncheth and kicketh at the ghospell, in dede cannot but spurne at Erasmus: who hath with incōparable studie and trauaill shewed himselfe a diligent labourer in Christes vineyearde. And truely whomsoeuer I perceiue to bee an eagre aduersarie to Erasmus wrytynges, I (as my poore iudgemente ledeth me) cannot but suppose the same to bee an indurate enemie to the ghospell, whiche Erasmus doth according to the measure and porcion of his talente feithfully labour to sette foorth and promote. But lyke as whan man is in a feure, or with any other grieuous infirmitee distempered, the better that the drynke is, the wurse it tasteth in his mouth: so whan the herte is corrupt with malice and hatred of Goddes trueth, the better that the doctrine is, the more it offendeth. Sore yies cannot abyde the brightnesse of the sunne, nor a corrupte herte the clere veritee of Goddes woorde. Persones indurate are the wurse for readyng of holy scripture: neither dooe thei of any thyng take more occasion of slaunder and offense of conscience, then thei dooe of holy scripture, whereby their conscience should bee edified. Some there bee of suche malicious hardenesse of herte, that thei can abyde neither booke, ne teachyng, ne readyng, ne any thyng els, that maie helpe or emende the ignorannt peoples knowlage: And suche, because thei would lette and stoppe Goddes glorie, depraue all good thynges, and pronounce theim to bee naught. But suche are in this behalf not to bee passed on, ne to bee hearde. For as a body corrupted with ill humours or diseases, the more and better that it is nourisshed with good meates and drynkes, the wurse it is: so a cancard stomake and a wicked herte, the more hollsome doctrine that is ministred vnto it, ỳ more it is indurate, the more dooeth it envie the publique vtilitee vnto men, and the more dooeth it striue and wrastle again the veritee. Pharao was neuer more eagre in persecutyng the people of God, the whan he was by dayly plagues and miracles moste of all prouoked to conuerte. The Pharisees neuer more furiously swelled, ensourged, or raged against Christe, then whan he alleged holy scripture vnto theim, or brought against theim the testimonie of their owne lawe whiche thei could not denye. The scripture of God is all good and godly, yet lyke as the same to the good spirite is a sure porte of tranquillitee & peace, so is it to the wicked conscience a stumbleyng blocke, and a stone of offense. Out of one and the same floure the Bee gathereth honey, & the spyder sucketh venome: so great diuersitee of operacion there is in good and euill natures. And the cōmon faulte ỳ malignaunt persones dooe allege against the publisshyng of Goddes woorde in ỳ mother tōgue, & against ỳ settyng foorth of hollsome & godly expolicions vpō the same, is, ỳ suche bookes cause se-

dicio̅ againſt the doctrine, and thā laie their facte to the doctrines charge. This hath euermoze hitherto been the pzactiſe & conueighaunce not onely of the Romiſche Phariſaicall ſozte, but alſo of the auncient enemies of Goddes trueth euen frō the begynnyng. Neither haue this malicious generacio̅ euer yet vſed any other waie oz coulour to deface the trueth, to let the good pzocedyng of Goddes woozde, oz to ſtiere and pzouoke the indignacion of Pzinces and Magiſtrates againſt the publiſhyng, oz againſt the true pzeachers and teachers therof: but onely by allegeyng that it will moue ſedicion, and teache errour: where in dede Goddes woozde is (as ye would ſaie) a perfeicte touchеſtone whereby to fynde out and to trye ſuche cancard ſtomakes, as would fain rebelle & moue ſedicion, & would gladly haue it ſo to bee. Foz other wyſe a great wōder it wer, and a verai ſtraūge thyng, if the woozde of God, oz this paraphzaſe, oz any other like godly expoſicion of the ghoſpell (whiche is in ſenſe none other but the doctrine of Chziſt and of his Apoſtles) ſhould cozrupte the readers, oz teache errour, oz moue ſedicion. God and his moſte holy woozde is altogether peace, vnitee, concozde, and perfeict charitee. Goddes woozde teacheth none other doctrine but peace, humilitee, ſubiection, & ſo muche obedience to the Pzinces and Magiſtrates, as the Romiſche Babylonians would not by their good willes haue to bee put in the heades & hertes of the ignozaunt people. But this coulour haue the enemies of Goddes woozde euermoze vſed to ſuppzeſſe the ghoſpel. So did thei by all ꝑ Martyzs, ſo haue thei dooen by the true pzeachers, ſo did ꝑ old Jewes by the aūcient pzophetes of god, & ſo did ꝑ old Phariſees by Chziſt hymſelf, whoſe moſte grieuous crymes wer, that he dzewe all the wozlde after hym, that he taught and ſowed erroneous doctrine, that he ſeduced ꝑ people, and ꝑ he made himſelf a king. And the malicious Jewes laied to Paules charge, ꝑ he begoonne to bee a ſeditious mouer of rebellio̅ againſt Ceaſar: not that the thyng was ſo in dede, but becauſe the ſame was a cockeſure waie to make all obedient people hate the ghoſpel, & to pzouoke the rewlers & Magiſtrates to ſuppzeſſe it. But the lozde, who of his mercifull goodneſſe hath of late ſēt out ꝑ clere radiaunt ſunnebeames of his holy woozde and veritee to ſhyne ouer all chziſten regions: will (I truſt) ſo continue the light of the ſame, that the ſimple flocke ſhalbee hable to diſcerne ꝑ ſpirites of men, & liuely to knowe the vngodly maligners, whiche by cauilyng & depzauing all good thynges, dooe wzaſtle and ſtrougle (as muche as in theim lyeth) to kepe ꝑ ignozaunt multitude in blyndneſſe. In the meane tyme al ꝑ ſimple Engliſhe congregacion is bound continually to pzaie foz your highneſſe, that haue foz their vſe & behouf pzocured the tranſlacion of this pzeſent paraphzaſe vpon the ghoſpel of Matthew and vpon the reſidue of the newe teſtamēt, whereby thei maie with a coumfoztable and pleaſaunt readyng in their owne mother toungue, bothe encreace from daie to daie in knowelage, & alſo continually bee edifted in true religion, nouzeled in right opinions, trained in ſincere doctrine, and confirmed to walke in perfeict innocencie and integritee of a true Chziſtian life accozdingly.

To the moste victorious Emperoure Charles, the fyft of that name, Erasmus of Roterdam, greetynge.

Eyng not ignorant, Charles Emperour most victorious, how muche godly feare, and reuerēce also, is of due congruence to be geuen, partly vnto al holy scriptures, whiche the holye fathers through the inspiration of God, haue lefte vnto vs, and especially vnto that parte of scripture, whiche maketh an vpright and faithfull relation of suche thinges, as the heauēly father eyther wrought in facte, or spake in wordes, for the healthy and saluation of the whole world, through his sonne Iesus: & beyng further priuie to myne owne vnworthinesse: where not many yeares gone, I fyrste attempted to set hande to making a paraphrase vpon Paules Epistles, for the playner vnderstanding of them, (whiche thing to doe came vpon me at that tyme of a sodaine pang, euen of mine owne minde) I did no lesse, then thinke my self to enterprise a verye bolde and presumpteous acte, and an acte (as the prouerbe sayeth) of a right daungerous hasarde, in so muche that after I had in one or two or three chapiters, taken a proufe and assaye of the worke, how wel it wold do, I was vtterly mynded to pull downe my sayles agayne, and to surceasse from the course ỳ I had afore appoynted to take, onelesse a wōderfull consente of my frendes beyng men of learnyng, had perforce cōstreyned me to procede with that I had begon: Neyther could I for theyr most earnest desyres, be at any rest or quiet, vntil I had fully ended and finished all that euer ther was of the epistles apostolical, whereas I had not taken in hand to medle, but onely with these epistles, whiche without all controuersie or doubte, were wrytten of thapostle Paule. It hath not at all times framed wel with me, ne come to good ende, whan I haue been rewled to doe thinges at the motions and pricking forward of frendes. But yet in this thing neuertheless I was not a litle proude of my selfe, that this my bold auēturyng had come muche more happely to passe, then was loked for, as well for myne owne parte that was the maker, to whome it purchased leasse enuie and grutche of men, of al the workes that euer I wrote: as also on ỳ behalfe of all suche, as are studentes and suters to attreigne to the philosophye of the gospell, who doe euery man more then other, geue me thankes for that by meanes of myne industrious labour, they haue to the better knowleage of thapostolicall wisedome, eyther bene moued & stirred vp, or els furthered. But whā I had cleane dispatched my self of this great charge and talke, I looked not that I shoulde at any tyme afterwarde, haue any more to doe with this kinde of writing: and beholde the right reuerende father Mathewe, Cardinal of Hedune, (by whose aduise & instigation I had afore made vp al thepistles canonical) at what tyme I spake with hym, at Bruxels to welcome hym into the countrey, accordyng to my duetie after his returne from the councell, whiche had than bene holden at the citie of Wourmes, euen by and by at the first entring in talke with me, euen lyke a man that had denysed vpon it afore, begynneth to exhorte me, that what I had afore doen vpō thapostolical Epistles, the same I should also doe vpon

the gospell of Mathew. I on my partie anone made myne excuse by many thinges, firſt that it was already an acte bolde & ouer bolde, that I had attempted the ſame vpō the writinges of thapoſtles: ſecondlye that the apoſtles in dede were godly men, yet neuertheleſſe men they were, but ỹ maieſtie of Chriſte to be more great, then that it might be lefull to auenture ỹ doyng of ſuche a thyng in his woordes. That if the maieſtie of the worke dyd not put of & driue one away, yet the nature of the argument or matter of ỹ goſpels to refuſe the thing, and not to ſuffre one that ſhould go about to make a Paraphraſe, and not onely for that there are in the goſpell perſons of diuerſe & ſondry ſortes, vnto whom while the woordes and talke is ſo applied as to euery of them for his rate or degree maye beſt accorde, it commeth to paſſe, that the writers penne is kepte ſhut within the encloſure of an exceedyng ſtreyght grate, becauſe it is debarred frō that libertie, which all other ſortes of commentaries doe ſuffer & receyue, (for a paraphraſe alſo is to be reputed as a kinde of commentarie.) Furthermore where as a good poſcīō of the goſpell cōſiſteth in making report of this and that acte doyng, & that of a ſimple & a playne report without any curioſitie, one that ſhould in this parte make a paraphraſe, ſhal ſeme nothyng els to doe, but at noone tyde to light a candell, as the prouerbe of the Grekes doeth call it. Nowe further, wheras the auncient doctoures and writers doe in expounyng the allegories, partely varie, not declaring it all after one waye, and partly ſo handle themſelues, that to me they ſeme oft tymes to playe and dalie with it, nor might expreſſe or bring in theſame allegories, but vnder the perſone, either of Chriſt, or els of the euangeliſt: it is euident & well to be knowen, in what narow ſtreyghtes I ſhould trauayle. I let paſſe and ſaye nothing, ỹ Chriſt in ſuche wyſe ſpake certayne thynges, as he would not haue the ſame to be vnderſtanded at the tyme of the ſpeking of them, of which ſorte this here enſuyng is one: (Diſtroy ye this temple, and within thre dayes ſpace I wyll buyld it vp agayne.) And alſo of bying a ſweard: of the Phariſeys leauē to be eſcheued. And truly in that ſame his talke, where he foreſheweth ỹ diſtructiō of the citie of Hieruſalē, & prophecieth of the ende of the world, and of afflictions longe after to enſue vnto the Apoſtles, Jeſus doeth ſo entermedle & temper his talke, that me ſemeth his will and pleaſure was, to be darke & not vnderſtanded, not onely to the Apoſtles, but alſo vnto vs all. There be alſo certayne places (as I thinke) almoſt vnpoſſible to be expouned, of whiche ſorte one is, cōcernyng that ſinne agaynſt the holy ghoſt ſhal neuer be remitted: an other, cōcernyng the day of iudgement reſerued to the knowleage of the father onely, and vnknowen euen to the very ſonne ſelfe.

In theſe places and ſuche like, if one wryte commētaryes, he may at his pleaſure without daungier, reporte the ſondrye opinions of ſondrye expoſitours, he hath libertye frankely to confeſſe and acknowelege that he doeth not vnderſtāde the mening of the place. But one that maketh a paraphraſe hath not the like libertie nor power. Moreouer certaine thynges there bee in ſuche ſorte ſpoken, that they touche and concerne euen theſe verai tymes that now are, among which ſayinges right many there be, ferre diſagreing from the inſtitucions and ordenaunces of the Apoſtles. And ſuche thinges, although the Euangeliſtes foreknewe them by the ſpirite of prophecie, yet certes vnder the perſones and names of the Apoſtles, they can not be reported, but both coldely, and alſo cuttedly: There was yet alſo an other poinct that moued my minde, which was, that in case I should take & bestowe this labour vpon Matthewe only, there would by & by be sum, that wold make instaunt and earnest request for to haue the like doen vpon al the residue of the Euãgelistes: whose will and desire if I should folow, than must it cum to passe, that I must many times more then once make repeticiõ of one matier matiers, that is to wete, of all and euery matter, in whiche the Euangelistes did among themselues accorde. Or, if on the other side I should tye and linke together a certain contigual processe of telling the thinges, and so to make but one whole tale of them altogether: than, (for as muche as to declare and to open all the places which in the Euãgelistes seme to disagree, is nothyng els, but to be combrously entangled as it were in a certayne mase) could I neuer haue been able to doe that is to be doẽ, for ỹ clerenesse and light that a Paraphrase ought to haue. Whan with these & verai many mo argumentes & reasons, I desired to bee ridde of the charge that was layed vnto me, to go in hande with all, whereas I thought my selfe to haue a good cause, and an excuse that might haue preuailed: yet did the sayed Matthew vanquish me by his eloquence, he got the ouer hande of me by reason of his autoritie whereby he myght commaunde me, takyng on hym selfe the daungier and hasard of all the whole matier. Neyther durst I bee so bolde as any longer to striue or strougle against the aduise and counsaill of hym, whose counsailles your Maiestee customably vseth, in most high & weyghtye affayres, not vnwillingly to folowe. And yet wher as I had not euen plainly taken the matier vpon me, but had onely promysed that I would one daye assaye if happily the thyng would feigh and go forward: he than tourneyng towardes William, had made assured warrantise vnto the Germaynes in my behalfe, that the worke should this instaunt winter season come forth. Wherupon I cõmyng backe my selfe agayne vnto Basile, was in suche wyse on eche syde continually called vpon, of my maisters the Germaynes, being crauers not of the lest importune sorte, that because I would in any wyse discharge both his promyse, and myne owne honestie to, I finished vp the worke with littell more then a monethes labour. And God he graunt, that bothe the commaundement of hym, and the obedience of me, maye be to all persones luckie and fortunate: and I truste it will so bee, yf your Maiestie will agnise and knowelage this slender gifte and present, to the same dedicated. But here perchaunce some man, that knoweth you by none other title cauyng onely by the name of Emperour, will saye: What is a booke of suche an argument or matier as this for a prince secular, which it had bene more mete and conuenient to haue dedicated vnto abbotes or bishops: for aunswere wherof, firste me thinketh it a thyng aptly geuen, whatsoeuer thyng beyng honest, is put vp to a Christen prince. And besides this, where as no prince is so secular, but that he hath to doe with the profession of the gospel, the Emperours are anointed and sacred for this very purpose, that they maye eyther maynteyne or restore, or els enlarge & spreade abrode the religion of the gospell. Ergo than (will some man saye) the Emperour is not a teacher of the gospel, but the defendoure of it. I graunt that. But in the meane whyle mete it is, not to be ignoraunt what maner thyng it is, for which one taketh armoure to defende it. And forsoth, whan I consider that hette & minde of yours, in suche wise to be geuẽ vnto religion and to godly deuocion, that to Bishops and Abbottes it maye to-

wardes the studye of godlinesse, bee aswell a rewle, as also a spurre, me seemeth, I can not dedicate this gifte vnto any man, more conuenietelye, then to your maiestie. So that the thyng whiche I might aptelye haue dedicated to any Christen Prince, and more aptelye to a Christen Emperoure: I doe most aptelye of all, dedicate vnto you Charles. Muche lesse apte thynges doe they bryng vnto you, that geue you great giftes of precious stones, that are gaylon to be found, of lustie fierce horses, of houndes, and of riche hanginges, that come out of farre straunge countreyes. And moreouer forasmuche as the Euangelistes haue writen the ghospell vnto all folkes, no persone excepted: I do not see, why it should not of euery mā bee read. And I haue so handeled it, that it maye bee vnderstanded, euen of suche also, as are vnlettred. And surely it shall with excellent good fruite be read, if euery body shall take it in his handes of the only mynde and entent, to bee made thereby a better man then he was afore: and not apply scripture of the gospell, to his owne affections, but contrarye wyse reforme and correcte his lyfe and his desyres, accordyng to the rule and prescripcion therof. I haue in this present worke chiefly followed Origenes, beeyng singularly aboue others, experte in diuinitee, and Chrisostome and Hierome, of the catholique wryters most best allowed. That lorde and Prince of heauen giue & graunt vnto you Charles, Emperour moste emperiall, suche thinges to minde and to goe about, as are of the principall best sorte, and the same lord well prosper your endeuours in that behalfe, to the ende that the most noble Empier whiche ye haue hitherto had without bloudshed of man, ye maye semblably aswell enlarge and amplifye, as defende & maintayne. And this poinct in the meane whyle it maye please your mercifull graciousnesse from tyme to tyme to haue in your remembraunce, that no warre there is vpon so iust and lawfull causes taken in hande, nor with so good moderacion executed, that draweth not after it an hugie heape both of abominacions, & also of miseries, yea, and remēbre also the greatest porcion of all the harmes, to light in fyne, vpon persones bothe giltelesse and also vnworthy the same.

Yeuen at Basile on the Ides of Januarie, in the yere of our Lorde a thousande fyue hundred twentie and two.

The lyfe of Saynt Matthewe wrytten by Hierome one of the aunciente doctours of the Churche.

MAthew whiche was otherwyse also called Leuy, beeing of a publicane made an Apostle, fyrst of all others compoled and wrote in Jewrie, the ghospell of Christ in the Hebrue toung, for their behouke and cause, whiche beeing of the circumcision, had beleeued: whiche gospell what person dyd afterward translate into Greke, it is not verye certaynly knowē. But truely the verye Hebrue selfe is had euen vntill this present daye in the librarie of Cesarea, whyche librarie Pamphilus the martyr dyd wyth all possible studiousnesse, sette vp & make: And I my selfe also had the same gospell of Matthewe in Hebrue, lent me to copy it out, of the Nazarites, whiche in Beroea a cytie of Syria, do vse the same booke. Wherin is to bee noted and obserued, that whereloeuer this Euangelist, eyther in his owne persone, or els in the persone of oure sauiour, doeth vse any allegacions, of the olde testament, he dooeth not followe the authoritie of Septuaginta, that is to saye, of the three score and ten translatours: but of the Hebrue: Of whiche sorte are ser these two citacions here ensuinge. Out of Egypte haue I called my sonne: and for a Nazarite shall he bee called.

¶ The first Chapiter.

If mē so gredely embrace a boke/ which is set furth by the industry of man, concernyng the preseruation or restorynge of health, or the way to increace worldely substaunce, or touchyng any other facultie which maketh only for worldly cōmodities: with howe muche more feruent loue & desyre oughte this boke to be receyued of all men: whose profit and commoditie belongeth indifferently to all men. This boke promiseth not worldly commodities, whiche last but a whyle: but it teacheth all heauenly wysedome, delyuered vnto mankynde frome the heauenly doctour Christ Jesus: And it promiseth also a wonderfull rewarde, not ryches, nor kyngdome, nor pleasures, but true and euerlastyng felicitie: vnto the whiche felicitie this boke sheweth the moste readye and easye waye for all men. It showeth also the author and meane, thorough whome euery man hath health and saluation withoute whome no man maye hope for healthe and saluation. What man woulde not be mooued and prouoked with a sure hope of suche a good thynge, be he neuer so barbarous or vnlettered? The boke of ỹ gospel doeth professe that kinde of felicitie, which, neyther mannes indeuoure, nor the paynfull labour of the Philosophers, nor the superstitious religion of the Gentiles, nor the diligent obseruation of Moyses lawe, coulde fully perfourme or attayne, whiche god the maker, the preseruer, the ruler, and restorer of all thinges, visible and inuisible, dyd shewe and declare in tymes past by the sayinges of al his prophetes, being replenished with his heauenly spirit, vnto al the world, but most speciallie to people of the Jewes, which at that tyme were a fygure of Christes churche, whiche shortly after shoulde be enlarged throughout al the world: signifiyng and showing before, by diuers darke figures & shadowes, what so euer he hath now playnly made open vnto the worlde, by his sonne Jesus Christ, who was the messinger of this free felicitie, beyng ambassadour in yearthe of god his father, in suche wise, that he was also the teacher of the hollsome philosophy, he was the example, he was both the pledge, the promiser & the authour of the euerlastyng rewarde. For god by his secret cōsel which mannes wit is vterly vnable to serche oute, hath suffered mankynd being of dispositiō like his fyrst parent, and prone to al vice, to be intangled with false religions, with sondry vices of life, & naughtie desyres, to the intent that in this time of all tymes moste to be desired and wished for, the whiche goddes wysedome the orderer of all thinges had appoynted to it selfe, all men might embrace this philosophie, with the more desyrous and agreable myndes, bothe very hollsom and of meruelous efficacie, after that they haue once perceyued, that neyther by those cōmodities & helpes whiche the worlde promiseth here to be chyefe, nor by so many fyne and exquisite preceptes of the philosophers, nor by so manye sortes of religions, nor by the scrupulous obseruacion of Moises lawe, they coulde attayne vnto true god lynes & true felicitie: Nay rather the more earnestlye they labored to cum vnto innocencie & felicitie, trustynge to mannes helpe, the more they were intangled with vice and fylthy desyres. Therfore yt the Jewes whome it behoued chefelye to accepte and imbrace the thinge that is offered vnto them beyng so often promysed, and so longe loked for: Yt they alone neclect so greate goodnes whiche is frelye offered to all men, & yt they had rather alone to lacke it, than to haue it common wyth others, they can impute theyr destruction to nothynge, but to theyr owne incredulite and vnbeleke. The sayinges and prophecies of the holy prophetes prophecyed these thinges chefely for them. They sawe Christ with theyr eyes worckyng myracles, they hearde with theyr eares the doctrine of the Gospell. The kyngdome of heauen was preached firste to them. But truly who so euer are weary of theyr former lyke, as many as loue true innocency and godly lyuyng, who so euer desyreth true, parfect, and euerlastyng felicitie, let them receyue this gospell, this pleasaunt & mery tydinges, wyth merye and cherefull hartes, whether they be Grekes, or Jewes, or Romans, or Scithians, or Gallians, or Brytannes. Lyke as god is not only God of the Jewes, but indifferently god ouer all, and common to all, lyke as there is one sonne whiche is common to the whole world: so Jesus Christe the sonne of God, came to saue all men, dyed for all, rose agayne for all, ascended into heauen for all, and sent his holy spirite to all, refusyng none, neyther for diuersitie of stocke, or of age, or of kynde, or of state, or of lyke. All the synnes of the former lyke be drowned once by his deathe in holye baptisme. And those sinnes be not imputed, be they neuer so greuous: for the cleansyng of whiche, that blessed innocent once dyed: so that the rest of the lyke be passed ouer after the rule of Christ, that is to say after the doctrine of the gospel: frō the time of baptisme, a man is iudged or taken to be a christian to the performaunce of the whiche so highe a profession, he wyll graunt his free succour & ayde, & wyl graunte also plentiful rewarde to them that do persleuer vnto thende. He requireth of no man the burden of Moyses lawe, onely he requyreth lyuely fayth, the whiche maye redely beleue what so euer is shewed & with a sure truste looke for that whiche is promised. The eternall veritie doth not deceyue, God the promiser disapoynteth not: Further mannes lawe shall not nowe prescribe what is to be done, but Christian charitie shall playnly tell.

The texte. ¶ The booke of the generatiō of Jesus Christ ỹ sonne of Dauid, the sōne of Abrah ā Abraham begat Jsaac. Jsaac begat Jacob Jacob begat Judas & his brethren.

And hytherto we haue truely delyuered vnto you the gospell by mouthe and haue made all men partakers of those thynges whiche we haue sene with oure eyes and hearde with our eares. Nowe because there is daunger, this thyng beyng spred abrode daylye more and more, least the tellyng of it passyng by many mennes mouthes, maye varry, or elles least the tale tolde by mouth, be not wel beleued as whan it is written in a boke And furthermore to thintent that the thing that is written maye the more easely cum vnto all men, than the voyce of the mouthe: we shall comprise in this boke, the summe of the whole matter, so muche as shal be sufficyent to the obtaynyng of saluation, as the natiuitie, the doctrine, the miracles, the racles, the death and the resurrection.

And firste of all we shall recyte the geneologie and pitigre of Jesus Christe, takyng oure begynnyng not from the hygh head, but from Dauid and Abraham, eyther because the memorie of these two is very ryfe and common, and verye acceptable emong the Jewes, for their glorye is chefely of Abraham, as of the author and begynner of theyr nacion, and Dauid the kynge beyng so muche praysed by the commendacion of god, styeketh the more in theyr myndes, because the memory of hym is yet but freshe and newe: orelles because Christe whiche was looked for so many yeares, was promised chefelye vnto these two, and that in the bokes and oracles of the Hebrues, to whome euen those that be directly against Christ, gaue great credit. For in the boke of Genesis God speaketh vnto Abraham, promising that in tyme to cum, there shoulde spryng one out of his stocke, through whose free benefit, not onely the nacion of the Jewes, but also all the people of the whole worlde beyng receyued into the ryght and title and loue of chyldren, shoulde obteyne with Christe the felowshippe of the kyngdome of heauen, not by circumcision whiche was as than set furth, but by the fayth of the gospell. For thus sayeth god vnto Abraham. In thy sede, that is to say, in Jesus Christ al nations shal be blessed. Further Dauid in the mistical psalmes speketh thus. Of the fruite of thy wombe shal I set vpon thy seate. And this shall we do, chefely because of the Jewes, lest they beyng a rebellious nation and harde of belefe, knowyng by the authoritie of prophesies whiche they sufficyently beleue that Messias whiche shoulde cum, was promised, maye make cauillations, and saye that there is an other sauioure to be loked for, and that this is not he, whome the scriptures promised. For many of them because theyr myndes be blynded with dilires of worldly thinges, not takyng aryght the sayinges of the prophetes, (suche was their carnall and grosse affection) loked for sum myghtye and glorious kynge, who beyng valiaunt with armes or hoostes, weapon, riches, & suche other defences of this worlde shoulde promote his people to ryches, honor, & impery, and should subdue the whole worlde to the dominion of the Hebrues. But Christe although he be lorde ouer all, cam not in to the worlde, to the intent to enryche with worldlye gooddes one nacion, of the whiche he was borne, as touching his body that he toke, but to thintent to auaunce all the nacions of the whole worlde vnto true ryches, that neuer shoulde decaye: and to make them blessed euerlastyngly with heauenly rychesse, to ouercum the tyranny of deathe, by sufferyng and dying, to subdue enemies by gentyll deserynges, to kyll the monsters of vice, and the sore prouocations of concupiscence by the swearde of the spirite, and they beyng ones ouercum that fyghte agaynste the spirite of God, to geue vs of his owne righteousnesse and innocencie: Finally by spirituall weapons, to winne vnto vs a spirituall kyngdome. But these Jewes can not haue hereafter any thyng to saye, whan they shall see all thinges to consent and agre vnto him, whome we knowe to be cum and constantly preache the same: whiche thinges the holy prophetes inspired with the heauenly spirite had prophecied with a full consent & agrement, so long before in holye bokes: that is to saye the stocke, the familie, the manner of byrthe, the lyfe, the doctrine, the miracles, the afflictions, the rebukes, the kynde of deathe, the buriall, the resurrection, thascending into heauen, the holy ghost sent doune from heauen, the wonderfull tonges of thapostelles, the conuersion of the gentiles, and other thinges whiche we sawe and dayly see donne by them ℞ profesſe the name of Christ. Finally the time also doth agre, in the which he was prophecyed for to cum. And all these thynges were prophecied, not onely by the sayinges of the prophetes, but also were signifyed by thactes and deades of the patriarches. Now seing they knowe these thynges, if they compare them wyth these whyche we shewe to haue bene done, they shall vnderstonde that they loke in vaine for any other Messias, then this whome we speke of, he came ones humble and abiect concerning the fourme of mannys body (for so Esay prophecied he shulde cum) to delyuer all men by his death from the tyranny of death. And he shall cum again in thende of the world, not as now a sauiour, but a iudge of all, bothe lyuing and dead. Now no man is excluded from his benefit. Than no man shall escape his iudgement. But than shall they ioyfully see the iudge dealyng euerlastyng rewardes, whiche now do not despise him a meke sauiour and easy to be intreated. This therfore is that only and very Messyas, whose geneology ℞ petigre shall forthwith be shewed, towchinge the body whyche he toke for our cause: for by him shulde spring ℞ cum furth a new nacion not carnall but spirituall, whyche shulde rather replenish heauen thā yearth, the whiche also shuld be encreſed or multiplied not by the seed of man, but by the euangelycall faith which is the heauenly seed of goddes worde. Of this faithe the authour and father in a misticall figure was representeſed by Abraham, who (the lawe of circumcision not yet published,) deserued the praise of rightuousnes, not before men, but before God, not by the keppynge of the lawe, but by the syncerytye of faythe, wherby he doubted nothing of goddes promises, although they were farre passinge the power of nature. And for this trust and confidence, he was called the father of many nacions, whiche after the example of him shulde beleue the gospell of Jesus Christ. He now his body being decayed for age, his wife also being weake and baren, begat Isaac whyche was promised vnto him, who also was a figure of Christ, bearing woode to the sacrifice, where vnto he was appointed. Isaac begat Jacob, whiche, though he were the yonger brother, yet he set his elder brother beside, and purchaſed the inheritaunce to him selfe, wherin he was a figure of the churche that shoulde be congregated and gathered together of the gentils, the whiche the Jewes being excluded, encreaseth dayly more and more, receauing the grace of the gospell by fayth, of the which the Jewes thorough vnbeleefe haue made them selues vnworthy. For thus sayeth god: I haue loued Jacob ℞ hated Esau. And in the prophetes ofte mencion is made of this name. Jacob begat Judas, of whome the tribe had his name of the whiche Christe was prophecied to cum of, and by whose name as by inheritaunce was promised the newe lawe of the gospell, for thus speketh Hieremie: Beholde the dayes do cum sayeth the Lorde, and I wil dispose a newe testament to the howse of Judas and the howse of Jacob. And he did not beget him onely, albeit he deserued chiefely to be recyted in the geneologie, but also he begat the other eleuen brothers of Judas, whyche

seuerally gaue names to the seueral trybes of the natiō of Israel. Further Judas had. ii. childrē at a burdē, named Phares & Zaram, not of his lawful wyfe, but of Thamar his doughter in law, which was maryed to Her, the eldest sōne of Judas, vnto whō whē Judas did not performe his promise, that is to say that she might be maried to Sela, brother vnto her husbande ꝑ was dead, accordyng to the order of the lawe, the woman passing all measure desyrouse to haue a chylde, toke the habit of a cōmon woman, & couerynge her face by craft and decepte, laye with Judas her father in lawe, & afterward by shewing of the token which she had receiued of hym before that she woulde suffer him to lye with her, auouched & proued him to be father of both the childrē, whan he otherwyse earnestly would haue brent her accordyng to the lawe. The thyng thus done is not without offence & blame but yet the misterye hid vnder this vnhoneste couerture maketh muche for the matter of the Gospell. Like as also Phares was a fygure & signification of the churche and sinagog, which Phares preuented hys brother when he endeuored to go furthe of hys mothers wounbe puttyng furthe hys hand first. Genes. 38.

Of this Phares Esrom was borne: of Esrom Aram: of Aram Aminadab: of Aminadab Naason: and of him Salmon. Salmon begat Boos of Rahab, which though she were not of the nacion of Jewes, but of the Cananites, yet because she preserued the spyalles sent from Jesu the captayne and guyde of the Jewes, and because she betrayed the cytie of Hierico, she deserued her place in the geneologie of them, whiche thorough fayth were made prayse worthy of god, and she exempted out of the sorte and ordre of common women, was chosen and admitted emong the people of God, and maryed to an husbande of the nation of Jewes, signifying euen at ꝑ time, that sinners and heathen people beyng alienate from the religion of God, shulde be coupled vnto Christe thorough the meryt of fayth.

Boos also had a sonne named Obeth by Ruth a Moabyte, the whiche also renounsyng her countrey and her bodely affections had rather to be planted emong the people of the Jewes, that is to saye suche as profesie the doctrine of Christe. Thus at that tyme fygures and shadowes signified before, that no kynd of men should be dryuen and kept of from the felowship of the gospel, so that he bring with him faith & a desirous mind of true godlines. Of Obed came Jesse, which was called also Elay, of whose name, Elay prophecying of Christ maketh mentiō saying: A rod shal cum out of the root of Jesse. Of him was borne Dauid derely beloued of god, both kyng & prophet, buylder of the citie of Hierusalem, noble thorough the slaughter of Goliad, & after that the wicked kyng Saul was deposed, by the cōmaundement of god from a poore shepard he was consecrat kyng ouer the Israelites. Out of whose stocke the hole nation of the Hebrues did loke that Christ shulde cum, as it was prophecyed before of men that were inspired with god. And he also did represent by many wayes the figure of Christ, hys of spryng.

Dauid begat Salomon that kynge of peace, and the builder of the lordes temple, and he begat him of Bethsabee whome he loued: whome he coupled vnto him in maryage, after that Urias her former husbande was slayne by his fraude and gyle: and that was done not without great synne, yf a mã considre nothyng beside the outwarde part of the hystory: but agayne not without signification of thinges to cum, if a man serche the mistery.

Of Salomon was borne Roboham: and of Roboham Abias: of Abias came Asa: of Asa Iosaphat, from whence came Iozam, and of hym Ozias: of Ozias was borne Joatham: of Joatham Achas: of Achas Ezechias, and of him Manasses: of Manasses was borne Amon: of Amon Iozias: of Iozias, Iechonias and the other brothers of Iechonias, aboute the tyme whan kyng Nabugodonozor burned the temple of Hierusalem, & caryed the kyng & the people of the Hebrues captiue into Babilõ: which were figures, signifying the tyranny of the deuyl toward mankynde, & against libertie restored thorough the benefyt of Christe. In this nere & narowe poynt betwene seruitute & libertie, whan the people of god were aboute to be restored to theyr religion & dwelling places: Iechonias begat Salathiel: Salathiel Zorobabel: zorobabel Abiud: of Abiud cam Eliachim: of Eliachim Azor: of Azor Sadoch: of him Achim: of Achim Eliud: of Eliud Eleazar: of Eleazar Matthan: of Matthan Iacob. And this Iacob was the father of Ioseph, vnto whome was maried Mary the mother of Iesus, who was promised to be the sauiour of all men, whome the Hebrues call Messias, that is to saye Christe, or annoynted: because he onlye beyng kyng ouer all, and hygh priest, with the sacrifice of his owne bodye, hath pacified God the father beyng displeased and grieued with the synnes of mankynde. And the tyranny of death vtterly put away, he hath opened the kyngdome of heauen vnto all men. The cleane was marryed to the cleane, the moste chaste to the chaste, of the same trybe and familie, that is the familie of Dauid, according, to the ordre of goddes law, least any man shulde thinke that this ordre and geneologie of kinred were of litle profit concerning the declaracion of Christes stocke, whereof he came as touchyng his humanitie. And if any man list to recken the tyme that Daniel described many yeares past by certaine ordres and degrees of weekes, he shall fynde the sayinges of the Prophetes verye agreable to the thing that is nowe cum to passe.

The texte. ¶ All the generacions from Abrahã to Dauid, are. xiiii. generacions. From Dauid vnto the captiuitie of Babylon, are fowertene generacõs. From the captiuitie of Babylon vnto Christ, are fowertene generacions.

The summe of the whole geneologie resteth in three fowertenes. For if ye counte from Abraham the patriarche vnto Dauid the author of the florilhyng kyngdome, ye shal fynde. xiiii. generacions. Agayne yf ye counte from Dauid, vnto the decaye of the kyngdome, that is vnto the exyle into Babilon: ye shall fynde. xiiii. generacions. Agayne yf ye counte from that tyme vnto Christe, the beginner and finisher of the newe euangelical generacion and newe kyngdome: ye shal fynde fowertene generations. Hytherto we haue shewed you truly the geneologie of Christ, to the intēte it maye appeare to all men, that thys is he, whome the true sayinges of the Prophetes in tymes paste, promised to the worlde. And so many argumentes agree in one, that it can not seme to be done by chaunce, & that withal it maye be euident, that he was verye man whyche came as touchyng the flesshe of suche auncestoures as were notably knowen.

The texte.

¶ The byrthe of Christ is on this wise. For whan his mother Mary was espoused vnto Joseph, before they came together, she was found wt chyld, by the holy ghost.

But although he were man borne of man, whyche came to redeeme mankynde by his deathe: yet he was not borne after the common and vulgar sorte of them that be borne. For it was seemely, that he whiche came from heauen, whiche called vnto heauen, whiche taught and promised nothyng but heauenly thynges: fynallye whiche after so many prophetes and doctours was made ambassadour, to thintent that once & for alltogether he should make althinges newe, & cum furth into the world with a veri body in dede, but yet after a newe maner: & that ỹ true natiuitie of man should be declared in such sorte, that it shoulde not be thought vnsemely for god: and Esai prophecied this thyng to cum to passe, that because men dyd in maner slepe at these common myracles of nature, by reason of custome: god shulde shew a new myracle, and that in the yearthe, to the intente it shoulde be more euident to all mennes syghte and vnderstandyng. He is borne verye man and mortall, and yet the same very God and immortall. He is borne man of man, and yet of a virgin. He is borne of the stocke of Adam whiche was the fyrst of mankynde, & yet without the spot of sinne. He is borne in matrimonie, but so, that the woorke of his concepcion was not of man but of the holy goste: who by a wonderful meane, fourmed and fashyoned the straunge & meruaylous fruite, of the substaunce of ỹ vndefiled virgin, as in an heauenlye temple consecrate to God. And he ordered this matter with suche a marueylous wysedome, that he couered and hyd it from the wycked, as a thyng incredible: and perswaded it vnto godly myndes with moste certayne & sure argumentes the whiche no eloquence of man was vtterly able to proue and perswade. Wherfore whan the holy virgin eternally appoynted to this great misterye, to be the mother of Jesu by the aduise of her parentes, whose heartes were ordered and directed by the power of God, beyng spoused to an honest man of her tribe, named Joseph, kepte company with hym in house, she was founde great with chylde before they came and cowpled together as man & wyfe, eyther because true honestie, is not hastye to the luste of pleasure, or because god dyd so ordre this matter. For the maydens woumbe waxyng dayly greater and greater, declared it vnto Joseph to be so, beyng her housbande, whiche bothe loued her well, and was not insensible in such thynges. And she fledde not from the syghte of her housbande, as one whyche in her conscience, knewe that she had offended, neyther disclosed she vnto hym the secrete, whiche she had learned of the angell, eyther because she was in dyspayre, that she should beleue it, or because she reserued this vnto god to be declared in tyme conuenient. Therfore the conception was certayne and true, declaryng it selfe by manifest and accustomed tokens especially vnto Ioseph, who by reason of conuersation in household, marked more easily in his spouse, the habyte & fourme of her body. But this young thyng came not furth by thimbracing of man, as other women by the cõmon lawe of nature be wonte to conceyue, but by the holy ghost: whiche by the angell Gabriel than messinger from heauen enteryng into the most hooly temple of the virgins wombe (the inuisible power of the fatherlye godhed imbracyng & ouershadowyng the hole body & mynde of the moste holy virgin) without any hurte or detriment of chastitie, made her great with chylde.

The texte. ¶ But Ioseph her husbande beyng a ryghteous man, woulde not put her to shame, but was mynded to depart from her secretlye.

Furthermore Ioseph yet ignorant of so great a mistery, whan he saw euident argumentes and tokens of conception in his wyfe, and knewe well that he had neuer to do with the mayde, wherby she myght becum great with chylde, and yet had founde the maners of her to be suche, that there coulde be no suspicion of aduoutry in her. And besydes that true honesty is neyther redy to misdeme, nor hasty to reuenge: he began to cast in his mynde, by what meanes he myght bothe see for the good name, & also the lyfe of his wyfe: and commyt the matter vnto god, whereof he hym selfe coulde fynde no ende nor yssue. By the reason of great familiaritie, he founde the maners of the mayde vtterly without blame. For that godly spirite, whyche dwelled whollie in her harte, dyd appere in her eyes, and in her countenaunce, and dyd declare it selfe euery where in her goyng, in her gesture, and in her communication. He spied in her a certaine heauenly thing and more than man. And yet he sawe her great with chylde, and she was away from home certayne monethes, whyle she went to see her cosyn Elizabeth. Furthermore he considered howe great the weakenes of that age and kynde, was in other maydens. What busynes woulde summe other husbande haue made here, chefely if loue had styred vp gelowsy whiche is a verye sore disease of the mynde. But to proue this matter to be true, Ioseph was chosen out to be a witnes, least any man myght saye, that the chylde of Mary was ether an other womans, or els vnlawfully gotten He was a man reputed of all men, of knowen and tried honestie and wysedome, so that no man myght suspect hym, eyther to be so notably naughty that he wolde be his wiues bawde, or of so foolysh pacience, that he would nowrysshe and bryng vp with the childe her whome he knewe to be an aduoutresse. There be none more cruel agaynst theyr wyues that do amisse, than they whiche be defyled with many aduoutryes them selues. Ioseph hym selfe beyng verye innoceut, was so far from all desyre of vengeaunce, that he dyd not so muche as once in wordes fynde faulte with her, lest he shulde discorage the virgins harte with any sorowfulnes. He is troubled with him selfe with secret cares of the minde, & doth deuise a gentle kind of diuorce, that he might be deliuered frõ her cõpanie which was with child in such wise, that she myght beare no blame, nor be in any ieoperdie or peril.

But

¶ But while he thus thought, beholde the angel of the Lorde appered vnto hym in a slepe, saying: Joseph thou sone of Dauid feare not to take vnto ỹ Mary thy wife For that whiche is conceyued in her, is of the holye goste. She shall bring furth a sone, & thou shalt cal his name Jesus. For he shall saue his people from theyr sinnes

The texte.

And thus farre god hath suffered this innocẽt man to be troubled and distracte with dowtfull deuises. For this was expedient for the certentie of his fayth, but nowe it was tyme for him to be delyuered oute of these grefes of his mynde, being worthy doutles to be made partaker of this misterye, for the great honor that he dyd to the virgin thus consecrated to God. And for thapproued grauitie and sobrenesse in suppressyng the cares of his mynde, he was thought meete to conteyne & kepe trustely this secret mistery, which was not yet to be published, because of the peruerse and frowarde suspicion of the Jewes. Beholde thangell Gabriel, whiche signified vnto the virgin the merueilouse cõception, apperinge with great lyght vnto her wakyng, because of her purenes whiche was more than angelical, being well acqueynted with suche kinde of vision: presenteth himself vnto Joseph in his sleepe, and as he was musinge in his sleepe of suche lyke matter, the messinger of the heauenly oracle, spake vnto him in this wyse: Joseph the sonne of Dauid what carnal suspition troubleth thy minde? why art thou perced? why doest thou wauer in & out? or why dost thou muse vpon diuorcement? or why wylt thou be dimissed from her, whiche is cowpled vnto the with so great loue, and also by the kyndred bothe of the tribe and the familie? There is none other spouse worthy for that virgin, and she is apointed to none other by thordinance of god, but to the. Thou must knowe, that Dauid is thauthor of thy stocke, vnto whom was promised in tymes past the thynge that nowe begynneth to be perfourmed. Al that is done, is godly. Thou nedest not to feare, ỹ thy wiues wombe rising without thy doinge shal steyne thy matrimony with any spot of dishonestie. Thou dost suppose that she is great with childe, & dost suppose aright. But thou must not therfore remoue her from thy company and conuersation, but rather take her & adioyne her vnto the, because thou seest her great, vnto whom by goddes ordinaunce thou art geuẽ to be an housbãde, to thintent that hereafter thou mayest be a wytnes of the fruitefull virginitie founde in thy wyfe, & that she in the meane tyme by that that she is maried vnto ỹ, maye be in safety against ỹ suspicious crueltie of the Jewes, vnto whõ this mistery is not yet to be opened, especially vnto thẽ that be not yet worthy, nether of capacitie to receyue it. This matter shal be communicated and opened vnto the, to thintent thy wyues innocency shall suffer none vnworthy thing. For this newe fruite, wherewith thou seest thy wyues wombe daylye to encreace, lyke as it is not of the, so it is of none other mortall man. The angell brought the message beyng as a goer betwene God and her in makyng this godly coniunction, the father hath ouershadowed her: the holy goste hathe prepared her wombe, the sonne of God hath replenished it. All is newe for that a newe childe shall be borne. It procedeth from heauen that thy wyfe shal bringe furthe, who shall be more chast also after that she hath brought furth chyld. And she shal beare a sõne:

For ỹ whiche is conceyued in her, is of the holy goste. She shall bringe furth a sonne, and not for the, but for the worlde. In the meane season, thou shalt be called his father, and thou shalt be the keper of the mayde, rather thā ỹ housbād. Whē the childe is borne, thou as father shalt geue it a name, not a name after thine owne fantasie, but that name that god agreable vnto the thing dyd destinat & appointe vnto hym, before the makynge of the worlde. And thou shalt call hys name Iesus, that is to saye sauioure, for this is that Messias desired and loked for so many yeres, who accordinge to the sayinges of the prophetes, shall deliuer all hys people from theyr synnes, not by the sacrifice of beastes: but thorough his owne bloude. And he will not onely be content to geue frely thys so greate a benefite, but whan we are purged from the synnes of our former lyfe, he will geue vs also very perfect, and eternall saluation.

The texte. All this was done that the thing myght be fulfilled which was spokē of the lord by the prophet, saying thus: Beholde a mayde shall be with childe, and shal bringe furth a sonne, and they shal call his name Emmanuel, whiche is by interpretation: God with vs.

And surely none of all this matter is brought to passe by chaunce or fortune, but by the counsell and prouidence of god. For the thynge that we showe to be done, the same in tymes past the lorde him selfe promysed that he woulde doe it, speakynge by the mowthe of hys prophet Esay, and settinge furth in fewe wordes bothe the straunge newnes & the greate fruite and profit of thys conception. Beholde sayeth he: a virgin shall conceyue and bringe furthe. And this is the straungenes of it, for when was it euer hearde a mayden to haue borne a chylde withoute blemishe of her virginitie? Nowe herken what is the fruite and profite: And his name shal be called (sayeth he) Emanuel, whiche soundeth in Hebrue: God with vs. For this onely one shall reconsyle his people vnto god, and where as he was offended and displeased, he shall make him fauorable and mercyfull, and being conuersante emonge men, he shall powre thabundant goodnes of god in them, and at last they haupnge knowledge and experience of hys effectuall doctrine, of the myghte of his miracles, of his present efficacy & strength, and of the vehemencye of his diuine spirite, showinge it selfe after a newe sorte in them that shall beleue, they shall crie and not withoute a cause: God is with vs. If thou acknowlege the prophecy, as truely thou doste acknowledge: geue attendaunce and honour to this Mistery, and and kepe close this secrete priuitie.

The texte. Now whan Ioseph awoke out of slepe, he dyd as the angell of the lorde bad him, and toke his wife vnto him, & knew her not tyl she had brought furth her first borne sonne, and called his name Iesus.

Whan the messinger of the hygh God had spoken these thynges, Ioseph wakinge from slepe bothe merely and cherefully, dyd obey the oracle. He setteth a parte al his purpose of discorde, and taketh his wife more merely vnto hym, that no man might suspect any discorde or disagremente to be betwene them. And now he perceyuing that she was holly dedicated vnto God of heauen, he doth honour in her the godly mistery, nor dareth not touche her, whome God had taken onely to hym self. He is diligent in seruice, but he forbereth to cōpany with her as her husbād. In the meane season that heauenly fruite wareth ripe in the holy woumbe of the virgin, whiche cummynge further at his tyme of his mother the virgin, toke not awaye the integritie of his parente, but dyd consecrate and sanctifye the same. Further Joseph as he was commanded of thangel bearing the countenaunce of a father hitherto, gaue a name to the childe Jesus, whan after the fasshion of the cuntrye, he was circumcised theyght daye. And called his name Jesus.

¶ The seconde Chapter.

The texte.

¶ Whan Jesus was borne at Bethleem a towne in Jewrye, in the tyme of Herode the kyng. Behold there cam Magians from the east, to Hierusalē saying: Where is he which is borne the kyng of Jewes? For we sawe his starre in the east, and are cum to worship hym.

HItherto ye see how many thinges do accorde and agree with the godly sayinges of the prophetes. He is borne of the same auncetoures and of the same tribe and familie, that the prophecy promysed he shoulde be borne. Also the supputacion and counte of the wekes, when Daniel prophecied that he shoulde cum, doth consent and agree. Also the straunge Natiuitie doth agree, where by he was borne of the virgin withoute helpe of man. And the name doth agree. A sauioure was promysed, A sauiour was loked for, Jesus signifieth a sauiour. Furthermore ỹ name of the cuntrye, and of the towne, doth answere to the faith of the prophetes, for he was borne not farre frō Hierusalem in a little towne called Bethleem, and that in the cuntrye of Jewry, for there is a towne in Galile also of this name, in the tribe of Zabulon: and he was borne in the tyme when Herode an Idumean by birthe and not a Jewe, obteyned the kingdom ouer the Jewes, that no man neded for to doubte but that now was the tyme that Messias shulde be borne, the whiche Jacob the patriarche many yeres before, prophecied shuld cum to passe, sayng: The scepter shall not be takē frō Juda, nor a ruler frō his thighe, till that he cū which shoulde be sent. Truely this is he, tholyest of al, at whose enteringe al the anoynting of the Jewes ought to haue ceased & geue place. Nowe ye shal vnderstād by what wōderful meanes he begā by little & little to be knowē to the worlde. For he wolde be manifest and open vnto all, which came to saue all, that bothe he might be knowen vnto good men to theyr saluatiō, and that he might take awaye from the wicked all excuse of ignorance. He was promised chiefly to the Jewes, he was borne of them, he was first preached vnto them of thangels, syngynge glory on high vnto god, and in the yerth peace emong men of good wil. The shepardes being taught by theyr voyce, and tolde of the childe that was borne, offered the fyrst fruites of faith at the maungier where as the babe was borne. By this secret inspiracion of the spirite he was knowē of Elizabeth, of Simeon & Anna the prophetise. First of al he shewed him self vnto poore and humble persons, whome he knewe to be most prest and redy to receyue fayth. For the proud wolde not lightly receiue him beyng humble, nor ỹ riche him being poore, nor the stowte him beyng meke: nor they that were intangled with the desires of this worlde woulde receyue him that was heauenly. And because he was promised not to the Jewes only, but also to the gentiles, yea to all the nations of the worlde, he would euen at the very entery of his beginnyng, be nyng, be knowen of them also, to thintēt he might declare and showe, that saluation was also offered vnto them, and that he might styrre and prouoke the Jewes by their example, to cum to faythe and to beleue.

Behoilde there came Magians from the East, to Jerusalem sayinge.

And he dyd not drawe al men by one meane to the knowlege of hym selfe, but he allured euery man by little and little by the thynges that they alredy knewe and was wel acquainted with. The Jewes gaue fayth vnto the prophetes, they were moued with signes and wonders, therfore he intised them by thallurement of these thinges. The Persians and the Caldeans dyd attrybute muche to the starres, as men muche geuen to this kinde of philosophy, thorough the knowledge of the whiche they haue perswaded them selues that there shoulde be a certen wonderful restorer of the world. Therfore they had knowledge of the birthe of the childe, not by any prophet or angel, but by a certen straunge and a wonderfull apperynge of a starre, truely of that starre, the whiche the prophecy of Balaam did shewe before, to ryse oute of the howse of Jacob. And now they had knowledge by the common fame that this king was chefely promised vnto the nation of the Jewes, and that he was not a meane king, and of the common sorte, but very notable, and without cōparyson, of whose power, of whose wysedome, & of whose goodnes, farre exceding the power, wysdome and goodnes of man, the hole worlde should haue experience. Further as the yll man when he hath occasion is made worse, & a wiseman as he hath occasion is made wiser, certen Magians (for by this name the Persiās called them that be notable in the sciēce of Philosophy) to thintēt they might cum nere and learne more exactly the thinge that the starre showed vnto them as in a dreame, being nothing a ferde at the great iorney, they cum vnto Hierusalem, the starre guyding them the waye: eyther because there dwelled the Scribes and phariseis whiche were very experte in the lawe and the prophetes, or because they vnderstoode that the king shoulde be borne not farre from Hierusalem. For now knowinge certenly that he was borne, onely they inquired what place it was that was made happie with so noble a birthe. For they thought that the natiuite of so greate a prince could not be hyd emong them, which loked for his birth so many hundred yeres, especially seing he shoulde be borne not onely emong them, but also of thē.

Where is he whiche is borne the king of Jewes.

But Chryst is no where knowē later or with more difficultie, than in riche cities and in princes courtes, & emonge them that be arrogant in the profession of wisedome. But they ignorāt of these thinges, inquire simply and openly. Where is he ꝙ they: which is lately borne the king of Jewes: For we knowe by a sure token that he is borne. For when we were farre hence in the Easte, we sawe his starre of a meruelouse brightnes and bewty.

For we sawe hys starre in the East, and are cū to worshipp hym.

We sawe the starre and felt thinspiracion. Therfore because we knowe that he is borne to the commoditie and profite of all men, though we be straūgiers, yet be we cum hither to honour & worshippe him, and to geue the firste fruites of honour due vnto the new kinge. Knowinge well that they shall be happy and blessed, that shall haue his power and might mercifull vnto them.

The texte. ¶ Whan Herod the kyng hearde these, he was troubled: and Hierusalē with him. Calling together al ꝑ bishops & scribes of ꝑ people, asked thē, wher Chryst should be borne: And thei said to him. At bethlem in Jewry. For so it is writē by ꝑ prophet: And thou Bethleem the lande of Jury, art not the least emong the princes of Juda. For out of the, I shall haue a captayne cum, that shall gouerne my people Israel.

What time they had such communication simply with al men, by and by the rumor and tidinges was brought to Herode the kinge, which a good while had feare & trembled at the name of him ỹ should be borne, fearinge lest he should be set beside the kingdō, which he had being a straunger, yt so greate a prince had ben borne of the stocke of the Jewes. For Herode dreamed of nothynge elles, but of an earthly kingdom, litle knowing that Christ brought in an other kinde of kingdō, whiche shoulde perteyne vniuersally to all men. Therfore after that he hearde that he was borne, whō he feared to he borne, and hearde it of the Magians, men both of lerning, and (as concernyng worldely pore) not to be dispised, truely he was troubled in his minde, and with him also the hole citie of Hierusalem: diuers men diuerslỹ, eyther fearyng or hoppyng. But the wysedome of god so ordered thaffections and endeuours of men, that bothe the simplicitie of the godly, & the rage of the vngodly set furthe the glory of Christ on euery side, and made the thynges that were incredible the more to be beleued.

Whā Herods ỹ kynge heard thes, he was troubled, and Hierusalem with him.

And this was the cause that the loode starre of the way, lefte the Magians for a time entering into Hierusalem: that their enquirye myght showe abrode the fame of the chylde that was borne, and yet the place where the chylde was borne shoulde be kept secrete from the cruel kynge. Therfore kinge Herode blinded with enuy & anger, being holly bent to destroye the chyld that was borne, pretended a cloke of godlynes before his wicked crueltie. He calleth vnto him al the chefe of thorder of priestes, & the Scribes of the people of Jewry, whose specialll profession was this, that if there were any new matter, that did arise, they should make answere out of the sayinges of the prophetes, and the godly bokes, because they professed the exacte knowledge of them, to thintent that both the number and thauthoritie shoulde make the thing of more credite. Therfore when these were called together, the king so much the more wicked, because he conterfeyted godlines, demaunded of them in what place the oracles dyd promyse that Christ should be borne. And they not yet raginge with hatred against Christ, whome they had not seen, answere simply and without delaye: In Bethlee of Juda. And lest theyr authoritie should haue but lytil weight: beholde they haue in a redines the prophecy of the prophet Micheas: And thou Bethleem in the lande of Juda, arte not the leeste emong the princes of Juda, for out of the shall springe a ruler whiche shall rule my people of Israel.

And they sayd to him. It beth leem in Jury. For so it is wrytte by the prophet: And thou Bethlee the lande of Jury, art not the leest emōg the princes of Juda. For oute of the I shall haue a captayne cum, that shall gouerne my people Israel.

The texte.

Than Herod priuily calling the Magians, diligently inquyred of the, what time the starre appered. And sending them to Bethleem, said: Go thyther and search diligently for the chyld. And whan ye haue fownde him, bringe me word agayne, that I may cum and worchippe hym also.

And these thynges thē answered the priestes and the scribes, who afterwarde procured him to be slayne, bright and notable with miracles, and doing good vnto all mē. The king first of all greatly moued with the sayinge of the Magians, was vtterly amased with this so ripe and redy answere, chefely that the prophecy promised manifestly a ruler of Bethleem whiche shoulde rule the people, of whome he was borne. Wherefore the priestes & the scribes being sent away, because he was in despeyre for to deceaue thē, he calleth the Magians priuely vnto him, leest the Jewes might suspecte any crafte or guile, & so openinge the matter on eche side as though they bothe purposed one thing, inquired of them diligentlye how long it was synce ỹ starre appered first vnto thē, by whose showing and pointinge thei passed ouer so greate a tornei, & came to Hierusalem: meaninge and purposinge this, the more certenly to vse & exercise hys cruelty vpon one.

The Magians (for godlines is not suspicioulse) kepe nor hide nothing frō him, not thinkinge him to be so cruel and fyerce that he would shew crueltye vpon an infant yet skante borne, neyther so furyouse that he woulde suppose to suppresse by mannes deuise, the thing that was done by goddes myght: When they had shewed the tyme, he of thother syde showed the place whyche he had learned of the Scrybes. And nowe he conceiuinge a sure hope that ỹ childe might be taken by these two showinges, geueth commaundement in his owne name to the Magiās, whiche of them selues were willing to go, that they shulde go to Bethleem, and seke out the childe with greate diligence: & when they had fownde him to returne eftsones vnto Hierusalem, and geue him knowledge of al the matter: (he pretended a verye godli cause, and nothing displesaunt to the myndes of the Magiās) That I also (q he) may followe you and worshipp hym. He him self woulde first haue knowledge of the childe, to thintent he might destroye hym before that the people of the Jewes had cleare vnderstandynge that he was borne. God in the meane tyme made thys prouysyon, that the Magians returned safely to preache Christ in their owne contrets. Otherwyse yt this vngratiouse man had not ben deceaued of his hope, he woulde haue vsed extremely the Magians them selues, whiche had brought hym so vnluckye tidynges.

And sendyng them to Bethleem, sayde: Go thyther & searche diligentlye for the childe. And whan ye haue founde hym, bring me word agayne that I maye cum and worshyp hym also.

The texte.

¶ Whan they had herd the kyng, they wēt forward, and loe, ỹ starre which they saw in the east went before them, till it came & stode ouer the place where the childe was. And when they sawe the starre, they were meruaylously glad, & wēt into the house & founde the child with Mary hys mother, and fel downe & worshypped hym, & opened their tresures & offred vnto him gyftes: gold, incense, and myrre. And beyng warned of God in their sleape that they shuld not go againe to Herode, theiturned into their owne countrey an other waye.

The godly simple Magians, after that they had herde the kinge, made haste vnto Bethleem, whom the starre which called thē furth for a tyme dyd forsake, to thintent that the barbarouse people shulde fyrst showe vnto the Jewes that Christ was borne, whome they lokinge for so many yeres, afterwarde did put to death. But when they had passed ouer this parte of goddes ordinācē, agayne appered that wonderfull starre, whiche serued their godly purpose in suche wise, that it showed vnto them not onely Bethleem, but also the cotage it self, beyng very low, poore, and base, and therfore very harde to find, yea and hanginge very nere ouer the childes hed, it did showe & pointe as with a finger thinkāt, whom they so feruently desyred. Therfore when the starre began to appere agayne, whiche shaked of al carefulnes from their mindes, & now they they replenissshed with sure hope and ioye, passyng little vpon mennes tellynges, but followynge the heauenly guyde: they espye the palace of the newe kynge: a fylthy and a vile cotage or stable.

And wente into the house & foūde the child with Mary his mother.

Sincere godlines is nothing troubled with these thinges. They enter in: They fynde thinfant not differinge in apparaunce from others, they finde the mother nothyng gaye or gorgious to loke too. All theyr stuffe shewed and testifyed pouertie & simplicitie. The Magiās which did not worshyp nor fall downe before Herode, magnifyinge him selfe in his seate wyth a kingly pompe: fall doune at the cradelles of the crying babe: they adoure and honour grouelinge on the grounde, hym that coulde not yet speake.

And fell down flat and worshypped hym.

And they were not content with this godlynes, but they take out of theyr boxes, gyftes purposely apoynted of those thynges, with thincrease of the whiche, the nation of the Persians was chiefly enryched, that is, golde incense and myrre: leste that he whiche shortely after should be compelled to flee should lacke in his vyage. And with these fyrst fruites of fayth, the gentyles that were farre of, preuentyng the Jewes, whiche were thought to be next vnto god, do constytute Christ to be theyr kyng: and of thother syde do dedicate thē selues vnto him, offeryng a new sacrifyce in thre kindes of thynges. And now as by a ryddell or a darke figure, they professed that ineffable Trinitie of the father, & the sonne, & the holy goste, acknowlegynge also in one man mortalitie, priesthode, and kyngdom. For gold is for a kynge, incense for a priest, myrre for him that shal dye. He was borne mortall, he dyd sacrifice on the crosse, he conquered rysynge from death, he reygneth in heauen. The Jewes sawe so many wonders, and when they knewe him, they kylled hym. The Magians sawe no notable thynge as concernyng theyr bodely eyes, and they reioyse that they had so fortunate a iourney. But what time they deuised with thē selues whether thei should returne vnto Herode to satisfy his mynde and desyre, they were admonysshed in theyr slepe, by the diuyne oracle, not to returne agayne to Herode. For that was neyther suertie vnto thē, neyther to ỳ childe, neyther expedient for suche a weyghty matter, which in tyme and by parcel meale, should be promulgated and publysshed vnto the worlde. The spedely dyd obeye thoracle, and returned into theyr countrey another waye, to be newe preachers of the newe kynge among theyr countrey men.

And beynge warned of god in theyr sleape ỳ they shoulde not go agayne to Herode thei returned into theyr own cōtrey a nother waye.

The texte.

¶ And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the lord appered to Joseph in his slepe, sayinge: Aryse and take the chylde and his mother and flye into Egipt, and abyde there, tyl I bryng the worde. For Herode wyl seke the chyld to destroy it. So whan he awoke, he toke the chylde & his mother by nyght, and wēt aside into Egipt and was there vnto the death of Herode, ỳ it myght be fulfylled, which was spoken of the lorde by the prophet saying: out of Egypt haue I called my sonne.

Now the helth & saftie of the Magians was prouided for, and that the tranquilite both of the mother and of the chylde myght forthwith be sene for, and that also the vngodlynes of Herode accordynge vnto his desertes myght more and more be exasperated & greued to the glory of Christe: the same heauenly messenger whiche sent awaye the Magians, appered vnto Joseph in his slepe, exhortyng hym that nowe beyng priuye vnto the mistery, he would conueye awaye secretly the mother and the chylde into Egypt: wherby the diuine counsell intēded this, that that region also beyng

wholy geuen to the monstruous worshyppyng of goddes, whiles it is become the hoste & receyuer of him that is fledde from his countrey: by the touchynge and haunge to do with him, it myghte be prepared and made redy to some entry and begynnynge of trewe godlynes. Therfore thangel spake vnto Joseph with these wordes: Aryse, and take with the, the chylde and his mother, and flee priuely into Egypt, & tary there vntyl I returne vnto the, and shewe the tyme to come hyther agayne. For it wyll cum to passe, that Herode shall seke by al meanes to destroye the chylde. Not that it is harde vnto god sodenly to extinct and kyl Herode, and to preserue the chylde, yf it please him, but this ordre of the matter is more profytable for the confyrmation and establysshement of fayth. For it is goddes wyl that the fury and the rage of the tyrante shal set forth his glory. Joseph not taryinge, toke the mother a mayde, and the chylde, and fleynge in the nyght season conueyed them into Egypt, there remaynynge tyl that Herode was deade. Truely this thyng chaunced not by the feare of man or by fortune, it was the wyll of God to prepare and to establyshe the kyngdome of hys sonne by these aduersyties, by the whiche, worldly thynges be wonte to be decayed and brought to naught, leste that the world shoulde take vpon it any thynge in diuyne matters. And that thou mayest the better beleue it, God who woulde this thynge to cum to passe, prophecyed many yeres past by the mouth of his prophete Olee, saying: out of Egypt I called my sone

Aryse and take wyth the the chylde.

So whan he awoke, he toke the chylde & his mother by nyght

That it might be fulfylled.

The texte. ¶ Than Herode whan he saw that he was mocked of the Magians, he was greatly greued, and sent furth men of warre and kylled and slewe all the chyldren that were in Bethleem, and in al the costes therof, as many as were two yeare olde or vnder, accordyng to the tyme, whiche he had dylygently knowen of the Magians.

In the meane season kyng Herode, after that he perceyued in dede that the Magians had deceaued hym, nowe ragynge in anger, cast away the cloke of godlynes and brust out into manyfest rage, & sendyng furthe ministers of his madnes, kylled al thinfantes as many as was in Bethleem, and as many as were in the coastes and the compasse of the same towne, whiche were of thage of two yeare or yonger, folowynge the supputation of the tyme, in the which the Magians tolde hym, that they sawe fyrst the starre of the chylde. Crueltie enlarged the tyme and the place, compassynge in al the yonge chyldren, supposyng that by this wycked counsell, he had prouyded surely ynough, that he should escape by no meanes, whom onely he desyred to be extincte and slayne. But in vayne trauayleth the craft of men agaynst the counsels of god. By these thynges was shewed a manyfest example, what they should suffer of wycked prynces, that woulde beleue the gospel, and what they should preuayle that by crueltie trauayled to extinguyshe the fayth of the gospell, beyng yet tender and sprynginge vp in the hartes of the godly. To be kylled for Christ, is to be saued. Herode had an occasion to repēt, and not to rage, yf gredines to reygne and to beare rule had not blynded his mynde. But while he through his owne defaute turneth all thinges into matter of greater madnes, by his malycyousenes he dyd set furth the iustice of god. For it is manifest to al men, that the innocent chyldren were slaine with great crueltie, & that he is worthy an horrible destruction, wherwith afterwarde he was suerly payde.

The texte. ¶ Than was ꝑ fulfilled which was spokē by ꝑ prophet Hieremy, where as he saith

A voyce

A voyce was herde in Rhama: lamentacion, weppynge and great mourning. Rachel weppyng for her chyldren. And wouldе not be comforted because they were not.

But leste any man myght doubte, that this thing came to passe by thordinaunce of god: harke to the Prophecye of the prophete Hieremy, seynge this thynge now done by the inspiration that he had, whiche many yeares after should come to passe. A voyce (quhe) was heard in Rama, a voyce sore weppynge, sorowfull and lamentable. Rachell dyd bewayle her chyldren & wouldе receaue no comforte because they were all slayne. Rachell beringe Beniamin, that is to saye the sonne of sorowe, by and by upon her delyuery dyed, and was buryed not farre from Bethleem, wherof the Prophete dyd expresse in her person the sorowe and waylyng of the mothers, lamentyng theyr chyldren whiche Herode kylled.

¶But whan Herode was deade, beholde the angel of the lord appered in a slepe to Joseph in Egypt saying: aryse and take the chylde & his mother, & go into the lande of Israel, for they are dead which sought the chyldes lyfe. And he arose and toke the chylde and his mother, and came into the lande of Israell. The texte.

In the meane season after that Herode was taken out of the worlde by punishment and vengeaunce moste worthy for hym, the angell agayne whyche gaue counsell to flee awaye, aperyng to Joseph in his sleepe, moueth him to leaue Egypte, and to bryngе agayne the chylde and hys mother into the lande of Israell. For he sayd that they were deade that would haue the chylde destroyed. And he redely obeyng in all thynges the wyl of god, conueyed the virgin the mother with her sweete babe, into the countreye of Israell. For it behoued him fyrst to be knowen vnto them, vnto whom chiefly he was sente to thintente the people of harde beleefe, shoulde haue nothynge why they myght make any reasonable pretence of theyr vngodlines, denying him to be theyr Messias, but to be some other apoynted vnto the gentyles.

¶But whan he heard that Archelaus reygned in Jury, in ꝓ rome of his father Herode, he was afrayd to go thither, but warned of God in a slepe, went aside into the costes of Galile, and went and dwelte in a cytie called Nazareth, that it might be fulfylled whiche was spoken by the prophetes: he shall be called a Nazarite. The texte.

And as sone as Joseph entred into the coastes of his countrey, and had knowlege there by a constant fame that Archelaus the sonne of Herode that was dead, hauyng thone halfe of his fathers kyngdome, reigned in Jewry in his fathers place, fearynge leste the sonne had succeded in hys fathers cruelnes, lyke as in his kyngdome, durste not go thyther: and agayne beynge establysshed by the answere of the Angell, wherof nowe he wholy dyd depende, went aparte into the coastes of Galile, whiche parte chaunced vnto Herode the Tetrarche brother to the king that was deade. Here thangell promised all thynge to be safe, also the loue of the countrye was an inuitacion, and the counsell of God wrought withall, that Christ by many occasyons shoulde be deuyded to many, whose comyng was to euery man. Bethleem doth glory of his byrthe, at Jerusalem he was circumcysed and purifyed, Egypt was happy of so great a geste. Nazareth may wel glory of his bryngyng vp. For this was the countrey of his mother, in the whyche she conceaued her sonne, a base and a poore vyllage of Galile, a countrey not regarded but despysed of the Jewes, but es, but it was a secret corner so muche more meete for the chylde agaynste the crueltie of Archelaus. And this poynte herein god doth teache vs, that there is no nede of helpes, ryches, power, part takynge, or nobilitie of byrth, in those thynges whiche are done by the wyll of God. May these thinges annexed and put vnto, rather obscure and darken the glori of god among men. For that this thinge came not to passe by fortune it may appere, in that the prophecy longe before declared, that the Messias shoulde be called a Nazarene, the whiche to be done, euen the tytle dothe declare whiche Pilate ignorant of the prophecy commaunded to be set vp vpon the crosse. Jesus of Nazareth the kyng of Jewes. And at this daye they that professe Christ be called therfore of many, Nazarenes. And the word it self hath his mistery. Nazareth amonge the Hebrewes hath his name of a floure, because that, that godly and swete floure the sanctifier of all virginitie was borne of a virgin, lyke as Bethleem signifyeth vnto the Hebrewes the house of bread, out of the which came that heauenly breade, whiche who so eateth, shall lyue euerlastyngly. He therfore lyued certen yeres as one vnknowen, with his mother and his foster father, whose sone he was thought of almen, vntyl the tyme he came vnto mannes state; and then he shewed himselfe vnto the worlde by doctrine, myracles, death, and resurrection, beyng knowen or notable in nothinge, nor excellynge other men, but that he went forward dayly and encresed in all kynd of honestie, and heauenlye giftes, that euery man loked for some great and notable thynge in the chylde. He was also in the meane season a diligent obseruer of the lawe, because he woulde geue none occasion vnto the euyll wyllers, of euyll sayinge or backebytynge, but satisfye all men in al thynges. He had rather for a tyme by keppynge of the lawe, to bringe the Jewes to more perfection, than by despysynge it, to alienat and withdraw theyr mindes cleane frome him. Onely once he shewed himself at Hierusalem, beynge twelue yeares of age, at what tyme he pryuely leauyng hys parentes, was founde in the temple sittyng emong the doctoures, hearing them, and by course questionyng with them, in so much that he was a wōder to them all. Euen than his godly disposition had a desire vnto thinges, wherefore he was sente into the worlde: but as this was a prayse of a redy minde, so it was therample of moderation and obedience to tarry the time prescribed of his father.

That it might be fulfylled þ was spoken by the Prophetes he shall be called a Nazarite

¶ The thyrde Chapter,

The texte.

¶ In those dayes came Jhon the Baptyste, preachyng in the wildernes of Jewry, and sayng: Repent ye of your former lyfe. For the kingdome of heauen is at hande. For this is he, of whom the prophet Esay spake, which saith: The voice of a crier in the wyldernes: prepare the waye of the lorde, and make his pathes strayghte. And this Jhon had his garment of Camels heare, and a gyrdel of skynne about his loynes. Further his meate was locustes and wilde hony. Than went out to hym Hierusalem and al Jewry, and all the countrey rounde aboute nere to Jordane, and were baptysed of him in Jordane, confessynge theyr synnes.

NOwe is it worthy the hearyng, to knowe how our Lorde Jesus Christ began & entred with the matter, that he came for. He thrust not in sodenlye to men vnwares, and thynkyng not vpō it. Firste he wolde that all mennes myndes should be prepared and made in a redines by his vsher & messenger John, the sonne of zachary, knowen and alowed of the Jewes themselues, to thintent that the thynge which euer should be beleued, myght by lytell and lytell be instylled and put into the hartes of men. Therfore whan the tyme drew nere in the which it was decreed by the eternal ordeynaunce, that the hole world should be renewed through the doctryne of Christ: John came furthe, the sonne of a priest, and of a prophetisse, whiche John was iudged afterward to be more than a prophete by the testimony of Christ, who also euen in his byrthe and begynnynge, had made men to conceaue great hope of hym. And he came not out of kinges courtes, or out of common resortes of men, but out of wildernes, where from his childhode he lede an angels lyfe, beynge content with a simple or easie dyet, clad with a garment wouē of Camels heeres, gyrde with a letheren gyrdell. His dyet was agreable vnto his apparell. For he lyued with course meate, and easly to be gotten, whiche he founde in the wyldernes, that is to saye, with locustes and wylde hony. This diet, this apparel, suche a place, was most mete for a preacher of penaunce: Whose wonderfull holynes so amased all mennes myndes, that manye supposed that he was Christ: chiefely when many were perswaded the other whiche was thought to be Messias to haue perished in the number of the infātes of Bethleem. But he dyd not chalenge vnto hym the glory of others, insomuche that he shewed Christ openly to all men, and sayde that he was not worthy to lowse the latchet of hys shoes. And yet he rushed not furth of his owne swinge to preache: but whan he was admonyshed from heauen, that nowe was the tyme to playe the preacher. For he came not by chaunce to thys office of preachynge, or by the sendynge of man, but this was he, of whom Esay prophecyed so many yeares before, bothe that he should vtter openly in wyldernes the voyce of his preachynge, & that he shoulde be sent before to prepare the hartes of men to receyue the doctryne of Christ, and because he perswadynge repentaunce of the former lyfe, shoulde make them able to receyue the grace of Christe who by baptisme shoulde pardon all men of theyr synnes. And that (the course of thynges beyng sodenly chaunged) they that wer puffed vp before by the vayne iustice of Moyses lawe, and by the folyshe wysdome of this world, should haue theyr combes cut, and be brought low. And finally that they whyche before semed vyle, abiecte, and vnprofytable because of theyr ignorance and humblenes, shoulde now be made lyuely and strong through the doctrine of the gospel, and ryche with heauenly ryches. And those thynges which by the rygour of the lawe semed harde and intricate, through faith and grace of the gospell, shoulde be made lyghte and easye. And that this health and saluation, shoulde be opened and publyshed not onely to the Jewes, but to all nations of the worlde. All these thynges prophecyed Esaias, the most assured prophete of the lorde. And this is the prophecye.

In those dayes came Jhon the baptiste.

Preachynge in the wyldernesse of Jewrye.

For this is he of whome the prophet Esay spake.

A voyce of the cryer in deſerte, prepare the waye of the Lorde, make hys pathes plaine and euen. Euery valey ſhal be fylled, and euery mountaine and hyl ſhal be brought low. And the croked ſhal be made ſtrayght and the roughe, ſhall be turned into playne wayes, and all mankynde ſhall ſe the ſaluacion of god. And now a certayne rumor & fame of the cumming of Chriſt ſecretly ſpred abrode by many, and farther the conſcience of theyr naughty lyues (for there was no tyme more ſynfull and fylthy than that was) and fynally a certain ſecret inſpiration dyd cauſe & brought to paſſe, that many of them were wery of theyr lyfe, beyng very deſyrous of hym, of whome they had a certayne ſauour and vnderſtandynge ſo ſimple as it was: who ſodenly ſhoulde renewe al kynde of men, and theyr ſynnes ones abolyſhed, bryng them vnto the kyngdome of ryghteouſnes.

Than wente oute to hym Hieruſalem, and all Iewrye.

Wherefore whan they came flockynge vnto John not onelye oute of the cytye of Hieruſalem, but alſo out of whole Iewry, chyefely oute of thoſe countreyes that be nere vnto Iordane: John hym ſelfe cummeth and approcheth to ſatisfye theyr redy wyll and deſyre. And the thing that he preched in wyldernes, the ſame he doth beate into the people, being now more thicke and gathered together nere vnto the water of Iordane, ẏ through repentaunce of theyr former life, they might prepare them ſelfe to Meſſias nowe at hande, and offer themſelues to be healed of him, who ſhould bring helth and ſaluation. He is in the waye of health, that knowlegeth his diſeaſe, and hateth it. For nowe (ſayeth he) the kyngdome of heauen, and that moſt fortunate and moſte to be deſyred, is at hand: yea and that very nere, but there is no entry into it, but to ſuche as be pure and cleane, from thys worldly filthynes. At this preaching, in figure and token that the filthines of the mindes ſhould ſhortely be clenſed awaye, many were baptized in the water of Iordane condemning theyr former lyfe, & acknowledgyng theyr offenſes openly. For ſo it was thought good vnto the wiſedome of god, that John whiche was the bound and border of Moſes lawe, beyng now at an end, and of the grace of the goſpel now cummynge on, with this ſigne and token, ſhoulde go before, not to abolyſhe ſynne, whiche thynge Chriſte properly reſerued vnto himſelfe, but to prepare mennes myndes, that they myght be the more able to receyue the benefyte ẏ ſhould furthwith enſue.

And were baptyſed of hym in Iordane confeſſyage theyr ſynnes.

The texte. (But whan he ſawe many of the Phariſees & Saduces cõming to his baptiſme, he ſayd vnto thẽ: O generatiõ of vipers who hath taught you to flee frõ the vengeaũce to come: Bryng furth therfore the fruites ẏ becummeth penaũce. And be not of this mynde, to ſaye within your ſelfes we haue Abraham to our father. For I ſay to you, that god is able to bring to paſſe, ẏ of theſe ſtones, children ſhal riſe vp to Abraham. Euẽ now is the axe alſo put vnto ẏ roote of ẏ trees. Therfore euery tree, which bringeth not furth good fruyte, is hewen downe and caſt into the fyer.

But whan he ſawe many of the Phariſees.

And this was done in .xv. yeare of Tiberius Ceſar, beyng Emperour of Rome, and Pontius Pilate hauyng rule ouer Iewrye vnder hym, and Herode the brother of hym that dyed, beynge Tetrarche of Galile, where Chriſt made his abode: and his brother Philip Tetrarche of Iturea, and the contrie Trachonitis: and Liſania the Tetrache of Abiline: and Anne, and Cayphas, beynge the chiefe of the prieſtes. And thus the Realme of Iewry beyng deuyded into ſo many rulers: furthe came he whiche ſhoulde call all thinges to the power and rule of one prince. And fyrſt of al a great number of people flockynge vnto him, whan Iohn saw a great multitude of Phariſes and Saduces come to baptiſme, and was not ignorante, how this kinde of people was arrogãt, fierce, and ſtandyng in their owne conceyte, for the notable obſeruacion of Moyſes lawe as it ſemed to theim ſelues, and for the merites of the patriarches, of whome they craked and gloried muche, for ỹ they came of thẽ. For they enuyeng and layeng waite to hynder the baptiſme of Iohn, beyng in vſe and reputacion, ſent a crafty meſſage vnto hym into Bethabaram, (for Iohn at that tyme dyd baptyſe there) demaundyng whether that he were Chriſt. If he had ben: forthwith they wolde haue obiected, ỹ Chriſt had bene promiſed of the tribe of Iuda, where as it was manifeſt that Iohn was of the Trybe of Leui. Further whã Ihon proteſted plainly ỹ he was not Chriſt, no nor no prophete, eſpecially of thoſe olde & auncięt prophetes, whom they thought wolde returne agayne into the worlde, they demaunde of hym further, howe he durſt promyſe remiſſion of ſynnes by baptiſme, which properly was reſerued vnto Chriſt. He anſwered, that there was much differẽce betwene his baptiſme, wherby he dyd ſtirre and moue men to repentaunce and forthynkynge of the former lyfe: and the baptiſme of Chriſt which forth with ſhould folow, wherby all ſynnes ſhould be forgyuen. Therfore when he ſawe many of this kinde of mẽ cum runnyng to baptiſme with others: he biteth their cõſcięce w̃ bytter wordes, wherby he myght ỹ rather moue them to penaũce. O crafty (q̃ he) and malicious kynd of mẽ, nay no mẽ, but rather the ofſpring of vypers, the murderers of your auncetours, ſubtyl & yll mynded toward al men: Seyng that hytherto ye haue vaunted your ſelfes emong men vnder the tytle & name of fathers whiche for theyr holines, be muche prayſe wurthie with them & vnder the falſe pretence of righteouſnes, haue reygned ſo negligentlye & idelly, as though Meſſias ſhoulde neuer haue come, who tolde you and put you in remembraunce, that the ineuitable punyſhmentes was at hand, vnles ye had runne with others to the remedy of penaunce: and howe is it, that now ye deſyre to be baptiſed as ſynners, among whom ye appered as men vnles of great holines: ye haue perceyued that your truſt ſhoulde be but vaine, ye ſhould eſcape from the vengeaunce of god nowe beynge at hande, by the refuſe of penaũce. For neither the meryttes of the fathers, nor the obſeruaciõ of the lawe, deliuereth from euerlaſtynge punyſhment, but euery mãnes owne purenes of lyfe maketh hym commendable vnto God. Seynge therfore that ye repent your former lyfe, hereafter ſo bryngе forthe frupte with godly affections & dedes, that they maye teſtifie, that ye haue repented truely. Hytherto for the groſſenes of men, figures and ſhadowes hath bene ſume what made of, that mennes pronitie to naughtynes, beynge compaſſed in with theſe ſtayes, myght be refreyned from fallyng into farther inconuenyence. Hytherto with enlarged Phylacteries, with lõg prayers, with walſhinges, with often menciõ of father Abrahã the holy Patriarch, w̃ buildyng of the prophetes ſhrynes, of whoſe poſteritie ye deſyre to appere, and to be counted, ye haue obteyned vnto you a certayne coloure and appearaunce of holines emong men. Hereafter becauſe that ſhadowes ſhall vanyſhe awaye at the light of the goſpell, ye muſt go truely & ſincerely to wurke, yf ye will obteyne euerlaſtynge helthe. Neyther brent ſacrifice, ne bloud of beaſtes, is required of

He ſayde vnto them: o generation of vipers, who hath taughte you to flee frome the vengeaunce to come?

Bryngе furthe therfore the fruytes that becummeth penaunce.

you for your olde synnes, onelye se that there be penaunce without counterfaytyng, & god wyl frely pardon the offence: further Messias hymselfe wyll teache you, yf he fynde you apte and wyllyng to learne, what be the fruites of true penaunce. In the meane season set a syde vayne trust, and flatter not youre selues thus, we be holy, we cum of the holy father Abraham: the iust Abrahã shall auayle nothing them, that come of hym, vnlesse they folowe his faythe & obedience, whiche wer so muche commended. The blessing that is nowe at hand was promysed vnto Abraham, but cosinage and kinrede be it neuer so nere, is not sufficiente to obtayne this blessyng. Who so euer distrusting god doe leane vnto the succoures of this world, they be fallen from the kindrede of Abraham. And hereafter the posteritie of Abraham shall not be counted by ỹ kinred of blood, but by the sinceritie of faith. And yet god shal not therfore lacke the posteritie of Abraham, to whome he maye performe and paye the blessyng that he promised, though ye swarue from the maners of Abrahã. Nay, be ye ascertayned, yf ye dispise the grace offered vnto you, that god is of power, yea oute of these stones to rayse his children farre better than ye be, to his frende Abraham. And there is no cause why that ye shoulde be the more negligente for that the commynge of Messias hath ben differed hytherto. For nowe the extreme parell cũmeth vpon you, and nowe all the matter is euen vpon the edge of the raser, either ye must cum vnto the kingdome of heauẽ with cleane and sincere myndes, or elles ye must receyue eternall punyshment.

And be not of thys mynde, to saye within youre selues we haue Abraham to our father.

Saluation is present at hande to them that will embrace it, & to them that will refuse it, present payne & vtter destruction is redy at hande. For nowe the axe is sette to the tree, not to the bowes or to the body, but to the rootes whiche shal vtterly cut hym downe with a deadely wound, that can not be recouered, onles it bring forth fruite mete for god. Ther must be no lingerynge, the daunger is so nere at hand. Haste must be made, all impedimentes & lettes quite cut of. Yet ye may chose which ye wyl take. The axe wyl not stryke, yf ye wyl sodenly chaunge your mynd. In the natural tree it is longe & harde to chaũge the iuyce whereof the fruit taketh his taste. Here the matter is brought to passe, by the onely will. But as they ỹ make hast are partakers of health, so they that linger are al partakers of peril. None shal be deliuered hereafter neither by riches, neither by noble byrth neither by wisedom as many hitherto haue supposed: Euery tree that beareth not fruite, & that no meane fruite but excellent good & worthy the kyngdome of heauen, is cut downe and caste into the fyer.

For I saye vnto you, that god is able to bringe to passe, that of these stones chyldren shall arise vp to Abraham.

Euen nowe is the axe also put vnto the roote of the trees.

The texte. ¶ I baptise you with water vnto penaũce: but he that shall come after me, is myghtier than I whose shoes I am not worthy to beare. He shall baptise you with ỹ holy goste & fire, whose fanne is in his hande, and he will purge his floore, and gather his wheate into the barne, but he wyll burne the chaffe w fire that can not be quenched.

Hitherto god hath suffered & winked at mennes sluggyshnesse. Erroure and ignoraũce deserued some pardon. Mankinde was in a maner deafe at the law of nature. Smal profite came by ỹ law of Moises. The threatenynges of ỹ prophetes wer set at nought, their dreames and visions were not heard. Now is he cum after whõ none other shal be sent. Whose cõmynge leste it should be sodeyne & vnwares, I (saieth John) am ỹ messẽger sẽt before. If ye be penitent, yf ye knowledge your disease, yf ye receiue the Physition with feruent desyre, he wyl be with you, profytable & healthful to al: For I am not he whom ye loke for. Truthe it is I baptyse you, but to this intent onely, that ye beyng penitent maye be mete to learne of hym, & redye to receyue healthe whan he shall cum. For forthwith he wyll cum, yea euen nowe he is cum, and as he is behynde me in the order of preachynge, so he is aboue me and passeth me by all meanes: so that I whom ye thinke to be of sum estimation, am not worthy to be his drudge and slaue, that is eyther to carye his shooes, or to lewse the latchet of his shooes. I am none other thynge but a preacher, bothe trustye and doynge myne office, whiche god hath enioyned me by ỹ prophecy of his prophet. He is the auctoure, he bryngeth with him all myght & power, bothe to forgeue synnes & to confer and geue al kynde of vertues. Let euery man approch to his doctrine & to his baptisme, for he shall baptise you with effectuall and lyuely baptisme, not with water onely, but with spirite and fier. With spirite he shal alter & transforme you, with fyre he shal plucke you vp vnto heuenly thinges. He wyl requite nothing of you but sincere penaunce, without counterfeyting. He wyl geue you his good thinges freely, yt your yll thynges displease you hartely. Only he wylleth that there be no colourynges, which shal preuaile nothyng with him. Ther is nothyng hyd from him, he feareth no mã. The thynge shalbe done with seuere iudgemẽt, which cã not be voided. Hereafter there shalbe no meane, eyther ye must throughly be good, or throughly euil. He wil passe nothing vpõ cloked holines. He hath a fanne in his hãd, he seeth also the inwarde secretes of ỹ hartes. Before him eyther ye must be chaffe or fyne wheate. But in the meane season whether of both ye wilbe, he hathe partlye put it in youre choyse. It shalbe but vayne for the chaffe myngled among the cleane corne to lurke & to be hydden.

I baptise you with water vnto repentaunce.

He shall baptise you with the holy ghost and fyre.

Whose fanne is in hys hãde. And he wyll pourge hys floore.

He shal vtterly cleanse his floore, & ley vp the wheat in his granard, but he shall burne the chaffe with fyre that neuer shalbe quenched. Wherfore eyther ye muste endeuour with al your herte to ỹ high pycke of vertue, that ye maye worthely be receyued into the euerlastynge kyngdome: or elles yf ye dispyse the goodnes of god now offered vnto you, ye must nedes therby be extremely naughte, because ye refuse so great healthe offered to you without your seekyng, & through your owne merite (forasmuch as ye reiecte the heauẽly rewarde,) ye must be appoynted to the euerlasting fire of hel. The myndes of the common sorte wer so moued with the sayinges of this holy man, that a great number which hytherto had put their trust in the obseruation of the lawe, came vnto hym trembling for feare, and sayde: If thus stondeth the case, what then thynche ye beste for vs to do? but he dyd not exhorte them to the ceremonies of the lawe, and the cõstitutions of mẽ, as the Pharisees wer wont to do, but vnto the workes of charitie, saying: The first waye to pacify god is the free weldoyng vnto your neighbour. He that hath plenty of garmentes, let hym geue vnto the naked: he ỹ hath plenty of meates, let hym geue vnto the hungrye. There came vnto hym also the Publicans, the whiche kynde of men the Iewes abhorre, because commenlye either for to pleasẽ the princes, or to satisfye their auarice they are wonte to powle the people. They demaunde of him fearfully, what he thynketh best for them to do. And he doeth not reiecte thẽ from baptisme, & agayne he appointeth them not to geue theyr goodes, who nowe of long tyme were wonte violently to take away other mẽnes: but to thintent they might cum nere by sum degree vnto ỹ perfect doctrine of Christ, he commaundeth maundeth them that they ſhould exact nothyng of the people, beſyde that that was preſcribed of the Prince. Finally there came alſo ſouldioures, a violent and a diffamed kinde of people. Neyther put he awaye from hym them, declaring manifeſtly vnto the Iewes by that dede, that Chriſt wold deſpyſe no kynde of men. They confeſſe nothyng: For to profeſſe a ſouldioure is of it ſelfe to confeſſe the puddle and ſinke of all miſchefe. They demaunde alſo what counſell he woulde geue them. And he teacheth them beynge ſo rude, rather what ought to be auoyded & ſhunned, ỹ they myght be leſſe yl, thē what was to be done, wherby they myght be perfectly good. Abuſe not (quod he) your wepōs which ought not to be ſtirred but againſt your enemyes, at the cōmaūdemēt of the captaine, beate no man nor ſtrike no man violently, ſyth ye be hyred for this purpoſe, that through your diligence ỹ cuntrey ſhould be quiet. Nor abuſe not your familiarite vnto great rulers, falſely blamyng & accuſynge any man, where by any filthy lucre or gayne myght come vnto you. Finally be content with your wages and defraude & ſpoyle no mā. For princes geue wages to thintent no man by neceſſitie ſhould be forced to take other mennes goodes. So he through eaſy preceptes accordyng to euery mannes capacitie, made al men in a redynes for Chriſt to cum, ſeyng before Chriſt in ſpirite, whom he had not yet ſene with his bodely eyes.

Therfore the rumour and fame beyng nowe ſpred abrode, & dayly more and more encreaſing, and that by diuers meanes, by the angels, by ỹ ſheperdes, by the Magiās, by the cruel carefulnes of Herod, by the prophecy of zachary, by Symeon, by Anne, by litle & lytle ſecretly, but moſt of al by John hys open and manifeſte ſettynge furthe, beynge ioyned with a great aucthoritie, in ſo muche that yll men alſo beynge nowe amaſed with feare, dyd frame themſelfe, to the commynge of Chriſte, thus declared and ſette furth. For truly it was tyme for hym to come furth into the ſyghte of the worlde, to declare hym ſelfe, not by the teſtimonies of others, but by hys owne vertues, ỹ it might appeare what maner of one and how myghty he was, and that he mighte obſcure & darken all men, by whoſe teſtimonye he was heretofore ſet furth & cōmended. Therfore Jeſus left Galile where he had bene in ſecrete hytherto, and goynge aboute hys fathers buſines, lefte his mothers contry Nazareth, & maketh ſpede vnto Jordane, where he ſhould haue a great company gathered togyther out of dyuers coaſtes of Jewry, to be a witnes of the thynges that ſhould be ſpoken & done. mete & conueniēt that I which am farre beneth & vnder thy vertues, shuld require baptime of the: And how cōmeth it to passe that thou doest hūble & abase thy selfe so low, to require baptisme of me, syth noman is more pure & cleane frō al synne thā thou? These thinges were thus done by thordynaūce of god, to thintent both ỹ we should haue an example of the mutuailouse modestie & humilitie of Christe, & also that it myght appere vnto all men by the testimony of Jhon, that Christ being without conscience of any synne or euyl, required to be baptised. For he was baptised lyke as he was circumcysed, as he was purified in the temple with his mother, as he was scourged, as he was crucyfied. He suffered all these thynges for vs, & not for himselfe. Wherfore whē John declaring constātly his own vnworthynes, & setting furth the worthynes of Christ, did refuse thoffyce of a baptiser: Christ by no sinister suspicion dyd steyne his owne innocency which it behoued to be knowen & beleued of al mē. Euery parte (ỹ he) of this busynes hath his time. Be thou content in the meane season, that I be baptysed of the, thynke not vncomly for the, yt thou baptyse hym who (as thou sayest) is better then thou. Certaynely it shal becum me, whiche desireth to bryng al vnto me, to fulfyl al iustice. For he that teacheth al and teacheth perfection, muste se that no lykelyhod or apparaunce of vnryghteousnes (be it neuer so litle) be found in his like and maners. I must becum al thinges to al men, that I may wynne & bryng al vnto my father. When John hearde these, he descended into Jordane with Christ, and baptysed him. And here appereth an holsome example of humilitie in Christ, and of obedience in John, but the thyng, and the effecte is of contray order. For baptisme doth consecrate vs, but he through the holy touchyng with his body dyd consecrate baptisme.

Saynge I haue nede to be bapt.

Jesus answered and sayde vnto him: let it be so nowe For so it becōmeth vs to fulfyll all iustice.

¶ And Jesus whē he was baptysed, came straycht way out of the water, & lo, heaue was open vnto him: & he saw the spirite of god descendyng like a doue, and lighting vpon him And lo, there came a voyce frō heauen saying: This is my beloued sonne in whom I am well pleased.

The texte.

And to thintent he might declare vnto vs what we ought todo after baptisme, and what felicitie was geuen vs by baptysme, Jesus goyng out of the water cherefully and spedely as though he had cast of a great burdē of synnes, teachyng vs that we shoulde not tarry nor lynger in wallshynges, nor oftentymes returne vnto thē by synning agayne, but to make haste to the dueties of a spiritual lyfe, the sinnes of the former lyfe once cast of, and buried in baptisme: He kneled downe vpon his knees, and lifted his hādes into heauen, besechyng his father he would vouchesafe that thismatter of sauyng of mankynde, which he toke in hande, myght be happy and fortunate to all men, and that he would commende and set furth his sonne vnto the worlde with his fatherly authoritie: & lest John his authoritie should be of small estimation, albeit this for ỹ tyme was profytable for the grosse and rude people. And behold the father dyd manyfestly auctorise his sōne in the presence of such a multitude of people. The heuēs opened & shewed furth a certayne wonderfull light. John also sawe the heauenly spirite in the visible lykenes of a doue, to descende out of heauen, and to syt vpō his holy hed. From whence the doue came manifest to be sene, frō thence came the voyce of the father soundyng to all mennes eares, sayinge: this is my derely beloued sonne, the delyght of my mynde in whome I haue a singuler pleasure, heare hym the expounder of my mynde, and the distributer of my goodnes towardes you. And because at ỳ tyme Jesus was vnknowē to the multitude which had a great opinion of Jhon, lest the voyce, which cōming from aboue poynted no man certaynely to theyr vnderstandyng, should be thought to perteyne vnto John: therfore there was added a visible signe of the heuenly doue, which syttyng vpon Christes head, shewed now playnely vnto al men (as a man would point with his finger) to whō that voyce dyd pertayne. Wyth the which signe also John hymselfe was playnely and certaynely monyshed, that he was the sonne of God. And after he dyd openly testifye that this sygne and token was promised him before of the father, to thintent that in suche a multitude of people, he might certaynelye know him that afterwarde shoulde baptise all men in the spirite and fyer. And with these ceremonies the Lorde Jesus was declared and consecrated oure mayster, whose diuinitie who so wyll folowe, he shal be truly blessed.

The fourth Chapter.

Then was Jesus led of the spirite into wyldernes, to be tempted of the Deuyl. And whā he had fasted foorty dayes & foorty nightes, he was at the last an hūgred. And whā the temptoure came to him, he said: If thou be the sōne of god, cōmaund that these stones be made bread. But he answered & sayde: It is wrytten, man shal not lyue by bread onely, but by euery worde that proceadeth out of the mouth of God.

AND yet these entrees & begynnynges made, he lepeth not furth by and by to preach, although auctorite were gyuen hym from heauen, but sodaynely he withdraweth himselfe frō the sight of the people into wildernes, because that departure frō the cōpanye of people both increaseth auctorite, & prouoketh a desyre. Nowe the spirite (that is the prouoker of the yll) doeth specyally assaulte them which leauyng the desyres of the worlde, do fall into meditation of the pure and heauenly lyfe. Therfore Jesus secretly teachyng vs the same, goeth into wyldernes. And this he doth not by the motion or instigation of any man, but moued of his owne spirite. For he that is baptised, hath nowe caste of carnal affections, & beyng made spiritual by regeneration, is led & moued by the counsel of holy goost: he remēbreth not Bethleem, he returneth not to Nazareth, he goeth not agayne to his mother or to his foster father, but by the vehemency & rauisshyng of the spirite, he goeth into deserte, folowyng the example of the olde prophetes. Solitarines doth quicken & make lusty the mynde of a Christian souldier, and sumtyme it is more sure for a man to commit himselfe to the wylde beastes, than to men. Baptisme taketh awaye all synnes of the former lyfe, but for all that, no mā is sure frō the assaultes of Sathan whiche lyueth sluggyshely. But yet the naughty desyres endeuoure to spring agayne, chefely in them that be rude & yonge and lately entered and cummen to Christ. And that frowarde Sathan enuying as much mannes saluation, as Christ is desirouse of the same: styreth and prouoketh him with merueylouse engins and sleyghtes, to fall awaye and departe: in so muche that he possesseth and vseth him that is relapsed with more tyrannye, then he dyd possesse and vse hym whan he had him before. Agaynst these perylles and daungers Christ sheweth chiefely

three remedies, often and harty prayers, forsakyng of company, auoidyng of excesse, and kepyng abstinence, not without diligent meditacion of holy scriptures: for otherwyse there maye be daunger in vole solitarynes. And because the deuyll goeth aboute to deceyue them chiefely, whyche do endeuour to atteyne vnto this streyght & angelycal lyfe: Christe him selfe lyke a good captayne encountering wyth him, hath taught his champions, by what meanes, that malycyouse and crafty olde fyze maye be ouercum, and howe lytle he can doe agaynst them that be sober and vigilant, and wyth all theyr hart doe leane to the godly scriptures. And this also ỹ lord Jesus in the meane tyme wente aboute, that this mistery myghte, by lytle & lytle appere vnto the worlde after suche sorte, that Sathan (whiche desyred for none other purpose to know certaynly whether he were the sonne of God whom he hearde that the father dyd honour with this title and name, but to let the redemption of mankynde) was brought in suche doubte, that he knewe not certaynly this to be Messias, before he sawe his owne tyranny vtterlye subuerted & ouerthrowen. Christ also putteth vs in remembraũce of this, that no man is mete to preache the gospell, but he that hathe tryed himselfe, and is fyrme & strong agaynst worldly desyres, agaynst excesse & her cõpanions, that is bodyly luste, ambition, auarice, and suche like diseases of the mynde, wherwith oure enemye beateth & shaketh the myndes of the symple & weake as it were with moste violent engins of war. Therfore whan Christ had fasted forty dayes, folowynge Hely, and Moyses, whyche thing was in suche wise aboue mannes power, that yet the Jewes beleued, that it was done of men: at last to shewe a manyfest token of mãnes unbecilitie in him selfe, he made no counsayle but shewed playne sygnes that he felt the tediousnes of hounger. For after the common nature of mannes body, the lacke of humour greued and payned the stomacke.

And whan he had fasted forty dayes.

Whyche thyng whan the crafty temptour perceyued thynkyng hym to be nothyng but a man, although a notable and a wonderfull man, he casteth his hoke bayted wyth the entisment of vayne glory, for ther with chiefely they be taken, whiche seme to endeuour to the hyghest perfectyon. If thou be the sonne of God (q̃ he) what nedest thou to be greued and pyned for hunger. Commaunde rather these stones to be turned in to breade for thy behoke. Thou canst perfourme thy desyre with a becke. Ye may wel know that this is the same lyar in wayt, or tempter which did intice that fyrst Adam into the snares of death, by the baite or traine of glutonie: But Christ the latter Adam being in spirit heauenly, so auoided with his wordes, this craftie and deceytful wayter, that neither he refused the name of the sonne of God, nor yet him selfe to be ouercum with hũger after the cõmon sorte of men. And because he woulde not take vpon him to answere of his owne authoritye: he layeth vnto him a manifest scripture, saying: It is wrytten in the Deuteronomy. Man shall not lyue onely of breade, but of euerye worde, that cummeth out of the mouth of God.

And whan the temptour cam to hym.

But he answered and sayde: It is wrytten, man shall not lyue by breade onely.

¶ Than the deuyll taketh him into the holy citie, and setteth him vpõ a pinacle of the temple, and sayth vnto him: if thou be the sonne of god, cast thy self downe backward. For it is wrytten: he shal geue his angels charge ouer the, & with their hãdes they ſhal bold the vp, leſt at any tyme thou dash thy foote against a stone. And Jesus ſayd to him: againe it is written. Thou ſhalt not tempte the Lorde thy God.

Then Sathan enluded and shaken of with this doubtfull answer, doeth then him ſelf abuſe the wordes of ſcriptures, to do hurt and miſchief. And as he deceyued the firſt parent of mankynde with the bayt of ambicion, promiſing him egall honor and immortalitie with god: by a lyke gyle aſſayling the lorde, the deuyl toke him vp in to the holy citie, & whan he had ſet him vpon the high Pinnacle of the tẽple, he exhorted him, if he were the very ſonne of god, ẽ he would fall downe hedlong, and he ſhoulde haue no harme: For God him ſelf had ſo promiſed in the miſticall pſalme: He wyll geue his angels commaundemẽt and charge ouer the, & they ſhal take the in theyr handes, leſt thou ſhouldeſt hurte thy foote at any ſtone. But the lord Jeſus laying a ſcripture againſt him, geueth a ſecret vnderſtanding, how peruerſely he wreſted the ſenſe of the holy ſcripture. Agayne (ſ he) it is wrytten in the Deuteronomie: Thou ſhalt not tempte the lord thy god. For ſcripture doeth exhorte vs to this poincte, that whan aduerſitie and daunger is at hande, we ſhould haue a good hope, truſting vpõ the helpe of god, and not put our ſelues raſhely in daunger. The miracles of godly men be not tryed by ſeking of perilles, but by auoyding daungers whan they chaunce. For it is no godly poincte for to put any man hedlong in to the ryuer, that by deliuering of him thou mayeſt ſeme to be a greate man, but it is a godly thing to plucke out him, that by chaunce is fallen in. Nor miracles be not to be donne for euery thynge, nor emongeſt all men. Jeſus woulde not ones vouchſafe to ſpeake before Herode, who was deſirouſe of ſuche thinges, muche leſſe would he ſhow any ſigne or token of his godly power, at the requeſt of Sathan. So often as charitie inſpired with the holy goſt, deſireth it, ſo often as the glory of God requirethit, the power of God is to be ſhewed abrode.

Againe, the deuel taketh him vp in to a very high hyl, & ſhoweth him al the kingdõs of the worlde, and the glory of thẽ, and ſayth vnto him: all theſe wyl I geue the, yf thou wylt fall downe & worſhip me. Than ſaith Jeſus vnto him: auoyde Satã. For it is wrytten: Thou ſhalt worſhip the lord thy God, & him only ſerue. Thã the deuil leaueth hym. And beholde thangels cam and miniſtred vnto him.

Now to thintent that Chriſt myghte teache ſuche as be his, not to geue them ſelues to a careles ſecurite, after they had the hygher hande ones or twiſe, but alwayes to kepe watche, & to be in a redines for all aſſaultes of Sathã he ſuffered alſo the third tyme, thinportune aſſayling of the temptour: who as he deceyued the firſt Adam with the bayte of curioſitie and auarice, promiſing him the knowlege of good and euyll, ſo in lykewyſe he ſetteth vpon the latter Adam, and toke him from the pinnacle of the temple, and ledde hym in to a very hygh hyll, where he mighte loke at lybertie fatre and wyde, and ſee all the kyngdomes of the worlde, and the wonderfull glory and pompe of eche of them. Suerly he knewe by experience of other men, that there was nothing ſo wicked and ſinful, but they would take it in hande to obtayne rule and dominion. But albeit god is the authour & maker of al thinges in heaue & yerth, & the deuil hath not tytle nor intereſt in the, vnles he hath viciated & defiled any thing: yet as thoughe he were lorde ouer all, he is not afrayed thus to ſpeake vnto Chriſt: I wyl geue the all theſe, yf thou wylte fall downe and honour me. O blynde im-

I will geue the all theſe.

pietie. The vngratious spirite promiseth an other mans goodes, & asketh honour due vnto onely god. But Jesus who hitherto toke the reproch of him self well in worth, can not beare his fathers ignomine. Hence Sathan (q he): Thy counsel is farre from the doctrine of holy scripture. The scripture sayeth: Thou shalt adoure the lorde thy god, and him onely serue. After that the deuyl had tẽpted him by these and like other waies, finding him alwayes to be valiaũt & an inuincible chãpion, against al inuentions & ingins, he left him at last, beyng disappointed of his purpose two waies. First in that he perceiued that Christ was inuincible. Secondly, where as he came to serche, whether he was the sonne of god or no, he went awaye not so wise as he came. This conflicte was made in the sight of God & his angelles, the which the lord Jesus would not haue vnknowe vnto his, to thintent we might knowe with what a cumberous enemy we should haue to doe, and with what wages and rewardes, he would stirre and prouoke ignorant and vnware mindes, that we should not despeyre, but diligently watche & take good hede. Christ ouercame hym to shewe vnto vs that he was vincible, & taught vs also how we should ouercum. Finally he ouercame for vs, not for him self, purposyng by vs to ouercum the same yt we deserue to haue him prelet with vs. And by vs he shal hear Christ say: hẽce Sathan, and he shall feare the seruauntes of him, of whom he was ouercum. Further like as in worldly warre, thinges haue their course & order, & labours be eased with rest, & sorowful thinges with pleasaunt, and after sore conflictes triumphes be made: so in the warre of Christ, sore stormes of tentation be mittigated with myrthe and ioyfulnes. After the cumberouse frowardenes of the filthy spirite, by and by the angelles be ready to serue and waite vpon Christ the conquerour. Suerly this exãple teacheth vs, how in aduersitie we should staye our minde with hope of better, trusting vpon the goodnes of god, whiche so dothe order al thinges, that now and than he doth exercise and proue the valiantnes of his warriers, wyth trouble and aduersitie: and agayne with sum solace doth prouoke them to reioysinge and thankes geuyng, whiche is the triumphe of Christen men, and in afflictions thorow the helpe of God, they be inuincible, and yf any prosperitie cum vnto thẽ, they ascribe it wholly to the goodnes and bountifulnes of God. And so it cummeth to passe that neyther they be discouraged in aduersitie, nor insolent or proude in prosperitie.

Than sayeth Jesus vnto hym.

Thẽ the deuyl leaueth hym.

And beholde thangels came and ministred vnto him.

And whan Jesus had heard that John was taken, he went aparte into Galilee, and left Nazareth: Went & dwelt in Capernaũ: which is a cytie vpõ the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Neptalim, þ it might be fulfylled which was spokẽ by Esai the prophete, saying: the land of Zabulon & Neptalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordane, Galile of the gentiles. The peple which sat in darkenes, & in the shadowe of death, sawe great lyght, and to them whiche sat in the region & shadow of death the lyght is spronge vp.

The texte.

Therfore whan Christ began to be of authoritie and estimation, chiefly after that John had in maner deliuered him and commended him to hys disciples, pointing with his finger, & saying: Beholde the lãbe of god, beholde hym that taketh awaye the synnes of worlde, & after that he had ouercum the deuil, being fully inspired with the holy goste: nothing now remayned, but to take a tyme and place, to begynne and enter his preaching. John wrought no miracle, being content to preach only penaunce. Christ kept silence so long as he preached, lest any discorde might rise emōg their disciples, being yet rude, carnal, and geuen to worldlye affectiōs. Surely it is the parte of a good teacher, to conforme him self to the capacitie of his audience. But than he entreth into thoffice of teaching, whan the rumour was blowen abrode, that John was cast in to prison of Herode the Tetrarche, enioying ỹ rewarde that they be wont to haue, which dare boldly speake before the Princes of this worlde, and wyl rather speake holsum thinges thā pleasaūt. For he tolde the Tetrarche of his vnlawful mariage, because he maried his brother Philippes wife. And sumtime euill princes desire to haue in howsholde with thē, men of greate and notable honestye, not that they woulde obey theyr counsell, but because they mighte seme to the ignorant people to do by theyr aduyse & counsel, what so euer they do after theyr own lust & appetite. And in other thinges of light importaūce, he had oftentymes ben obediēt to his monitions, but here, where he ought most to haue ben obediēt, at the foule request of a filthy daunsing damsel, and at the desire of her filthy mother, he cast that very good man into prison. And afterwarde with the cruell death of suche a greate man he defiled the feast of his Natiuitie, and the eyes of his nobles. Iesus therfore whā he hearde of this, not because he was in feare him self, but to teach his, not willingly to put thē selues in daunger, if they may conueniently auoyd it, but whan it cummeth, stoutly to neglect it, le auyng Nazareth went a side into Galile of the Gentiles, in the which Salomō gaue vnto Hyere king of the Tyrians. xx. cities, and wēt in to the cytie of Capernaum, therfore taken to be bordering vpon the sea, because it is neere the standing water of Jenazareth in the coastes of Zabulon and Neptalim, whiche were two tribes, and in the first is Galilee, in the seconde that, that is called Galilee of the Gētiles, whereby Christ than as by a figure, in maner thretned that whan the Jewes dyd refuse and persecute the preachers of the Gospell, than the gospel should be brought vnto the Gentiles. And lest that a man might thinke that this thing was donne by chaunce, Esai being inspired with the spirite of prophecy, prophecied longe before that it shoulde so be, saying: in the land of Zabulon and the land of Neptalim, which bordereth vpon the sea in Galilee of the Gentiles, the people which heretofore dwelled in darkenes, hath seen a greate & a merueylouse lyght, and vnto them whiche heretofore were in a thicke darknes, suche as is in hell, lyghte is sprong vp. Therfore as cōcernyng the time, where John left, there Christ begynneth. For at the cleare lyght of the Gospel, the shadowes of Moyses lawe do banishe awaye. And this is spoken directly concernynge the misticall figures of the lawe, and the expresse truth of the gospell. But as touchyng the place: At the first affliction and trouble of the holy preacher the name of the Gentiles is gone vnto, and the lyghte whiche the Jewes blynded with fylthy desyres, coulde not suffer, is set further, passyng ouer to the Gentyles, very Idolaters. But after suche sorte that the coastes of neyther is forsaken, so that of bothe sydes the trumpe of the voyce of the gospell may be hearde. And yet furthermore that contrey was no vnprofitable auditorie, by reason of the commoditie of hauens, and certen notable cities standing vpon the sea side, which by the reason of the course of marchandyse, were frequented and vsed also of farre cummers.

Whan Jesus had hearde.

He went apart in to Galilee, Went & dwelt in Capernaū

That it myght be fulfylled whyche was spoken by Esaye the prophete.

From

¶ From that time Jesus began to preache & say. Repent, for the kingdom of heaue is at hãd. As Jesus walked by ẏ sea of Galilee, he saw two bretherne. Simõ which was called Peter, & Andrew his brother, castyng a nette in to the sea, (for they were fishers) and he saith vnto them: Folow me, and I will make you fishers of mẽ: And they straight waye left theyr nettes and folowed hym. The texte.

Now let vs heare the begynnyng of his preachyng. As it succeded after John, so he beginneth with hys doctrine, which was well knowen and familiar, lest he should haue driuen them awaye from him, whiche had John now in so greate veneration: And he fedeth the weake with milke, that afterwarde he mighte bring furth strong meate to them whan they were of more strength. And truely this is thorder of teachers, whiche desire rather to profit the hearers, than to set furth & magnifie thẽ selues before other. The preching of Christ is not onely more milde & gentle than John his prechyng (for he maketh no mention neither of axe, nor of fanne, nor of fier that neuer shalbe quenched) but also more to be commended, for many benefites bestowed vpõ al men indifferẽtly. Jesus therfore folowing John, cryeth and sayeth: Chaunge your mindes, and repent your former lyfe. For now the kingdome of heauen is at hande, the which as it shall be shut vnto no man, so it shall be open onely vnto them that be pure and cleane, & seke after heuenly thinges, and cut awaye all worldly desires. What can be more plaine & simple than this Philosophy? Let euery man be displeased and greued with his owne nawghtines, and heauenly thynges be redy for him at hand, and that frely. And now the tyme was cum, that Jesus should gather together a company of disciples, whiche should be familiar witnesses of all his doinges and sayinges, and by whom he mighte teache other afterwarde. But marke what maner of men he chose, not Philosophers, not Phariseis, not priestes, not riche men. For he wolde not that the glory of the Gospell should be defiled with any worldly ayde and succour. But as he walked neere the water whiche (as we sayde before) was in the borders of bothe Galilees, he espyed two brothers germayne, the name of the one was Symon, and he was called also Peter, the other was named Andrew, whose fathers name was John. These before that tyme, hearde John, thorough whose prouocation they began to folow Jesus. But they left them both, and returned againe to theyr faculte & crafte, wherby they were wonte to get theyr liuyng. And nowe they were busily occuppyed, casting theyr nettes in to the sea. It was a signe of good luck. First youth, more ready to receyue the newe doctrine: Further, the agreablenes of bretherne one ready to helpe an other: Agayne a crafte and facultye in whiche was no hurte: wherby they gotte a poore liuing oute of the cõmon meare or poole: Finally the fisshyng put thẽ in remembraunce of the new fisshyng, whiche serued not to take fisshes wt nettes to feade the belly, but with the nette of the gospell to catch men drouned with worldly cares, vnto desire of the heuenly life. Therfore as they were occupied aboute necessaries for theyr body, Christ speaketh vnto them, saying: Folow me, & ye shall learne a science of me, better than euer ye learned of your father. And yet ye shall not leaue your science, but ye shall chaunge it for a better. For I will make you hereafter fysshers of men, ẏ ye which wayte for fisshes to destroy thẽ may catche & take men in to euerlasting saluation. They knew the voyce of hym, whome before they dyd beleue, & whose gentilnes they had proued before with familiar cõmunicatiõ. But through the strength and efficacy of his voice, he brought to passe, that furth with at the worde of the caller, they forgat not onely theyr fisshe, but also their nettes, as they were they left them there, and not biddinge their acquaintance once fare wel, folowed Jesus euen as he walked. They sawe no greate thynge yet in Jesus, not withstandynge they stayed not, nor lingered nothyng, nor were not carefull howe they shoulde get their liuinge hereafter, but ioyned theim selues to hym, callyng them with his only worde, and folowed hym, and woulde not awaye to dye therfore.

¶ And whan he was gon furth frõ thence, he saw other two brethern. James ꝑ sõne of Zebede, and John his brother in the ship, with their father zebede, mending their nettes, & he called thẽ, & they furthwith lefte ꝑ ship & their father, and folowed him.

Jesus going a litill further, espyed other two brothers, James & John the sonnes of Zebedeus, he was the better pleased for that the bretherne and the father agreed so well together. They were all in one bote, endeuorynge one thyng, euen the same that Peter and Andrew were abowte. But these went not spedely forwarde with their busines, because theyr nettes were broken with long wearing, whiche was a token of pouertie. Jesus therfore passynge by as they were ernestly occupyed in mendynge of theyr nettes, spake vnto them, and bad them folowe hym. The ponge men of a plaine confydence and trust, without any tarying, furthwith leuyng theyr nettes, and forgettyng their father also, bende them selues to folowe Jesus: so the preachynge of John had framed and faishioned them so deserued the towardnes and redines of theyr hartes, so had the inspiration of Christ drawen them, who wholly breathed and sauoured of the heauenly spirit, wherwith he was replenished.

¶ And Jesus went about al Galile, teachyng in their synagoges, and preachyng the gospell of the kyngdom, and healing al maner of sycknes, and all maner of diseases emong ꝑ people. And his fame spred abrod through out al Syria. And they brought vnto him all sycke people that were taken with diuers diseases and grypinges, and them that were possessed with deuils, and those that were lunatike. And those that had the palsey: and he healed them. And there folowed hym greate multitudes of people from Galyle, and from Decapolis, and Jerusalem, and Jewry, and from the countreis that lye beyonde Jordane.

Ye see the enterynges of our Philosophy, wherby it was thought good vnto god to saue al mankynde. Ye see the pope and rukkyng of the euangelical schole. Poore Jesus beyng accompanyed with these few fysshers vnlerned, of the cõmen sorte, and poore men, walked ouer all Galilee, not now in corners nor in deserte, but in theyr Synagoges, where as was most resorte: preaching and showynge, that that whiche the kyngdome of heauen promysed heretofore, was now at hande: not putting theim in feare of hell fyer lyke as John dyd, but inuityng and alluringe all men wyth free benefites. For where soeuer he went he healed all mennes dyseases indifferently, and frely, refusyng no man, were he neuer so vile, and of the meanest sorte, and with lyke easines he chased awaye all diseases, were they neuer so incurable: to thintent bothe to set furth and declare by myracles, his power to be greater than mannes, and also thorough free benefites, to purchase and wynne the loue of all men. For hym we gladly trust and beleue, whom we loue. Further wylde beastes also be wunne with benefites. Surelye there is no benefit more godlye, frely than to restore health. By these meanes it cam to passe, that the fame of hym spred

abrode thorough out all Syria, many brought from farre theyr diseased folke incumberd with diuerse dyseases and greefes, & beside these such as were possessed with diuilles, and Lunatikes, & diseased with the palsey, whom Phisitions commonly eyther take not vpon them to cure, or els be wonte to cure in vaine, because the disease passeth theyr arte and cunnyng. But Iesus healed all easelye, not with mannes medycines, but with heauenly vertue, wher with he was hable also to raise the ded. It was a small matter to hym to take away the diseases of the bodyes, whiche toke away the diseases of the myndes. It was a small matter for hym to prolong the lyfe of the body, whyche came to geue euerlastynge lyfe vnto al men. Ther cam therfore frō this parte and that parte, a wonderful numbre of people, not onely from Galilee of the Gentiles where he was, but also out of the other Galile, whyche was beyonde the water, and out of the cuntrey that was called Decapolis because of tenne cities whiche were in it, also out of Hierusalem and the residew of Iury, and out of the places whyche were beyonde Iordane. All men as they haue nede runne to a benefit.

And those that had the palsey: and he healed them.

And there followed hym great multitudes.

Many be moued with nouelties. Sum came for malice with a mynde to wayte displeasure. Iesus (for his parte) draweth all vnto hym, but few be mete for the heauenly Philosophye, for the teachynge and deliuery of the whyche, he chiefly cam in to the worlde. The people is moued with care of the body, & is destroused & deliteth much in newe sightes and galinges. But he deliteth not greatly in suche syghtes that seketh after thynges of perfection, and thinges farre a sondre, from the affections of the common sorte.

¶ And whan he saw the multitude he went vp in to a mowntaine, & whan he was sette, his disciples cam to hym. And after that he had opened hys mowth, he tawght them, saying: blessed are the poore in spirite, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen.

THerfore Iesus seyng the people flocking about him more and more, & that of all sortes, he conueyeth him selfe from the low place whither euery mā might haue accesse, & goeth vp vnto the hil, & began now to preach & teach ẏ heauely Philosophy, declaryng by the highnes of the place, that he wouldе show furth & teach no common nor meane thyng, but all high and heauenly thynges, folowinge also the example of Moyses, who publisshing the law vnto the people (as we read) went vp to the hill. His disciples whom he had chosē specially vnto him, folowed him goyng vp, in suche wise yet, ẏ the cōmon people were not let to folow him, if any had so much desire and strength. Therfore Iesus whā he cam to the toppe of the hil, he sate downe not as being weary, but purposing to teach serious and weighty thinges, whiche required a diligent hearer. Whā his disciples perceyueth that, they compassed him nere aboute, that none of his holy doctrine should escape them. Therfore Iesus entryng and beginning his godly and holsome Philosophye, not out of a tower garnisshed with out of a goldē seate such an one as Iarcas the great phylosopher of India had, beyng garnished with preciousstones, not out of the prowde pulpyt of the Philosophers, not out of the arrogant chayre of the phariseis, but out of the seate of grasse, he casteth his eyes, not vpon the commen people, but vpon his disciples, and opening his holy mouth, he beganne to showe furthe the lessons of the Gospell, whyche hytherto hathe not bene hearde, and whiche be farre from the opinion of al men, that appered to be very wyse vnto the worlde. All men promyse blessednes, whiche take vpon them to be teachers of wisedom: All men of what estate or condition so euer they be, desire blessednes. But muche controuersye hath ben emonge Philosophers, & muche errour in the life of men, in what thinges the felicitie of man doth consist: Bycause this is the marke and foundacyon of all wysedome. Jesus first doth open and set furth straunge sentences, but yet very true. And therfore through miracles he obteyned credyte to be geuen to hys saying, though it semed sumwhat incredible, so that they that fownde his power to be effectual in healing of diseases of the body, might trust also hys doctrine to be true, wherby he healed the diseases of the minde. Yet few Disciples there were, that dyd both heare and imbrace this blessednes. Let al men heare, for he spake to all and all shall be made blessed and happy. Of false opinions spryng al sinnes in lyuyng. Therfore aboue al thinges, we muste endeuoure to plucke them awaye. Becaule the fercenes and arrogancy is the most daungerouse disease of the mynde, whyche suffereth not man to receyue the true doctryne. Yea it is the fountayne, from whēce in maner spryng al deadly offenses; First of al Jesus healeth this, saying: Blessed be the poore in spirite, for theyrs is the kyngdom of heauē: whose eares could haue abidden so incredible a saying: but after so many testimonyes of John, of the father, and of the dooue, and finallye vnlesse hys authoritie had ben set furthe, and credit obteyned thorough euidēt signes and miracles? Many be made vyle, abiect, and humble, and be brought in discourage of them selues, by the reason of pouertie, of baselnes of birthe, of lownes of estate, or of aduersitie. Truely these be nere to the blessednes of the gospel, if they folow with their harte, as they be called by their state. But this humilitie of spirites, resteth in thinwarde affection, not in outwarde thynges. But how shal he haue a kingdom, which taketh nothing vpon hym, whiche geueth place to al, which is offēded with him self, which thrusteth out no man, which hurteth no man? For he semeth more nye the seruitute of an asse, than a kingdom. This kynde of men is trode vnder the feete euery where, is hurte and harmed without redresse, lyueth like an abiecte without regarde, poore and comfortles. But it is true, that truthe sayeth. To these onely appertayneth the kingdom, but it is the kingdom of heauen. Thynkest thou that these fierce and violent men do reigne? They be very slaues, they be vnder many tyrānies, they be vexed with auarice, angre, hatred, desire of vengeaunce, with feare, with hope. They vnnethes lyue, muche lesse they reygne. But he that is free frō al these vexations and troubles, and betaketh him selfe to innocency and cleane life: putting his trust in god, lokyng for the rewarde of the worlde to cum, & is very quiet and regardeth not ỹ thynges of this worlde, but seketh after heauenly thinges: hath not he a godly kingdome, far passing the kyngdomes of kinges? Neyther filthy lust, nor auarice, nor hatred, nor angre, nor other worldlye infections of the minde reigne ouer him. And armed with fayth so often as the case requireth, he geueth commaundemēt to diseases, & they flee away, he geueth commaundement vnto the waters, and they be stil, he geueth cō-maundemẽt to deuils, and they departe. So mighty is the kingdom of the minde whiche distrusting him selfe, putteth his trust in God, and dystrustinge the succoure of man, doth depende wholy of heauen. It is not the dyademe, it is not the oyntment, it is not the garde, that maketh a kyngdome. These be the thynges that make a kynge in deade, and bring him finallye to the heauenly and euerlastinge kingdome, where ther shalbe no disobediẽce nor rebellion. A worldlye kingdom is gotten by violence, and defended by fiercenesse. This kyngdome is gotten by modesty & soberneſſe, and defended and establyshed by humilitie and mekenes. The worlde iudgeth none meete to gouerne a kingdom, but suche as be of a notable spirite and of a stowte courage. But God auaunceth vnto his kyngdome those chiefly, whiche do most humble them selues.

¶ Blessed be they that be meke: For they shal receiue the inheritaunce of the yearth. The texte.

Jesus goeth on and ioyneth vnto thys another sentence as harde to be beleued and taken. Blessed be the meke, for they shal inherit the yerth. And who be the meke? they that vse no man violently nor extremely, and whan they haue any harme, they be redy to forgeue the iniuries done vnto them, they also that had rather lese theyr thing than to contende or stryue for it, and that regarde more concorde and quietnes of mynde, than large possessions, who rather desireth quiet pouertie than troblesome ryches. But thys kinde of men is oftentymes set beside and put frõ their goodes and landes, and he goeth not aboute gredely to get other mennes, but is rather driuen out frõ the possessions of his auncetry. But this is a new fashion of enlargynge of possessions, for mekenesse obteyneth more of them that geue willingly and of their owne accorde, than violence and rauenye can purchase or obtayne by right or wronge. The stowte and fierce lorde doth not possesse the thinge that he hath. But the meke and quiet man will rather geue place and leaue his goodes than contende or stryue for thẽ, therfore is hys possession in all places where as he findeth louers of the euangelicall mekenesse. Stowtnes and stykines is hated of al men, softnes and mekenes is fauored of the heathen. Finally if the meke lese his possession, it is no losse vnto hym, but greate gaine and lucre, he hath lost hys lande, yet he reserueth quietnes of mynde. He hath wel solde hys lande, whyche hath auoyded trouble and busines, and hath kepte stil quietnes of mynd. Finally if the meke man be put from all that he hath, the more sure and certayne is he to possesse the lande of heauen, out of the which he can not be thrust. The worlde lamenteth and counteth them vnhappy which be banished and driuen out of their cuntrey, but Christ pronounceth them blessed, which be banished for the gospel sake. For they be made denisens in heauẽ. They be driuen out of the libertie of one citie, & cast out of their house, and chased out of one cuntry, but the gospel man, hath the whole world for his cuntrey. And the godly men be sure of heauen for their house and their cuntrey. Lacke of children or parentes, and such other as we entierly loue cõmonly is counted a miserable thynge, in so muche that sum lackyng theyr desires, and depriued of theyr affections, as of wife, parentes, brothers, or children, do sumtime kil them selues for sorow. And for that cause frendes vse to repayre vnto thẽ in such cases, to cumfort them, & to mitigate the bitternesse of theyr sorowe.

Blessed

The texte. ¶ Blessed be they that mourne, for they shall receyue comforte.

But blessed be they, ꝑ mourne for the loue of the gospel, whyche be plucked awaye from their wife, chyldren, and other that they loue, and see them that they loue most deerly, to be punyshed and slayne for the righteousnes of the gospel, which also dispyse the pleasures of this worlde, and leade their lyfe in wepyng, watchinge and fasting. With these, the heauenly spirite will be presente, he will be their secrete comforter. He wyll recompense theyr temporal wayling with inestimable hartes ioye, and afterwarde they shalbe translated vnto euerlastyng blisse. Manes comforte intendyng to heale the greefe doth oftentymes make it worse. But the spirite whyche is the true comforter, doth so inwardely refreshe the minde beyng cleare in cõscience and ascertayned of the rewardes of the lyfe to cum, that in most greuouse afflictions of their bodyes, they thynke not them selfes infortunate, but rather ioyfully reioyse.

The texte. ¶ Blessed be they which hũgar & thyrst for righteousnes, for they shal be satisfyed.

Famyn and hungar by the opinyon of all men, is a greuouse thynge, and pouertie is a thinge with all endeuour to be auoyded, and euery man calleth them fortunate & blessed which do notably encrease & establyshe theyr howseholde & substaunce, and haue abundantly to vse and occupy, but it is not the riches whorded and heaped vp that satisfyeth the mynde, & the felicitie of man is not to be measured by the fulnes of the belly. What be they thã in this kynd of men whom Chryst calleth blessed? Blessed sayeth he be they which hungar & thyrst for righteousnes. The thinges wherewyth the body is norysshed and fostred vp, ought to be desyred, but lightly, and yet the cõmen sorte are sore turmoyled with care for thẽ. And sumtime the saturitie doth more vexe them that be ful, than the hunger dyd trouble them before, and by and by after their saturite, thyrst and hunger retourne againe, & must oftentimes be repayred. And these thinges be present euery where to the godly, whyche be content with a little, and desire nothyng but necessaries, without all carefulnes, for he doth geue and minister vnto thẽ, which fedeth the sparowes, & doeth clothe the lyllies. Happy be they which do take this hunger and thyrst from bodely and casual thinges, and apply them to the desire of the euangelicall iustice, where there is euer hungar and euer thyrst, and blessed sacietie & fulnes. And this is one parte of blessednes, to hungar for that bread of the minde, wherof who so eateth he shal liue euerlastingly, & to thyrst for ꝑ liuely water wherof whoso drincketh, in hym there shall springe a well of water, runnynge in to euerlastyng life.

The texte. ¶ Blessed be the mercifull, for they shall obteyne mercy.

The cõmon sorte supposeth them to be blessed, which be holpen with other mennes ayde, & they reioyce & be glad rather for their sakes that be holpen than for their cause that helpe thẽ. But I say: blessed be the mercyfull, who for brotherly charitie do coũt an other mãnes misery to be their owne, & be sory for their neighboures hurte & do bewaile their miseries, & of their own do feede the nedy, & clothe the naked, & monisshe thẽ ꝑ do amisse, & teache the ignorante, & pardon the offender. Fynally what so euer gift or good thing they haue, they bestowe it in helping and refreshing others. And they leese nothyng by it, but they gaine. For the mercyfull & beneficiall man towarde hys neyghboure, shall finde God muche more mercifull and beneficyall,

towarde him. Thou hast pardoned thy neyghbour of sum light offēce, god wyl forgeue the al thy sinnes. Thou hast paste ouer for thy neyghboures sake a temporal vengeaunce, God wil pardon the euerlasting punishemēt. Thou hast socoured with thy substaunce thy brothers pouertye, God wil restore vnto the his heauenly riches. They that be mercyful ware poore as concerning worldly thinges, for by geuing, theyr riches are consumed, but towardes God they ware ryche, for theyr worldly store beyng consumed, theyr hart is heaped vp wyth the fruites of godlynes.

¶ Blessed are the cleane in hearte, for they shall see God. The texte.

The common sort of men calleth them vnhappy, that be blynde, and because they haue lost theyr moste pleasaunt sense, they saye they be no longar alyue, but that they abide in darknes like deade men. So pleasaunte a thing it semeth to the eyes to loke vpō the light, & to beholde this goodly spectacle & sight of the world. Further also seing it is so pleasaūt a thing for the bodely eyes to loke vpō the sonne, how much more pleasaūt & blessed a thing is the eyes of the mynde to beholde god, the maker of the sūne, and of al thinges? Ye see how they leape for ioy, which haue ben blind, and now do see ỳ sūne againe. Yea they reioyce as much as if they had ben deliuered frō hel. How muche more blessed be they, who beyng delyuered frō blindenes of the minde, inwardly do see God, the fountayne of al ioye whō to behold, is high felicitie & blessednes. As the sunne is to cleare eyes, so is god to pure & cleane mindes. As matter of skūme or a webbe is to ỳ eyes, so are synnes to the myndes. Therfore blessed be they, whose hart is pure and cleane frō all filthynes. For they shal haue this gyfte, whiche is more to be desired than all the pleasures of the worlde. They shall see God.

¶ Blessed de the peace makers, for they shall be called the chyldren of God.

The cōmon sorte of men iudgeth thē to be blessed, ỳ haue theyr thynges in good frame and stay, & lyue in rest & quietnes, & haue noman to trouble them. But after myne opinion, they be blessed, whiche after they haue repressed in theyr hartes the rebellion & rage of all theyr fowle lustes, they study & endeuor to make vnitie & concorde emong thē that disagre. And they them selues (if any man hurte them) do not reuenge them selues, but willingly on their owne accorde, prouoke thē to peace, of whom they haue suffered harme. And if any man thinke it harde to be dōne, let hym herken to the rewarde. For they shall be called the sonnes of God. What is more honorable than this title & prayse? Yea what is more blessed? For it is no vaine title. He that is the sonne, must nedes be heyre also. But the vnliknes of manners declareth and argueth a bastard. The folowing of the fathers steppes, declareth a true and a natural childe. God forgeuyng frely al offences, doth styre and prouoke al men whiche hath offended him, to peace and amitie. He offreth himself of his owne accorde very mercyful to al thē that do repent. He wyl not knowledge thē for his children, which do not show thē self to theyr bretherne, as he hath showed him self towardes all. Carnal fathers disherit theyr sonnes, which do not agree with theyr other brothers: So the heauenly father wyl abdicate and put away the haters of peace and causers of discorde from thinheritaunce.

dome of heauen. Blessed be ye when men reuile you and persecute you, and speke falsly all maner of euyll for my sake. Reioyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen, for so persecuted they the prophetes whiche were before you.

And because there be many froward & euyll men in euery place, peace can not be stayed & continue with all mē, but thorow sufferāce of displeasures: It is the parte of godly men vtterly to endeuour them selues that they be at debate with noman, whether they be good or euyl, they must moue & allure al mē with curtesy, gentilnes & pleasures as muche as may be to loue & cōcorde. But the frowardnes of sume is suche ỹ they wilbe stirred to anger, yea wyth benefites also, and wyll vexe them that do for them, and vse cruelnes againste well doers, and counte them for their enemyes that studye to preserue thē. If in this case, peace cannot be cōserued on both sides. Yet blessed be they for the loue they bear to peace, whō the wicked do persecute for none other cause, but for the rightuousnes of the gospell, which hurteth none but profiteth al. For the selfe same thing prouoketh theyr hatred, for the which they ought to loue, & they do iniurie for none other thig, but for the which they ought to render thankes. Sūme wyll say, who can loue suche that for gentylnes requiteth hatred & ill doinges? It is a great matter I graunte, but greate is the rewarde. And what rewarde? not a crowne of oke or laurell, not a bullocke or a gote, or any suche lyke reward whiche worldely men vse to geue to suche as get the ouerhande in worldly masters, but the kyngdome of heauen. Ye that be my disciples must make ye redy to this wrastling, yf ye esteme the blessed rewardes of the gospell. Ye must not feare the cruelnes of men. No man can hurt you, yf ye sticke stifly to rightuousnes. The persecution of euyll men shall not take awaye your innocency, but shall increase youre blessednes.

In the midde stormes of aduersitie ye shalbe blessed, yea whan they curse you most bitterly, whan they shall assaulte you with all kindes of hurtes, whan they shall rebuke you, and lay al offences against you, & that falsely not for your fault, but for the hatred & displeasure of me, for the summe of the crymes whiche they shall laye against you shall be that ye are christen men. Do not lament and bewayle your selues, as men thrust out, afflicted and beatē, misreported and infamed, but rather for these thinges be glad and reioyce, because the more fierse they be in persecutynge, so muche the more youre rewarde is increased and heaped vp for you in heauen of the heauenly father. God wyll tourne theyr naughtynes to your good. He wyl tourne the hurtes that they do, to your aduauntage and lucre. He wyl tourne ỹ ignominie rebuke & repproche that they put you to, into euerlasting and true glory. He wyl tourne the crimes and reproche whiche they falsly lay to your charges, in to the titles and commendacions of true godlines. He wyl tourne theyr maledictions and curses in to praise and reioysyng, not onely before god (& yet to please him it is sufficiently enowgh, yea though ye displease ỹ whole worlde) but also before mē. For to be rebuked of wicked mē for godlines is a praise, to be tormēted of the haters of god, is to be crowned. Glory is not to be sowght for of men, but glorye of her owne accorde customably doth folow true vertue. Wyl ye haue a redy and plaine example? At this day what is more holy and honourable than the memory of the prophetes? And yet whan they were aliue they were persecuted with al kindes of afflictions, as ye shall be.

For rightoulsnes sake.

Blessed be ye whan men reuile you, and persecute you and speke falsely all maner of yll for my sake.

For great is your rewarde in heauen.

For so persecuted they the Prophetes whiche were before you.

They

They were persecuted for the hatred of my father, ye shall be persecuted for the hatred that men beare towarde me. These be vehement thinges I graunte, and passynge mannes weakenes. But it must nedes be an excellent and a notable thinge, whych by hys might should moue and drawe the whole world, ouerwhelmed with werysshe opinions, and vayne desyres For which of all these worldly mē doth not abhorre the tormentyng of the body who is not afrayed at the daunger of lyfe? Who is not styrred wyth desire of vēgeaunce, whan he is prouoked with sore checkes and rebukes? Who can quietly suffer hys name to be spotted and hindred without any deserte? But to the intent ye maye be blessed, I require more of you, that is rather to haue pitie of your blynde persecutours, than to be agreued wyth them. To say well by them that say euyll by you. To offre them euerlastyng health, that goeth about your destruction. This hygh and excellent vertue ye can not perfourme, vnlesse ye cum vnto it by the degrees whiche I showed you before. If ye cast awaye vtterly the swellyng and pryde of the mynde, yf ye put from you the desire of reuengyng, yf ye dispise all the pleasures of this world, and embrace the sharpe waye, yf ye extinguisshe the desire of worldely thynges and thurst for nothyng greatly, but for ryghteousnes and godlynes, yf ye be full mynded to succour and helpe the greefes of all men, and desire to furder the commodities of all mē, yf ye haue a minde syncere and cleane from al vices and fylthy desires, not regarding nothing, nor delityng in nothing but in god alone: fynally, if ye study and deuise with quiet hartes to nourisshe and to make concorde and peace: then shall ye perfourme these thinges the whiche other men can not yet attayne vnto, nor ones dreame vpon. But yet they that be curable and not vtterly of a desperate mynde, musyng muche at your sufferaunce and godlines, they shall well vnderstande that it is no counterfeyt thing, they shal well perceyue that it is not a thyng of mannes power, and beyng moued thorow your example, shal be turned to better thryft.

¶ Ye be the salt of the earth. But if the salt be vnsauery, wherwith shal it be seasoned: It is hence furth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be troden of men. The texte

For I haue chose you few, not to the entent I would allure and bring to the knowledge of the euangelycal wisedom, one or two cities, but ỹ whole world. It must nedes be a lyuely and a pythy thing that can be sufficiēt to sawse and sauour the lyfe of all mankynde, beyng so werisshe and vnsauoury thorow the desires and fond opinions of vayne thynges. For I haue chosen you not to the intent ye should be of the meane and tollerable sorte, but ỹ ye should be the salte of the yearth, it nedeth not to haue muche salte, but such as is good & strong, that what so euer it doth touch it maye season, and of werisshe make sauoury. The land is great and yet the saltnes that it hath, it hath of a litill salt mixte with it. And ye see that a greate deale of meate vnsauory and werisshe, with a lytill salte sprynckled vpon it, is made sauory. It must nedes be that in great numbres of men, many be founde but meane and vnneath tollerable. But in apostelles, in bysshoppes, in doctors, and teachers, that quicke and perfect lyuelines of the euangelicall charitie, must nedes perseuer and abyde. Ye be the salte of the yearth.

Or what is lesse to be regarded than vnsauory salte, which serueth not for so muche as to dung the land? For if it be cast on the grounde it causeth barraynes? So men shall haue you in veneration, yea they also which enuiously and hatefully barked against you, if they ones percepue that your doctrine doth sauour of the lyuelynes of the gospel, yf they see all your lyfe to be agreable to your doctrine.

It is hence forth good for nothing.

Whā ye haue ones taken vpon you this profession, eyther ye must be very profitable vnto all men, or very vnprofitable, eyther ye must haue greate prayse emong men, or greate dispraise. Dispraise and rebuke oughte to be shunned more than death, for it doeth redownde to the infampe and slaunder of the gospel. Wherfore se that ye be on euery side sincere, pure, & very perfect, wherby the imputitie of the multitude may be corrected thorowe your puritie.

¶ Ye be the lyght of the worlde. A cytie þ is set on a hyl can not be hyd. Neyther do men lyght a candel, & put it vnder a bushel, but on a candle stycke, & it geueth light to al that be in the house. Let your lyght so shyne before men, that they may se your good workes, and glorify your father whiche is in heauen.

Let your lyfe and your doctrine be such that it may be a guyde and a rule of good lyfe to all them that doth beholde and loke vpon it. There is but one sunne of this worlde, but it is of suche myghte & so plentifull of lyght, that frō a farre, it shyneth vpon all them that dwel vpon the yerth. So I haue set you in an hygh place, that what so euer ye speake, what so euer ye do must nedes be spred abrode thorow out the whole worlde. If the clowdes couer the sunne, howe shall men haue light? If your doctrine be darkned with errours, yf þ lyght of your lyfe be dimmed with worldly desires, what thing shal dryue away the darknes of the multitude? Wherfore ye must beware, þ there be no darknes nor folishnes in you. Ye cannot be hid though ye endeuour neuer so muche. Consider wel that ye playe your part in the stage of the whole world, to thintent that carefulnes should sharpē you to be circūspect & diligent. A smal offēce in you, is as much as a great crime. Ye be as a cytie set vpon an high hil, which may be seene of the way goers farre and wyde. It can not be hyd though it would, for þ hyll wyth his high toppe that beareth it, willeth it, nilleth it, maketh it sene of al mē, that it may shewe the waye to them that erre and be out of the waye. This is the nature of the euangelycall doctrine, it suffereth not the professoures of it, to be hyd and vnknowen, although they fleyng the fame of men, seke dennes to hyde thē in. And why should that be hyd, which is ordeyned for this purpose, to do good to al mē indifferently? salt is geuē to season with, the sonne is geuen to the world to geue light, the citie is built in the toppe of the hyl, to be sene of al men. In the night men light a candle in the house to geue lyght to all them that be in the house. And therfore they hyde it not vnder a bushel, but set it vpon a candle sticke, that the light therof may the better cum to al, and the vse of one light may reche to many: So ye ought not to seke for a fame and opinion amonge men, onely be carefull that ye darken not the lyght which I haue lyghtened in you, and that ye perseuer and continue vpon the candle stycke where I haue set you. The salt can not but season. The lyght can not but shyne. Therfore let your lyght shyne, yea rather my lyght and the lyght of my father vnto al men, that they consyderyng youre lyfe vtterly pure and blameleſſe, and verye heauenly, may glorify youre heauenly father, to whome is due al honoure and glorye. For of all your good workes and myracles be they neuer so wonderful, ye shall chalenge nothyng vnto your selfe, but ye shall referre all glorye and prayse vnto him, from whom cummeth what so euer mē do worthy prayse. It shal be your part, to haue none other care, but manfully and faithfully to perfourme the office committed vnto you. He shall geue the rewarde in time conuenient, and that a great rewarde, to whose glory ye do seruyce.

Let your lights so shine before men.

¶ Thynke ye not that I am cum to destroie the law or the prophetes, no I am not cum to destroye, but to fulfyl. For truly I say vnto you, tyl heauen and earth passe, one iote or title of the lawe shall not passe, tyl all be fulfylled.

The texte.

Whan ye heare these newe preceptes, which nether Moyses did deliuer nor the prophetes taughte, suppose not that I bryng lyke matter, as the Pharisees were wont with theyr additions and mannes constitutions making the law heauy and sore, and the very pyth and chiefe of the law neglecting and abolyshyng. I came not to diminishe and abate the lawe or abolisshe it with newe preceptes: But I came rather to fulfyl and make perfect the lawe. For it doth commaund nothyng that any man can complayne that I haue not obserued and kepte. And yf the shadowes gyue place whā the lyght cummeth forthe, yf I perfourme in dedes, that which the prophetes sayd before shoulde cum to passe, the lawe is nothyng hindered but rather made perfecte. The law had his time, it had his honoure, it dyd shadowe with certayne figures, that which now is represented & open to the world: the lawe did in maner hedge aboute the desires of men, with ceremonyes and carnall preceptes, as it were with certayne barres, that they shoulde not fall without any stay into euery synne, to thintent they myght be the more apte to take the doctrine of ỹ gospel, but nowe that that is perfect, is shewed furth. The carnall and grosse lawe was profytable to this intent, that men myght acknowledge theyr synnes, but nowe grace whiche washeth away synne is geuen vnto vs without ceremonies. Therfore the lawe is no more offended, than yf the kynge himselfe beyng alyue should cum in place where his ymage was paynted, and allure all men rather to loke vpon him than vpon his ymage: or elles yf a weake childe in processe of tyme shoulde growe to be a man, or yf the rype fruyte shoulde succede after buddes and leaues, or yf the sonne sprynging vp should darke the moone & the starres. What the law promysed is now performed, what it did shewe before, is now done. What it dyd shadow is nowe made open to al mennes eyes, what it endeuoured to perfourme and could not, is now brought to passe at full. This lyghte is promysed vnto all men, but yet so that ỹ Iewes haue no cause to cōplaine of vs. The grace of the gospel is first offered to them, neyther shall they haue the lesse therfore, yf they haue ben common to manye with them. This is certayne that we breake not the lawe wherin the Pharisees do glorye, in so much that not the least iote, no not one pricke of the whole lawe shal perysshe for there is nothing

I am not cum to destroye.

For trewly I saye vnto.

wryten in it, but it shall be fulfylled. It were a folysshe thyng to loke for that hereafter, which is now presente, it were a mad thing so to delyghte in shadowes, that ye should so sticke to unperfect thinges that ye should dispise perfect thinges, dispise the true thinges, so to imbrace carnall thinges, that ye loothe heauenly this, so to be geuē to worldly thinges, that ye neglect heauenly thinges.

¶ Who so euer therfore breaketh one of these lest cōmaundementes, & teacheth men so, he shal be called the lest in the kingdō of heauen. But who so doth, & teacheth the same, shal be called great in the kyngdō of heauen. For I saye vnto you vnlesse your rightcousenes exceede the rygh teousenes of the Pharisees, and Scribes, ye can not entre in to the kyngdom of heauen.

Ye shall be called lest.

Among the Iewes he is not regarded ne counted a good keper of the law, that doth omitte or let passe anye of those thynges whiche the Pharisees haue added of theyr owne prescribyng, washinges of hādes, of pottes and vessels, & yet these additions and patches profyt so lytle towardes the perfection of the lawe, that they oftymes withdrawe frō the obseruatiō of the same. But in the kyngdome of heauen which is muche more perfect, he that breaketh but one of these small preceptes which I now adde vnto the prescripte lawe of Moyses, although he teache the thing to be obserued whiche he himselfe through weakenes and frayltie dothe not perfourme, he shall be counted the lest and most dispised, insomuch that vnlesse he profite and go forwarde vnto better thinges, he shal be vtterly excluded from the felowshyp of the gospel. But who so euer teacheth these small thinges not to be despysed, whiche driue men farre from those thinges, whiche the lawe doth forbyd, & doth perfourme that which he teacheth, he is to be had in veneration, & shalbe counted great in the kyngdom of heauen. And yet they that be the chiefe and the hyghest in the Synagoge dispisynge suche thinges, thinke it ynough yf they do commit none of those thinges which be punishable by the lawe, and yet in the meane season they fauour, and flatter, & pardon them selfes in the naughtye desires of the mynde. Truely this is the iustice of the whiche by the feare of payne be refrayned from yll doyng. But they that be moued to thinges of more perfection by charitie,

For I say vnto you, vnles your rightcousnes,

& by that heauenly spirit, they wyllynglye wythdrawe the selues from the approching to yll doynges, & they do not onely forbeare to hurte any mā, but they wyll no hurte to noman. And that ye maye perceyue what differēce there is betwene a Iewe & a Christen mā, betwene Moyses disciple & myne, this I do ascertayne you, yf ye do perfourme what so euer the lawe doth prescribe, what so euer the Pharisees that be nowe do perfourme whiche nowe be accoumpted & thinke thē selues verye righteous, and yf ye adde nothing of more perfectiō, ye shalbe so farre of frō being great in this profession, that an entry shall not once be geuen you into the kingdome of heauen. For this profession doth so farre excell, that they that be the chiefe there, haue not so muche as the least place here.

¶ Ye haue hearde that it was sayde vnto them of the olde tyme: Thou shalt not kil, whosoeuer killeth, shal be in daūger of iudgemēt. But I say vnto you, that who so is angry w̄ his brother vnaduysedly, shall be in daunger of iudgement. And who so euer sayth vnto his brother Racha, shall be in daūger of a counsell. But who so euer sayth thou fole, shal be in daunger of hell fyre. Therfore yf thou offre thy gyft at ỹ aulter, & there remēbrest that thy brother hath ought a gaynst the, leaue there thine offeryng before the aulter, and go thy waye fyrste, and be reconcyled to thy brother, and cum and offre thy gyft.

And

And yet that it maye be more euident, how muche we adde vnto the Pharisaicall iustice, and that oure commaundementes be not againste the preceptes of lawe, but rather ayde them: we shall make the matter manifest by certaine examples. Ye haue heard that a commaundemente was geuen in tymes past vnto the elders: Thou shalt not kyll. And yf a mã doe kill, ones conuicted and iudged, he shall be punished. Therfore hitherto he thinketh hymselfe to haue fulfylled the lawe, which hath slayne no man, and so hath escaped the thretenynges of the law, this mã as a iust and an innocent man shalbe receyued into the Synagoge. Now harken how much I adde here vnto. Truely this I ascertaine you, who so euer is angry with his brother shalbe in daungre of iudgement. For the dignitie of the professiõ doth encrease the faulte, in so muche ỹ what homicide is in the olde lawe, the same in the newe lawe is the vehement motyon of the mynde to be reuenged. For the first degre to homicide is to be angrye. For he hath not yet committed homicide, but nowe he begynneth to go towardes homicide. Therfore he ỹ willeth yll to his brother, euen now hath committed a greuouse offence before god his iudge. And yf he doe not furthwith represse his fearce mynde but beyng ouercome with anger, doe burst oute with sum worde whyche toucheth not his brother in dede, with any euidente, & plaine reproche, but maketh hym sad with a manifest token of contempte, as yf he shoulde saye Racha, or some other like thinge, which declareth the yll wyll of the mynde: now he is nerer to homicide, and in daunger not onely to iudgemente, and shall suffer lyghter punyshment, & yet as great as the homicide mencioned in the olde lawe deserueth: but also he is in daunger to a counsel, wherfore he shal be the more greuously condempned. Furthermore if the disobedyẽt motion of the mynde doth burst oute so farre, that a man strike his brother with a manifeste and a certayne rebuke & calleth hym foole, or suche other lyke, now he shal be in daũger to that most greuous payne, that is to say, to ỹ paine of hell fier. So many wayes is he punished which is not yet cum vnto homicide & murder. But he is nere vnto homicide, whoso euer is fallen frõ brotherly charitie. Whosoeuer willeth ill in anger, though he hath not pulcked out his swerde, yet he hathe striken in mynde. Who so euer hath rebuked in anger, hathe striken with the tonge, & peraduenture wold haue slayne but that he feared punishement. Therfore the lawe of the gospell which punissheth the angry man, is not against the precept of the law: Thou shalt not kyll, but it driueth and putteth of a man further frõ that, that the lawe commaundeth to be punished. He is more safe and farther from murther, that vtterlye plucketh oute frõ his harte anger and hatred, of the whiche roote sprygeth homicide and murther. Therfore who so euer hath gotten to hymselfe the charitie of the gospell, whyche wylleth wel to them that wylleth yll, whyche recompenseth iniury with wel doyng, he hath lytle nede of the thretenynges of Moyses law, for the auoydynge of murther. The vttermoste degree of hatred is to kyll and sleye, and the vttermost degre of charite is to wyl well to the kyller and sleyer. Among the Iewes he is counted godly and deuoute, whiche bering yll wyl to hys brother, bryngeth his offerynge to the aulter, where as no sacrifice is accepted vnto god, without brotherly charitie and concord, wherfore chyef-

And if any displeasure chaunce amonge brethren, as by the weakenes of mannes nature it dothe happen, all thynges layde aparte, se that atonemente & concorde be made, in so muche as yf by chaunce thou makest in a redines any gyfte to offer vnto god, & beyng now nere at ỹ aulter, doest remẽber ỹ thy brother and ỹ be at square, eyther because he hath offended the, or els because amitie is broken through the griefe of both parties, differ not, linger not, but leaue the gifte at the aulter, make hast home, and bryng to passe, that before al thynges sweete amitie maye be restored and made vp betwene the and thy brother. That done, returne vnto the aulter and do thy sacrifice. So no gyfte is more acceptable to god than consent and agremente of men. God suffereth no dammage, if his gyfte be differred, but muche peryl and daunger hangeth ouer bothe partes, by the breche of concorde. For displeasures prolonged & differred, ingender hatred, of hatred springeth homicide and murther. And no seruice is acceptable vnto god, whiche is not furnisshed with charitie. And if thou wylt saye vnto me: I haue offẽded nothing let hym bowe firste and make suite that hath offended, thou arte not to be hearde. He that is commaunded to loue his ennemye, wyll not stycke to restore and make vp loue and concorde thoughe it wer broken throughe another mannes default. Forgeue the trespasse of thyne owne accorde and ease thy brother of hys heuynes, whyche dyd suppose that thou were angry with hym. Thou shalte not fynde god mercyfull vnto the, vnlesse thy neyghboure fynde the mercyfull vnto hym. Thy gyft shall obtain no thanke ne fauour at all before god, excepte thou beare perfect fauour and loue towardes thy brother.

If the concorde and agrement of men is so highlye estemed of god, that he wyll suffre hymselfe to be defrauded of his gyfte nowe in a redynes for hym, so that concorde and agrement maye be restored and made vp, howe muche more meete and conuenient is it for man, whome this matter specially doth touche, to redeme peace & amitie with the losse of his substãce?

it. Thou shouldest haue wayted vpon the atturneyes and the clerkes, thou shouldest haue runne busely vp & downe, thou muste haue sued for the fauoure of the iudges. Thou shouldest haue done and suffered many thynges vnseemely and vnmete for the. And where as nothynge is more precious than tyme, consider how muche therof thou shouldest haue spente and loste. Wherfore marke well what greate gaine and auaũtage thou shalt haue, yf thou fynyshe thy sute spedely, seynge the issue of the lawe is vncertayne. For he that hath the better matter hath not alway the higher hande, and there is daunger lest thy aduersarye haupnge the vpper hand delyuer the to the iudge, and the iudge delyuer the to the common officer, who shal leade the into prison. Where yf thou be ones layde, it is not now in thy power to finisshe the matter with thy aduersary, and so thou shalte purchase not onely affliction and punishmente of the bodye with shame, but also thou shalt not escape vntyl thou hast payed the whole sũme euery farthyng whiche thy aduersarye dyd demaunde, where as thou myghtest haue cõpouned with hym for lesse, whan he was yet more gentyll and lesse angrye. For better it is vnto the, that one of thy members peryshe, than that all thy body should be cast into hell.

The texte.

Hytherto we haue treated of loue and hatred, of the whiche one is the roote of all euangelicall godlines, the other is the pestilence and poyson of the same. But next vnto murther is aduoutry, and ther is no loue more tẽder and streight than the loue of matrimony. Let vs therfore treate of this matter also, what the lawe hathe commaunded to youre elders, and howe muche we do adde thervnto. Ther was nothyng more sayd vnto them in the lawe, then: Thou shalte not commytte aduoutrye, yf thou doest, thou shalte be stoned of the people. Therfore hytherto amonge the Iewes he hath bene counted holy and perfecte, who beynge contente with hys owne, hath absteyned from another mannes wyfe. But after the lawe of the gospell, whiche I brynge, he doth not onely commit aduoutry whiche doth defyle another mannes wyfe, and embraceth her bodye with his, but also he whiche with vnchaste eyes doth beholde another mannes wyfe. For as he that is angry with his brother is nigh vnto murther, so he bendeth toward aduoutry, whose mynde is nowe vnchaste, & whose eyes be aduouterouse. The husbãd can not punish the for aduoutry, but god hath for to condẽne the for aduoutrye, before whome he that hathe wylled, hath committed the offence. Therfore as it is in murther to be angrye, so is it in aduoutry to lust: As it is there to say Racha or foole, so is it here to delight the eyes, and throughe the wantonnesse of them, to intise the mynde of another mannes wyfe to vnclennes. But here a carnal man wyll saye, no man can forbeare to lust and desire in his harte the thynge that he loueth. But who can loue another

Thou shalte not commite adultry.

Whosoeuer loketh on an other mannes wife.

And yf thy right eye hinder the

another mannes wyfe, with his owne daunger, and with the iniurye of her husbande: which is so bent in his mynde not onelye to forbeare to hurte or to harme him that is innocent, but also to requite pleasure for displeasure, to them which hath hurt hym: perchaunce he wyl saye I can not shut mine eyes. Yea it were better to plucke oute thyne eye, than throughe it to take losse of godlines. For there is no parte of the body that ought to be so dere vnto man, but that it is better to cut it awaye, than by the occasion therof to loose any of the vertues of the mynde. So we must make spede vnto the high perfection of the gospell, that what so euer doth let oute iourney thytherwarde, we must vtterly caste it awaye, be it neuer so swete, be it neuer so well beloued. It is a great lucre & gaine to purchase the precious margarite of the euangelicall charitie by the losse of anye thynge what soeuer it be. Wherfore yf the righte eye be a let vnto the in this behalfe, consyder not how dere a thinge the eye is, but consider from what a more precyous thynge it doth hinder the: and wythoute any delaye dygge out thyne eye that hyndered the, and caste it awaye, and so make spede as thou dyddeste begyn. Where the hole man is in daunger of his life, it is best to saue the rest of the whole body by the losse of one parte therof. Thou wylte saye: I shall lyue hereafter, an one eyed man. And what of that: Is it not rather to be wished to lyue with one eye, than to dye with both:

For better it is vnto the, that one of thy members perishe.

Then that thy whole boyde shoulde be cast into hell

There is no member more deare or more necessary for many purposes, thā the ryght hande. Who can this deny: And yet yf it be a let vnto hym that maketh spede vnto the hyghe perfection, wherof deppendeth the helthe and the saluation of the whole man, cut of the ryghte hande that hyndereth the, and caste awaye the burden that thou mayeste make spede and expedition thither as thou dydst purpose. In thys peryll and daunger it is farre better to haue the losse of one mēber, though it be verye dere, than with the hole bodye to fall into the destruction of hell fyer. If men alowe this policy, when there is none other daūger but of the body, howe muche more is this to be done, when both the body and soule be in peryll: But these thinges I haue spokē to teache you by a similitude. For I meane not this that any man should cut of any membre of his body. For the nature of the membres is not yll, but the abuse of them is to be reproued, but I meane of the membres of the mynde: for the mynde hathe her noysome membres, and it is a godly thyng spedely to cut them of. If a member of the body be cut of, beside the payne, this harme cummeth of it, that the parte once cut of, can neuer be restored agayne.

And yf thy righte hande hynder the,

For it is better.

But when the noysome members of the minde be cut of, as hatred, anger, fleshlye lust, ambitiō, & auaryce, the mynde is not maymed, but made more perfect, by reason, that the monstruouse and noysome partes be cut away. And after a short griefe of cutting of, foloweth a continual pleasure. I wil speake more playnelye to the intent ye maye vnderstande what I meane. Thaffections be the membres of the mynde. There be some affections which of their owne nature leade vnto vngodlynes, as yre, hatred, enuy, desire of other mennes goodes. Yf any of these begin to springe in the mynde, furthwith it must be cut vp, for so the yll that begynneth to springe, shall be the more easelye and safely taken awaye.

Againe there be affections of themselfe not vtterly yll, but yet by occasyon they

they withdrawe sumtyme from that that is good, as the loue toward oure contrey, thaffection to wyfe, childzen and parentes, oz elles to kynsfolkes & frēdes, they care foz a good name. Ther is no cause why to cut of these mēbzes so longe as they serue and make foz the perfection of the gospell. Foz my doctryne is not agaynst naturall affections, but doeth restoze nature to her puritie. But in case thaffection towarde thy parent, oz wyfe, oz childzen by occasion doth withdrawe the from the loue of the euangelical godlines, and plucketh the to wozldlynes: cut of that noysome natural affection. Lyke as he that cutteth of noysome thoughtes, cutteth not oute the hearte where they growe, but onely the nawghty desires: so he that nowe beholdeth an other mannes wyfe chastely, lyke as he loketh vppon his syster oz daughter: he hath well cast out his noisome eye, and taken foz it the eye of a doue, a cleane and a single eye: And he that was wonte to exercise hys hande in robbynge of other, and now dothe laboure to helpe the nedines of other, he hath well cut of his rauening right hand, that in stede therof, hath taken a beneficiall and a liberall hande.

¶ It was sayde: whoso euer putteth away his wyfe, let hym geue her a letter of diuozcement. But I say vnto you: that whosoeuer doth put away his wife, except it be foz foznication, causeth her to be an aduoutresse, & whosoeuer marryeth her that is deuozced, committeth aduoutrye. The texte.

Nowe go to and let vs shewe an other example. The lawe of Moyses dothe sufferr the husbande yf he be offended with anye faulte of hys wyfe, to put her awaye after hys owne deuyse, so that he geue her a wrytinge of diuozce, wherby she maye be marryed to another, and wherby her fozmer husbande maye not lawfullye require her agayne: whome he hath caste of.

Wherfoze that man hath satisfied the lawe, the whiche hath cast of hys wyfe foz anye cause, so that he hath geuen her a wrytynge of dyuozcement: neyther shall he be taken as an aduouterer, noz noman shall note her as an aduoutresse. And yet the lawe wysheth and desyreth perpetuall amitie and concozde amonge marryed personnes: notwithstandyng the same lawe knowynge the hardnes of the hartes of the Iewes, suffered diuozce to be vsed least anye wozse thynge myght chaunce that no poysonynge noz murtherynge shoulde be commytted and done. But I wyll haue Matrimonye obserued moze holyly and vndefyledly amonge them that professe the new lawe. Foz whoso euer leueth hys wife but foz aduoutry, foz than she is his wyfe no lenger, because she hath intermeddeled with another man, he compelleth her and dziueth her vyolentlye to aduoutrye. Foz yf she marry another she marrieth not an husbande, but an aduouterer. And who so taketh her so cast of, into mariage, he taketh not a wyfe, but an aduoutresse. The lawe of Moyses punnysheth none of these, but the lawe of the Gospell doth condempne them. And yet this is not contrary to that. Foz the law of Moyses hath geuen the husbandes lybertie to diuozce, least they should be moze fyerce & cruell to theyr wyues that they hated, and yet it restrayned this libertie by the boke of deuozce both ỹ they should not do it prtuely, & that they should not require againe, so often as they fantasyed, the wyues whome they had cast of vnadusedly. And ỹ law durst not require moze in matrimony because it durst not cōmaūd those thinges ỹ we taught before.

But I saye vnto you: that who so euer dothe put away hys wyfe excepte it be foz foznication

Foz

For a man indued with the mekenes of the Gospell, eyther wyll soone correcte and amende the manners of his wyfe, or elles he wyll pacyentlye beare the same, for whan wyll he seke debate with his wyfe, whyche wyth his ennemyes is at peace? Whan wyll he seke the destruction of hys wife, whiche is not angry whan he is harmed, and when he is offended, he wylleth no man yll? Or how shall not he abyde his wyfe, whyche is in daylye companye with hym, whyche suffereth his enemye kyllynge hym? And yf the purpose of the lawe be thus, that Matrimonye shoulde be holy, and diuorces not commonlye graunted, we breake not the lawe, but helpe and susteyne it, whiche wolde haue no deuorce except in case of aduoutrye, whiche is contrarye to the nature of Matrimony. For Matrimony was made for this intent that the woman once appoynted to the husband, should bryng forthe children to him onely, & hym onely obeye. Further she nowe turneth away frō her husbād, which hath geuen another man the vse of her body. Therfore emonge Christian spouses let there not be greuouse displeasures and offences, neither let him nor her seke any deuorce or seperatiō for light displeasures, but the one muste be reconcyled vnto thother yf any thynge chaunce through the weakenes of men.

The texte. CAgayne ye haue heard, how it was sayd to them of the olde tyme: Thou shalt not forsweare thy selfe, but shalt performe vnto ꝓ lord, those thynges that thou sweresi but I say vnto you: Sweare not at al, neither by heauē for it is goddes seat, nor by ꝓ earth, for it is his foote stoole: neither by Hierusalē, for it is ꝓ citie of ꝓ greate kyng: neyther shalt thou sweare by thy head, because ꝓ canst not make one heare whyte or blacke. But your cōmunicatiō shal be, yea, yea, nay, nay. Further whatsoeuer is added more than these, it commeth of euell.

Now ye shall heare another thynge. Commaundement was geuen vnto your elders none otherwyse, but yf they had made an othe, they shoulde perfourme it, and not be forsworne, for nowe they are bounde to god & not to man onely. Wherfore emonge the Iewes, onely periury is punyshable. But he ꝓ deceiueth his neighboure wout any oth made he is vnpunished: but yet the lawe of the gospell condempneth hym, the which, that ye should be the more sure from periury, doth vtterly condempne all maner of othes, that it is not now lefull so sweare neither be god nor by those thinges which seme to the common sorte to be thynges of lesse religion, that is neither by heauē, because it is the seate of god, nor by the earth because it is his foote stole, nor by Hierusalem, because it is the citie of the great kynge, that is to saye of hym which hath made, and doth gouerne all thynges. Neyther as the Heathen sweare by the heade of another man, wherof thou haste no authoritie, but it is consecrate to god which hath made all thynges as he wolde, for thou canst not make one blacke heare white, nor one white heare blacke. And because al thynges be consecrate to god the maker, thou owest to be fearfull to sweare by any thynge. And what nedeth any othe emonge them, where no man, because of their simplicitie, can distruste, nor no man can desyre to deceyue, though they might do it frely, suche is their sincerite and perfectnes, specially in those thynges, of the whiche they declare themselues to be dysppysers. Therfore amonge you, playne and simple speche ought to be more holy and more sure, than the deuoute and solempne othe emong the Iewes. For emonge you, whose hartes and lyppes oughte to agree, there is no nother vse of speche but to expresse youre myndes neyther shalt thou sweare by thy head.

eche to other. In your bargaynes ye nede none othe, ye nede no execracion or curlyng or suche lyke to bynde the promyser, or to allure hym to whom the promyse is made. Two wordes be sufficiet: Nay and yea, wherby thou denyest that whiche thou doest not promyse, and whereby thou deost performe that which thou dyddest promyse by playne worde, that thou wouldest do. For there is no man lesse bounde with his simple and bare worde, than the Jewe swearyng by all holy thinges and he whome: thou makest thy promyse vnto, doth trust the aswel as if thou haddest made a solépne othe. Yf there be any mo besides these, it must nedes cum of euil and sinne. For he that sweareth, other he thinketh yll of him to whome he sweareth, or els he that requireth the othe doth distruste. But none of these ought to be in you, whom I woulde haue perfect in al poyntes. Therfore when I vtterly forbyd swearyng, I do not abolysche the lawe, whiche doth prohibite periury, but I make the lawe more full, & I withdrawe men farther from that, that the lawe doth punysche.

But youre cõmunication shall be yea, yea, naye, nay.

Further what so euer is added more than these it cõmeth of euyll.

¶ Ye haue herd how that it was sayd: eye for eye, and toth for toth. But I say vnto you: resyst not agaynst euil. But whosoeuer geueth ỹ a blow on ỹ ryght cheke, turne to him ỹ other also. And if a mã wyl sue the at ỹ law, & take away thy coote let him haue thy cloke also. And yf any compell the to go a myle, go whim twayne. Geue to him that asketh the, and turne not from him that is desyrouse to borowe.

The texte.

Ye haue heard what ỹ law hath graunted vnto our forfathers in reuenging of wrong doinges. It sayth eye for eye, & tothe for tothe. For it knew that theyr myndes were ful of reuengyng. Therfore hitherto it hath bridled the desyre of reuengyng, that the faulte myghte be recompensed with the lyke punyshemente after the deuyse and discrecion of Judges, and he that hadde put out an other mannes eye, shoulde loose an eye, and he that had striken out an other mannes tothe, shoulde be punished wyth the losse of a tothe. For yf the reuengyng of the iniurye had bene lefte to the myndes of him that was hurte, oftentymes it shoulde haue chaunced to haue loste hys lyfe for strykyng out of a tothe. Therfore the intente of the law was, that vengeaunce should not go to farre. And I do not abolisshe this lawe, but establysche it. For my doctrine is, that ye shal in no case reuenge iniuries, be they neuer so sore, that ye shal not geue tawnte for tawnte, nor hurt for hurte, nor wronge for wronge, yea yf a man gyue you a blowe vpon the cheke, which is counted commonly an vntollerable rebuke, ye shall not requite it with a blow, but rather offer the other cheke to be beaten to, and desyre rather to sufferr a double displeasure, than to requite the lyke. And yf anye man wyll go to lawe with the, to take awaye thy cote, stryue not with him, but rather euen of thy selfe gyue hym thy gowne to. Agayne yf anye frowarde person wyll force the to go wyth hym the space of a myle, walke wyth hym two myles, rather than to fall at contencyon wyth hym. By this gentylnes and sufferaunce it shall cum to passe, that he whiche is redye to hurte, shall not be further prouoked, and that thou shalt the soner be delyuered from griefe, than yf one euyll shoulde spryng of an other, and a great thyng made of a small, and many matters of one: And further thou shouldest not be disquieted in thy mynd, and perchaũce throughe thy gentylnes, of an enemy thou shouldest make the a frende. It is a great matter that ye do enterpryse. Ye must apply youre whole study to these thynges, and lyttle regarde these trifflynge thynges in gettynge

Eye for eye & tothe for tothe

I saye vnto you resyst not agaynst euyll.

But who so euer geueth the a blowe on the right cheke.

and increasyng, or in auoydyng of the whiche, other men do bestowe theyr whole lyfe, vnto whō it chaunceth often tymes, that whyles they hunte for these thinges, they lese the heauēly goodes: And yet they liue no pleasantly here, for they heape vp griefes vpon griefes vnto themselues, intāgling themselues with sundry stryfes and hatredes. Through the dyspysyng of these thinges, whiche when you haue thē, make you not godly, and whan you haue them not, they make you not vngodly, you shal both auoyde hatred, and also obteyne you loue & good wyl, & cause your doctrine to be of more authoritie & better beleued. Therfore yf any man doeth moleste ỹ for a garmēt or a vessel, or for any other lyke thig, wherof he is gredy & wold fayne haue it frō the, rather thā he should go about to do the a displeasure other wayes, graunt him his request, & so thou shalt bynde hym vnto the through thy good turne, & delyuer thy selfe from molestacion & grieke. Agayne yf any man requireth to borowe money of the, let it not greue the to geue it him, yea though it be so that nothyng of it shal returne vnto the agayne, neyther of the vsurye, nor of the stocke it selfe, for he that lendeth money to vsurye doth rather hunt for other mennes, than geue his owne. And why shoulde it greue the to lende him thoughe thou shouldest neuer haue it againe, vnto whome thou oughtest to geue frelye where thou haddeste plenty & he lacked? So through your example men shal learne vtterlye to neglecte these thinges, for whose sake they suffer and do al thynges.

Geue to him that asketh the

The texte. Ye haue hearde how it was sayd: Thou shalt loue thy neyghbour and hate thin enemye. But I say vnto you: loue your enemyes. Blesse thē that curse you. Do good to thē that hate you, praye for them which hurt you and persecut you, that ye may be the childrē of your father, which is in heauē: for he maketh his sunne to arise on the euyl & on the good, and sendeth rayne on the iust, and on the vniust. For if ye loue thē which loue you, what reward haue ye. Do not ỹ publicās euē ỹ same: And if ye make much of your brethren only, what great thing do ye: do not also the publicans lyke wyse: ye shall therfore be perfect, euen as your father which is in heauen is perfect

Nowe hearken you that commaundement whiche is counted chiefe in the law. Thou shalt loue thy neyghboure and hate thyne enemy. It requireth good wyll towarde well wyllers, and them that haue deserued well, but it suffereth to wyll them yll that do hurt vs. Consyder howe I do not hynder this precept, but howe I adde vnto it. For I am not contente with mutuall beneuolence emong frendes, but this I require of you that be the folowers of my doctrine, that ye loue your enemies, and that ye do not onlye not hate thē that hate you, but prouoke thē vō good turnes to loue you And if they be so farre out of frame, that they wil not vse your good turne, but cōtinually trouble you & prouoke you with yl sayinges & yl doynges, yet se that ye in the myddest of your troubles, turne not your good minde frō them, but praye vnto god for them that they may chaūge their mindes & repent. Yf ye vse this gentylnes towardes all men both good & euyll, ye shall declare your selues to be ỹ kindely childrē of the heauēly father, who desiring all men to be saued geueth so manifolde benefites vnto the worthy and the vnworthy. For he suffereth his sunne indifferently to shyne vpon them that worshyp him, and he and vpon them that despise him, suffereth his raine to profit both ỹ iust & the vniust, prouoking ỹ yl through his benefite to repēt, & styrryng ỹ good to rēdre thākes. The likenes of manners shal bryng you to the heauenly father, and men wyl beleue that your doctrine commeth from him, if they espie in you his notable goodnes. For yf ye loue thē that loue you, if ye do for them, that do for you, yf ye wyl wel to thē which beare you good wyll, ye haue escaped blame: but ye haue not deserued praise. Not to requite one good turne for another is counted a detestable vnkyndenes euen emong the heathens and the Publicans, whose fashion is euyl spoken of, euen of the common sorte. To loue hym that loueth the doth pertayne vnto nature, and not to the vertue of the gospell. And yf ye shewe your selues curteyse & gentle in speche toward your kinsfolkes or contrey men onely, and disdayne to salut others, as though they were straungers, what great thyng do ye? Doth not the heathen men the same: these be common thynges whyche do not shew men to be good, but that they be men onely. And those thynges cannot seme excellēt, whyche do chaunce also vnto yll men. Wherfore I would that ye should be perfecte and resemble your heauenly father wyth wonderfull lyghte of goodnes, who beyng omnipotent, yet of his goodnes doth good to all men, lokynge for rewarde of noman. He is meke and gentyll towardes all men, and yet he is able yf he wyl, out of hande to punishe all men.

to arryse on the euyll and on the good.

Yf ye loue thē whych loue you.

Yf ye make muche of your brethren onely

Ye shal therefore be perfect

¶ The syxt Chapter.

The texte.

¶ Take hede that ye gyue not almesse in the syght of men, to thintent that ye wolde be seen of them, or els ye haue no rewarde with your father which is in heue. Therfore, whan thou geuest thin almes, let not trūpettes blow before ỹ, as hypocrites do in the synagoges, and in the stretes, for to be praysed of men. Verely I say vnto you: They haue receyued theyr reward. But whē thou wilt geue almes, let not thy left hand knowe what thy ryght hande doth, that thine almes maye be in secrete, and thy father which seeth in secrete, shal rewarde the openly.

I Haue declared vnto you in what thinges ye ought to passe & excel the righteousnes of the Scribes & the Pharisees, if ye wyll be my disciples. Nowe shall I shewe you what ought to be auoided in those thinges, which seme cōmon & belongyng vnto you both. For there is a certayne pryuye poyson, which doth infect al the good dedes of the Pharisees, ỹ they deserue vtterly no prayse of god. It is an holy thing to releue the nedy. It is a godly thing to talke with god by pure prayer. Fastynge is a deuout thing: And ỹ Pharises through the setting furth & bosting of these thinges, do claime & obteine an opinīo of high holynes before men, wher as they displease god, who doth behold not the outward face, but the inwarde hart. And they do worthely displease, becuase theyr harte is fouly infected with vaine glory. They hunt for vaine praise of the people, rather thā for a good cōscience before god, & whilest they catche after a vayne reward here, they be disapointed of that, whiche onelye aught to be desyred. This poyson creppyng in by secret vnderminyng, lyeth in wayt priuely also, for thē which be sumwhat entred in the rase of vertue. Wherfore I wyl in this behalfe, that ye be ware & circūspect, that whē ye go aboute to do any godly worke, ye desyre not rather to do it openly, than in secrete, to thintent ye myght be sene of men, and so hunt after prayse & glory of man. Ye ought alwais to do wel, whether mē se you or se you not. For god doth euer beholde you, of whom you loke for rewarde. But yf ye go aboute to get the praise of mā for your good dedes, ye lese ỹ reward of your heauēly father. Your good worke must not alwayes be kept priuye, but ye must not playe your pageant in the syght of men, like as players in the stage do playe they playe, whose desyre is nothyng els, but to please the eyes & the eares of the people. But he can not alwayes folow the best which doth apply himselfe to the iudgement of the common sort: For ye must please men in such sorte, that ye mai allure them to your maners and fashions, and not you to go out of kynde and fal to them. Though prayse be fled & shunned yet it foloweth vertue of her own accord. And ỹ liker is true prayse, which doth chaunce without ambicious seking for. And the whole glory that riseth of wel doing, must be holly gyuē to god. Ye shal displease him as sone as ye stand in your own concept & please your selues, chalēging vnto your selues ỹ which is wholy of his boūteousnes. Therfore whosoeuer thou art that wilt folow the law of the gospell, when thou entendest thorough thy lyberalitie to releue the nedines of the pore: do not as Hipocrites be wont to do, which be men lyke players coūterfeted & disguysed, which when they appere lyberal and mercyful, in harte they be both couetous and cruel.

Take hede ỹ ye geue not almes in the syght of men.

Therfore whē thou geuest thyne almesse.

For the misery of they neyghbours moueth them nothing, but beyng desirous of glory and renoune, they bye with a lytle money the prayse of the people & would geue vtterly nothing if they wer alone, & saw their brother wel nere dead for hunger. Therfore as oft as they geue any thyng to the poore, they seke not to be secrete and alone, but they cum abrode in the stretes, and where as men resorte: And lyke as players should play their pageaunt, they cal furth a nūbre of people with the sounde of the trumpe, to roote and to gaase, both casting the poore and miserable in the teethe with they misery, and huntyng for them selues a vaine and a folishe prayse of men. Wyll ye heare what they gayne? Let the people prayse them neuer so muche, they haue lost they reward of they good dede at goddes hande, which doth measure the godly worke of the sincere affection of the mynde. He that geueth for prayse and glory, he selleth his good turne, he geueth it not. Truely thou must be so farre from the affection of these men, that whē thou geue any almesse thy lefte hand must not knowe what thy right hād doth, and thou must not desire to be loked vpon of man, yea and if it were possible thou thy self shuldest not know that which thou doest aright, and shouldest forget thyne owne dede, and not impute it to any man, that thou hast dōne wel, nor stand not in thine own conceyte, because thou hast geuē thyne almes, but onely reioyce inwardly, that the poore, and nedy is refreshed. What if men know not, yea what if he that is succoured knoweth not hym that succoureth him? It is ynowgh for the to haue a witnes of the father, from whose eyes nothyng can be hid. He wyll rewarde the, although thou haue no thancke at all of man.

The texte.

¶ And whan thou prayest thou shalt not be as hypocrites are. For they vse to stāde praying in the synagoges, & in the corners of the stretes, that they may be seen of mē Verely I say vnto you: they haue they reward. But whan thou prayest, entre into thy chambre, & whan thou hast shut thy dore, pray to thy father, whiche is in secret: And thy father which seeth in secret, shal rewarde the openly.

Semblable whan ye make your prayers to god, do not folow the guise & vsage of hipocrites, whose special delyte is to stand in cōpany of men, & in the corners of stretes, so oftē as they pray, for none other entent, but to be seen of mē, at whose hādes they hunt & loke for ỹ prayse of deuout & holy cōuersacio. Let thē please thē self & others also, wt such glorious prayers

This

This I assure you, now they haue theyr reward, whych they loked for. And what is more vaine thā this reward? & for a cōterfeit & a false glory, they frustrate & set beside thē selues that blessed reward which god woulde haue geuen, if they had offered in his syght, the pure & sincere oblacion of theyr praiers. Do thou therfore contrarywise. When thou prayest, forsake the multitude, enter in to the secrete chamber, & shut the dores, & in secrete vtter thy sincere prayers before thy father. It is ynough, that he doth beholde and see thy godlines, from whō nothyng can be hyd. He wyll render vnto the, the euerlastyng reward. These thinges haue I set furth, to teach you by plaine & homely examples. For it is not yll to geue almes sumtime before men, or to praye in a multitude, and where as men resorte: but than knoweth not the left hand what the ryght hande doeth, when the worke of charitie is not defiled with any affection of worldly vanitie. Then thou art secrete in thy chambre, when thou speakest vnto God with suche perfect clerenes of mynde, as though no man dyd behold the. He that prayeth in a multitude of men as earnestly, yea paraduenture more vehemently than yf he were alone, he prayeth in his secrete chamber. For the ryght hande and the left, or the secrete chamber standeth not in the thynges, but in thaffections and desires of the harte.

They haue theyr reward

But when thou prayest

¶ But whā ye pray, bable not much as the heathen do, for they thinke it wyl cum to passe, ỳ thei shal be heard for their much bablinges sake. Be not ye therfore like vnto thē. For your father knoweth what thinges ye haue nede of, before ye aske of him.

The texte.

This also must be considered in prayer. It is thaffection & the harty desire that moueth god, not the noyse of the lyppes. And it skilleth not howe longe and howe lowde the prayer be, but howe feruent and sincere thaffection and desire is. Wherfore let the example of the heathen men, be farre from you, which do recite and say long prayers, and full of many wordes, redy framed and prescribed vnto them, as who would say, they should obteyne nothing except they wery ed God with babling of many wordes, repetyng one thyng oftentymes, and prescribing and appoyntyng wyth recitall of many wordes, what, when, and how, they woulde haue the thyng perfourmed, which they praye for. And yet oftentymes they pray for thinges noysome & hurtfull. We ought to aske of God the best thynges, and not al thinges, and we ought to pray often, rather than muche, and vehemently rather than longe, finally wyth the harte rather than wyth voyce: Neyther alwayes with prescribed & purposed wordes after the custome of the heathen, but so muche as the feruency of the mynde, & the rauishement towardes god, doth styre & prouoke. Truely your father loueth to be called vpon, but not to be taught with long prayer what your necessitie doth require, but to be prouoked thorough your godlynes to geue the thyng, which the slothfull and sluggyshe deserueth not to haue: For he knoweth what your necessitie doth require, yea before that he be called vpon.

The texte.

¶ After this maner therfore praye ye. Our father which art in heauen, halowed be thy name. Thy kyngdō cum, thy wyl be done in yearth as it is in heuē. Geue vs this day our dayly bread. And forgeue vs our trespaces as we forgeue thē that trespasse agaynst vs. And lead vs not into temptacion, but delyuer vs from euell. For thine is the kyngdome, and the power, and the glory for euer. Amen.

Therfore be ye vnlyke to the heathen men, both in life and also in maner of praying. And if ye wil haue a fourme & maner of the euangelical praier prescrybed and set furth vnto you, this is the worthy prayer, wherewyth the true and natural children ioyned with brotherly charitie, maye speake vnto the heauenly father, father vnto all men indifferently: of whom although ye haue all thinges, yet those chiefely ought to be required whych make for the attainement of the euerlastyng lyfe. For all other thinges he wyl cast vnto you, euen of his own accorde, as an increase and auauntage accordinge to the desires of his children, as he is a most bountifull father. Whose glory ye ought to regarde aboue al thinges, to whom all glory is due in heauen and in yerth. To perteyne vnto his kingdom is to conquere the tyranny of the deuil. To be subiect vnto hys wyl, is to rule and reigne. Of whose free lyberalitie it cummeth, who so euer doth norysshe and reuiue mennes hartes to the perfection of the gospel. But he wyll not heare you vnles ye accorde and agre in one: and concord and agremẽt can not lightly be, vnles ye forgeue eche others offences, without which men do not lyue in thys world, although they endeuour towarde thattaynment of perfection. And thorough this concord ye shal be safe by the ayde of your father against the frowarde temptour, yf ye watche well, and busyly call for the helpe of your good father agaynst that nawghty one. Wherfore in vayne calleth he vpon the father with this fourme of prayer that I teache, which is not of this sorte, which neyther feareth, nor loueth God, whiche liueth to himselfe, which followeth his owne glori more thã goddes, which gapeth for worldly goodes & authoritie, which had rather haue thinges pleasaunt to his owne appetite, thã thinges pleasaunt vnto God, whyche sueth after earthli thinges more thã heauẽly, which setteth lesse by the qualities of the mynde, than bodely commodities, which is at variaunce with his brother, which thorough ryot & displeasures vseth him selfe sluggysh against thassaultes of ỹ deuil. And the maner of prayer is after this sorte. Our father which hast regenerat vs to heauẽ, who were once vnluckely borne of Adã, & hast prepared for vs (forsakinge erthly thinges) a kingdom & inheritãce euerlasting: which arte sayde to be in heauen because thou dost repleniſhe all, and hast no maner of drosse or erthly infirmitie: graunte that thy name may be honorable and glorious emonge men thorough vs, whiche by thy benefit, be perfect and pure. For it is not our glory, but thy gifte, what so euer is well done of vs. Let the tyranny of Satan be abolyſshed, that thy kyngdome daply maye preuayle more and more, whiche doth not stande in riches or worldlye strength, but in mildenes, chastitie, softnes, sufferaunce, faith and charitie, that vices & yll desires once chased awaie, thy heauenly vertues may florisshe, and shewe thẽ selues emongest men, and that it may cum to passe at length, that like as in heauen all thinges be peaceable and quiet, and all creatures there do obey most humbly thy cõmaundementes: so likewise there be none in yearth whiche be not obedient to thy most holy wyl, euery man as farrefurth as the weakenes of nature doth suffer, diligently recordyng nowe, that whyche shall cum to passe perfectly in lyfe to cum. O father norisshe that that thou hast brought furth, see vnto vs, ỹ the breade of thy heauenly doctrine doe not fayle vs, that we maye be daylye stayed, growe vp, and made lusty by the takyng therof, to the obseruacion and keping of thy commaundementes. And alienat not thy mynde away from vs being offended with our trespasses, but for thy clemẽcy & mekenes

Our father whiche art in heauen halowed be thy name

Thy kingdom cum.

Thy wyll be done in yearth as it is in heauen.

Geue vs thys daye our daily breade.

And forgeue vs our trespasses as we for-

pardon our offences, whiche we cõmyt thorough infirmitie and weakenes that we may haue peace with the, like as we emong our selues forgeuyng eche other, if one hath offended an other, conserue mutuall concorde and amitie. Thou beyng mercifull we feare nothing, and beyng vnder set with concorde, we be made the stronger agaynst oure cõmon ennemy. Vnto whõ we beseche ỹ, (if it be possible) deliuer vs not to be tẽpted. For we know his malice, we know hys frowardnes and craftines. And if thou suffre vs to fall in temptacion, to thintent to trye the constauncye of our mynde, o thou mercyfull father, deliuer vs from that nawghtye euill. Vouchesafe of thy goodnes, to graunte and make sure these our desires. See therfore howe many thinges this shorte prayer doth comprise, that nedes he must be perfect who so euer doth rightly pronownce thys prayer, that is who so doth pronownce it with mowth that the harte & affection agree vnto the same. Fyrst it teacheth you to depend wholy vpon none other, but the heauenly father, to whome ye owe that ye be made, to whome ye owe that ye be redemed from sinne, to whome ye owe what so euer vertues ye haue. He is called father, that ye maye vnderstande he is ful of mercy & bounteousnes, he is sayde to dwell in heauen, that ye should lifte vp your hartes thyther, dispising earthly goodes. Ye cal hym youres, that no man should vendicat any thinge proper vnto himself, seyng that what so euer they haue cũmeth vnto all men of his onely liberalitie. And in this behalf there is an equalitie of kinges and seruauntes. Ye wishe onely his glory, that no man in the earth ascribe vnto hym selfe praise of any thynge wherof aryseth insolency and stowtnes of mynde. Ye wishe that he should reigne, that he should be obeyed and not you. For the vertues be hys whiche do worke by you. It is his doctrine whiche ye shal deliuer vnto men frõ me. And it is not ynowgh to persist & abyde in his vertues, but ye must dayly increase & go forwarde in goodnes, and for thys ye aske of hym, that wonderfull breade whyche hys wyl is that it should be dayly asked, because he doth dayly geue it, and he willeth it to be asked of hym, to put you in remembraunce that all good thinges cum from hym. Finally that ye should be the more ware to fall frõ the charitie of so bountious a father, he doth monishe you of that froward Sathan, whiche neuer ceasseth to lye in watche for the godly, to plucke thẽ backe in to hys tyrannye.

geue them that trespasse agaynst vs.

And leade vs not into tentacion.

But delyuer vs from euyll.

Amen.

¶ Therfore if ye forgeue men their trespasses, your heuenly father wil forgeue you. But if ye wyl not forgeue men their trespases, neither wil your father forgeue you your trespases.

The texte.

Wherfore, before ye speke vnto your father with this prayer, cõsidre with your selues, whether ye desire truely the thynge that ye aske, and whether ye be meete persones to be heard of youre father in suche thynges as ye praye for. But chyefly thys ye must duly serche with your selues, whether ye haue amitie and concorde with your neyghboures. Euen suche a father shall ye finde hym towardes you, as your neyghbour findeth you towardes him. He will not knowe hym for his sonne, whiche doth not agree with hys brother. If ye forgeue thẽ that offende you, your heauenly father will forgeue all that ye trespasse agaynst hym. But if ye wyll be hard and sore against other men, your father will not forgeue you your offences. Wilte thou not forgeue thy felowe seruaunt, whom on thy behalfe at one tyme or other thou hast offended againe and requirest thou of God forgeuenes of thy trespasse, whom thou art hable by no meanes to recompence with forgiuyng agayn his offence made to the.

The texte. ¶ Further whan ye fast, be not sory as hipocrites be. For they disfigure their faces, that it may appere vnto men that they fast. Verely I say vnto you, they haue their rewarde. But whan thou doest fast, anoynte thyne head, & washe thy face, that it appere not vnto men, that thou doest fast, but vnto thy father, who is in secrete, and thy father that seeth the in secrete, shall reward the openly.

Now ye perceyue what difference ought to be betwene your almesse, & the almesse of the pharises, & betwene your prayers & their prayers. Now harke what difference ought to be betwene your fastes & theyres if ye wyll haue them acceptable to the father, & profitable to your selues. It is not the forbearing of the meate that commendeth fastyng vnto god, but the pure and cleane affection of the minde, feruētly desiring to please god onely. Wherfore as often as godlines shall prouoke you to fast, folowe not certeyn men which be not fasters but counterfeyters of fastyng, setting furth the colour and cloke of fastynge with a sower countenaunce, not intending ꝑ in dede, wherfore fasting should be vsed, ꝑ is to say, either to pacify god, or to chastice the body, whereby the mynde myght be the more free & redy to apply & ensue holy thinges: but by this colour they hunte for vaine praise of men, for whose sake dispising god, they playe thys pagent. For to thys purpose they disfigure theyr faces with paleneſſe and sowernes, that by the behauioure of their body, men may see that they do fast. This is certen: Ther is no cause why they should loke after any reward of God for these good dedes: For now they haue theyr rewarde atteyning ꝑ whiche they hunted for with their fasting. But so oftē as thou dost fast, appeare rather not to fast, and appeare to be mery annoynting thy hed and washing thy face, lest men perceyue that thou doest fast. And thynke not that fast to be vnprofitable, whiche is hyd from men. It suffyseth to the, ꝑ thy father seeth it, frō whom nothyng is hydde. And he that seeth in secrete, in ꝑ steed of vaine prayse of men, wyll reward the w̄ the perfect rewarde. Againe I say not thys, that it should be wicked that men should knowe of thy fastinge, but that the mynde should abhorre from the desire of vaine prayse. Than no man seeth thy fasting, whē thou dost fast not to thintent to be seen of any man. Than onely god doth see the fastyng, whē thou dost fast with this intēt, that thou woldest as gladly fast though no man should see the when thou dost fast.

whan ye fast be not sowre as hypocrites be.

Verely I saye vnto you they haue their rewarde

And thy father that seeth the in secret.

But laye vp your treasures in heuē, wher neither rust nor moth doth corrupt, & wher theues do not breake through nor steale. For where your treasure is there wyll your harte be also.

The cōmon sorte of men not considering these thinges whyles they hunt for small and bisible rewardes of men, be disapointed of the inuisible and true rewarde, whiche for well doyng God doth geue abundantly. In lyke case be they whiche with muche thoughte & care, do gather to gether and heape vp riches, and hyde them in the ground for losynge, albeit thys is euen to lose them in deede. He that dealeth and bestoweth his riches rightly, it is he that laieth them vp surely. For that that thou hidest in the groūd is not profitable vnto the, but is in daunger of mothes, rust, and theues, so that thou hast nothing of them, but a miserable carefulnes to get them & to kepe them. These thynges must be gotten neyther carefully nor vnmesurably. And when they be gotten or cum by chaunce, they muste be redely distributed if any haue nede, or elles so bestowed, that necessitie of nature may be holpen, and not ryot mayntayned, nor any disease of the mynde be serued and satisfyed. And yet all men for the most parte vnto thys thing apply their whole study and care, as though pouerty made men miserable, and riches indued them with felicitie. And whyles they folowe after these false goodes, whiche wyll shortely forsake theyr masters, they forsake the eternall goodes, whyche indue them with true felicitie, and can not be taken awaye. But ye of thother syde hastyng with all indeuoure to the best and most perfecte thynges, wherby ye shalbe riche in dede, laye vp youre treasures in heauen, the keping of the whyche, can not trouble you with cumberouse carefulnes. For neyther rust nor mothe doth destroye suche maner of ryches, nor theues doth not digge it vp nor steale it, of whyche chaunces, worldly goodes be in daunger. If ye lay vp these goodes wyth your father, he will kepe the safely for you, and your mynde shal not sticke grouelynge on the grounde beyng oppressed with these fylthy cares, but it shall dispise these vile and fadinge thynges and be rayshed vp vnto heauenly thynges, for where as a mānes treasure is, which he loueth intierly, there is his harte also. Therfore they haue no high nor heauenly thought, whiche hath gathered riches & hyd them in the grounde. They walke and wander hyther and thyther, but theyr harte is in the hole, where the mony is hyd. And if the mynde be corrupt, eyther by the disease of vaine glory, or auarice, what so euer is done, must nedes be vicious.

But laye vp youre treasures in heauen.

For where youre treasure is, there wyll youre harte be also.

¶ The light of ꝑ body is the eye. Wherfore if thyne eye be single, al thy body shal be ful of light. But if thyne eye be naught, al thy body shalbe ful of darknes. Wherfore yf the light that is in the, be darknes, how great is the darkenes?

The texte.

For first it is to be considered, what is chiefly to be desired, & wherby we may obteine ꝑ whiche we do aske: farthermore as the cādel is in the house, as the eye is in the body, so is the mynde in man. If the light of the mynde be not faultie thorough the darknes of false opinions, & yll desires, if the eye of the mynde doth loke none other way, thā to the true marke, what so euer is done thorough out all the lyfe, is acceptable vnto God, and euery thyng helpeth towardes the heape of felicitie. Lyke as if there be a greate candell in the howse, there is no stumblyng nor fallyng: so if thyne eye be cleare and hole, it geueth light to al the mēbers, and no parte stumbleth or wandereth, the eye beyng the captaine and guyde. Agayne if the eye of the body be faultye, no mēber doth his dutye well. For there is no right iudgemēt when that parte of ours is faultye, by the whiche onely we do iudge. Therfore if that parte of the whiche is gyuen the for light, be turned in to darknes, how greate shall the darkenes of thother partes be, whiche haue no light of them selfes. If reason be blinded with desires, and iudgeth that to be good whiche is miserable, and iudgeth ꝑ chiefly to be desired, whyche is to be dispysed, or not to be regarded, in to what darkenes shall man be drawen thorough ambition, fylthy lust, auarice, folyshnes, angre, enuy, hatred, and other perturbations and troubles of the mynde, whyche of their owne nature be ful of darkenes? Therfore let your eye be cleane & sincere, that it may beholde the best, and let it also be single that it beholde and loke

The texte. ¶ No man can serue two maisters. For eyther he shal hate the one & loue the other, or els leane to the one and dispise the other. Ye can not serue god & Mãmon. Therfore I say vnto you, be not carefull for your lyfe, what ye shall eate or drynke, nor yet for your body what garment ye shal put on. Is not the life more worth than meate: and the body more worth than rayment? Beholde the fowles of the ayer, for they sowe not, nor reape nor, nor cary in to the barnes: and your heauenly father feadeth them. Are ye not muche better than they.

Thincke not those men worthy to be hearde, whyche diuide thẽ selfes betwene God and men, betwene the yearth & heauen, & so folow thinges eternall, that they wil not dispise thynges temporal. For they do nothyng els, but where as they woulde catche bothe, they obteyne neyther of bothe.

No man can serue two maisters.

Thys heauenly Philosophye lyke as it doth promise greate rewardes: so it doth require the whole man. And emonge men a man shall not finde two of suche gentill condicions, that one seruaũt can be hable to please bothe. So it cummeth to passe, that thone must be forsakẽ or elles neyther can be satisfied. And if the maisters be of contrary appetites, and do square within them selues by sum greuouse debate: it must nedes be, that the seruaunt yf he wyl please the one, must not onely forsake thother, but also sticke vnto the one, and hate the other, whom he hath forsaken. And if he will go frõ this agayne vnto thother, he must nedes translate and tourne his loue, and seruyce vnto him onely and dispise thother, whom he hath forsakẽ. And who be so contrary one to another, as God and Mammon: howe can one serue two, whan they commaunde so diuers thinges: God commaundeth the to geue that thou hast to the neady. Mammon cõmaundeth the to take away other mẽes by right and by wrong. God cõmaundeth the to prouyde for thy brother whiche is in daunger. Mãmon cõmaundeth the to lyue to thy self. God cõmaundeth sobrenes. Mammon teacheth excesse & ryot. Wherfore ye flatter your selues in vayne, yf ye beleue that that thyng maye be done, which is vnpossible: y is to serue both God & mãmon. His seruaunt is eche man to whome he is wholye geuen. Ye see howe ryches do possesse them ful & whole, which do trauayle for it with so great tumult & busines, whiche defende them and kepe them with so great carefulnes, whiche forgo them with so great grieke for these then suffer all thynges, for these they do all thynges. Who so hath bounde hym selfe to thys seruice, can not be the seruaunt of god: he requireth the whole man, and can not abyde the felowshyp of so fowle and filthy a maister, nor can not abyde a dimy seruaunte, whiche is partaker with his aduersarye. But the common sorte of ryche men are wonte to excuse the sore of auarice, by the pretence of mannes necessitie. They saye by these thynges men prouyde for agaynst hunger and nakednes. So speke they whych do not depend wholy of god, but put their trust in their owne defence and ayde. My wil is, ye shoulde be voide from this carefulnes, lest it withdraw you frõ the desire of better thinges. The necessitie of nature is content with very lytle, and euery wher it is to be had, that maye suffice, for as I wyll my seruauntes to be. For eyther the liberalitie of good men alwayes readye shal suffice, or elles diligence & labour shal prouide that thing which may ease necessitie. Finally yf none of these helpe, the father wyll not forsake those that be his: for he that geueth the greater thynges, wyll cast the smaller thynges to them, whiche with al their heartes desire after heauely thinges, although they be not carefull for the worlde. Therfore lay not vp nor hoord not for a long time, be not vexed with carefulnes of meate, without whiche ye can not liue, neither with carefulnes of apparel that couereth your bodye, & kepeth you from colde. Is not the life more precious thā meate? Is not the bodye more precious than the garment? He that hath geuen these better thynges, & hath geuen thē to suche as were not careful, shall it greue hym to norysh & preserue ẏ, whiche he hath geuen, with these thynges of lesse value & estimacion? If ye desyre an example, loke vpon other liuyng thynges, whiche the maker of al thinges hath made for your sake. Hath he not prouided a liuing for al thynges that he hath made? Consider the birdes of the ayer: they sow not, they reape not, they lay not vp in barnes, careful for tyme to cum, they liue frō day to daye without al carefulnes: what so euer they get, they take it ioyfully, and yet the heauenly father geueth meate vnto them al. And wil he disapointe you whome he esteemeth farre aboue the byrdes? And yf he be carefull ouer you (as he is in dede) is not your carefulnes in vayne?

yet for your body, what garmeute ye shall put on.

Is not the lyfe more worthe then meate?

Beholde the fowles of the ayer.

The texte.

Whyche of you by careful thought, can adde one cubite vnto his stature? And why care ye for rayment? Consider ẏ lillyes of the fyelde how they growe. They laboure not, they spinne not: And yet I say vnto you. No not Salomō in al his roialtie, was apparayled like one of these. Wherfore yf god so apparayleth ẏ grasse of the fyelde whiche standing this day, to morowe is cast in to the fornace, shal he not much more do the same for you, o ye of litle faithe?

If he forsake you, what shall your carefulnes preuaile? As he hath geuē a body after his owne deuise, so wil he geue a liuing after his owne deuise.

Will ye see how vnprofitable the carefulnes of the mynde is aboute suche thinges? What man is there (be he neuer so carefull) that can adde one cubite to the stature of hys body? But euery mannes body thoughe he thinke nothing vpon it, groweth with certen encrease vnto a quantitie appointed of god. If thou cast away all care, thy body shal be nothinge the shorter. If thou be vexed with care, thy body shal be nothing the higher. Therfore he that maketh the body bigge and strong without thy carefulnes, he wyll prouide for the liuyng without thy carefulnes, who doth withdrawe the from care of those thynges, whiche be not gotten without our diligence. It is great folishnes therfore to feare lest ye should lacke foode. For as much as ye see that birdes be prouided for sufficiently. And now lest ye should be carefull for prouision of apparell for the body, consider the lillies which do spring and grow in the fieldes without the care of any man. They labour not, nor spinne not, & who doth prouide them of apparell? as seemeth good to him. Who but the heauenly father? And he doth so prouide, that neyther Salomon the notable riche and gaye kynge was euer so appareled, when he chiefly dyd set forth the glorye of hys ryches, as one of these poore lylies, finally regarded & set by, which grow not onely in gardens, wher man bestoweth sum labour & diligence, but grow also in medowes of their owne accorde? For ẏ labour & care of man can make nothing so elegante & feete as the prouidēce of nature. And if the heauely father doth garnishe & clothe so freshlye the vile grasse, whiche shortely shall perishe, & to daye is freshe in the fieldes, and to morowe cut downe, & dryed, and cast into the furneese: why haue ye so litil trust in him, sithe he hath geuē you thinges of greater excellency, & sith he hath made you to be immort all: and sith also he hath specially whyche of you by careful thoughte, can adde one cubite vnto hys stature.

And why care ye for raiments Consider the lillyes of the fyelde.

No not Salomon in all hys royalitie was apparelled lyke one of these.

Wherfore if god so apparelleth the grasse of the fyelde.

specially prepared you for the glory of hys name, that ye wil thynke that ye shal lacke apparell, whiche ye ought to seke for and prepare, not for adournynge and gaynesse, but for necessitie and nedefulnes.

The texte. ¶ Therfore take no thought, saying: what shall we eat, or what shall we drinke, or wher with shal we be clothed. After al these thinges the gentiles seke. For your heauenly father knoweth that ye haue nede of al these thynges. But rather seke ye first the kyngdom of god and the, righteousnes therof, and all these thynges shal be cast vnto you. Be ye not careful for to morow, for to morowe shal care for it selfe: sufficient is vnto the daye, his owne trauaile.

Therfore ye that haue god to your father so benignely prouidyng for the birdes, prouidyng for floures and grasse, of the whiche thone lacketh reason, the other hath no felyng: sithe ye see and perceyue that he tendereth & maketh so muche of you, enduing your body, whiche is made with meruelouse prouidence, with a soule reasonable, & like vnto thangelical myndes, not disdayninge that ye should be called his children: choosynge you out from emongst all men thorough his free charitie, by whose pure lyfe and sincere doctrine he might be knowē & glorified thoroughout al mankinde, whom he hath appointed to thinheritance of the euerlastynge lyfe: Cast away this carefulnes of vile and filthy thinges, & say not doubtfully and fearefully what shal we eate, or what shal we drincke, or what shal we put on. These be the sayinges of ỹ heathen & not of Christē mē, for they either beleue not ỹ god is, or elles beleue not that he is careful ouer men. Neither haue they lerned that there is any other better life, to set their mynde and care vpō. Therfore distrustyng goddes help & putting mannes felicitie in thinges of the body, they prepare with much carefulnes those thiges, that do perteine to their liuing & apparel, or other cōmodities of the body. They leape for ioy when these thynges chaunce vnto thē, they sownde for feare, when these thynges be in daunger: They be vexed with sorowfulnes, and sumtime hang thē selues, when these thinges by taken awaye. And thus thorough carefulnes cleauyng vnto these corruptible thinges they neither liue pleasantly here, nor can lift vp their hartes vnto the study and desire of heauēly thinges. Emōg mē, who is so wicked a father, ỹ wil not prouide for his children thynges necessary for the sustentatiō of their life. Ye haue a father so riche, so boūteful, so circumspect, ỹ he is sufficiēt for al, to enriche all, and leue nothing vnprouided for, be it neuer so litill or vile. And feare ye ỹ he wil not prouide for his children these thynges, without the whyche they can not lyue. Lay this carefulnes vpō him, he knoweth well that ye haue nede of al these thinges. And he is not so harde that he wil withdrawe thynges necessary from suche as be occupied in his busines. But sum wil saye: what then: Shall we not get vs with our handy worke wherby we may norisshe our selues, our wife and our chyldren: wherby we may ease the pouertie of the poore: Yea truely, but without all carefulnes.

Therfore take no thought, saying: what shall we eate: or what shall we drynke:

For your heauenlye father knoweth that ye haue nede of all these thynges.

For truely the common people doth double their misery, both laborynge with the body, & beyng also carefull in the mynde. They sowe, beyng carefull lest that whiche they sowe should not cum vp, they mowe beynge careful lest the warrier or the theefe should take away that which is cut downe before it be laied vp in the barne, they ley vp in their graner, being careful lest any infection should hurte their corne, or least any fyer should rise and

destroy it. Finally because they haue an eye to plenty, and not to the present necessitie: they heape vp for a longe time, and they neuer haue ynough, as though they were sure to lyue longe. Wherfore if the matter so requireth, ye must labour, but wout al carefulnes. Yf ye chaunce to haue money wout fraude and muche busynes, take it: but in suche wyse, that the carefulnes therof, withdrawe you nothyng from the busines of the gospell. For your matters are greater thā that the carefulnes of light, trifelyng, & corruptible thinges should withdraw you from them. Let your chefe care be aboute that good thyng, in comparison of the whiche, these worldly thynges be of no value nor reputaciō. The kyngdō of god must be set vp, that is to say, the doctrine of the gospell, by the which we attayne vnto the heauenly inheritaūce. Wherof I haue chosen you to be the preachers and setters furth, & haue showed you what excellent vertues be nedeful to the doyng of this thyng, that is both to loue youre ennemyes, and to wysh well vnto them, who seketh your destructiō. These thinges because they be the chefe and hyghest, whiche cum not vnto you from youre father without your diligence and carefulnes: ye must fyrst & chefely seke for them. The other smaller thinges whyche pertayne vnto the necessitie of this lyfe, the good and gracious father wyll cast vnto you as an augmentacion, & that of his owne accorde, wythoute any carefulnes on youre behalfe: that for bothe causes ye shoulde render thankes vnto hys bountefulnes, bothe because he hath geuen you those high & chefe thinges, you endeuorynge vnto the same: and also because he hath cast vnto you these thynges, wythoute any carefulnes on your behalfe. He wyll not haue you greued with cares, whiche make you more troubled, but not the better. And this busines that ye take in hande, is so great & weighty, that it requireth the whole mynde, tyd and voyded from al cares. Wherfore as men that lyueth from daye to day, beyng content with thynges present and at hande, be not greued nor vexed with carefulnes of thinges to cum, lyke as the commō sort of men doth doublyng theyr affliction, both doyng what they can to prouyde for the present necessitie, and trouble themselues with feare of thinges to cum. What so euer this day offereth vnto you, receyue it with thankes geuyng. Let thē morowe care for it self, what so euer it bryngeth. Yf it bryng anye good, ye shall not hange in hope: Yf it bryng any yll, ye shall not preuent your trouble, with feare of yl to cum. This life hath his afflictions, which it nedeth not to double with feare. For it is ynōwghe to suffer them, when they cum: so that it is not nedefull for feare to make them presente before they cum. Tyme doth alter and bryng these thynges in mans lyfe mynglynge ioye wyth sorowe, and yet all shall tourne you vnto good, yf ye take well in worthe what so euer shall chaunce, and sette youre care wholy vpon the heauenly kyngdome,

But rather seke ye fyrst ỹ kyngdō of god

¶ Judge not, that ye be not iudged. For as ye iudge so shall ye be iudged. And with what measure ye meate, wyth the same shal other men measure to you.

THere is an other thyng also, wherin I would ye should be farre frō the manners of ỹ Scribes & phariseis. For they pardon thēselues in great & greuouse synnes, but agaynst theyr brother beig an offēder, thei be most vnmercyful iudges, yea falsely reprouing thinges ỹ be well, sinistrally expondyng thinges ỹ be doubtfull, makyng very muche of thinges ỹ be lyght & smal: Finally if they see a man fall into any greuouse crime, they endeuoure more to distroye him, than to heale & saue him. And yet hereof they seeke for a name of ryghtuousnes, because they be verye stowte and sore against other mennes faultes, where as they do it neyther for the loue of theyr neyghboures, (whō they desire rather to be dystroyed than corrected, and to be slaūdered openly, rather than amended,) neyther for the hatred of vice, where as they mainteyne & pardon their owne vices farre greater than ỹ others. But the iudgemētes that ye haue, must sauour of the euangelycal charitie, whiche redely doth forgeue, whiche mysdemeth no man rashly without cause, which doth expownde euery doubtful thing to the best, whiche dothe gently tolerate and sufferr many thinges, whiche desireth rather to heale than to punysshe, whiche considerynge her owne infirmitie & wekenes, so iudgeth other mēnes offences, as she would be iudged offēding her self. Finalli she taketh not vpō her an high coūtenaūce in chiding & checking other mennes faultes, if she finde her self gyltie in like or in greater: First she becummeth her owne iudge, before she blameth or monisheth other. And in the meane season it chaūceth to those high minded men that the exāple of an vniust iudgemēt, lyghteth vpon the iudges thē selues & they find other like iudges ouer their like, as thei werouer others. Iudge not ye therfore after suche sorte, lest ye be iudged in like maner of others. For els it shal cum to passe, that as ye iudge other men: so other mē shal iudge you. And as ye measure to other mē, so other men shal measure to you. CWhy seest thou a mote in thy brothers eye, & markest not the beam in thine owne eye? or how sayest ỹ to thy brother: suffer me to plucke out a mote out of thine eye & behold a beam is in thin own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out ỹ beam out of thine owne eye, & than shalt thou clerely see to plucke out a mote out of thy brothers eye.

For no mē be so sore against ỹ light offenses of theyr neighboure, as they that swarme with much greater vices. One slaūdereth his brother because he weareth a loose garmēt, where he him self is ful of enuy. An other speaketh euyll of his brother, because beyng ouercum with weaknes of ỹ flesche he vseth a concubine, where as he him self is wholly the seruaunt of Auarice and ambition. An other abhorreth hys brother because he is a greate bibber, where as he him selfe hathe in hys harte a numbre of murders and sorceries, beyng so blind that he can not see his own bunches, & yet can spye a littl warte in his neighboure. What a wrong & wayward iudgement is this? Euery man ought to be a sharpe iudge in his own faultes, and more milde in other mennes. Euery mā ought to loke narrowli to his own faultes & not to be ouer busy in other mennes. And euery man ought fyrst to be hys owne physycyon, before he laye handes on an other man. Why doest

thou see a mote in thy brothers eye, and canst not see a blocke in thine own eye: or with what face doest thou saye to thy brother: Let me caste a mote out of thine eye, where as thou carriest a blocke in thine owne eyes? Thou hypocrite whiche doest hunt for prayse of holines emong men, not of thine owne goodnes, but of other mennes euylles, fyrste caste the blocke out of thine owne eye, & then loke wt thy pure and cleane eye, whether there be any mote which thou maiest cast out of thy brothers eye. Lyke as with the eye we iudge the thinges of the body: so with the mind, we iudge, the thinges of the mynd. Therfore that must be faultles, where wt we iudge another mannes faulte. And he must fyrst teache himselfe, whych taketh vpō him to teache others: and he must be hys owne iudge, whiche entendeth to gyue sentence of other: and he must monyshe him selfe, which goeth about to monyshe others.

Thou hypocrite firste caste out the beame out of thyne owne eye.

¶ Geue not ye ꝑ which is holy vnto dogges, & cast not your perles before swyne, le they treade thē vnder theyr feete: and the other turne agaynst you & all to rent you.

And these thynges pertayne chiefly vnto them, which take cure & charge of the people. And although I woulde ye shoulde be prompte and redy to do all men good, and to suffer them that do you wronge: and to be mylde, gentyll, and indifferent towardes them that fal by mannes infirmitie and weakenes: finally to be suche towardes them whiche be peruerse and frowarde, that ye had rather to amende them, then to distroye them: yet I woulde not that the misteries of the euangelicall wysedome, should be vttered and declared indifferently to the worthy and vnworthy.

Geue not ye ꝑ whiche is holy vnto dogges.

For yf the Iewes dooe so esteme theyr mysterves and holy thinges, that they kepe from them the dogges, whiche is a fylthy cattall: Yf ryche men so regarde theyr precious pearles, that they wyll not cast them to the hogges lyke madde menne: ye whyche haue in possession the holy thynges in dede: whiche do passe all precious pearles, be they neuer so high of price: beware that ye cast not the riches and treasure of the gospel vnto suche, as be vnworthy. For they be dogges, which beyng wholy geuen to prophane and worldly thinges, abhorre those thinges that sauour of holynes. They be swyne, whiche beyng wholy drowned in fylthy pleasures, do detest the pure and chaste doctrine of the gospell. Rotten karcases and fylthy vomeyng is more pleasaunt vnto dogges, than all sawses and swete spices. The swyne had rather haue myre, than precious stones. Therfore who so euer doth openly dispise hollsome doctrine, beyng without all hope of anye good fruyt: ye ought not to put into thē the secretes of the heuēly doctrine, lest by occasion they may be prouoked to be worse, than euer they were before: & lest the same chaunce by them, which should happē yt a man should cast margarites to swyne, or holy thinges to dogges. For dogges wyl not onely vnreuerently vse the holy thing, but also beyng prouoked if they be cast at, wyll run vpon you, and teare you with theyr teethe. And the swyne will treade with theyr feete the precious stones like rubbel & rubbish. So the dogge is not the holyer for the holy thyng, but doth prophane & defyle the holy thing: and the swyne is not the trymmer for the precious stones, but doth defile ꝑ purenes of thē. Likewisemē of desperat malice, do skorne the holy doctrine as a folishe thyng, when they knowe it, and do falsely reproue it as a wycked thyng: & do trouble and put thē to busines, which do teache it. Wherfore the wysdome of the gospel must be communicated and deliuered vnto them, that be desirouse of it, or at the least to such as be curable. All thinges must not furth with be cõmitted to al men, but as euery man showeth a proke of his towardnes and prokytyng: so certeyn secretes must be opened vnto him.

The texte. ¶ Aske and it shall be geuen you: seke and ye shall synde: knocke and it shalbe opened vnto you. For whosoeuer asketh, receiueth, and whosoeuer seketh, findeth: & to him that knocketh it shal be opened. Is ther any mã emong you which yf his sonne asketh breade, wyl geue him a stone? or if he aske fysh, wyll he offer him a serpent? If ye than being euyl can geue your children good gyftes, how much more shal your father geue good thinges, yf ye aske of him.

Aske & it shall be geuen you. These excellent iuelles lyke as ye ought not to cõmunicat thẽ to al men: so they cum not from god ỹ father to suche as be sluggishe & ydell. He geueth these thynges but vnto suche as gredely craue them: he denyeth not these thinges to them that seke thẽ diligently: he restreyngneth not frõ this treasure, them that knocke importunatly. Aske therfore of the father not gẽmes or golde, but these true and inestimable riches of the minde: aske I saye, and ye shall haue your askyng. Seeke and ye shall finde, knocke and it shal be opened vnto you. Your father is riche and bounteful, he denieth none, he enuieth none hys riches, but he wyll haue theyr pryce and value knowen. But he doth not knowe the price of them, which desireth faintly.

Who so euer seketh, findeth. Therfore whoso doeth aske as he ought, he receyueth: who so seeketh gredely, he fyndeth: who so knocketh at the doore instantlye, to him it shall be opened. It is he that asketh well, whyche asketh holsome thynges, and whiche asketh with a sure trust: he seketh well, whyche seeketh with continuall desire: he knocketh well, whyche dothe prouoke and moue goddes goodnes with good workes.

And in case ye receyue not furthwith that ye aske, yet distrust not ỹ bountifulnes and liberalitie of youre father. For he wyll geue whan nede shall require, and asmuche as shallbe nedefull, yf ye perseuer and continue. For god is as sone entreated of his chyldrẽ, as man beyng a father is intreated of his children. For what father is there emonge you so vnkynde that yf his sonne require a profitable thing as is breade, wyl he not geue him that he requireth: but for breade wyll he gyue hym stones? Or yf he aske hym fyshe for to eate, wyll he geue hym a serpent in stede of fyshe? Truely he would denye it, yf his sonne should aske him a stone, or a serpẽt, or some other noysome thyng. Ye therfore which be naturally geuen to yll, and also in other thinges yl for the most part, yet in this behalfe, not by vertue, but through the instigatiõ of nature, ye kepe this honest and natural affectiõ, that ye can geue profytable thinges vnto your chyldren: How much more than wyll your heauenly father beyng naturally good, do the same? wyll not he geue vnto you his chyldrẽ, his good thynges, yf ye stryue & call vpõ with feruent and continuall desires, his bountefull goodnes?

Is there any e man amonge you, whiche yf his sonne aske bread wil geue hym a stone?

If ye than beynge yll, can geue your children good gyftes.

The texte. ¶ Therfore whatsoeuer ye wyl that men shulde do to you, do ye the lyke to thẽ also: For this is the lawe and the prophtes.

And as touching the lyfe of man whiche is hurte or holpen wyth mutuall gentylnes and iniuries of bothe sydes, because it were to longe to geue preceptes and lessons of them seuerally, I wyll geue you a generall rule, which is naturally planted & graued in al menne. Euery man wel aduysed wylleth well to himselfe: but the common sorte of men so loue them selfes, that they wyl prouyde for theyr own cõmoditie to other mẽes hurt & hinderance. But ye must not do the lyke: but as ye woulde wyshe others to be towardes you: euen so be ye towarde others. Euerye man that is in ignoraunce desyreth to be taught: euery mã that doth amysse, desyreth louyngly and secretly to be monyshed, rather than to be openly blamed: euery mã that is nedy, would gladly haue ayde & succoure: no man would be backbyted, nor slaundered, nor hyndered of hys good name. Therfore of thys common wit and vnderstandyng, which is geuen to all men, let euery man take counsel of hym selfe, how he should vse him selfe towardes his neighboure. Let him not do to another that which he would not should be dõne to hymselfe: and that he desyreth to be done to hymselfe, let hym do to another. This is the very bryfe and sum of all thynges, whiche are taught by the law & prophethes: The which yf a man for lacke of leysure or for lacke of staydfulnes can not turne ouer and reade, trulie euery man hath a rule at home in himselfe, by the whiche he maye direct and ordre his actes & dedes so that he desyre rather to folowe ryght reason, than lustes and desyres.

For this is the lawe, and the Prophetes.

¶ Entre in at the strayte gate: For wyd is the gate, and brod is the way, that ledeth to destruction: And many there be which go in therat. But strayte is the gate, & narrow is the waye, which leadeth vnto lyfe, and fewe there be that fynde it.

The texte.

If these thinges seme harde vnto them that loue this worlde, yf ye se the moste part of men folowe the contrary, yet let nothyng trouble your myndes. The better the thinges be, the harder is the way to them. Consider ye rather whither this waie doth leade, than the easy entrye into it. Let it be, there be two gates, the one a narrowe gate, where no man can enter but by a strayte and a narrowe waye, but this gate leadeth by & by to euerlasting lyfe: And another gate large & brode, where al men may enter by a brod & a playne waye, but it leadeth by and by, to euerlastyng destruction. Enter ye therfore by the narrowe gate, and desyre rather to go to euerlastyng lyfe wyth a fewe, than to euerlastyng perdition wyth many. For the large waye restrayneth no man wyth the lawes of godlynes: and fawneth vpon men with those thynges which delight the senses of the body, and do please the lustes of the mynde: and therefore it doeth allure manye vnto it, and within short time it sendeth them so intised, throughe the large gate into miseries, that cannot be tolde, and delyuereth them beynge deceyued with false goodnes, vnto extreme and verye ylles. Howe narrowe is the gate, how streyght is the waye that ledeth to lyfe: For it sheweth furth nothynge that is pleasaunt to the flesshe: it is roughe, and displeasaunte to many, and furthwith it doth offer vnto them, thynges that be paynfull to nature: as pouertie, fastyng, watchynge, sufferyng of wronges, chastitie, sobernes. This gate receiueth not thẽ that swel with glory of this worlde, this gate receyueth not thẽ, that be puft vp with pryde, this gate receyueth not them that be bollen with excesse and riot: this gate receyueth not them, that be ladẽ with the burdẽ of ryches: Finally this gate receyueth not thẽ, that drawe with them other abundaunce of worldly thinges. It receiueth none, but such as be naked & vnburdened of all the desyres of this world, and as a man would say, their bodies beyng put of, extenuated and fined into the spirite. Whereby it commeth to passe, that this gate is found but of a few, because it is not spied but with cleare eyes, which do clearely see

Wyde is the gate and brode is the wai that leadeth to destruction.

Streight is the gate, & narrow is the wai which leadeth vnto lyfe.

And few there be that finde it.

¶ Beware of false prophetes which cum vnto you in shepes clothyng: but inwardly they be rauenyng wolues. Ye shal know them by theyr fruytes. Do men gather grapes of thornes, or figges of thistles? so euery good tree bereth good fruites, but a rotten tree beareth yl fruites: a good tree can not beare yl fruytes, neyther can a rotten tree beare good fruytes. Euery tree that beareth not good fruytes, is hewen downe and cast into the fyer. Therfore by theyr fruytes ye shal know them.

But as touchyng such men, as do dayly with lust, excesse, pryde, auarice, and wyth suche other fylthy desyres, and laughynge lyke mad men, go hedlyng into theyr owne destruction, ye be in no peryll of those men: for in folowyng of them it is rather madnes, than erroure. Ye must rather beware of them whyche companye with you hauyng a cloke of godlynes, where as they be ennemyes of godlines. They be alwayes talkyng of god the father, of the euangelical doctrine, of the kyngdom of heauē, theyr apparell is course and simple, theyr chekes be leane with fastynge: theyr bodye is worne awaye with leanesse, they praye long, they geue to the poore, they teache the people, and expounde the holy scriptures: and beynge disguised with the cloke of these thynges, they cum vnto you apparelled as though it were with a shepe skynne, where as inwardely they be rauenyng wolues, and deuourers of the euangelycall flocke. It can not be hard to knowe the wolfe from the shepe, yf eche of them vtter his owne voyce, and yf eche of them be couered with his owne skinne. But what shal a man do, where as the wolfe counterfeytyng the shepe both with the shepes skynne, and the shepes voyce, crepeth into the shepe fold, not to becum a shepe, but more cruelly to rent and teare the shepe? The wolfe chaungeth his voice & professeth the name of Christ, he professeth the doctrine of the gospell, but to the intent he maye poyson with hys herelye, them that be vnwares and negligent. He counterfeyteth godly workes, to thintent he may the rather abuse the simplicitie of other to his desires. Therfore ye whome I haue chosen to be the kepers and feders of my flocke, must diligētly take heede of these. Ye shall easelye fynde out this counterfeyted iugglyng, yf ye loke narrowly vpon, not the tytle and vesture, but the very deades whiche do disclose the corrupt mynde. For albeit they teache well, yet they do not in dede the thing that they teache. Euery tree hath hys peculiar and proper fruite, whiche by the taste doth declare the stocke. If ye obserue and marke diligentlye theyr lyfe and manners, ye shall fynde that they stande in theyr owne concept: they loke for theyr owne profyt, proude, reuengers, enuiouse, backebiters, desyryng of glory, geuen to the belly, and alwayes more diligent in theyr owne matters, than in the matters of theyr flocke, or the gospel. I haue shewed you which be the fruytes of the euangelicall tree, that is to saye, a mynde farre from al pride, full of gentylnes, and not desyrous of vengeaunce, a mynde dyspysyng all pleasures of this world, a mynde despysynge ryches, and gredelye desyrynge the godlynes of the gospel, a mynde prompt and redy to do good to all men, a mynde pure and cleane from all lustes and desyres, nor hauynge no nother eye but to God onely, a mynde refusyng no affliction or trouble so that he maye promote and set forwarde the doctrine of the gospell, a mynde lokynge after no rewarde in this worlde for his wel doynges, neyther glory, nor pleasure, nor riches, a mynde that wylleth well euen vnto his yll wyllers, & doeth good to them whiche do him hurt. Whosoeuer truelye in dede bryngeth furthe these fruites, he is the euangelicall tree. Therfore they that shewe them selues to be prophetes, and boaste them selues of this title, they that feyne them selues by religyouse apparell to be shepe, where as in harte and affection they be wolues, they must be estemed and iudged of these fruites. Regarde not the boughes and the barke. These oftētymes be cōmon to thē that growe in the fielde and them that growe at home, to the holsome and vnholsome: the fruite once tasted doth declare the iuyce of the tree. And yf ye se in these, auarice, arrogancy, enuy, desire of vengeaunce, dissemblinge, and suche other, whiche are cleane contrary to the fruites of the euangelicall mindes: thinke not that any good frute wyll spring of the same trees. For what man is so mad to gather grapes of thornes, or fygges of brambles: that is to saye, of rough and wylde shrubbes, most plesante fruite? Lykewyse it is emong men. A very good tree, and bearing gentill iuyce in the roote of the mynde, bryngeth furth good fruite. On the other syde a very ill tree, what leaues and barke so euer it hath, yet it bringeth furth yll fruites. And these can not be turned nor chaunged, seyng their nature is vtterly repugnant. For he that hath a cleane and a sincere minde, must nedes expresse in deades, the sincerenes of his hearte and affection: and agayne, he that hath a faultie and an infected mynde, can not expresse in dedes, those thynges whiche declare a very good man.

Do menne gather grapes of thornes, or fygges of thystles?

A good tree can not beare yll fruytes.

Although by the iuglynges and coloure of holynes, sumtyme he deceyueth vnware men, truely he can not deceyue god: Therfore they that be colourably good, let them leaue of theyr coloure, and become good in dede.

For emong men, of an yll tree, maye be made a good. But yf he continue in his frowarde counterfeytynge, let hym feare, leaste he suffer the lyke of god, that wyl reuenge it, that the vnfruytefull tree suffereth of the tyllman. And what doth it suffer? It is cut downe & cast in the fier. So, whosoeuer beyng in the kyngdome of god bryngeth furth no fruite, or suche fruite as is vncomlye for his profession, vnlesse he repente, he shall be cast into the euerlastyng fier. Therfore by this token, ye shal knowe them, ỹ is to say of the fruites, which yf ye finde in them to be euyll, ye shal remoue them from the cure of the flocke: and shall not receyue them into the kingdome of heauen, nor count thē for Christians, but for ennemyes: not to thintēt to hurte them, but to beware leaste they hurte the flocke, beyng myngled among thē. For there is nothyng more daungerouse than vngodlynes, yf it getteth faith and authoritie, thorough the false coloure of holynes.

Euery tree ỹ beareth not good fruyte, is hewen downe, and caste into the fier.

Therfore by their fruites ye shall knowe them.

Many wil say to me on that day: Lorde, lord, haue we not prophecyed in thy name? and haue we not caste out deuils in thy name? and done many miracles in thy name? and than wyll I confesse vnto them, I neuer knewe you, departe from me ye that worke iniuiqtie.

All they that professe me onely with wordes, shall not be counted worthy the kingdome of heauen, for it is not the title ỹ maketh the Christian man, but the lyke. And I wyll not furth with knowledge them for my disciples, which say vnto me religiously, lorde, lord, when in dede they serue diuerse other lordes: that is to saye, Mammon and riches, the belly and ambition. father whiche is in heauen, whose wyll I preache vnto you. For whatsoeuer I teache you, it commeth from hym. And truely my name shal nothing profite them whyche lacke my spirite and workes, specially in that day whā rewardes shall be appointed accordyng vnto euery mannes desertes, not by mannes iudgemente, whiche oftentymes dothe fayle, but by the iudgement of god: and ꝑ shepe shalbe secluded frō the gotes: so that those thinges shal not profite them, whiche now seme amongest men a certaine godly thyng, and passynge the doynges of man. For than when they shal see euerlastinge lyfe prepared for them, whiche folowynge the doctryne of the gospell, haue declared them selues to be my true disciples: and againe whē they shall see euerlastyng punyshmēt prepared for them, that shal be remoued from the companye of the godly, many beynge sore afeerde shal come & desire now to be knowen of god, where as they haue counterfeyted before mē the chiefe and most excellēt disciples of Christ & preachers of the gospel, and they shal say vnto me, lord knowest thou not vs thy seruaūtes? Haue not we prophecyed in thy name? haue not we chased awaye diuels in thy name? haue we not reised vp deade mē in thy name? haue we not put away poysons & diseases in thy name? haue we not wroughte other wonders in thy name? and by these dedes glorified thy name? we haue declared vs to be thyne by so many argumētes and tokens, & now doest thou not knowe vs? Thā shal they heare this answere of me. Truely I neuer knew you, no not thā when ye dyd these thinges. I hearde you saye lorde lorde, but I neuer perceyued in you the hearte of faythfull seruauntes.

Many wyll saye vnto me on that daye, Lorde lorde, haue we not prophecyed in thy name.

And than wyll I confesse vnto them: I neuer knewe you.

I heare much spekyng of my name, but I neuer felt my spirite in you, I heare of myracles whiche were done in my name, but I heare not of those speciall fruites, by the which the true disciple of Christ is knowen. Wherfore seyng that than, when ye dyd set furth your selues amongest men in my name, ye were not myne in dede, but vnder the coloure of my profession ye serued the dyuell, departe nowe awaye from me, and go vnto hym whose spirit ye haue receiued, & whose wil ye dyd obey. What title or name soeuer they haue, yf they worke vnrighteousenes, they shall not be partakers of my kyngdome.

Departe from me ye ꝑ worke iniquitie.

The texte. Euery one therfore that heareth these wordes of me, & doeth the same, I wyl lyke hym to a wyse man, which buylt his house vpō a rocke, & a shower of rayne fel, and the floudes came, & the windes blew, and bette vpon the house, and it was not ouerthrowē, because it was grounded vpō the rocke. And euery one ꝑ heareth of me these wordes, & doth them not, shall be likened vnto a foliche man, which built his house vpō sande: and a shower of rayne fell, & the floudes came, and ꝑ windes blewe, and bette vpon the house, and it was hurled downe, and the fall of it was great.

But lyke as the fruyte of the tree can haue no good taste, vnlesse the roote haue a good iuyce: So the buyldynge, be it neuer so gorgiouse, hyghe, and galaunte outwardelye, shall not be sure, vnlesse it be stayed vpon a sure and sounde foundaciō. He that hath my spirite, that is to saye a sincere affection regardynge noughte elles but the glorye of god, he is a tree of a good roote: So he that stayeth not vpon the vayne thynges of this worlde, but vpon the true good thynges of the mynde, and dothe continue constantly in the same: he very polytykelye buyldeth the buyldynge that neuer shall fall. Therfore whosoeuer heareth my wordes, and not heareth onely, but reposeth them inwardely in his harte, to thyntente

he maye expresse in hys deades that, that he hath lerned: I saye that he is lyke a man both wyse and polytike, who to thintent he maye buylde a sounde and a sure buyldynge, firste of all he deuiseth and lokethe for a sounde and a suer foundacion, where vpon he maye set hys buyldinge to endure againste all tempestes of wethers. For in a calme wether euery buyldynge standeth sakelye, but the wynter proueth the soundnes of the buyldynge. Sometyme aboundaunce of rayne fallethe downe and beateth vpon it: Sometyme the fluddes increased with rayne, all to shake it with great violence: Sometime the hurlinge of wyndes beateth against it, and beynge beaten and layde at by so many wayes, it standeth styll and moueth not. Why so? Because it standeth vpon a sure foundacyon.

I wyll lyken hym to a wyse man, whyche buylte hys house vpon a rocke.

And a shower of rayne fell

Because it was grounded vpon ỳ rocke.

The buylder dyd forsee all these thynges, and therfore he set it vpon a sounde rocke, thorowghe whose ayde it neded nothynge to feare all those assaultes. Agayne whosoeuer heareth my wordes, and heareth thē onely, and doth not repose them in hys harte, nor expresse them in hys dedes, is lyke vnto the retcheleße buylder, who not forseynge the stormes and tempestes, setteth hys buyldynge, vpon the sande, whyche is a foundacion euer fletyng and faylynge and nothynge truste. Afterwardes falleth aboundaunce of rayne, the violence of ryuers runnethe vpon it, the storme of wyndes rūneth agaynst it, and the house is leused and plucked vp from the foundacyon, and falleth downe with a great crashe. Why so? Because the buyldynge was goodly and gaye to see to, but it stode vpon an vnprofittable foundacion. Therfore your principal chiefe care and consideracion muste be of youre foundacion, fastyng, almesse, prayer, symple apparell: Finally miracles be lyke a gaye buyldynge. But yf the mynde of him that doth thē, loke after vaine praise of mē, after lucre, or after pleasure, all shall fall when the sore storme of temptacion draweth nere. But whose affection and desire is surely fastened in the doctrine and promyses of the gospell, lokynge for the rewarde of his well doinges of god onely, he shall be able to stande agaynste all displeasures and iniuries, agaynst the cruel persecutions of the wicked, against the crafty assaultes of heretikes: Fynally agaynst al the engyns of Sathan, and against deathe it selfe shal he be hable to stande styffely, without discouragement, vntyl that day whē that Perseueraunce the conqueroure of all euels, shal receyue her crowne.

And euery one that heareth of me these wordes and doth them not, shall be lykened vnto a folyshe man, whyche buylte hys house vpō sande:

And it was hurled downe and the fal of it was greate.

¶ And it came to passe that whan Jesus had ended these sayinges, the people were astonyed at hys doctrine. For he taught thē as hauynge power, & not as ỳ Scribes.

The texte.

Whan Jesus had ended these sayinges, the multitude mused muche at thys newe trade of doctrine. For they heard no suche thyng of the Scribes or Phariſes, whiche yf they added any thynge vnto Moyses law to bryng them selfe in estimation with the people, they vsed to bringe furth certaine weryshe constitutions, of washyng their handes before meate, of washing the body, yf any came home from market, of washing of cuppes, of paying of tythes, that came of myntes and of rue. Jesus taught no such thing, but where as he set furth by miracles what he coulde do in dedes, he declared hymself to be the same in doctrine, forbydding with authoritie that whiche the lawe fauourablye dyd suffer, and requiringe that, whiche the lawe dyd not require. The lawe suffered diuorse for euery cause: Jesus forbad al diuorces vnlesse it were for aduoutry. The lawe forbode nothing but to kil:

For he taught them as hauyng power.

Jesus

Jesus required ꝑ we should not be angry with our brethrē, & declared euidently ꝑ he was not onely the interpreter, but the lord of the lawe also: not the minister, but the author. Finally a certain lyuelines of his perfecte doctrine, & a certayn natural strength of truthe, touched & inspired the simple multitude which was desyrouse to learne, and neuer had experience of the lyke in their Scribes and Phariſes.

And not as the Scribes.

The. viii. Chapter.

The texte.

¶ And whan he was cum downe frō the mountayn, much people folowed hym: And beholde ther came a lepre, & worshypped hym, saying: Lorde yf thou wylte, thou maiest make me cleane. And Jesus put furth his hād, & touched him saying, I wyl, be ꝑ cleane. And furthwith his leprosy, was clēsed. And Jesus saieth vnto him: See thou tell no man, but go & shew thy selfe to the priest, and offer the gift, that Moyses commaunded to be offered for a wytnes vnto theim.

Therfore whā Jesus had spoken these weyghty & high thinges in ꝑ mounte, not to euery man, but chiefly to his disciples, and to suche as were able to folowe them with cherefulnes of the spirite: he doth abase hymselfe agayne to the humilitie and lownes of the cōmon sorte, whiche had many vnweldy, weake, lame, and sycke, whome he thought to allure to the desire of heauenly thynges, through corporall benefytes. And in healynge of them he dyd the same by significacyon, whiche he dyd by his doctrine in healynge the dyseases of the mynde.

Eyther of these thinges gaue credite and aucthoritie to other. We beleue hym the more willingly, whome we loue, & loue is wunne by benefites. And his saying weyeth well with vs, whome we see & perceyue to be so myghtye in dedes. Therfore when Jesus left the hyll and came into the playne, diuerse companyes of mē drew vnto hym on euery syde, to thintent ꝑ many might beare witnesse of the miracles that he should do. Wherfore a great numbre beyng gathered together, behold: there cummeth furth a certayne man geuynge occasion of a miracle, & teaching them withal as by a figure, from whence and by what kaythe, they that were dyseased with the lepry of the soule, should seke remedy. For there came furth a certayne man hauing his body infected with ꝑ lepry. This disease emong the Jewes was counted muche abhominable, and is thoughte to be suche, that no phisicion can heale it. The iudgement of this disease as of a sacrate thinge, was appointed vnto the priestes, whiche searched out by meruaylouse and diuerse obseruations, whether the bodye of anye man were infected with the verye lepry or not. It was not lefull for thē that were iudged to haue this disease, to cum in the companye of men, neyther was it lefull to touche the bodye whiche was defyled with this disease. This man therfore iudged of the priestes & beynge fowle with the very lepry, durst yet cum to Jesus, which is the purifier and clenser of all. The desyre of health toke awaye shamefastnes, the approued goodnes of Jesus towardes al mē made hym bolde. So many examples of other, which returned home beyng made hole, made him to trust wel. Therfore whē he kel downe before Jesus and worshipped hym, he saide: Lorde if thou wilt, ꝑ mayest clense me. What wold a proude phariſe or one of Moyses priestes haue done in this case: he wold haue abhorred the vncleane and fylthy man, and wouldē haue dysdayned to haue talked wt him. But Jesus playeng the parte of a good shepeherde, hauing delighte in the mans fayth, whiche was ioyned with so greate modesty and coldenes, which also durst not desire to be clensed, vnlesse it myght stand w the pleasure of hym, who knoweth what is meete for euery man: But yet he doubted not but ꝑ he was able yf he wolde, Jesus (I say) refused not the vncleane man, but reched out his hande and touched hym. And here he dyd neglecte the lawe, as touchynge the letter. And spake suche wordes wherby he declared bothe the goodnes of hys wyll, and the greatenes of hys power. Because (ꝙ he) thou doeste beleue that I can yf I wyll, I wyll: Be thou hoole. And as soone as he had spoken, the lepryne was chaunged, and the disease left hym, the people beyng wytnes of the same.

Muche people folowed hym.

And beholde there came a lepre and worshypped hym.

And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched hym, sayinge I wyll thou be cleane.

And forth with hys lepro sye was clensed.

After this to the intente the myracle myght the better be beleued, and also the priestes haue no occasyon of reproke to reproue or miscõstrue that he shoulde take vpon hym auctoritie to iudge of the lepry e, and to plucke vnto hym the lucre, and gayne which was wont to cum vnto them of such as was clensed of lepry e, he sayeth vnto hym: See thou tell no man that thou arte purged of the lepry. For it is not thy parte to iudge of thy selfe, and I take not vpon me the office of the priestes.

But go and shew thy selfe to the priestes.

Therfore first of all go vnto the priest and showe thy selfe vnto hym, & yf he declare the to be cleane, which heretofore hath declared the to be leprose, then shalt thou offer the gifte whyche Moyses commaunded to be offered of them, who chaunced to be clensed of the lepry e: least afterward they laye vnto thy charge, and blame the which cameste amonge the multitude: & me also whiche could not geue perfect health. For the gifte whiche they receiue as of the pure and cleane, shall reproue them yf hereafter for hatred of me, they begyn falsely to blame that, that is done. For yf thou wer not leprouse before, why dyd they remoue the from the congregacion? If thou be not nowe cleane, why haue they receyued of the thy gyfte, as of hym that was purged and clensed? Jesus wolde that the people should testify how much profyte the Leaper had by his fayth, and howe lyghtly with a worde he toke awaye all hys disease, to thintente they myght geue eare vnto hys doctrine with the same fayth, whereby they myght be healed of the dyseases of the mynde.

And offer the gyfte ꝑ Moyses commaunded to be offered.

¶ And whan Jesus was entred into Capernaum, ther came vnto hym a Captayne and besought hym, sayinge: Lorde my seruaũt lieth at home sycke of the Palsey, and is sore vexed. And Jesus sayth vnto hym: whan I come I wyl heale him. And ꝑ captaine aunswered, and saied: Lorde I am not worthy that thou shouldest cum into my house but onely speke the worde, & my seruaunt shalbe healed. For I also my selfe, am a man vnder the auctoritie of another, & haue souldiers vnder me, and I say vnto this man, go, & he goeth, and to another cum, and he cummeth, and to my seruaũte do this, and he doth it. Whan Jesus hearde these wordes, he merualled, and said to them that followed hym: Verely I saye vnto you, I haue not foũd so great fayth in Israel. And I saye vnto you ꝑ many shall cum from the East and weste, and shall sit with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaue. But the childre of the kyngdom shalbe cast out into the vtter darkenes: there shalbe weppynge and gnasshynge of teethe. And Jesus sayde vnto the Captayne: go thy way, & as thou beleuest so be it vnto the. And his seruaunt was healed in the same houre.

Therfore after that he had taughte the Jewes by this fact and dede, that the waye vnto health was easy by the sincerenes of faith: So forthwith he teacheth in the captain of an hũdred me, that the way vnto health, not was stopped frõ the Gentiles, so that they haue fayth mete and worthy for the gospell. For whan he was entred into Capernaū: which is a towne not farre from the poole of Genesereth in the borders of Zabulō & Nephtalim: There came vnto hym a certaine captayne, the whiche kynde of men, the Iewes abhorred for two causes. First because they be vncircumcysed for the most part, & alienes from Moyses lawe: Secondly because ꝑ kinde of life is defamed commonly. But the good Iesus which came to heale all men, turneth not hym awaye neither. The captayne maketh a request vnto hym, saying: Lorde I haue a seruaunt at home, whome I loue interely, for that he is faithfull & profitable in seruice: He now wholy vnprofitable, lieth vpon his bed, diseased with the palsey: and he is not onely vnprofytable vnto me, but also he is sore vexed with the rage of his disease, beyng nowe at deathes dore. And this kynde of disease, lyke as it is daungerouse and greuouse: so is it not lyghtlye cured by the arte of Phisicions.

There came vnto hym a captayne

Lorde my seruaunte lyeth at home sicke of the palsey.

And is sore vexed.

Iesus delightynge in the faythe of the man (which doubted not but that with a worde he was able to heale his seruaunt beynge absent) to thintente he might declare vnto all men, the faythe and trust of the man ioyned with greate humilitie of harte, aunswered: I wyll cum and I wyll heale hym.

And Iesus sayeth vnto hym: whan I cum I wyll heale hym.

Where vnto (quod the Cayptaine) Lorde: I am no Iewe, I am a captayne to be abhorred of the Iewes, for two causes, and therfore muche vnworthye, that thou shouldest enter into my howse, and be defyled wyth my companye. There is no nede of thy bodelye presence: Onelye saye the worde, and (suche is thy power and myghte) furthwith my seruaunte shall be healed. Thou haste aungels and messengers to whome thou mayeste commit suche busynes. I knowe by my selfe, I haue a ruler to whome I am subiecte. I am obediente to his commaundementes, neyther is it nedefull for hym to do all thynges. It is sufficient for hym to cōmyt hys matters with aucthoritie, Agayne I haue souldiers vnder my rule, by whom I do those thinges which be not mete for me. Onely I geue my cōmaūdemente, & they obey the same: I cōmaunde one to go some whyther, & he goeth. I commaunde another to cum, and he cummeth. Agayne vnto myne owne priuate seruaunte I saye, do this or do that, & he spedely doth what he is commaunded. If my seruauntes obeye me beynge a synner and an abiecte: how muche more ought youres to be obedient vnto your cōmaundementes? Iesus hearynge these thynges merueyled, not for that he was ignorant of mannes faythe, but because he woulde cause all men to meruayle at it, and turninge vnto the Iewes whiche folowed hym, and as it were castynge them in the tethe with their vnbelefe, sayde: Thys I assure you, hitherto haue I not founde so great faith in my people of Israell, as I haue founde in this straunger: whiche neyther knoweth the prophetes, neyther hath receyued my doctrine, nor hath sene my miracles.

For I also my selfe am a man vnder the authoritie of another. And haue souldyars vnder me.

And I saye vnto this man go, & he goeth.

And to my seruaunte do this, and he doeth it.

Whan Iesus heard these woordes, he marualled and sayde: &c.

I haue not found so great fayth in Israel.

Ye stande in youre owne concepte, because ye be the chyldren of the patryarches, whome god loued, because ye are the peculiare people of god to whome this health and saluation is promised. But this I assure you: the tyme shalbe, that many shall come on euery syde from the vttermost partes of the worlde, whome ye do lothe and abhorre as straungers and alyans, whyche shall enter in by fayth, and syt in the kyngdome of heauen wt Abraham, Isaac and Iacob: and youre fathers shall acknowledge them for their euangelicall fayth, as their lefull chyldren and shall take them to theyr table to be partakers of the euerlastyng felicitie. Contrary wyse the chyldren of the kyngdome, whiche touchyng the fleshlye kynred, commeth of the stocke of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, for theyr vnbeleke, shal not onely, not be receyued to that goodly and happye feast, but they shal be thrust out into the outwarde darkenes, because they woulde not se before the lyght that was offered them. There shall they be punysshed for theyr vnbeleke, wepyng and gnasshyng with tethe: hauyng intelligence nowe to late from what great felicitie they be falle by theyr owne malyce, and enuy shall make theyr sorowe the more, what tyme they shall se straungers and aliens to be receyued to the felicitie and honoure, whyche was promised vnto them.

But ꝑ chyldrē of ꝑ kingdome shall be cast out ꝛc.

There shall be wepyng and gnasshynge of tethe.

When Jesus had spoken these thynges vnto the Jewes, to the intente they shoulde geue the more credite vnto his saying throughe the miracle, turnyng vnto the captayne, sayth: Go thy way, and as thou hast beleued, so be it done vnto the: Clerelye declaryng that helth is not geuen, neyther to the stocke and kinred, neither to other merites, but to faith onely which he required, and founde lacke of, in most part of the Jewes. And as he sayde, so the thing folowed.

And Jesus sayde vnto the captayne: go thy waye and as thou beleuest, so be it vnto the.

For it was tried, that the selfe same time the Capitaynes seruaunte was sodeynlye delyuered from his disease, that no manne shoulde suspecte that it was done by chaunce, or by the helpe of Phisicions. For as no man is sodenly delyuered from the lepry after the course of nature: so the palsey forsaketh no man sodenly.

And hys seruaunte was healed in the same houre.

¶ And when Jesus was cum into Peters house, he saw his wyues mother lying in bed, and sycke of a feuer. And he touched her hand, and the feuer lefte her: and she arose, and ministered vnto them. Whan the euen drewe nere, they brought him many that were possessed with deuils: And he cast out the spirites ẅ a worde, & healed all ꝑ were sicke, that that might be fulfylled, which was spokē by Esaye the prophete, when he sayeth: he toke on him our infirmities, and bare our sycknes.

When he had showed furth these and certayne other myracles, he withdrew hymselfe for a tyme frome the multitude, and wente into a house that was common to Symon Peter and Andrewe his brother. There folowed on James and John. There he knewe that Peters mother in lawe hadde so great a feuer, that she kepte her bed: and he beyng desyred to heale her tarryed not but toke her by thande, and lyfte her vp, and furthwyth her whole feuer went awaye, lyuelines and cherefulnes returned, in so muche as she ministred and serued them of meate so clerelye was she delyuered from all grudgynge of the Ague. Truely no parte of the feuer remayned, where as they whiche be healed by the arte of phisicions be troubled long tyme after theyr disease with feblenes and lothsumnes. Nowe whan night drewe on, a great multitude cummeth thycke and swarmeth at the dores: lokyng that after his meate, he would returne agayne vnto his wel doing. As he came furthe, they offered vnto him a meruelouse numbre that were vexed wyth dyuerse diseases, and also demoniakes whyche were possessed with deuylles, he castyng out the spirites, and puttyng away the dyseases, healed them all: wherein also he did agreablye vnto his name. There was none so fowle and so horryble kynd of disease, whyche Jesus woulde lothe and turne awaye frome. There was none so vehement or incurable which furthwith at his commaundemente dyd not forsake the man.

Whan the euē drew nere they brought vnto him many that were possessed wyth deuils.

And healed all that wer sicke

With a worde he healed all, frely he healed all, doyng nowe the selfe same thyng in takyng awaye indyfferently the diseases of the bodyes, which he went aboute to do in takyng awaye synnes, whiche be the more ferse diseases of the myndes. Truly for this he came into the world: and this was it, that Esay prophecyed of him many yeares past: he toke our infirmities wyllyngly vpon him selfe, and he dyd beare our diseases.

That that myght be fulfylled whiche was spoken by Esaye the prophete.

¶ Whan Jesus sawe muche people about him, he cõmaunded that to go vnto the other sides of the water. And a certayne Scribe came, and sayde vnto him: Master I wyl folowe the whether soeuer thou goest. And Jesus sayth vnto him: the foxes haue holes: and the byrdes of the ayer haue nestes: but the sonne of man hathe not where to reste his head: And another of the number of his disciples, sayd vnto him: Mayster, suffer me fyrst to go & bury my father. But Jesus sayd vnto him: Folowe me, and let the dead bury the deade.

And a certaine Scribe came & sayd vnto him: Master I wyl folow the whether thou goest

And when Jesus sawe that the multitude woulde not departe, thoughe he had healed all the sycke and diseased, and though night were at hande for now ỹ sunne was gone to glade, but that they came thicke about him on euery syde more and more: he cõmaunded his disciples to prepare hym a shyp, to go ouer the water, that by that meanes he myghte be delyuered from the multitude. This once heard, certayne of them departed home. But a certayne importunate Scribe folowed Jesus vnto the water syde, desyryng to be receyued into the numbre of hys dysciples: whome he had seen so magnifyed of the people for his power in shewyng of miracles: not to thintent he would folowe his doctrine and lyfe, but that he might get him renoune and lucre of his miracles.

He therfore cumming vnto Jesus, sayd: Mayster I wyl folow the whether so euer thou goest. It was a worde mete for him that shoulde haue bene a disciple, if the worde and the harte had agreed. He put furthe hymselfe of his owne accorde, and offered himselfe vnto al thynges, nor made no pretense of tarrieng. But Jesus neyther repelled the mannes importunitie, neyther layed vnto his charge his corrupte mynde, but secretelye monyshed him that he was no mete disciple for him, nor himselfe likewise no mete mayster: for whosoeuer loketh after the cõmodities of this world, ioyneth himselfe vnto him but folyshly, whyche neyther had nor soughte for, neyther ryches nor glory, nor kyngdome in thys worlde: but imbraced extreme pouertie, ignominy and afflyction: in so muche as he had not those thinges whiche the byrdes and beastes lacketh not. The foxes (ỹ he) although they haue no houses, yet haue they holowe dennes to hyde them in. The byrdes fleyng and wauoring in the ayer, in the stede of howses haue nestes to rest them in. But the sonne of man is so destitute of all succoures of this world, that he hath no place to lay his haede in. Yf anye man desyer suche a Mayster, yf he wyll, lette hym folowe me: but wyth harte and affection, and not onelye wyth the steppes of the feete. So the Scribe knowyng his owne conscience, dyd forbeare to folowe hym.

And Jesus sayeth vnto him: the foxes haue holes.

And byrdes of the ayer haue nestes.

But the sonne of man hathe not wher to rest hys heade.

Agayne one of them which began to be in the numbre of his disciples, moued by frayltie and weakenes, when he heard of the extreme pouertie of Christe, seking an occasyon by sum coloure to slyppe awaye from the disciples of Jesus: lord (quod he) before I folowe the wholy, whether so euer thou goest, suffer me first to returne home and burye my father. The cause to the apperaunce semed godly, but Jesus wyllyng to teache that al thinges shoulde

And another of the number of his disciples sayd vnto him Master, suffer me first to go and burye my father.

ges should be set a part in the matter of euerlastyng health, and that herein all tarieng & lyngeryng is daungerouse: suffered not the yong man beyng of a good mynde, but yet feble and weake, to be intangled with busynes of testamentes of the dead, vnder the pretence of godlynes, and whiles he prouydeth for the vyle inheritaunce of the worlde, to fall frome the inheritaunce of heauen.

But Jesus sayd vnto him folowe me.

Naye quod he thou shalte nowe nothyng haue to do wyth thy deade father, which hast profest thy selfe to the heauenly lyfe, there wyl be ynow to burye thy father. Suffer the dead to burye theyr deade, and let them put them in the yearth, which loue yearthly thinges, let thē burye him whyche is dead in the yearth, which beyng a lyue be bothe dead and also buryed. They be alyue to men: they be dead to god.

And lette the deade burye theyr deade.

Be thou carefull to lyue, and departe from the companye of the dead, yf thou wylt lyue in dede.

And whan he entred into a shyppe, his disciples folowed him. And beholde there arose a greate tempest in the sea, in so much that the shyp was couered with waues, & he was aslepe, and his disciples came vnto him & waked him, saying: Lorde saue vs we perysshe, & he sayeth vnto thē, why are ye fearefull ye of lytell fayth? Than he arose, and rebuked the wyndes, & the sea, and there folowed a great caulme. And the men meruayled, saying: what maner of man is thys, þ both wyndes & sea obey him:

Therfore when Jesus had sent awaye the multitude, and was entred into the shyppe his disciples waytyng vpon him, as he rowed sodenly there rose a tempest, & the water was so moued, that the waues ouerwhelmed the ship. Jesus in the meane season slept vpon a pillowe, signifiyng as it were by a fygure, what peryll there is in thinges here in the worlde, as often as they slepe beyng delyghted with cōmodities and pleasures of this world, which haue taken vpon them to be in stede of Christ. But in these tēpestes & troubles the disciples do shewe where we should seke for succoure. For they beyng amased with feare, plucke at Christ, and wake him of his slepe Lord (q they) saue vs, we be lost. For yet they beleued he was but only mā and that they coulde not be safe, vnlesse that he were awake. Therfore Jesus minding to make thē bolde and without feare, & conquerours against al assaultes of the most sore and vehement troubles: rebukyng theyr great feare: Why feare ye (quod he) ye men of lytle fayth? Ye whiche haue sene so many miracles, and haue hearde my doctrine, ought to be put in feare with nothyng, as though the helpe of God woulde fayle you in any place, yf so be that fayth and trust neuer fayle you, which as yet I se not in you so much as ought to be. After that Jesus had thus monyshed hys disciples he rose & to thintent, to shewe himselfe the Lorde of all the elementes, he rebuked the wyndes, and the sea, and furthwyth the tempest ceased, and there folowed a meruelous calme, because it myghte the more appere, that it was done not by the strengthe of man, but by the power of God.

And his disciples came vnto him and waked him, saying: lorde saue vs.

And he sayth vnto thē why are ye fearfull ye of litle faith

Thā he arose and rebuked þ wyndes and the sea, and there folowed a great calme.

For there is nothyng more dysobedient or vnruly, than the sea once troubled, and yet at the Lordes commaundement, it was sodenly turned into a greate calme. Further the disciples and other which were in the shyppe, muche musyng at so merueylouse a matter, sayde: what myghtye man is this? for vtterly he semeth to be more than man, for not only diseases and deuils, but also wyndes & the sea obey his commaūdementes. And by this example, Jesus oure verye good lorde hath taught vs, that as oftē as the

¶ And whan he was cum to ỹ other side of the water, into the countrey of the Gergesites, there met him two possessed wyth deuyls, cummyng out of the graues, and they were out of measure fyerce, so that no man myght go by that way. And beholde they cried out, saying: O Jesu the sonne of God, what haue we to do with the? Arte thou cum hyther to tormẽt vs before our tyme? And there was a good way of from thẽ, an heard of many swyne feadyng. And the deuils besought him, saying: if thou cast vs oute, suffer vs to go in to the hearde of swyne. And he sayd to them: go youre waye, and they goyng out, went in to the hearde of swyne, and the whole hearde of swyne, was caried hedlyng into the sea, and perysshed in the waters. Than they that kept them, fled and went theyr wayes into the cytie, and tolde al thinges, and what had happened vnto the demoniakes. And behold the whole citie came furth to mete Jesus. And whan they saw him, they besought him to depart out of theyr coastes.

Therfore when Jesus had passed ouer the water, he came into the cũtrey of the Gergesites, and beholde there was offered a matter & an occasion of a greater wonder. There met him two mẽ, which of long time had ben possessed with the warst kynd of deuylles, which eyther wandereth in the wildernesse, or elles hid them selues in dead mennes graues, which were wont to be made and set vp by the hygh waye.

Theyr rage was so great, that no cheynes coulde holde them, but breaking all their bondes, ranne vpon the waye goers, so that no man coulde safely passe that waye: No man durst bringe them vnto Jesus, as I haue tolde you howe they dyd wt diuers other but the secrete myghte of Jesus drewe them against their willes. The wicked spirites were sore vexed, and could not abyde the diuine power, in so much that being giltie in them selues, they felte a certayne new & a secret tormẽt, yea before that Jesus spake vnto them, they feared lest the day were now at hande in the whiche they shoulde be sent into the dungeon of hel, there to be punished eternally, and not to be suffered hereafter to molest and trouble men. Therfore torment and feare forced them agaynst theyr wylles, to speake and to beare witnes of the diuine power in Christ. They cryed out therfore by the mowthes of the miserable men. Jesu, the sonne of God (qᵗ they) what haste thou to do with vs? Art thou cum hither to torment vs before oure tyme? we knowe what misery and wretchednes abydeth for vs accordynge to our merites, but suffre vs for a tyme. That day shal cum to vs to soone. We desyre delaye and not to be delyuered. Not farre from the place where these thinges were donne, there was an herde of hogges fedyng, than the deuilles feling them selues to be sore vexed, by the power of God, lest they shoulde departe without any hurt doing (so greate was theyr malice) they made thys petycion vnto Jesus: Yf in no case thou wylt suffer vs to dwell and abyde in this house, suffer vs at the lest, that we maye depart hence and enter in to the hogges, a beast bothe filthy and abhominable. As sone as Jesus had geuen thẽ this libertie, which thought it sufficient to prouide for the helth and saluation of man, the multitude of deuylles wente furthwith into the hearde of hogges. And beholde furthwith the whole hearde dryuen in to a fury, ranne downe hedlong from the hyll in to the water, & there perisshed in the water. This suffered Jesus both to showe the notable malice of the deuilles, and to geue occasion that this miracle myght be bruted abrode.

And they were oute of measure fierce.

And beholde they cried out.

Saying o Jesu the sonne of god what haue wr to do wt ỹ.

And ther was a good way of frome them an heard of many swine feading

And beholde ỹ whole hearde of swyne was

For

For the swyne heardes seing this horrible sight, ranne away for feare, and went in to the citie of Gadera, and tolde the citizins what they had seene, and what had happened to the Demoniakes nowe commonly knowen, to whome it chaunced to be healed, and what had happened to the hearde of hogges. The whole citte of the Gaderenes being amased at this tidinges, went furth to meete Jesus, fearyng lest he shoulde cumme to them. They sawe their hogges killed. They sawe two men that were naked, nowe appareled, they saw them healed of their frenesy and quiet out of theyr rage, insomuche that they sat at Jesus feete knowlegyng hym to be the author and cause of theyr helth. But because these Gaderenes were grosse & euill, they feared more the might of Jesus, than they loued his goodnes, & they regarded more the losse of theyr swyne, than the health of men. They went vnto Jesus and desired him to depart from theyr coastes: who if they had thoroughly knowen him, they woulde haue desyred hym instantly that he would haue vouched safe to cum in to the coastes of theyr cuntrey, to do ỹ same thing in their heartes, which he did in the two Demoniakes. For the hogges declare what was theyr lyke the whyche the deuills desired to possesse in the stede of men. Therfore Jesus taught them nothyng, content onely to put them in feare Notwithstandyng he hath taught vs, by thys example, that there is no pestilence, nor poysone of the mynde so sore, that we should despeyre of helth, yf we chaūce to cum to Jesus. For ther be certayne desires so vnbrideled, so vehement, & so wilde, that they dryue & force him that hath thē, vnto witche craft, mā slaughter, to slaughter of his dearest frendes, and to other wicked dedes not to be named, and sumtime they dryue him vnto suche madnes, that he kylleth himselfe. No meanes of mā can heale and helpe these thinges, onely Jesus can geue healthe, yf he wyl vouchesafe to cum vnto them. There is no despeyre, he wyll vouchesafe yf they agayne wyll cum to him.

carryed heds longe in to the sea.

Thē they that kept them fled and went their wayes into the cytie.

And behold the whole cytie came furth to meete Jesus.

And whan they sawe Jesus, they besoughte him to departe of of theyr coastes.

¶ And entering into a shippe he passed ouer, and came into his owne cytie. And beholde, they brought to him a man sicke of the palsey, lyeng in a bed. And whan Jesus saw the fayth of thē, he sayd vnto ỹ sicke of the palsey: sonne be of good chere, thy synnes be forgeuen the. And behold certayne of the scribes sayde wythin them selues: This mā blaspheneth. And whan Jesus sawe their thought he sayd: wher fore thincke ye euyl in your hartes. For whether is it easier to saye: thy synnes be forgeuen the, or to say, arise & walke: But that ye may know that the sonne of man hath power to forgeue sinnes in yerth: than sayth he to the sicke of ỹ palsey: arise, take vp thy bed and go home: and he arose & went home. But the people that sawe it, maruayled and glorifyed God who had geuen suche power vnto men.

IEsus therfore not minding to geue that that is holy vnto dogges, nor to cast pretiouse stones vnto swyne, entred in to the shippe, & went ouer the water agayne, returnyng in his cytie called Capernaū, for there he had a howse at that tyme. And whē he was entred into the house, many gathered about him, emong whō were also doctors of the lawe, that came frō Galile, Jewry, and Hierusalē, and as he sat, (Scribes & the doctors sytting by him) he taught them. And when there came aboute him so greate a number of men, that the howse was nowe to litill, nor the entree was not hable to receyue so greate a multitude, certayne there were, whiche brought vnto him a certayne man greued and vexed with so vehement a palsey, that he was carried of foure men bed and all, whiche was rather a karcas of a man, then a man. Who when they knewe that Jesus was within, and that they coulde not entre for the multitude, they clymed vp vpon the house top, and remouyng the tyles of the house, let downe by ropes through a hoole, the bed with the sycke man, before the feete of Jesus. Jesus not offended, nor greued with thisimportunitie of ỹ seruaũtes but rather allowing the feruency of their fayth, and albeit the fayth of the sicke man ought to be no lesse, whiche eyther commaunded that he should be let downe, or els willingly suffered it: turning vnto the man beddred, to thintent that he might cõmende his faythe verye muche to them that stode about: be of good courage my sonne (q he) thy synnes be forgeuẽ the, first deliuerynge that parte of the man from disease, frome whence the disease of the body came: and yet meruelouse gently he calleth hym sonne, beyng a man wretched and miserable bothe in bodye and soule, prpuely casting the Pharisei̇s and Scribes in the teeth with their pryde and arrogancy. The multitude keping silence & marueling, certaine of the Scribes whiche remembred ỹ god sayth in holy scripture: Jt is J that put away the synnes of men, where as in such a great resort of the fauorers of Jesus they durst not openly murmur againſt him, they spake secretly with them selues: this is a blasphemer of God, whiche beyng but man, taketh vpon him the power of God. But Jesus whiche had sumwhat declared his godly power vnto the Pharisei̇s in forgeuing of sinnes, declareth ỹ same also by a speciall signe, opening and showyng that it is not hyd from him, what euerye man doth thincke.

Therfore makyng answere vnto those thynges, whych they spake w̃ thẽ selues in theyr secret thought, sayeth: Why do ye enuye at well doynges thynkyng yll in your heartes? Suppose ye because the disease of ỹ minde is not seene with bodely eyes lyke as the healthe also: that J take vpon me vntruly, and promyse vnto other that J can not perfourme? But whether thynke ye more easy to saye to him that is in sinne, as J sayde euen nowe: thy sinnes be forgeuẽ the, or els to say vnto the man diseased with the palsey, whom ye see wholly bounde with diseases, aryse and walke.

Therfore to thintent that by the reason of thinges that ye see, ye may also beleue the thinges true that ye see not, & that bothe are indifferently easye to the sonne of man, with a worde to take away the disease, and to pardon the sinnes, J wyll geue you a signe and a token manifest and open to euery mannes sense and vnderstandyng. And in case ye shall see these wordes whiche J shall speake nowe not to be vayne, but to haue theyr present efficacie and strength, doubte not but that the sonne of man hath power in yearth, to forgeue sinnes, and that not by sacrifices, or by holocaustes, but by simple and playne word. And therwith turnyng to the diseased of the palsey, sayed. Aryse, take vp thy couche and departe into thy howse, that they whiche haue knowen the sicke, and dispayred of thy healthe, maye see and perceyue that thou arte sodaynlye made whole and strong, in so muche that thou art not only hable to go vpon thy feete, which a lytle before wast borne of .iiii. porters, but also the course of thynges nowe chaunged, thou art hable to beare thy bed, whiche hytherto hath borne the.

They brought vnto him a mã sicke of the palsey.

And when Jesus sawe the faithe of them.

Sonne be of good chere.

And beholde certayne of ỹ scribes said with in them selues This man blasphemethe.

And when Jesus sawe theyr thoughtes, he sayde: Wherefore thinke ye euyl in your hertes.

Whether is it easyer to saye thy synnes. &c.

Aryse, take vp thy bed, and go home.

And

And furthwith as he spake, the thyng came to passe, the diseased of the palsay ryseth vp, & laying the bed vpō his shoulders, departeth into his house after an other maner of fashyon and pompe, than he was caryed out a lytle before. When the multitude sawe this euident and manyfest myracle, & playnely perceyued that it was a thyng not of the power of mā, but of god they glorykied god whiche gaue suche power vnto men in yearth, sayinge that they neuer sawe suche a thynge done of them, whyche are counted the chyefe and the moste excellente men emong the Jewes. But the Scribes were so put to silence, that they were the more styrred and exasperate with enuye, because they sought more theyr owne glory than the glory of God: by the whiche increasyng and shynyng furth dayly thorough Jesus, they sawe them selues to be diminished & darkened. For lyke as the sūne darkeneth the candle: so the glory of god darkeneth and causeth to vanish away the vayne glory of men. But the enuy of these men profyted to none other ende, but thorough resistaunce, to make the glory of Chryste more manifest and notable. For god can vse the malice of men, vnto his glory & renoune. Therfore Jesus to geue place to the enuy of the Scribes, departed thence, and returned vnto the meere and poole, wher he taught the multitude gatheryng about on euery syde.

But the people that sawe it meruayled.

¶ And as Jesus passed furth from thence, he sawe a man named Mathewe, syttyng at the receyte of custome, and he sayeth vnto him: Folow me. And he arose and followed him. And it came to passe as Jesus sat at meat in his house, behold many publicanes also, and sinners that came, sat downe with Jesus and his disciples. And whā the pharises saw it, they sayd vnto his disciples: Why eateth your master with publicanes and sinners? But whan Jesus heard that, he sayde vnto them: They that be strong, nede not the physicion, but they that are sicke. Go ye rather and learne what that meaneth: I wyl haue mercy, & not sacrifice. For I am not cum to call the righteous, but sinners to repentaunce.

Further as he passed by ỹ custome house (he espyed sitting there, a certain Publicane called Mathew, whiche also was named Leuy the sōne of Alpheus. And this kinde of men because of their filthy gayne and greate extorcion, be defamed and slaundered many wayes, especially emonge the Jewes. But Jesus which heretofore called vnto hym. Simon & Andrewe John and James, from an hombly and a meane kind of gaine, but yet honest and lawfull, nowe to declare openly that he despyseth vtterly no kinde of men, so that they repent and turne them to the better: called vnto hym Mathewe, and commaunded him to folowe. He without any tarrying, leauing his accomptes vnperfect, leauing his lucre and gaine, beganne to folowe Jesus, and sodenly became of a Publicane, a disciple. For the voyce of Jesus had a certayne wonderfull effycacy & strength, and a certayne secret powere and maiestie shynynge in hys coūtenaunce, wherby whome he wolde, he allured & drewe vnto him, euē like as the stone called Magnes, draweth yron. After that Mathew desired Jesus, ỹ he wolde voucheſake to feast in his howse. Whiche thing Jesus did without anye gryfe, to teache his disciples that they should not forsake the cumpany of wicked mē, if ther be any hope that they wil be the better by their cumpany. Mathew of such thinges as he had than, made a bountefull & a great feast, vnto the whiche he brought many of his sorte of men, bothe Publicanes & sinners, whome by hys example and communication, he allured vnto admiration, and loue

And it came to passe that as Jesus sate at meate in hys house. Behold many Publycanes also and sinners ỹ came ſatte downe with Jeſus, & his diſciples. And whan the phariſees ſawe it, they ſayde vnto hys diſciples:

of Jeſus. Therfore when the Phariſeis ſawe Jeſus and hys diſcyples ſitting at meat with them, ſekynge for matter on euery ſyde of blame and reproke, they dare not ſpeake vnto hym, leſt they might heare that which they wolde not, they indeuour to withdrawe his diſciples from hym. Why (ſ they) doth youre maſter (whom ye folowe as one notably holy) feaſt with Publicanes and ſinners, whome we forbeare as fylthy and abhominable? But lyke do ſoone flocke with the like: and commonly we becum ſuche as they be, with whom we lyue. When that Jeſus hearde hys communicacyon, he taketh vpon hym to defende hys diſciples, beyng yet but weake: teachyng that the prechers of the goſpell be not defiled with the cumpany of ſinners, with whome they cūpany for no nother intente, but to allure them vnto goodnes. But the Phariſeis do ſhunne and flee from the Publicanes, whyche commonly be counted ſinners, not becauſe they woulde not be defiled with their ſinfulnes, but to thintent that they them ſelues being worſe than the Publicanes, may be counted holy amonge men: but they that be indued with the holynes of the goſpell, do not deſyre the cumpany of ſinners, to the intente that they wolde take any lucre or vauntage from them, but to enriche them with godlines, and they enter into their howſes for no nother purpoſe, than the good phiſicions entre in to theyr howſes of the ſicke men. For it becummeth a faithfull phiſicion, to be more often in no place, than among them whiche haue nede of thelpe of phiſicions. Therfore he turninge vnto the Phariſeis, whiche thought them ſelues iuſt men, where as in dede they were infected with muche worſe vice, ſaieth vnto them: I cumpany with the Publicanes and ſinners, becauſe I am the phiſicion of the ſoules, and thirſt for the helth of men. To what purpoſe is it to cumpany with the iuſt, as ye ſuppoſe your ſelues to be, ſith they nede no phiſicion? They nede a phiſicion that be ill at eaſe, and the phiſicion is profitable vnto thē, whiche knowlege their diſeaſe, & be willyng to be healed. Therfore to lothe and dyſpyſe them, it is no holynes but pryde: and to ſuccour them, it is a ſacrifice muche more acceptable to god, than any kynd of ſacrifice whiche is offered in the temple. Ye which knowe the ſcriptures, ought not to be ignorant in this, where god ſpeaketh thus: I wyll mercye rather than ſacrifice. Again in Eſai he refuſeth your offerynges, but the worke of mercy, he neuer refuſeth. If ye haue not yet marked this thynge, go and learne what this worde of God meaneth, & than yf ye thinke good, reproue my doyng, whiche is not contrary to youre lawe, but agreable to the wyll of God. And why ſhould I refuſe the company of ſinners, whych came pourpoſely to ſtyre and prouoke ſuche maner of men to repentaunce of their former lyfe? Many thynke them ſelues iuſt, yf I withdraw my ſelfe from them, they oughte not to be greued, for they haue no nede of my helpe: And it were a vayne thyng, and but a rebuke to call them to repentaunce, which haue nothing to repent. With this talkyng, Jeſus touched and in maner ſkorned tharrogant pryde of the Phariſeis, whiche thought them ſelues to be iuſt, and were not.

Why eateth youre maſter with Publycanes and ſinners?

Go ye rather & learne what that meaneth, I wyll haue mercy and not ſacrifice.

For I am not cum to call the ryghteous, but ſynners to repentaunce.

¶ Than came the diſciples of Johñ vnto him ſaying: why do we and the Phariſeis faſt for the moſt parte, but thy diſciples faſt not? And Jeſus ſayd vnto them, Can the brydegromes children mourne as long as the brydegrome is with thē? but the daies wyll cum, whan the brydegrome ſhal be taken from thē, and then ſhal they faſt. No man putteth a pece of new clothe in an olde garmēt. For than taketh he away a piece from the garmente, and the rent is made worse. Neither do men put newe wyne in to olde botelles, for then the botelles breake, and the wyne runneth out, and ỹ botelles perysh. But they put newe wyne in to newe botelles, and bothe are saued togyther.

After these thinges certaine disciples of John, whiche by the reason of a certayne carnal affection, dyd enuy Jesus, magnifying John their master, as one more excellent than Jesus, ioynyng them selues with the phariseis go vnto Jesus, and feare not falsely to blame hym to hys face, because he vsed his disciples ouer delicatly, & broughte thē not vp so hardly as John dyd his, whyche semed to promyse a more harde and straite discipline. The Pharises sought for a faine and an opinion of holynes emonge the people by two wayes chyefly: that is by fastyng and prayer. Wherfore they demaunde of Jesus, why do we the disciples of Jhon & the phariseis fast so often, & praye after the ordynaunce of our auncetries, whiche haue taught that prayer should be commended and set forthe by fastyng, and thy disciples vse not lyke fast: Unto this manifest and false reproffe, because it touched hym, and not hys disciples, Jesus answered verye gentelye, so that he neyther reproued the ordinaunce of Jhon, neyther playnly condemned the fastynges of other men. But onely showed that the gentelnes, whiche he vsed towardes his disciples, was not of negligence, but of policie, whereby he brought them by lytle & lytle to greater thynges: euen as when a wyse and skylful teacher of youth, doeth not furthwith feare ỹ tender age with harde thynges, but with inticementes allureth it to thynges of difficultie, and taketh occasion to answere, by ỹ reason of the witnes that John bare. For he testifying of Jesus before them, that thought ỹ John was Christ, he that hath a spouse (q̄ he) is a spouse, and his frend standeth by and reioyceth muche because he heareth the voyce of his spouse, meanyng Jesus to be the spouse whom the prophesie in the psalme dyd promyse shuld cum lyke a brydegrome out of his chaumbre: & he him selfe nothing els, but the frend of the spouse. Jesus therfore puttyng thē in remēbrañce of the saying of John sayeth: Can the chyldrē which be in the chambre of ỹ new spouse, wher as al thinges ought to be ioyful, be troubled & greued with the Jewishe & lowryng fast, chiefly seyng the spouse is present: Enuy thē not for this ioye whyche wyll not longe indure. Suffer them to be led with thys tendernes gentely and swetely vnto thynges of more perfectiō. Now they haue their spouse, and they be wholy set on hym, they haue no leysure nowe to fast: and they be so tender, that they cannot awaye with it. In the meane season they shall growe and were, and the time shal cum, when their spouse shall be taken from them, than they beyng stronger, shall not onely fast of their owne accorde, but also they shall be able to suffer sharper showers. The Jewes put the chefest poynte of their religion in often fastinges, and long praiers. These thinges as they be not to be reproued, yf they be not done for vayne glory but for godlines: so the doctrine of the gospel hath an eye & regarde vnto stronger thynges, and matter of more weight, vnto the which thinges I fraine and fashyon my scholers by litell and litell. Therfore my manner of teaching agreeth not with John. It is newe ỹ I teach, and my doctryne is new, and a new maner of teachyng is most seinely for a newe kynde of doctrine. It behoueth not a scholemaster to be ouer hasty: The thinge shal declare it selfe in time, whose scholers be better brought vp and taught. Olde thinges muste not be mengled with newe. For no man soweth a patche of newe and rawe cloth in an olde garment. For by this waye, the hole of the olde garmente is not onely not mended, but also the hole is made greater and more ill fauored, because the newe clothe agreeth not with tholde. And they that bee wyse and polytike men, put not newe wine in olde vesselles. For than a double inconuenyence foloweth, whilest both the wine runneth out, and the vesselles be broken and vtterly lost. But rather they put newe wyne in newe vesselles, whyche maye beare the strength of the wine, nor starte a sonder with the boyling and worckyng of the wyne. So bothe the vesselles be saued, and also the wine. I wyl my disciples to be all newe, and so I fashyon them for me by litill and litell, that in tyme to cum they maye be stronge and styffe to beare the myght of the doctrine euangelicall. John durst put no nother than olde wyne in olde vesselles, as fastynge and suche other, whyche be far from those thynges that men of the gospell must perfourme. I do not commit the swete wine of my doctrine but vnto new vesselles.

And Jesus saide vnto thē Can the brydegromes, &c.

But the dayes wyll cum whan the brydegrome shalbe taken from them.

Neyther do men put new wyne into olde bottelles.

¶ While he thus spake vnto them, beholde ther came a certayne ruler, and worshypped hym, saying: my doughter is euen now deceased, but cum, and lay thy hand vpon her, & she shal liue: & Jesus arose and folowed him, and his disciples also. And beholde a woman diseased with an issue of bloude twelue yeres, came behynde hym, and touched the hem of his garment. For she sayd with in her selfe, yf I may touche, but hys vesture onely, I shal be hole. But Jesus turned him, and whan he sawe her, sayde: doughter be of good comforte, thy faith had made the safe: And the woman was made hole euen the same time. And whan Jesus came in to ỹ rulers house, and sawe the mynstrelles, and the people makynge a noyse, he sayde vnto them: get ye hence, for the maide, is not deade but slepeth, and they laughed him to skorne. But whan the people were put furth, he went in, and toke her by the hand, and the damesel arose. And this rumor went abrode in to all that lande.

Jesus spekyng these thinges, there came vnto him a certayne warden of the synagoge called Jairus and falling humbly vpon his knees worshipped him, and with vehement prayer and besechyng, sayd: my onely doughter twelue yere of age, was at the poynt of death, whē I came from home, and I am afearde least that she be nowe deade: Cum I praye you, & lay you re hande vpon her, that she may recouer and lyue. Jesus (as he was redy to doe good to all men, whiche asked him with playne trust and confidence whether they were poore or riche, Jewes or straungers) furth with arose vp and folowed Jayrus, whyche made haste home yf perhappes he might finde hys daughter yet alyue. The disciples and the thicke multitude folowed Jesus. And beholde, as he was goyng, there befell an occasion of an other miracle. There was among the greater multitude of people a certaine woman, whiche had ben diseased with the bluddy flyxe for the space of twelue yeres, & had spent her whole substaunce vpon phisicions, and yet founde she none that coulde heale her disease. Therfore was she in dubble misery, for that pouertie was ioyned with her sickenes. This woman when she had conceyued in her harte a greate trust and confidence in Jesus, because of the filthines of her disease, she durst not speake vnto Jesus before so many witnesses. Therfore as though she would steale a benefite secretly, she came priuely behynde hys backe, & touched the hem of hys garment. For thus she perswaded her selfe, yf I touche but the vtterm̄oste parte of his garment I shal be whole, & by & by his garment once touched

And Jesus arose & followed hym, & hys disciples also.

For she sayde within her selfe, if I maye

the flixe stayed, and the woman perceyued that the helth of her body was restored. But Jesus willing such a notable example of fayth not to be hid, and teachyng withall that the glory of god oughte not to be conceyled: to thintent he would haue the benefite to be cõfessed, he turned vnto the multitude saying: who touched me? Whan all denied it. Yet sum body touched me (q he.) For I feele a power goyng out from me. Here Peter and the other disciples, not knowynge what Jesus mente, saye: Lorde thou seest the thicke multitude thrusting the on euery side, & dost thou aske who touched the, sith so many towche the? But whan Jesus as ignorant who had touched him, loked aboute hym as sekyng for the pryuy toucher, the woman being onely pryuy of the thing, perceiuing that she could not be hid frõ Jesus, all shamefastnes set a parte, fearing and tremblyng, fel downe at Jesus feete, and confessed all the matter as it was, and what disease she had, and how many yeres she had ben sicke, and how she spent all her substaũce in vayne vpon philicions, and how that she perswaded her selfe, that by the onely towching of the skirte of his garment, she might be healed, and how by and by after the towching she felt perfit health of her body. It was the wyll of Christ that these thinges should be declared before the multitude, not to put the womã to shame, neyther to purchace him selfe prayse of mẽ: but by this example to teache all men, what sure confidence and trust is hable to do, and by the example of the woman to establyshe the faith of the warden of the sinagoge, whyche he perceyued sumwhat wauerynge, and withall to reproue the phariseis for their vnbeleefe. Therfore Jesus, lest he shoulde seme to be angry, and to take away his benefite againe comforted the woman tremblyng for feare, and sayde: my doughter, be of good cumforte. Thy faithe hath obteyned the health. Departe in peace with a quyet and a careles mynde. My will is that this benefite shal continue with the, though thou hast stollen it from me.

touche but hys vesture onely. I shalbe hole.

And whan he saw her, he saide: doughter be of good comforte.

Thy fayth hath saued the.

As Jesus was speakynge these thynges, certayne came from the wardens of the sinagoges howse, and tolde hym that his doughter was deade, and that there was no cause why to trouble Jesus. For they toke Jesus to be nothyng elles, but sum notable philicion, which was hable by hys facultie to restore health to them that were aliue, but not to restore the dead to life. And therfore they thought it but vaine to call a philicion be he neuer so excellent, to a dead man. Jesus perceyuyng that the father of the mayde was muche amased with this tidinges, comforted hym, saying: Feare not, onely haue faith and trust that the mayde shall be hole, and she shall be hole. It is in the, that thy doughter may be hole.

And now whan they were cum to the warden of the sinagoges house, Jesus suffered not the multitude to enter in, nor the other disciples, beside Peter, James, and John, and the father and mother of the mayden. But all her kynsemen and frendes dyd wepe, and after the countrey maner, they beate theyr bodyes, bewayling her, and crying out, and such other thynges as men be wonte to do very folishly in the funeralles of riche men & great men. Jesus bad them cease from theyr wayling, for the mayden was not dead but a sleape. Meanyng thereby that the mayden was dead, to them whiche coulde not rayse her, but to hym she slepte onely, to whome it was more easy to rayse her frõ death, than to other to raise her frõ slepe. Whan

the familiars and frendes of the warden perceyued not these thynges, they laughed Jesus to skorne, because they knewe certainely that she was dead, seing her whan she dyed: Therfore after that he had thrust furth from the funeralles the mournynge multitude, he taking the father and the mother of the mayden, entred in to the parler, where as the corps of the mayden dyd lye. And Jesus taking the virgine by the hande, sayde: mayden arise. And furthwith whan at the worde the mayden rose, she walked also, that the faythe of the miracle might be the more certayne. For he did not onely restore lyfe sodenly, but also strength and cherefulnesse. And when the parentes of the mayden were greately amased, he gaue them in commaundement, and desired them instantly to tell no body what was done: both that he might auoyde the suspicion of vayne glory, for this chefely oughte to be done with the headdes of the synagoge, whyche dyd all thynges possiblye to obteyne the prayse of men: and also that they mighte showe furth with greater fayth and credit, the thinge that was donne, yf they cõmaunded to kepe silence, yet woulde needes tell the thynge that they had seene donne to the Pharisees and to the prelates of the synagoge. For he knewe the disposicion of man, whiche he minded to vse to the profite of others. And whan he departed, he badde them geue the mayden meate, vsing the parte of a philition, making as though it had bene no miracle, which thing establyshed the faith of the miracle the more.

And thys rumoure went abrode in to al that lande.

The texte. ¶ And whan Jesus departed thence, two blynde men folowed hym crying: and saying: O thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy on vs. And whã he was cum in to the house, the blinde came to him, and Jesus saieth vnto them: beleue ye that I am hable to do this? They sayde vnto hym: Lorde. We beleue. Then touched he their eyes, saying: accordyng to youre faythe, be it vnto you. And their eyes were opened. And Jesus charged them, saying: se that no man knowe of it. But they whẽ they were departed, spred abrode his name in all that lande.

Now whan Jesus left the house of the warden of the synagoge and returned to his owne house: two blinde mẽ folowed hym, whiche had hearde the fame of his miracles, and therof conceyued an hope to obtayne healthy especially hearing of his goodnes towarde al men, where they neuer so meane. But when they could neither see Jesus, nor cum vnto him, yet with a loude crye for loue of health, and for feruentnes of faith, farre of they crie vpon Jesus, with gentill prayer, sayinge: O sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon vs. Jesus in the waye answered them nothyng, differringe hys benefyte, that the miracle might be the more manifest: endeuouringe alwaye to allure the Jewes to faythe, and by the very thynges many waies to reproue the Pharisees vnbelefe. The captayne had fayth and trust, the woman had fayth and trust, they that caryed the man sicke of the palsey, dyd beleue and trust, the Jewes and Pharisees dyd distrust, and were also full of malyce and enuy. But whan Jesus was cum home, the blynde men were receyued in to hys howse, who with stiffe hope folowed hym. Than Jesus geuing example vnto others, first demaunded them of theyr faythe: beleue ye (qꝯ he) that I am hable to perfourme youre requestes? And they without any delay, sayde: Lorde we beleue. Than Jesus towchinge their eyes with his hande, sayde: As ye beleue, so be it to you, not chalengynge to him selfe the restorynge of the sight, but imputing it to their fayth and trust, declaringe that chefely vnbelefe made vs vnmete for the bountifulnes of god, whyche which is prest and redy for all men. As sone as Jesus had spoken, the eies of the blynde were open, so that they saw clerely. Here Jesus willing to warne vs couertly, that althoughe glory of it selfe foloweth the good dede, yet we must flee it rather than desyre it: he charged the blynde men verye earnestly, that no man should knowe this dede. But they ioyinge of theyr newe felicitie, spred the fame of Jesus the more thoroughe out the whole countrey: emong all them that knewe of theyre olde blyndenes.

And whan he was cum into the house.

Beleue ye that I am hable to do this.

Accordynge to youre faith be it vnto you.

And Jesus charged them, saying: see that no man knowe of it.

But they when they were departed spred abrod hys name in all that lande.

¶ As they went out, beholde they brought to him a dum man possessed of a deuyll: & whan the deuil was cast out, the dum spake: & the people marueyled, saying: it was neuer so sene in Israell. But the Phariseis saide: he casteth out deuylles thoroughe the prynce of deuilles. And Jesus went about all cities & townes teaching in theyr synagoges, & preaching the glad tidinges of the kingdome, and healyng euery sickenes and euery disease among the people.

The texte.

¶ Whan the blynde were departed, ther was an other miserable man offered vnto him, who was vexed with a deuil, which toke away the vse of his tong, that the man neyther was wel in his wit to wishe for health, nor had not tonge to aske for it. He therfore because he had nede of an other mānes fayth, was offered vnto Jesus. Which without any tarrying cast out the deuyll, & furthwith the dum spake. The multitude marueyling at so great spedines of miracles, ready in all kinde of diseases, beyng neuer so incurable, sayde emong them selues: There was neuer man emong the Israelites that wrought so many miracles so easely. Contrary wyse the Phariseis blynded daylye with malice more and more, where as the thinges that were done in the sight of all men coulde not be denyed, yet to thintent they myght withdrawe from him the mindes of the people that had him in veneration, they falsely slaūder him, that he casteth out deuilles not by ỹ power of god, but by the might of Belzebub ỹ prince of deuyls. Thā whiche vntrue slaunder, what could be a more mad thing? As who should say one deuil driueth out an other, or as who shoulde saye, Belzebub the enmy of mankinde, gaue life to the dead, health to the sicke, sight to the blind, speche to the dum. These illes cum from thē oftētymes, which Jesus of his goodnes hauing cōpassion vpon men, toke away with such corporal benefites, as might sensiblye be perceiued, preparing them for the capacitie of spiritual benefites. But moste meke Jesus was not offended with suche malicious reproche, but deuised the more for the healthe of all men, because he sawe the Phariseis, (to whom it apperteyned to se for the health of the people) so litill to helpe and socour: that also they enuied the commodities of others. Jesus therfore as a good sheperde walked thorough all cities and stretes, laboring to heale both the soules and bodies of all men, teachinge in theyr congregacions, and preachyng the kingdome of heauen (in to the which none be receyued, but suche as be voyde of all diseases of the soule) and healyng also all kyndes of diseases and sickenes.

And the people marueyled.

But the phariseis sayd, he casteth out deuils thoroughe the prynce of deuylles.

And Jesus went about all cities.

¶ But whan he sawe the people, he was moued wyth compassyon on them, because they were destitute & scatered abrode, as shepe hauynge no sheparde. Then sayeth he vnto his disciples: ỹ haruest is plentious, but the labourers are few. Pray ye therfore the lorde of the haruest that he wyl sende labourers into his haruest.

The texte.

Further whan Jesus sawe the multitude swarming on euery syde, and

But whan he saw ꝑ people, euery daye moze thicke, and now gredy of health and sincere doctrine, and considered withall, that the prieſtes, Phariſeis, and Scribes, vpon whom the people hitherto did hange, to do any thyng rather than to preſerue the people, & that they were whole geuen not to the glozy of god, but to theyze owne glozye, to theyze lucre, to theyze owne bely, and to theyze owne pleaſures, in whom yf there were any religion it was but colozed and counterfeyted: ſo that it was verye noyſome vnto true relygion: And conſidered alſo that the people was but rude and groſſe, and yet in the way of amendment, foz they lokyng to be healed in their bodies, folowed wt a ſimple & a playne fayth, & glozified god: and although yet they vnderſtode not the doctrine of the goſpel, yet they did not reiect the ſame. Contrary wyſe whã he conſidered the Phariſeis & the Scribes, where as they had the prophetes & the law, yet to be blynded with wozldly deſires, & alſo to reſiſt the doctrine of the goſpell: the good ſheperde was moued with pitye and compaſſion, becauſe he ſawe them lyke vnto wanderyng ſhepe, ſkatered a ſunder and deſtitute of a ſheperd, & runnyng vnaduiſedly hyther and thither. Jeſus therfoze conſidering that in the Phariſeis, whyche played the wolues rather than the ſhepardes, the flocke had no hope, and that the people thorough miracles was now ſumwhat prepared to receyue the doctrine of the goſpell, he ſayde vnto hys diſciples, whom he had now well gathered together: I ſee a great harueſt, but very few labozers. The fame of the goſpell is ſpred abzode euery where. The feruency of many is ſtirred vp, whiche ſeme ripe & redy to heare the wiſedome of the goſpel. But where be they that wyl take vpon them to preache and teache? Where be they that wyll teache purely and ſincerly, nether ſeking after glozy of man noz after gayne and lucre, but teaching ſo ſincerely as ye ſee me teache?

He was moued wyth compaſſiõ on them

The harueſt is plenteous, but the labozers are fewe.

Truly ſuche a cumpany of men muſt not be neglected, beyng kindled with the deſyze of the heauenly doctrine. What is than to be done, but to deſyze & requyze the lozd of the harueſt to thzuſte in to his harueſt the ydle & vnwylling labozers? Foz the occaſion is nowe, and lingeryng is daũgerous I know that it is moze pleaſaunt foz you to be with me, but the time is at hand, that ye muſt ſhewe ſum pzooke of your ſelues, & that ye muſt begyn to ſhew furth foz the ſaluacion of other, that which ye haue receyued of me.

Praye ye therfoze the Lozde of the haruest that he wyl ſend labourers into his haruest.

¶ The .x. Chapiter.

The texte. ¶ And whan his twelue diſciples were called vnto him, he gaue the power agaĩſt vncleane ſpirites, and to caſt them oute, and to heale all maner of ſyckeneſſe, and all maner of diſeaſe. The names of the twelue Apoſtles, are theſe: The fyrſte Symon, whyche is called Peter, and Andzewe his bzother. James the ſonne of zebedee, and Jhon his bzother, Philip and Bartholomew, and Thomas and Mathewe, whych had ben a Publycan, James the ſonne of Alphe, and Lebbeus, whoſe ſyrname was Thaddeus, Symon of Canaan, and Judas Iſcariote, which alſo betrayed him.

THerfoze Jeſus goyng vp vpon the hill, commaunded hys diſciples whiche ſpecially followed him, to cum vnto hym Of theſe he ozdeyned twelue to be cheſe, vnto whom as to the better learned and moze ſtrong, he committed with authozitie, the office of teachynge: that accozdyng to the example that they ſaw in theyz maſter, they ſhould teach the people eche in ſondzy places. And leſt the doctrine of fyſhers, vnlearned, and abiecte men ſhoulde furthwith be diſpiſed, he gaue them alſo power a-

gaynst all vncleane spirites, to cast them oute with the worde, and to heale all kyndes of diseases, and all faultes of the body, that whatsoeuer Christ dyd before them in the fathers name & his owne, that they should do in the name of Iesus Christ, in whose come they were. For so Iesus entered, that through healyng of greuous, & incurable diseases, (whiche benefyt semeth vnto men most godly) he myght allure the rude & the simple to the thinges of the soule. But lest any man should take false apostels for the true, these be the names of the twelue whome Christe him selfe dyd ordeyne. Fyrst Symon the sonne of John, whyche also was called Peter, & his brother Andrewe: For these were the first that Christ called. Secondelye James the sonne of Zebedei & Jhon his brother: thyrdly Philip & Bartylmew. Fowerthly Thomas whose syr name was Didimus, & Mathew ỹ publicane. Fyfthly Iames the sonne of Alphe, with Judas the sonne of Iames which also was called Lebbeus or Thaddeus. Sixtly Symon the Cananite, which was also called zelotes, & Judas Iscariot, whiche afterwarde betrayed his master. By suche maner ambassadoures beynge poore men, rude, abiect, fyshers, synners, and men not knowen, and of no reputacyon, Christe went aboute to turne and renue the whole worlde vnto the wysedome of the gospell: lest in this prayse the worlde myghte attribute anye thyng vnto it selfe, yf he had begonne thys heauenly pourpose by men of learnyng, of power, of ryches, or of nobilitie.

He gaue them power against vnclean spirites.

¶ Iesus sent furth these twelue in numbre, whom he commaunded, saying: Goe not into the way of the gentyles, & into the cytie of the Samaritans, entre ye not: but go rather to the lost shepe of the house of Israel. Go & preache, saying: the kyngdome of heauen is at hande. Heale the sycke, cleanse the leapers, raise the dead, caste out deuilles. Freely ye haue receyued, geue freely: Possesse not gold, nor syluer, nor brasse in your purses, nor yet scrip towardes your iourneye, neither two coates, neither shoes, nor yet a rodde: For the worke man is worthy of his meate.

The texte.

Now it is worthy the hearynge, to heare what he cõmaunded them, and how he furnyshed these embassadours in theyr iourney. And fyrst of all he appoynteth them the costes and limites of preachyng, and forbyddeth thẽ to go out of Jewrye, and forbyddeth them to go eyther to the people that were nexte, or vnto the cities of the Samaritanes, whome the Jewes did abhorre: not that Iesus dyd count any kynde of men to be abhorred, but lest he should seme to be offended with the iniuries of the Phariseis, & for reuengyng of him selfe, to sende his disciples vnto straungers: or leste he myghte geue occasion vnto the Jewes, to excuse them selfe, and saye that they were despysed, and that the Gentyles and Samaritans were preferred before them. Agayne because he knewe that the Jewes chyefly woulde rebell agaynste the gospell, he would leaue them no maner of excuse, but ỹ it should appere vnto all men, that they were put frome the kyngdome of God, by theyr owne frowardnes, and that the Gentyles were receyued by theyr own playne and simple fayethe. Therfore (ỹ he) forbeare them for a tyme, and go rather to the lost shepe of the nacion of Israel, that they may repent to be saued. For they be not all of the Phariseis malyce. There be shepe emong thẽ, erryng by simplicitie and ignorannce, whych beyng monyshed and taught wyl sone repent, and heare the voyce of the good shepeheard. And ye shall beginne your preachyng thus, lyke as ye sawe me doe.

And into the cittie of ỹ Samaritanes.

But go rather to ỹ lost shepe of the house of Israell.

Go and preach saying: the kingdome of heaue is at hande.

For it is not meete nor expedient forthwith to disclose the secrete misteries vnto the rude people: they must be made in a redines before, that they may be hable to receyue the heauenly doctrine. First of all therfore preache nothyng els, but that the kyngdome of heauen is at hande, that they retournyng from theyr old lyfe, may prepare them selues to a newe lyfe. For the fyrst degre of righteousnes, is to abstayne from sinne. And the fyrst degre to healthe, is to knoweledge the disease. Furthermore leste the teachers beyng men of no reputacion, and teaching new thinges, should not be beleued, make them beleue your doctrine by miracles, lyke as ye sawe me do.

Heale the sicke cleanse the leprose, raise the dead, cast out deuyls.

Heale the sicke, rayse the dead, cleanse the leprose, cast out deuyls. These thynges though they be very great, yet ye shall haue them of me, and they shall get you fauour and authoritie with all men. For fyrst the weak must be allured. Take you heede only that ye do not abuse these thinges, either to vayne glory, or to lucre. Lyke as ye haue frely receyued of me, so frely geue: Defyle not the euangelicall function, not with the lest suspicion of glorye or lucre. Thus men shall estene you great in dede, yf they shall see you of so great myght and power, and yet not to be haute nor prowde, nor desyrous of lucre, but stowtly to dispyse those thynges, for the whyche the cõmon sorte of men, do & suffre all that they maye.

Freely ye haue receyued, geue freely.

I wyll haue you lyghte and redy to do this message, & to be laded with no burdens, to be encoumbred with no carefulnes, that ye maye wholy applye the office commytted vnto you.

Possesse not gold nor syluer or brasse in youre purses.

Ye teache heauenly thinges, set not youre care vpon worldly thynges: ye haue preparacion mete for your preachyng, whyche teacheth no meane thyng. Wherfore whan ye take your iourney, burden not youre purses with golde nor syluer. No, carry not so muche as a bagge aboute with you to put your vitayles in, neyther .ii. coates, nor showes nor staffe. He is wel armed whych is gyrded wyth the sweard of ỹ word of the gospel.

For the worke man is worthy of his meate.

Nor ye shal not nede to be careful, how ye being naked shal cum by necessaries. Only be careful in your office cõmytted vnto you, and all these shal be geuen you, from your heauenly father. It is his matter that ye haue in hande. He wyl not suffre his workemen to be defrauded of theyr hyer. For them that lyue from daye to daye, and accordynge to nature, necessaries be sone prepared. And there wyl be enow whiche of themselues wyll geue to you, doyng and teachynge suche thynges. So shall it cum to passe, that neyther ye shall be troubled wyth suche cares whyche maye diminishe youre aucthoritye, and make you to be suspected, nor they whome ye teache, shall be vnkynde towarde you, of whome they receyue farre greater thynges.

¶ But to what soeuer citie or towne ye shal cum, enquire who is worthy in it, & there abyde tyl ye go thence. And whã ye cum into the house, salute the same: & if ỹ house be worthy, let your peace cum vpõ it: but if it be not worthy let your peace returne to you againe. And whosoeuer shal not receiue you nor wyl heare your preaching, whã ye depart out of that house or citie, shake of the dust of your fete. Verely I say vnto you: It shal be easyer for the land of Sodoma and Gomorrha in the day of iudgemẽt, than for that citie.

But into what soeuer cytye or towne ye shall come,

And ye shall be greuouse to no man with beggynge, nor no man shall caste you in the teth with his benefite, because he hath made a chaunge for better thynges, rather than geuen any thyng. For it shal not be nedefull for you to turne into common innes, but into what citie or strete you entre into,

into, fyrst enquyre if there be any honest man there, desyrouse of the heauēly kyngdome, and wery of the worlde, whiche with godlye desyres sygheth nowe and than after Messyas that was promysed, whych sheweth a great hope of greater increase, by symplicitie and innocency of life, by liberalitie towarde the poore. For suche one wyl be a verye mete hoste for you, and agayne ye shal be mete gestes for him. Whan ye haue founde suche an one, turne into his house, and chaūge not your inne, vntyl your busines about ỳ gospel, causeth you to remoue into an other citie. For it shal not be nedefull neyther cumly for you oftentymes to chaunge your host, as lyght personnes, or persons desyrouse of more deynty fare. Euery house, euery fare ought to suffyse for men of the gospell. Be ye curteous and gentil of manners, that ye appere neither proude, nor flatterers. Whan ye enter into the house, speake fyrst and saye: Peace be in this house. Your prayer shal not be in vayne. For yf the house be worthy this prayer, by and by wythout delaye it wyl receyue it: but yf it refuse it, your salutacion shal not be lost. For that which they dispyse shal returne vnto you. And truly I would not haue you bowyng and beckyng or flatteryng any mā for your necessaries, that yf any house thyncke muche to receyue you, or yf anye cytye thyncke muche to haue you as geastes, and wyll not of theyr owne accorde receiue the saluation of the gospel offred vnto them, I wyl that ye shall leaue the house which ye saluted, and leaue the citie where vnto ye entred, and go in to the stretes and shake of the dust from youre fete, declarynge openly that ye hunt for none of theyr worldly cōmoditie, who cast of the gospel of god, insomuche that ye shall not be cast in the tethe with the vyle dust that stycketh vpon your fete. Here haue in remembraunce, that an holy thing must not be geuē to dogges, nor precious margarites cast vnto hogges. Onely see that ye laye this to the vnkynde, wyll they, nyll they: that the kyngdome of god is at hande, to the great commoditie of them that receyue it, & to the greate hurte of them that refuse it. Auyse them whyche receyue the worde of the gospell. Wo be to that cytie, wherein none shall be foūde that doth repent him of his yll lyfe, & desyreth not to be amended. This I assure you, that ỳ countrey of Zodome and Gomorre shall be more gentelye handled in the daye of iudgement, than that cytye, thoughe it be a cytye of Israell. The more that the clemencye of God is to prouoke them to penaunce, by so many myracles, and so many benefytes, the more greuously shall they be punysshed, yf they refecte it.

And there abyde tyll ye go thence.

And when ye cum into a house, salute the same

And if ỳ house be worthye.

And who so euer shal not receyue you, nor wyl heare your preachynge.

Shake of the dust of youre fete.

I saye vnto you: it shal be easier for the lande of Sodoma and Gomorha.

Behold I sende you furthe as shepe among wolues, be ye therfore wyse as serpētes, and innocente as doues. But beware of those men, for they shall delyuer you vp to ỳ counsels, and shall scourge you in theyr synagoges. And ye shal be brought to ỳ heade rulers & kinges for my sake, in wytnes to thē and to the Gentyles. But whā they delyuer you vp take you no thought, how or what ye shall speake, for it shall be geuē you euen in that same houre what ye shal speake. For it is not ye ỳ speke, but the spirit of your father which speaketh in you. The brother shal delyuer the brother to death: and the father the sonne, and the chyldrē shal aryse against theyr fathers and mothers, and shal put them to death: & ye shal be hated of al men for my names sake But he that endureth to the ende shall be saued.

The texte.

But leue ye the punyshement of them to god, be ye meeke and pacyente against all iniuries, and so endeuoure to profyte all good men, that whan ye be prouoked of yl men, ye requite not iniuries. It is sufficiente for you to be garnysshed wyth those thynges, wherewyth ye maye do good to all men. Agaynst the iniuries of men I wyl haue you vtterly without weapon, and to ouercum with none other defence but wyth sufferaunce. Otherwyse I coulde make you terryble and to be feared, but it is not expedient for the gospell. For violence dothe not extynguysshe violence, nor iniurye, iniury, nor pryde, pryde, but rather coldenes, gētylnes, and quyetnes. I knowe that the pharisees, and men that be stoute wyth the socoure of this worlde, wyll go aboute to do you sore displeasures. But againste all these there is none other buckeler but pacience. Nor there is no cause to feare, ye be sent lyke shepe without weapō, simple, innocent, in the middest of wolues; but ye be sent of me. I woulde not ẏ ye beyng prouoked by theyr naughtines, should be turned into wolues, but to go aboute this by al meanes, ẏ the wolues asswaged by your gentylnes, maye be turned into shepe. It is no great matter to reuenge yll men, but to turne their hertes to good, is a very greate and an harde matter. Therfore ye must couple two certayne thynges together, the policy of the serpente, and the simplicitie of the doue. The simplicitie of the doue shall cause you to desyre to do good to all men, and to hurte no man, no thoughe ye be prouoked. The policy of the serpent, shall cause you to geue none occasyon, wherby your doctrine myght be reproued. This is the chiefe poynte of youre ambassade, that the gospell maye entre into all mennes hartes. Therfore ye must do vtterlye nothyng, whiche by any probable coloure myghte withdrawe any mannes harte from the doctrine of the gospell. Your doctrine shall make great stirres and tumultes in the worlde, the more therfore ye must beware, least any busynesse aryse through your defaulte. Whyche can not be, yf ye communicate your benefytes freely vnto al men, and kepe pacience also towardes the yll men, and desyre to do them good.

Therfore with suche maner of men, yea wolues rather, ye must worke warely, & now prepare your minde against al kyndes of yl, that nothing may trouble you, whan it shall happen. For the tyme shall cum that they wyll plucke you as yll doers in theyr councelles and conuentycles, and beate you with whyppes like vngracious men, & subuerters of publique weale, ye shal be brought before rulers and kinges, not for your desertes, but for my sake, and thoughe I maye let them, yet wyll I suffer all these thynges to be done, that it maye be wytnessed and open to all men, that they perisshe through theyr own defaulte, which beyng moued and prouoked by so many miracles, by so many benefytes, by so ready doctrine, by your simplenes and gentylnes, so spitefully reiect saluation offred vnto them. Therfore whan so fewe shall be brought forth to so manye, so weake and vnarmed to so myghty, vnlettered to so learned, be not carefull howe ye shall plede your cause, though ye be rude, and not skylful of iudgementes, of lawes, & of ẏ law place. Also I would not ye should runne to suche ayde & succoure, by the which the cōmon sorte of mē be wont to haue the higher hād in iudgemētes. They take vnto them a cunning and a wel tonged aduocat, they flatter the iudges, they fall downe humbly vpon theyr knees, they get fauoure with monye. Meddle ye with none of these. Do ye this onelye, go forth whan ye be called, aunswere, whan ye be cōmaunded, that they haue no iust cause of cōtumacy & stubburnes agaynst you, but aunswere plainlye and boldly, not with a diuised and a prepared oration, but wyth suche

Behold I sēde you forth as shepe amonge wolues.

Be ye therfore wyse as serpētes, and innocent as doues.

But beware of those men, for they shall delyuer you vp to the counsels.

And ye shal be brought to the heade rulers and kynges for my sake.

In wytnes to them and to the Gentiles.

But whā they deliuer you vp take ye no thought howe or what ye shall speke.

one as hath boldnes ioyned with wisedome and mildenes. Lyke as bitaile shall be readye for you in euerye place: so speche shalbe gyuen vnto you, vpon whiche carefully to muse, appertaineth not to hym that depēdeth wholy vpon the helpe of god. Yea speche shall be geuen vnto them in season whiche muse nothyng vpon it, not garnished nor gaye, but wyse and effectuall, and mete for the gospel. It is not mānes matter that ye haue in hād, but goddes, wherof ye be not authoures, but instrumentes. For it is not ye that shall speke there, but the spirite of your father speaketh by your mouthes. Trustynge therfore vpon his helpe, ye muste be moued by no stormes of aduersitie. For the worlde wyll aryse agaynst my doctrine with such tumulte and busines, that the brother forgettynge hys brotherlye loue, wyll bryng hys brother to death: that the father forgettyng hys naturall loue, wyll put hys sonne in daunger of death: that the sonne all honoure and dutye set a parte, wyll ryse agaynste the father, and mother, and put them to death, of whom he had the begynnynge of hys lyke. Brefely ye shall be hated of all men, for the hatred they beare to my name. For this worlde being so corrupt on euery syde with ambition, pryde, auarice, lechery and other worldly desires, will not beare the heauenly doctrine contrary to his appetite and desire. And it shalbe a greater offence to be a Christian man, than to be a murtherer or a sorcerer. These hurliburlyes the deuyll shall rayse agaynst the gospell, but destruct not, godly wysedome shall ouercome the wiles of the deuill, & the malice of man: do ye the busines committed vnto you with a bolde and cherefull courage. For who so amonge these yll es dothe persseuer and continue vnto the ende, he shall be saued. For ye must not beyng discouraged with feare, leaue of the busynes of the gospell.

For it shall be geuen you euē in that same houre, what ye shall speke.

For it is not ye that speke.

The brother shall delyuer ꝑ brother to death.

But he that endureth to the ende shall be saued.

¶ But whan they persecute you in this citie, flye into another. For verely I say vnto you: ye shal not go through al the cities of Israell, vntyll the sonne of mā be cum. The disciple is not aboue his teacher, nor ꝑ seruaunt aboue his maister. It is ynough for the disciple to be as his teacher, & the seruaunt to be as his maister. If they haue called the good man of the house Belzebub: how much more his household seruauntes: Feare them not therfore. For there is nothyng kept close, ꝑ shall not be opened, and nothyng hyd that shal not be knowen. What I tell you in darkenes, that speake ye in light. And what ye heare in the eare, that preache ye on the house toppes.

The texte.

There is no peryll, vnles a stomacke mete and worthy for the gospell fayle you. But lyke as ye ought not to prouoke the crueltie of yll men, nor to stirre vp persecucyon, nor resist it with myghte and power, so whyleste the preachynge of the gospell is but yet newe and yonge, I graunte you libertie to auoyde daunger and peryll by fleynge and runnynge awaye, not onely that ye maye be in saketie your selfe, but also ꝑ by this occasyon the fame of the gospell, maye be spred the further abrode. Therfore if they persecut you in one citie, geue place to their madnes and flee into another, so ꝑ in no wise at a lytle iniurie of persecution, cease not from your labour in the gospel. This onlye is to be done now, that the fame of ꝑ gospel may be spred thorough oute all Palestine. And in this the persecutor shall do you good, because he shall not suffre you to tary longe in one place. The tyme shall cum whan ye shall auoyde persecution with flyghte. Nowe the tyme is shorte, & haste must be made. For the kyngdome of god is at hande. Thys I assure you, before that ye haue gone ouer all the cyties of Jewry, the sonne of man wyll shewe hymselfe, and wyll helpe you beyng in daun-

When they persecute you in this citie, flee into another.

Ye shall not go throughe all the cyties of Israell.

ger. An example shalbe shewed you in hym howe greate aduersities the preachers of the gospell must suffre. The whyche all ought to seme vnto you the more tollerable, for this that ye se that I haue suffered all maner of reproues and afflictions. The scholer is not better than hys maister, nor the seruaunt better than his lorde. Thys suffiseth to the scholer yf he be equal with his mayster: This ought to suffice the seruaunte, yf he be egall with hys lorde. If they haue so vnworthely checked me the father of the house, in so muche that in most vile reproche they called me Belzebub, and named ꝑ sonne of God by the name of an vncleane deuill: what meruaile is it, yf they be bolde vpon the seruauntes of the house? I knowe that infamy semeth a great ill, and almoste more greuouse than death: but it is a praise and no infamy, whiche cummeth of wicked men for the gospell sake. They wyl saye that ye be witches, yll doers, and sedicious, but this ignompny and shame afterwarde shall be turned into glory. Youre sincerite and innocency at length shall appere vnto the worlde, whiche sincerite al men shall prayse, cursyng thē which haue dishonested you w̄ false reporte. Prayse long suppressed, breaketh out cōmonly with greater lighte. There is nothinge couered but tyme wyll vncouer it, and nothynge is hyd, but it once wyll come to lighte. Endeuour this onely, that ye do thynges worthy prayse, and not seke after praise. Ther is nothynge therfore, why ye should be troubled with feare of infamy, and not frely preache the gospel of the kyngdome. It hath no dishonest thynge, nor nothynge to be kepte close. Yea yf ye heare anye thynge, of me in darckenes, preache ye it in the cleare light. And yf I haue tolde you any thynge secretelye, preache it openly. Our doctrine is without any colourynge. It desireth to cum furth before all men, and it is afrayde to be knowen of no man.

The dyscyple is not aboue hys teacher, nor the seruāt aboue his master.

Feare thē not therfore.

For there, is nothynge kept close that shall not be opened, and nothynge hyd that shall not be knowen.

The texte. ¶ And feare ye not them that kyll the body, but are not able to kyll the soule. But feare rather hym which is able to destroy both soule & body in hel. Are not two lytle sparrowes solde for a minute? & one of them shal not fal to the ground without your father. Yea & all the heares of your head be numbred: Feare ye not therfore: ye be of more value than many sparrowes. Euery one therfore ꝑ shal confesse me before men, hym will I cōfesse also before my father which is in heauen. But whosoeuer denieth me before men, hym wyll I also deny before my father which is in heauen.

But there shall be some perchaunce, which will lytle passe vpon infamy, and other ylles, but who can despyse and set litle by death? It were meete you should feare them, yf they could kyl the whole man: but ye that know that the body is the vilest parte of man, & that the soule whiche is the chefe parte of man can not be hurt of them, be they neuer so sauage and cruell: Ye (I saye) nede not to feare them. They should hurt you more yf they dyd slepe you folowyng their mindes, than yf they kyll you not regardyng thē. I wil showe you who is more to be feared. Feare him who like as he made the whole man, so he is hable to condempne hym to euerlastyng death, and to delyuer hym into hell fyer.

Yet the body whiche the tyranne doth kyll for a tyme, doth not vtterly perysshe. For the selfe same at the resurrection shall be restored in farre better wyse. Hytherto therfore only the body is in daunger, yf in case ye be kylled, constantly obeying my commaundementes. But yf ye obey their cōmaūdementes, and leaue the busynes of the gospell, nowe not onely the bodye doth perysh, whiche yf no man kyll it, yet by the common law of nature it must must nedes dye: but also the soule shall be deliuered to euerlastyng fier. And what matter is it, whether the persecutour, or dysease, or anye other chaunce take awaye the lyfe? Truly more glorious it is to dye for the gospell sake, whiche death though it be violent and sore, yet it shal not cum before the day, whansoeuer it cũmeth it shal not cum without the prouydence of god. And by this it cummeth to passe, ỹ yf ye endeuoure to auoyde it, ye can not. God wyll not suffre you to be slayne but when it shall be verye expediẽt for you to dye. Wherfore put out of your mindes al this feare. God also wil prouyde for this, to whom it were not harde to geue you immortalitie, but that it is a greater thyng to despyse death, than to escape it.

Are not two lytle sparrowes solde for a minute.

What is of lesse value than sparrowes? of the whiche two be bought for a farthyng, a very litle coyne? And the numbre of sparrowes is greate in euery place, and yet not so muche as one of thẽ is loste in the yearth, but by the wyll & sufferaunce of youre father. Do ye feare than, lest he wyll suffre you whom emong all he hath chosen to this busines to perysshe before your tyme, whõ he doth not neglect, insomuche that he kepeth the numbre of all the heares of your hed? Seyng that ye be of more estimacion to the father than innumerable sparowes, there is no cause why ye should feare, lest men be able to do anye thynge agaynst you, otherwyse than shal be thoughte to hym, who hath contynuall care ouer you. Wherfore leaue the care of yout lyfe and death vnto hym, and be not ye dyuen from the open profession of my name, be it neuer so hated of the world, by any feare of displeasures that men can do vnto men. For whosoeuer litle regardynge the rebukes of men, do professe me in this lyfe to be hys lorde & mayster, hym wyll I acknowledge to be my seruaũte and disciple, before my heauenly father. Contrarywyse whosoeuer wyll be ashamed of me before men & deny me, hym wyll I deny before my father whyche is in heuen. And this is no daynteouse & delycate profession: for he doth not professe me, vnles he doth declare by hys lyfe ỹ he doth beleue my sayenges. And he hath denyed me, which so lyueth that he setteth by any thinge more than by me. What wynnynge therfore can it be, yf a man lese that noble & euerlasting praise with the father & his angels for feare of a false slaunder here, whiche neyther lasteth long, nor is no slaunder in deade, but with ignorant and folyshe men, and before god very true glory? It is a great gayne lytle to passe vpon these thynges, and to make haste to the euerlastyng rewarde: whiche shall be geuẽ in due time to them that haue deserued: in the meane season a good conscièce is a great ppece of the rewarde.

Euerye one therfore that shall confesse me before men hym wyll I confesse before my father whyche is in heauen.

What whosoeuer denyeth me before me.

The texte.

¶ Thynke not that I am cum to sende peace into ỹ earth. I came not to sende peace but a swearde, for I am cum to set a man at variaunce with his father, & the doughter with her mother, & the doughter in lawe with the mother in lawe. And a mannes foes shall be they that are of his housholde. He ỹ loueth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, & he that loueth sonne or doughter more than me, is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his crosse & followeth me, is not worthye of me. He that fyndeth his lyfe, shal loose it, & he that looseth his life for my sake, shal finde it.

The profession of the gospell is no werysshe nor lyghte thynge. Trulye the rewardes be greate, but ye must cum vnto them with vehement and cõtinuall desires of the mynde: they chaunce not vnto yll men and lyngerers: they must be obteyned by strength and violence. Thynke ye that I am cum to sowe peace in the yearth emonge men? It is farre otherwyse. Naye I am am not cum to sow peace and concorde, but swearde and warre, and that inwarde and domistical warre and not ciuile warre onely. For where as the doctryne of the gospel shalbe hated of the most parte, and sith it requyreth so feruent a desire towarde it, that all the affections of men be they neuer so great and vnruly, must geue place: it can not be but great strife and dissencion must arise emong them that be most nere and frendly: whyles they ẏ dote vpō the world wil rage rather against their derest beloued, thā forsake their vices, wher vnto they be accustomed: and whoso is once touched with the great feruency of the euangelical charitie, I will not suffre himselfe by no maner of affeccions to be plucte away from ẏ thing, which he hath begonne to embrace and make muche of. But happy is that strife and dissencion, which doth auaunce syncere and good thinges, and cutteth away rotten thynges: Happy is that sweard whiche pareth away from the soule, al noysome lustes and desires. Let this tumulte and hurlyburlye be layed vnto me, and not to you, which haue geuen a medicyne and troubled all the body: but so, that they that stryue against theyr affections for the hatred of my name, ought to impute it to themselues and not to me. For they might folowe them, whome they persecute. I offre health and saluacion to al men: whych yf al men do embrace, there shal be no strife nor dissēcion. Truely the gospel of it selfe is a thing of peace, of quietnes, but sedicion is rayled by the fault of others. Lyke as the medicine is a holsome thyng of it selfe, but in the body it maketh a rumblyng and trouble, whyles it prouideth that al the membres may be in quiet. But it is expediente that the noysome thynges be pared away, that true and holy concord may be establyshed the more emong the pure and clene. This swearde therfore I bryng into the yearth to breake concorde betwixte the sonne and the father, to diuide the sure and streight bande of nature betwene the sonne and the mother, to discouer the loue and concord betwene themother & doughter in lawe. There is no knot of nature or amitie so sure, which this swerde is not able to breake. Whom domestical acquaintaunce hath made louers and very nere frendes, them the sweard of the gospell sette in sondre. But so ferre and no ferther shall thys battayle extende, and so ferre shall thys warre go, that they whiche be of oure side shall onely dispise their enemies, but not hurt them, and asmuche as in them lyeth, saue them also yf they can. And thus far shall thys dysprysinge go, not to dysoayne them and abhorre them, but soberly to make them an answere, and not to obey their wicked commaundementes. Ye must take hede by all meanes that the common state of the publicke weale be not troubled by you. Be not slacke in the duty which by the lawe of nature the sonne oweth to the father, the doughter to the mother, the brother to the brother, the husoande to the wife, the cosen to the cosen, the frende to the frende, and the familiare to hys familiar and acquaintaunce. For I do not abrogate and put away the lawe of nature, but make it perfect. Ye must be obediēt in al thinges vnto the publique magistrates and ministers, vnlesse they prescribe and commaunde wicked thynges. They call you to the lawe, ye must go: they require accompte, ye must make it: but if they commaunde you to do honour and sacrifice to ymages and pictures, yf they commaūde you to ceasse from preaching of my name, ye ought not to obey thē. And yet they must not be stir-

red with checkes and raylinges, but they must be aunswered soberly, why it is more mete to obeye god the prince ouer all, than the power of man. For it is reason that the commaundementes of god shoulde be preferred before the commaundementes of men. And yf they prescribe vniust thinges which yet do not make men wicked, yf they obey them: they must be suffered, leste they being stired they fall in to a rage. As for an example, if they take away vniustlye thy garmēt or money: if they cast the in to prysone: if they scourge the with whippes. For these thiges do not take away godlines, but rather by occasion, increase and set furth the vertue of the gospell. Lykewyse the dutie of the naturall loue must be performed to the parēt if he haue nede, though he be an hethen, and alienat frō the gospel. But yf thauthoritie of the parent withdrawe from the gospell, the heauenly father ought more to be obeyed, than the yerthly father. And yet the father must not be churlysly displyed, but gentely and reuerentlye monished, not to repugne agaynst god. In lyke maner also we must do with others, vnto whome we owe the duty of humanitie, ether of natur or els of curtesy. Sum wil say: it is hard to master suche affections, whyche nature hath inwardely grafted in vs. But suche the profession of the gospell doth require, stronge & manly men, and suche as will be moued from the heauenly busines by none affections. Ye shall see me go this way: he must nedes folowe in the same whiche will be taken in the numbre of my disciples. The some that loueth the father or the mother more than me, is not mete for me. Agayne the father which loueth the sonne or the doughter more than me is not mete for me. And he loueth hym more than me, yf in doyng hym pleasures, he neglecteth my cummaundementes. It is wicked loue so to tendre thy parentes being but mē, that thou offende thy parent beyng god. And leste it should seme to be to muche to set more by the will of god than all mennes affections, where as nothinge is more deare to man than lyfe, excepte he despise this also for the gospell sake, and be alwayes in a redynes to all kindes of death and punishment, and take vp his crosse and folow me dayly, he is no mete disciple to haue me to hys master. For like as the disordered loue of the parente or childe is a hatred rather than loue, sith it is noysom vnto bothe: so the disordered care to preserue the life, is a very distruction of ỹ life. He hath preserued his life, that lost it well, he hath lost it, which hath kepte it naughtly. He ỹ by forsaking the gospell, & denyngē me hath pacifyed the iudge, hath escaped prison, hath escaped hanginge, hath escaped death, where as he semeth to men to haue wonne hys lyfe, he hath lost his life in dede. Agayne he ỹ constantly sticking vnto the gospell putteth furth hym selfe boldely to all daungers and deathes, he semeth vnto men to loose hys lyfe, where in dede he winneth hys lyfe. The lyfe doth not perishe when it is taken away for professing of the gospel, but is preserued euerlastingly: It doth perishe in dede, if it bargayne to haue a shorte tarrying in the bodye with vngodlynes: and yet it liueth not than in the body, which liueth in the hatred of god,

And he that taketh not hys crosse and folowith me is not worthy of me.

He that fyndeth hys lyfe shall lose it.

And he that loseth hys lyfe for my sake shall finde it.

The texte.

¶ He that receyueth you receyueth me, and he that receyueth me receyueth hym that sent me. He ỹ receyueth a prophet in the name of a prophet, shall receyue a prophetes rewarde. And he ỹ receyueth a iust man in the name of a iust man, shall receyue a iust maunes reward. And who so euer shal geue to one of these litill ones to drinke, a cup of colde water onely in the name of a disciple, verely I say vnto you, he shal not loose his reward.

Neyther

Neyther is there any daunger lest yf it chaunce you to be forsaken of your parentes kynnesfolkes, aliaunce, and frendes: that there should be none to geue you house rowme and vittayll. The giftes wherewith I do adorne you, and your innocency shall purchesse you euery where howses, parentes, chyldren, kinnesfolkes, & frendes. For ye shall haue so manye children, as ye shall haue disciples. Like as there shall be euer sum which wil dispise you & persecute you: so there shall be euer sum whiche wil cumforte you with an intire & pure affection. And as albeit ye reuenge them not, but wishe them well, god in tyme to cum wyll greuously punishe them, because he taketh hym selfe to be dysppysed when ye be dispysed: so to thothers he will render a greate rewarde for youre sake albeit ye requite them not. For god willeth not that it should be imputed to you, but vnto hym selfe, yf any gentilnes hath ben bestowed vpon you for the gospelles sake. For who so euer receyueth you, receyueth me: in whose name ye be ambassadoures: and he that receyueth me, receyueth my father, from whome I am sent, and whose matter I haue in hande. He therfore like as he is riche and liberall, so wyll he render a very greate rewarde for euery litill benefite whiche is bestowed vpon you, that men shall not loose theyr benefyte vpon you, but haue a greate auauntage therby: that muche more ought he to render thankes whiche gaue the benefite, than he that receyued it. For truely it is a greate gayne to exchaunge a corporall benefite indurynge but a whyle, for spirituall and euerlastyng riches. Who so receyueth the prophete or the preacher for no nother consideracion but that he is a prophet or a preacher, and that he beyng sent from me preacheth the will and promyses of god, he shall receyue the rewarde of the prophete, and becum a prophete hym selfe. And who so receyueth the iust man not because he is his kynsman, or for any other worldely affection, but for this cause onely that he is a iust and a good man lyuyng after the rule of the gospel, he shall receyue the rewarde of the iust, and becum a iust man hym selfe. Hath not he made an happy chaunge whiche hath vsed hospitalitie, & wonne innocency? Pouertie can withdrawe no man from this gayne. For here the good wil of the geuer is counted the gift, & not ỹ value of ỹ gift. In somuche ỹ who so geueth but a cup of colde water. I saye not vnto me, but vnto any of the lest of these, onely because he is my disciple, I say vnto you certenly he shall not leese his rewarde: for he also shall becum my dysciple. And who is so poore & bare whiche is not hable to geue a cup of colde water to the thirsty? And as it skilleth not how greate the thing is that is geuen, but with what affection and in whose name it is geuen: so it skilleth not how great he be, vpõ whom this gentilnes is bestowed: this is sufficient that he is my dysciple, that I may accept and take it for a great benefyte.

He that receyueth you, receyueth me.

He that receyueth a prophete: in the name of a prophete. And he that receyueth a iust man in the name of a iust man.

The.xi. Chapter.

¶ And it came to passe that whan Jesus had made an ende of cõmaũdyng his twelue disciples, he departed thence to teache and preache in their cities.

The texte.

After that Jesus had instructed and furnished his disciples with these cõmaundementes, and commissions, to preache the gospell, he lefte them, that they being apart frõ their master, might make a triall of thẽselues, & proue what they coulde do: & went from the hill, ỹ he for his part might preache the gospel in ỹ cities of the Jewes.

Whan

¶ Whan Iohn beinge in prison hearde the workes of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and said vnto him: Art thou he that shal cum, or do we loke for another. Iesus answered and sayde vnto them: go and show Iohn agayne what ye haue heard & seene. The blinde receyue theyr syght, the lame walke, the lepros are clensed, the deefe heare, the dead are rayled vp, & the poore receyue the glad tidinges of the gospel. And happy is he that is not offended by me. The texte.

And at what time the fame of Iesus by the reason of his miracles whyche he wrought in many places, and by the reason of his wonderfull doctrine did increase dayly more and more thorough out al Iewry and in the countreyes nere vnto Iordane, where before Iohn had preached and baptized Iesus: the disciples of Iohn sumwhat now enuying the glory of Iesus, of whom as yet they had no greate opinion, whereas of Iohn they thoughte that he was sumwhat more than man: they tolde vnto Iohn beyng in pryson, what good successe & fortune came of all thinges whiche were doen by him, whome a litell before he had baptised in Iordane, and with whom he dyd beare witnes vnto the people.

Further Iohn a man of perfecte holynes, reioysing that it now came to passe whiche he spake before, that the name & opinion of him selfe, which was greater than it was in dede, did decrease and diminishe, and the fame and opinion of Iesus did dayly increase and spred abrod, perceyuing also the enuious affectiõs of his disciples, to thintent that he might heale their weakenes and abandone them from him & delyuer them to Iesus: he chose out two of them & sent them to Iesus, to saye vnto hym in hys name these wordes: Arte thou that Messyas, whiche was sayde should cum, or arte thou not he whõ I spake of before, and do we yet loke for an other? Thus did Iohn, not that he was in doubt, but to confirme & establish the mindes of his disciples, and throughly to abolish & put away the ouer great suspicion that they had of him selfe, supposing him to be christ. For if he should haue denied ỹ he was Christ & should haue repeted that which he had oftẽ spoken before that Iesus is Messyas, his disciples wold haue imputed it vnto humilitie: & the more he should haue humbled him self, the greater opinion woulde they haue had of him. But he knew ỹ Iesus him self could best heale & cure this their weakenes. They go vnto Iesus & tel him what Iohn commaunded them. Iesus knowing that the testimony which is gathered of dedes, is more certaine thã that which springeth of wordes: chiefly if a man testifieth with himselfe, made none aunswere at the fyrst, but euen before their face worcking many wonders both new, & which haue not ben heard of, healing ỹ sicke, chasing away the vncleane spirites, restoring the lame, geuyng sight to the blinde, sayth vnto them: It nedeth not for me to showe what I am. Only go and showe vnto Iohn what ye haue seene with your eyes, and what ye haue hearde with your eares. The blynde receyueth sight, the lame walketh, the lepers be clensed, the deafe heareth, the demoniacke whiche be troubled with deuilles, be delyuered: the deade rise agayne: Finally according to the prophecy of Esay, the pore and humble doth embrace the ioyfull tidinges of euerlasting lyfe, whiche the stoute and arrogãt do dispise. These workes do declare sufficiently what I am. And blessed is he vnto whose mynde suche greate successe of the gospel geueth not occasion of ill. Jesus spake this also noting modestly the enuy of John hys disciples, but in suche wise that they should not be put to shame before the multitude, but shoulde knowe theyr fawte secretely wyth them selues: tempering his answere by al meanes, both that he might auoyde suspicion of arrogancy, and that the disciples myghte beleue hym the better, and also that he myght rather heale their affection, than openlye to reproue them.

The texte. ¶ And as they departed, Jesus began to speake vnto the people concernyng John. What went ye out into the wildernes to see? a reede that is shaken w the winde? go to, what went ye out to see? a man clothed in soft rayment? behold they þ weare softe clothing are in kinges houses. But what went ye out for to see? a prophete? verely I say vnto you, & more than a prophete. For this is he of whom it is writte: Behold I sende my messenger before thy face, who shal prepare thy way, before the. Verely I say vnto you: emong thē that be borne of women arose not a greater thā John þ baptist. Yet he that is lesse in the kyngdom of heuen, is greater than he. From þ daies of John baptist vntil this day the kingdom of heuen suffereth violence, and the violent plucke it vnto them. For al the prophetes, and the law it self prophecyed vnto John And yf ye wil receyue it, this is Helias, which was for to cum. He that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

And as they departed, Jesus began to speake vnto þ people concernynge John.

Then when they were departed, Jesus turnynge vnto the multitude, lest they shoulde surmyse any thyng of John otherwyse than were conuenient, supposing that he demaunded these thinges as thoughe he had bene in doubt himself, & not rather to heale the weakenes of his disciples: he began to set furth the prayses of John very largely, but yet in such wise that he would not geue him the prayse of Messyas, but the nexte prayse onely, and yet he would that John his testimony concerning him, shoulde be of weyght. For it was expedient that the people should haue a very good opinion of John, whiche had testifyed so notablye of Jesus, that he was the sonne of god, that he was the lambe which should take away the sinnes of the worlde, that it was he that should baptise in fier & spirit. For nether vanitie nor lying could be suspected in suche a man as though he had falsely so praysed Christ before: nor wauering or inconstancye, as though beyng chaunged afterwarde he should haue begonne to doubte of Christ. Let no man (q he) suspect John of inconstancie.

What went ye oute into wyldernes to see? a reede that is shaken with þ wynde,

For yf ye thynke hym such a one that he wyl chaunge his mynd after that maner of mutable men: and doubt of that thyng which he before affirmed for what cause dyd ye lately flocke together in wyldernes to gase and loke on? To see a rede shaken with the wyndes? For suche maner a man should he be, yf he wolde nowe swarue and dissent from him selfe, and shoulde becum muche vnlyke vnto him self. But the continuall hardnes of hys hole lyfe, doth lyghtly delyuer him from this suspicion. What I saye, ranne ye together into wildernes for to see? A man gayly appareled wyth sylkes? This was a syght nothyng meete for wyldrenes. For they that be clothed wyth fyne lynnen and sylkes be in kynges palaces, vnto whome dothe agree excesse and riot, and delicate liuyng. And emonge them inconstancye and flattery hath place. He that lyueth with locustes and wylde honny, he that is clothed with Camels heare, he that is gyrded wyth a letheren gyrdle, is not thus suspected nor misdemed. And the familiaritie of the kinges courte coulde not alter his ordre. The pryson doth declare and shewe that he coulde not flatter. But it must nedes be sum great spectacle and syght whiche drewe you so thicke into the deserte. Therfore what came ye to be-holde: Any prophet: for they be commonlye wunt to leade theyr lyues in desert.

Here truelye ye be not frustrate of youre hope. For ye haue not seene onlye a prophet, but a more excellent thyng than a prophete. For it is he of whome Malachias once prophecied, that he should cum before Messyas beyng nowe at hande, that he should not onelye by hys oracle and true saying, promyse him to cum long after, but also poynte him with his fynger to be at hand. Thus is the prophecy: Loe sayth he, I sende my angell before thy face to prepare thy way for thy cõmyng at hand. This I assure you, so great is the excellency of John, that none is greater than he, emong the al that hath ben borne of a woman. Yet he which is at this present estemed lesse of many in preachyng of the gospel, onely is greater than he, for he promysed not with doubtfull prophecies ẏ Messyas once should cum, but he shewed hym and appoynted hym nowe cummynge, and preached that the kyngdome of heauen was nowe at hande. Hytherto the heauenly doctrine was looked for, whyche the fygures of the patriarches, whych also the oracles of the prophetes had darkely promysed. Now John so excited and fyred the hartes of many to the desyre of euangelical doctrine, that from the begynnyng of his preachyng, vnto this daye they breake in vnto it thorough the violence of fayth, bothe sinners and heathen people, and wyll we, nil we, they plucke it, and rauysshe it wyolently. They wyll no longer be excluded, they wyll no longer be detayned in shadowes, and darke ryddelles of the olde lawe, perceyuynge that the lyghte of the euangelicall truth is at hande, and that the thyng is nowe presente, whiche was shewed and sygnyfyed in the former bokes, perceyuynge also that none other prophecie ought to be looked for, touching Messyas that shoulde cum. For all fygures by the whyche the lawe poynted Messias to cum, and all prophecies of the prophetes, whyche promysed that Messyas should cum, as sone as John came, left of to promise the thing to cum. For it is folyshnes to loke for the thing ẏ is present, as though it were to cum.

There is no more to doe, but feruently and gredelye to catche, and take that whiche agreably to the true sayinges of the prophetes, is nowe presently offered. And to thintent ye maye playnly see that hereafter there is none other prophete whiche shall shewe you of Messyas to cum, thys is that John whome Malachias vnder Helias name (whome he folowed in austeritie and hardenes of lyuynge, & apparell, whome he folowed also in franke reprouing of kinges) prophecied before should cum before ẏ Christ did cum. Wherfore yf ye receyue him, beleue ye that Messyas so long looked for, is nowe at hande: ye haue seen his lyke, ye haue heard his testimonie, ye heare also what I wyl saye vnto you. Yf any haue eares to receyue the truthe, let him heare: yf any wyl stop his eares, let him thanke him selfe of his owne vndoyng. There is nothyng omytted of vs that maye moue the hartes of all men.

I saye vnto you among the that be borne of women, &c.

For all the prophetes and the law it self prophecyed vnto John.

And yf ye wyl receyue it, thys is Helyas whiche was to cum.

He that hathe eares to heare, let hym heare,

¶ But where vnto shall I lyken this generation? It is lyke vnto chyldren which sit in the market places, & cal vnto theyr felowes & say: We haue pyped vnto you, and ye haue not daũsed, we haue mourned vnto you, & ye haue not sorowed. For John came neyther eatyng nor drynkyng, and they say he hath a deuyl. The sonne of man came, eatyng & drinkyng, and they say: beholde the glutton, and the wyne bybber, a frende to the publicanes, and to the sinners. And wisedome is iustified of her chyldren.

And yet I see many so obstinatlye vnbeleuyng, that neyther afrayed by the austeritie of John, nor allured by my curtesye and wel doyng, wyll receyue the ryght why the they haue loked for nowe so long time by the prophyte of the prophetes. What maner of generation shal I deal this? Or by what cõpatiõ maye I set it furth? It is lyke vnto chyldren syttyng in the market place, which with a common song crie thus to their felowes a far of: we haue song you pleasaunt thinges vpon our pypes, and ye haue not daunced: we haue song you sorowful thinges, and ye haue not wayled.

We haue proued and assayed one thyng, but dyuers wayes. Neyther way hath ben profytable vnto the vnbeleuers, lower and vntractable. John mynding to fyre vp this nation vnto penaunce, (as it wer) in a sorowful song came furth with great austeritie and hardnes of lyfe, fasting, and abstaynyng from all delicate meates, forbearyng wyne, and drynkyng water. And I wil not let to saye that he is possessed with the deuyll, that farre they be from folowynge of him. The sonne of man came furth mindynge to fyre vp this nation to the loue of the heauenly doctrine, as it wer with a more merye song of the pypes, and that he myght allure them the more with his gentylnes, he hydeth not him selfe in delect places, nor weareth no notable rought garment, nor vseth no notable lower meates, but frameth him self to all men, and dispysyng the cumpanye of no man, eateth all maner of meates, and drynketh what so euer is set before hym: and agayne they picke quarelles, falsely to reproue him, saying. Behold ỹ great eater, the wyne bybber, the frende of the publicans and sinners. They that be not moued with austeritie & roughnes, be wonte to be wonne by fayre speakyng and gentilnes. But this naciõ by euery occasion is made worse and turneth euery remedy and medicine into a matter of greater dysease & syckenes. But by the more waies they be prouoked to healthand saluatiõ, the more euident it shal be to al men, that they perishe through theyr owne malice: and the wysedome of God, by whose counsell all these thynges be done, shall haue the prayse of ryghteousnesse emonge her chyldren, when they shall see the that appered greate men and iust men before the worlde, to be repelled from the kyngdome of heauen for theyr vnbeleefe: Contrarywyse when they shall se synners, publycannes, harlottes, heathen people, humble and abiecte, to be receyued into euerlastyng saluation for the redines of theyr fayth.

The sonne of man came eatyng, & drinkig.

And wysedom is iustified by her owne childzen.

Than began he to vpbrayde the cities, in which most of his miracles were done: because they repented not of theyr synnes. Wo vnto the Chorazin. Wo vnto the Bethsaida. For yf the miracles whiche were showed to you had bene done in the citie of Tyre or Sydon, they had repented of theyr synnes long a gone in sacke clothe & ashes. But I say vnto you, it shal be better with Tyre & Sydon in the daye of iudgement, than with you. And thou Capernaũ, which art lyft vp vnto heuẽ, shalt be brought downe to hel. For if the miracles which haue ben done in ỹ, had bene showed in Sodome, they had remayned vntyl this day: But I say vnto you, that it shall be better with Sodom in the day of iudgement, than with the.

Here Jesus musyng in manner at the inuincible malyce of certayne people, for the feare and example of others, began to rebuke the cities whiche where as he had shewed many miracles, and healed men, and taughte so manye thynges: yet they were not styred to repentaunce of theyr former lyfe, saying: Wo be to the Chorazin: wo be to the Bethsaida: for yf the wonders which haue bene showed in you, had bene sene in Tyre and Sydon

Wo be to the Chorazin. Wo be to the Bethsaida,

don. which cities ye abhorre as heathen and wycked, longe a goe they being contrite wold haue done penaunce in heer clothes & asshes. And in the meane tyme ye stande in your owne conceite, because ye be of the stocke of Israell, because ye sacrifyce not vnto Idolles, because ye be not geuen to riot and excesse so openly and loosly, because ye worshyp one god, because ye be the chyldren of Abrahaam, because ye haue the lawe and the prophetes: but vnlesse ye repēt you, all these thinges shal turne into the heape of your damnacion. For this I assure you, in the daye of goddes iudgement whan euery man shalbe iudged of god, not after opinion and heare saye, but accordyng to his deserte: Tyrus and Sydon shall be more gentely handled than you. They shalbe the more easely punyshed because they were not styrred to penaūce as ye be. And thou o Capernaum, whiche now standyng in thine owne cōceite, art in courage as high as heauen: shalt thā be plucked doune to hell. Thou reioisest with thy selfe as though thou were righteous & doest abhorre the dwellers of Sodome which in tyme paste were horribly punished for theyr sinnes: but in the daye of iudgemēt theyr dānaciō shalbe more easy than thyne. For yf those miracles had bene wrought in Sodome whiche haue bene showed in the, they wolde haue sacryfied by penaūce, god ỹ was offended with thē, and theyr cities had stāde vnto this daie.

But I saye vnto you: it shall be better with Tyre and Sydon in the daye of iudgemente, than with you.

And when the disciples were returned vnto Iesus frō their preching and tolde him cherefully, that the matter came wel to passe, he teaching vs ỹ what so euer we do praise worthy, ought to be ascribed vnto God, lifting his eies vp vnto heauen, saide: I thanke the o father, which art lord of heauen & yearth, and by whose wisdom all thynges be gouerned, because thou hast hyd this heauenly philosophye frō them that be high minded & puffed vp with pride through an opiniō of theyr worldlie wisdome & polycy: and hast opened it to the lytil ones, & to the meke, and to foles after ỹ worldes iudgemēt. Truely so it is father, for so it is thought best vnto thy gētilnes: to teach that ỹ art not pleased with the stowte, & such as trust vnto theyr owne iustice and wisdom: & that they be great with ỹ, for the simplicitie of faith, whō the world taketh for fooles & abiectes. So it pleased thy godly wisdom to condēne the wisdom of man, & to drawe vnto the good men by the humilitie of the doctrine euāgelicall. And by & by turning to thē that stode about him, saide: My father is the author & the cause of all these good thynges, who hath deliuered all vnto me. To knowe him & me, is the very true felicitie. And he doth not bowe him selfe but to quiet & meke myndes. This is a certain secret Philosophy & not knowē vnto the world. Here Iesus consyderyng in his mynde the great myserye and calamitie of mankynde, sum to be oppressed with pouertie, agayne sum more greuously to be tormented with care for riches, sum to be greued with diseases, sum with olde age, sum to be vexed with loue, and sum more greuously troubled with hatred, many to wander and wauer in sundry mazes of false opinions, many to be afflicted & greued inwardly vō the conscience of theyr sinnes, & that there was none, which plaied the parte of a faithful and effectuall pastor, where as there were innumerable whiche toke vpon them to be prestes in countenaūce & hawtie behauiour, which magnified them selfes by the name of master and Raby, and whiche dyd exacte theyr tythes: moued with pitie and compassion, doth inuite and call vnto hym all men, promising of his owne accorde vnto all men cumforte and remedy, so that with a single and a syncere harte they cum vnto hym, and shakyng of the most miserable and most greuous yoke of the worlde, take vpon them the yoke of the doctrine euangelical. ¶The.xii. Chapiter.

¶And that tyme, Jesus went on the sabboth dayes through the corne, & his disciples were an hungred, & began to pluche the eares of corne, & to eate. But whan the Pharisees sawe it, they said vnto him: beholde thy disciples do that which is not lawfull to do vpon the sabboth day. But he sayde vnto them: haue ye not red what Dauid dyd whā he was an hūgered, and they ꝑ were with him: how he entred in to the house of god, & dyd eat ꝑ shewe breades, which were not lawfull for him to eat, neither for thē which were with him, but onely for ꝑ priestes. Or haue ye not red in the lawe howe ꝑ on the sabboth dayes ꝑ priestes in the tēple breake the sabboth, & are blameles? but I sai vnto you: ꝑ in this place is one greaterthā the tēple. Wherfore yf ye wist what this meaneth, I wyl mercy, and not sacrifice: ye would not haue cōdempned innocentes. For the sonne of manne is lorde also of the Sabboth daye.

The texte.

AND vpon a certayne daye as Jesus wente by the corne, and hys Disciples stryred with hunger, and goynge before hym, plucked the eares of the corne, & rubbing thē with their handes eate the corne: the Pharisees takyng occasion on euerye syde falsely to blame thē, said vnto him: Seest thou not what thy disciples do brekyng ꝑ Sabboth daye? Why than doest thou not forbyd them, sythe they do vpon ꝑ Saboth daye, that which is not lawfull? Here Jesus so defēded his disciples, that they coulde not blame hym, as ꝑ aucthour of brekynge of the sabboth day, and teacheth them with all, ꝑ suche maner ordinaunces ought to cease as often as necessitie or sum notable profyte chaūceth. For the sabboth daye, fastinges, & suche lyke cōstitutions were not ordeined for mānes hurt, & vndoing, but for his preseruation & health. Therfore he doth obiect against ꝑ Pharisees being skilful in the lawe, an example out of the lawe, & that of a mā not of the cōmon sort, but of him whome they coūted chiefly to be an honest man & blameles. Why (q he) do ye falsely blame my disciples for that they asswage they hunger with a smal thing, & ealy to be gotte? haue ye not red, howe ꝑ holy Dauid constrayned by necessitie, enterprised a greater thinge? Who fleing from Saule, when he came to the citie of

Haue ye not read what Dauid dydde whā he was an hun

gred, and they that wer with hym

Nobe, dyd eate the holy loues, which they called the loues set furth to be showed, and not onely he, but also his kolowers and seruauntes? It is vnlaufull for any man sauing onely priestes and Leuites to eate of these loues: but whē he was in daunger for hūger, neither the priest feared to shewe hym these loues, nor Dauid feared not to touche and eate them, as though they had ben prophane and not holy. Yf ye alow the doyng of the priest Abimalech: yf ye disalow not the doyng of the prophet Dauid: why do ye reproue my disciples for a thing much lesse to be regarded? For what a small worke is this to plucke vp the eares of corne being at hande & to eate the corne rubbed out with your handes? Besides this the law it selfe cōmaundeth the sabboth to be broken.

Or haue ye not red in the lawe how that on the sabboth days, the priestes in the temple breke the sabboth & are blameleſſe,

For the priestes in the temple killing the beastes on the sabboth daie, and exercising the butcherly office: gathering togither a pile of wood and setting it a fier, plucking of the skinne, cuttyng thē in pieces and sethyng them, breake not they the sabboth daye? the lawe suffereth no worke to be done, and yet the sacrate priestes do exercise and vse these fowle workes in an holy place, vpon the sabboth day. Ye knowe that these thinges be done, & ye do allowe them, for this, because they make for the vse of the temple. If the authoritie of the tēple be so great that the worke which is bestowed vpon it, doth not breke the sabboth daye,

But I saye vnto you: that in this place is one greatere then the tēple.

this I say vnto you: Here is one of greater authoritie than the temple. Thei that do seruice vnto him, ought more to be excused frō the blame of breakyng of the sabboth daye. If they breake not the sabboth daye with labour in the sacrifices of Moyses: muche more oughte they to be excused that serue and wayte vpon the gospell, whiche is a sacrifice moste acceptable to god. He that dyde ordayne the sabboth daye maye also take away the sabboth, & he that ordeineth the sabboth daye, dyd ordaine it for mānes sake, & contrary wyse he made not mā because of the sabboth dai. It is mete therfore ỹ the kepyng of the sabboth daye, Wherfore yf ye wyste what this meaneth I wyll mercy and not sacrifice. Ye wold not haue condemned innocentes, geue place to the profites & cōmoditie of men, & not mā to perish because of the sabboth date. If sacrifice be made so much of, that whoso attendeth vpon it, may blameleſſe breke the sabboth day: Why holde ye not him excused, which by a necessary benefyte helpeth his neighbour vpon ỹ sabboth daye? For God cōfesseth that he estemeth more this kind of sacrifice, than yf a man offer vp to him a beast. For he saieth to his prophet Osee. I delire mercy & not sacrifice: And the knowlege of god, more thā brent sacrifice. Ye take vpon you to be learned in the law, and yet this is writtē in the law, which yf ye truly vnderstode, ye wold neuer haue blamed them ỹ be blameleſſe, for a light matter, & noisom to no mā. For there be certain ordinaūces not ỹ thei be good or yl of themselfes, but ỹ by sum meanes thei be profitable towardes godlines, & do rather signify, thā bringe or geue holines: as be kindes of meate, ỹ colour or fasshion of garmentes, or the stuffe ỹ they must be made of, fasting & holy days. These thiges we must not so superstictously obserue and kepe, that for thē we omit & let passe things that be of themselfes, and euer good, or do those thigs which be of thēselfs & euer yl. Aduoutry, homicide, backbiting & enuy, be euer yl & wicked. And yet thei ỹ be of ỹ pharisaical religiō, do lesse abhorre frō these thynges than frome

the breakyng of the sabboth daye. To helpe thy nedye neyghboure is euer godly and holye, and yet the Phariseis vnder the coloure of kepinge of the sabboth daye, suffer their neighboure to be greued and vexed.

¶ But he departed theuse, and went into their Synagoge. And beholde there was a man hauynge a wythered hand. And they asked him, saying: Is it lawful to heale vpon the sabboth dayes? That they myght accuse him. And he sayde vnto the, who emonge you shall haue a shepe, and it it fall in a pitte on ỹ sabboth dayes, will he not take it & lyft it out? Than howe muche better is a man than a shepe? Wherfore it is lefull to do a good dede on the sabboth dayes. Than saieth he to ỹ man: Stretche furth thy hand. And he stretched it furth. And it was restored vnto health like as the other. The texte.

This daungerous superstition, Jesus Christ studyed clearely to plucke out of the myndes of his disciples. Therfore to the intent he might beat the same into the myndes of all men by a more manifest example, departynge from this place, he returned into their synagoge, myndynge to take them to witnes whom he knew to be chiefly infected with this disease. And beholde furthwith there was geuen hym occasyon of a myracle. For there was one in the multitude whiche had a lame and a withered right hande. Nowe the Phariseis sekyng after an honest quarell to accuse Jesus, marked hym whether he wolde heale the man vpon the sabboth daye, whiche a lytle before defended thapostles, where as they were blamed for breakyng of the sabboth daye. But Jesus myndynge to declare vnto all men, that their accusemẽt came not of religion but of enuye, he commaunded the mã with the lame hand to cum furth before them, ỹ the faulte myghte appere vnto them all, to thintent they might be moued with pitie towarde the miserable man, whiche had that membre dead and vnprofitable, ỹ is moste necessary for a poore man. But before he healed the man, not ignorant what the Phariseis thought, he demaunded of them this question. Is it lefull to heale a mã on the saboth day? And whether is it more tolerable emong you to do good to a man or to do yl, to saue a man or to destroy him? For he destroyeth hym who when he may saue hym, doth not saue hym. But they all helde their peace, least the people should thynke them cruell, yf they should saye, it were not lawful to helpe & succoure a miserable man on the sabboth daye, or least they shoulde lese their occasion to blame Jesus, yf they had aunswered it had bene lawfull.

And beholde there was a man hauyng a wythered hande.

And they asked hym sayinge? Is it lawefull to heale vpon the sabbothe dayes.

They therfore saying nothing, Jesus hym selfe bringyng furth an exãple leused the knot of the questiõ. Whiche emong you (q he) shall be fownde so religious & deuoute keper of the sabboth daye, that yf it chaunce one of hys shepe to be in daunger, by fallynge into the dyke on the sabboth daye, wyll he not put to his hande furthwith to plucke her out? If auarice can do so much with you, that ye had rather breake the sabboth daye, than to dymynish your substaunce by one shepe: howe muche more ought charitie to preuayle, and obtayne of you, to helpe youre neyghboure on the sabboth daye, whiche is farre better than a shepe? It is manifest therefore (I reporte me to you) to be lawful to helpe your neighboure with a good turne vpon the sabboth daye. But whan Jesus perceiued that their enuy wolde not be mitigated neyther by these wordes, nor by the syghte of the miserable man, and that they wolde not be moued by so euidente and playne reason, castyng hys eyes aboute, takyng it greuously, and beyng sory for such great blyndenes of their heartes, he turned vnto hym that had the drye ꝛ wythered hande, and sayde: Put forth thyne hande, and at that worde he put forth his hande as playnt and wymble, as the other was.

¶ Than the phariseis went oute, and healde a counsayle agaynste hym, howe they myght destroye hym. But Jesus whan he knewe it, departed thence, and much people followed him, and he healed them all, & chargeth them that they should not vtter him: that it might be fulfylled which was spoken by Esai the prophet, who saieth. Beholde my sonne, whom I haue chosen my beloued in whome my soule hath muche delight. I wyll put my spirit in hym, & he shall showe iudgement vnto the Gentiles. He shall not strive nor crye, neyther shall any man heare his voyce in the stretes. He shall not breake the bruised reede, and he shall not quenche the smokyng flaxe, til he sende furth iudgement vnto victory, and the Gentiles shall trust in hys name.

¶ The Phariseis dryuen into a rage by this so notable an acte, when they perceyued that they had lost an occasion to accuse Jesus, departing out of the synagoge, & leuynge the multitude whome they perceyued to beare a good mynde vnto Jesus, consulted secretly with the Herodianes, whyche also had to do with John his disciples, whiche enuyed the glory of Jesus, by what meanes they might ryddе Jesus out of the waye. They had nowe a wyll towardes murder, and nothyng lacked but a meete occasion. But Jesus not ignorant what they intended, withdrewe him selfe from that place, lest he myght seeme to haue geuen sum occasion of extreme delynge to the ragyng and furious men. He myght haue spytefully repressed them, he might haue ouerwhelmed them with miracles, he might haue destroyed them also, but myndyng to showe the euangelical mekenes, gaue place to their rage and furye, yf perhappes they woulde relent and repente, and thus farre he gaue place vnto them, that neuertheles in other places he distributed his heauenly doctrine vnto the multitude, whiche folowed hym thicke and threfolde, and as many syckenes, or otherwyse mysserable, as were brought vnto hym, he healed them. For his tyme was not yet cum: the gospell was not yet sufficiently spred abrode. Wherfore he gaue place to them not to prouide for him selfe, but to take from them thoccasion of a wicked dede, & to teache withal, ỹ the wisdome of the gospel ought not to be defended against the disobedient with threatenynges, with checkes or cõtections, but with myldenes and mekenes. Therfore he cõmaunded the multitude that folowed him, that they should not disclose him, lest the rumour spreadyng abrode, the Phariseis might be styrred more and more. Neither was this thinge doen by chaunce, but it was prophecied nowe long before by the Prophete Esaye, that it shoulde so cum to passe in the wrytinges of the whiche prophet the Father doeth describe & set furth the victorye of his sonne, obtained thorough mekenes, & the saluacion of the gospell, translated to the Gentiles, for the pertinacie & stubbernes of the Jewes sufficiently knowen to al men. Beholde (sayeth he) my sonne whome I haue chosen before other: beholde my dere beloued, in whome my soule is delyted. I wyl geue vnto hym my meeke and gentil spirite, by thinspiracion whereof, he shal shewe iudgement, not onely to the people of Israell, but also to all nations. He shall not do this tumultuously or violently. For he shall not chide nor shall not crye oute agaynst them ỹ be cõtencious. No man shall heare his voyce in ỹ stretes, as they be wonte ỹ warre w̃ the tong. He shal geue place to ỹ inuinsible malice, but he shal endeuour to bring al vnto saluacion

But Jesus whan he knew it, departed thence.

And the people followed hym, & he healed them all.

And charged them that they shoulde not vtter hym.

That it myght be fulfylled, whyche was spoken by Esay. Who sayeth: beholde my sonne whom I haue chosen my beloued in whõ my soule hath muche delyghte.

uacion. He shall geue none occasion to the yll of theyr incurable distructyon, but he shall saue all, yf by any meanes they can turne themselues vnto the better. He wyll not dispyse the weake, he wyl not dispise the feable, in whome there shall remayne any good hope: he wyll cherysh thē, rather than oppresse them. He wyll not breake the browsed reede, and he wyll not quenche oute the smokyng flaxe, vntyll the truthe of it selfe, by the procesle of time, haue the higher hand, & vntill the madnes of the wicked thorough their owne defaulte, breake oute so farre, that all men maye perceyue, that they be worthely repelled and cast away. Than the Gentiles shall embrace his doctrine, which the Iewes dispised, and put their truste in him, whom the Iewes refused to truste.

¶ Than was brought vnto hym, a blynde and dumme man, vexed with the deuill: and he healed hym, insomuch that the blynde & dumme, bothe spake and saw. And all the people were amased, and sayde: Is not this the sonne of Dauid: But whan the pharisees heard it, they said: This felowe dryueth not out deuils but by ỹ helpe of Beelzebub the prince of deuils. But whan Iesus knew their thoughtes, he sayde vnto thē: Euery kyngdome deuided against it selfe, shalbe brought to naught. And euery cyte or house deuided against it selfe, shall not stande. And yf Sathan cast out Sathā, he is deuyded agaynst hym selfe. Howe than shal his kingdome endure. And if I cast out deuils by ỹ helpe of Beelzebub, by whose helpe do your childrē cast thē out: Therfore they shal be your iudges. But yf I cast out deuils by ỹ spirite of god, thā is ỹ kingdom of god cum vnto you. Or els how can one entre into a strong mans house & spoile his iewels, except he first bynde the strong mā, & thā spoyle his house.

It chaunced in the meane tyme that emong many whome he healed, they offred vnto Iesus, one that was possessed with a deuyl, which had taken from the wretched man both his eyes and his tong. Iesus cōmaunded the deuil to depart: he departed, & furth with the most miserable mā was holly restored, in such wise ỹ bothe he sawe & spake. The multitude was amased, at that so great a matter, & nowe suspectyng him to be Messias, they spake emong them selues: Is this that sōne of Dauid, whom the prophetes dyd promyse? Whan the pharisees hearde this voyce of the people, they sette not vpon Iesus hym selfe, of whome alwayes they had the worse, but they endeuoure to withdrawe the heartes of the multitude from the honoryng and veneration of him. It can not be (qᵗ they) that this is ỹ sōne of Dauid as ye suppose. For he shal cum borne vp & mayntained by ỹ power of god. He casteth not out deuyls by thelpe of god, sith he is wicked & a brekar of the sabboth day, a glutton, & a drunkard, & a companyon of the publicans but by thelpe of Beelzabub the prince of deuylles. Nowe Iesus although he hearde not their voyce, yet knowyng bothe what they thought, & what they spake to others, turnyng vnto the Pharisees, so ordereth his answer, that by manyfest reason he reproueth their madde railynge, and rebuke, and yet he rayleth not on them agayne, but rather prouoketh thē louyngly to embrace their helth and saluacion. Euery kyngdome (qᵗ he) deuyded with inwarde diuision and discorde, must nedes cum to naught. And euery house stryuyng with it selfe, with inwarde disagreyng, muste nedes fall. And yf Sathan dryueth oute Sathan, and yf one deuyll dryueth out an other, howe shall hys kyngdom endure? And howe is it likely and greable all diuelles beyng ennemyes of men, desyryng nothyng but the hurt and destruction of them, whose healthe miserably they do enuye, that nowe they fauour so greatly theyr healthe, that for this cause one deuyll

This felowe dryueth oute deuils, but by the healpe of Beelzebub.

But whan Iesus knewe their thoughtes, he sayde vnto them: Euery kyngdome deuyded against it selfe, shalbe brought to naughte.

And yf I caste oute deuylles by the helpe of Beelsebub: by whose helpe do youre children caste them out?

uyll stryueth and fyghteth with an other? Nowe yf I caste oute deuylles by the power and healpe of Beelzebub: these my disciples your chyldren, whome ye knowe, by whose helpe caste they oute deuylles? for they also caste out dyuelles, and yet ye reproue not them, but onely me ye falsely blame: and yet they haue myght of me to caste the oute. Therfore it can not be that they should chase awaye deuylles in the power of god, and I in the might of Beelzabub, sith they do it in my name. And therfore men vnlettered and vnlearned be able to do so great thynges, because they beleue simplye that by the power of god I chase awaye deuilles. Therfore theyr godly belefe shall condemne your vnbelefe, because ye desire rather vniustly to reproue where as ye might be godly folowers. And yf the thyng it selfe declare ẏ I do caste out deuylles not by thelpe of the deuyll, but by the mighte of god,

But yf I caste out deuyls by the spirite of god, than is the kyngdome of god, cum vnto you.

ye ought not to doubte any more, but that the sonne of Dauid is cum, and the kingdom of God, sith ye see that the strength of the aduersaries do banysh away, whan they whiche profesſe the gospell cal vpon my name. Therfore lyke as there is a concord & agremente emong the deuyls themselues to destroy al men: so I which am cum to saue al men, haue no concorde nor agrement with thē, but deadly dissencion & disagrement. Hytherto Beelzabub hath exercised his tyrany vpon sinful men geuen vnto fylthy desires: I takyng away the sinnes of men, do confounde & destroye Beelzebub the Prince with his hole garde, and I do restore vnto god thorough innocencie, whome he dyd possesse thorough vnrighteousnes. The thing is done by force, not by any agremēt betwene me & the deuils. They feele, & cōfesse that there is a present power wher vnto they be forced to geue place. Or els howe maye it be that anye man might enter into the tower of a myghty man, & take away his stuffe, vnlesse first he ouercum t he mighty man, and laye him in bandes? Than he once kept vnder whiche was able to resist, he will spoile ẏ whole house, & as it were cary away his praye. The worlde is the house of Beelzebub. In this he claimed to him a certaine kingdom, because ẏ whole world was geuē to ambicīō, excesse, filthy lustes, auarice, anger, enuy, and other noysome desires, by the which he is made mighty. I as a mā of more power & valiantnes haue entred into his kingdome, ouercummyng hym, haue wun again to the true prince, ẏ which he vniustly did possesse. Therfore ther is no agremēt betwene vs: ẏ princes be diuers, the kingdomes be diuers, by no bande or leage to be reconciled & made at one.

Or els howe can one entre in to a stronge mannes house

The texte.

¶ He that is not with me, is agaynst me: and he that gathereth not with me, scatte-reth abrode. Wherfore I saye vnto you, all maner of sinne & blasphemy shal be for-geuen men, but the blasphemy agaynst ẏ spirit, shall not be forgeuen men. And who-so euer speaketh a worde agaynst the sonne of mā, it shal be forgeuen him. But who-so euer speketh against ẏ holy gost, it shal not be for geuē him, neither in this world, nor in the worlde to cum. Eyther make the tree good, & his fruite good, or els make the tree euill, and his fruite euil. For the tree is knowen by his fruite. O generation of vipers, how can ye speke good thinges, whā ye your selfes are euil? for out of the abundaunce of ẏ harte, the mouthe speaketh: A good mā out of the good treasure of the harte, bryngeth furth good thinges. And an euil mā out of ẏ ill treasure bringeth furth euil thinges. But I say vnto you: that of euery ydle worde that men shal haue spoken, they shall geue accounte in the day of iudgemente. For of thy wordes thou shalt be iustified, and of thy wordes thou shalt be condemned.

He that will be grafte in the kingdome of god, must withdrawe hym selfe from the kingdome of Beelzabub and must fight against him in my tentes. No man can be at peace with god, vnlesse he be at warre with the

deuyll. I take goddes parte, and not Beelzabubes. Therfore who so is not in my tentes, is my enemy, and aduersarye. And who so healpethe not me in gatheryng together, is agaynst me in scateryng abrode. See that ye ioyne youre selfe to the better parte. It is better to obteyne healthe in the kyngdome of God, than euerlastyng death in the kyngdome of the deuyll. Ceasse from seruyng of sinne, and the deuil shall haue no power ouer you. God wyll receyue them to his kyngdome that run from him, and wyll not impute the sinnes of the former life be they neuer so outragiouse vnto suche as be penitent. This onelye be obserued, that no man blynded wyth enuy, and peruerted with malice, withstande the glory of god against hys owne conscience: and where as he seeth wyth hys eyes the diuine power by manifest signes and wonders to be opened to the worlde, that he attribute it not to the spirite of Beelzabub. Wherfore this I assure you, what so euer is done by worde or deed, shall be remitted vnto men, so that they repent them. God doeth easyly forgeue that which by any meanes is veniall and pardonable by the reason of frayltie of mannes nature. But yf any man speake blasphemy against the spirite of God, whose manyfest power he seeth of his playne workes, he shall scarcely find pardō and forgeuenes And who so speaketh blasphemy against the sonne of man, whome he dyspiseth for the weakenes of his flesshe, he shal be pardoned, because errour & ignorannce mixte with his doing, doth exclude peruerse & set malyce. But who so speaketh blasphemy against the holy gost, shal vneth obteyne pardon and forgeuenes, eyther in this worlde, or in the worlde to cum. This thynge spake Iesus to thintēt he wold keare the Phariseis from their obstinate frowardnes, because whan they sawe & perceyued that those thynges which he did could not be don but by the spirit and the myght of god, yet they moued with enuy resisted the glory of god, and ascribed his miracles vnto Beelzabub, whose spirite they sayd wrought in Christ. Whā after cōmon reason (sayth he) the tree is knowen of the fruit, why do ye blame the tree, sith ye can not but allowe and commende the fruite? The miracles whiche I worke, ease and releue the miseries of men, they hurt no mā: they be not done for vayne ostentation & glory, or for gayne and lucre but to do good, and to healpe. No man can denye but this is good, freely to do for them that be in affliction.

Why therfore saye ye that that whiche is good of it selfe, cummeth frome Beelzabub, who by your owne iudgement is all naught? If ye wyll hyde the blindenes of your mindes, ye must speake thinges that may stande together, now the thinges whiche ye spake, agree not together, after the cōmon iudgement of men. Therfore eyther make the tree good & hys fruite good, or els make the tree yll & his fruite ill. Eyther graūt that I am moued with a good spirite, where as ye graūt that my workes be good: or els say that my workes be ill, that youre saying may appere probable, where ye say that I haue the spirite of wicked Beelzabub. And yf my doinges be such that ye must nedes cōfesse that they be good, ascribe not good thinges to an ill authour. Ye kinred of vipers, yll mē springing of ill parentes, cōiecture and iudge ye by youre selues: Do ye not speake euen as ye be: and do not youre workes declare what spirite ye haue? Ye enuy the glorye of god, and falsely blame hys spirite. Frome whence cummeth so pestilente

Wherfore I say vnto you: all maner of synne and blasphemy shall be forgeuen men.

But who so euer speaketh against the holye gost it shall not be forgeue him nether in this world, nor in the worlde to cum.

Eyther make the tree good & his fruit good, or els make the tree euyl, and his fruit euyll.

O generatyon of vipers how can ye speake good thynges whan ye your selues ar euil?

fruit, but of an euil tree: For as it can not be that a wilde tree should bring furth gentyl fruit, & that a tree of poysoned iuyce should bring furth holsom appulles: euen so how can ye speake well sith ye be ill? For as the fruit taketh his taste and verdoure of the iuyce of the roote: so communication ryseth of that whiche is hyd in the harte. Lyke as a good man bryngethe furthe good thynges out of the good treasure of hys harte: so the yll man bryngeth furth ill thinges out of the euil tresure of his harte. Whose hart is replenished with godlines and charitie, they speke wordes which sauour of that that is in the harte. Whose harte is replenished with enuy, pryde, and auarice, they vse suche communication, whiche by the mouth doth vtter the affection of the harte. Men shal be esteemed before god not onely of theyr deedes, but also of theyr wordes. An ill thought is pestiferouse and noysom onely vnto the thynker: but yll talkyng doeth powre out the poyson of the hart emongest many. The tonge therfore must be refrained, not onely from outragious blasphemies, from skolding, chiding & backbiting & vncleanly communication but vtterly frō all thynges whereof cūmeth none honest profit or commoditie. Yea I saye vnto you that man shal render a counte in the day of iudgement not only for fylthy talking, but also for euery vaine, idle, & vnprofitable worde that they shal speake. For their wordes also shal be taken & accoūted for dedes. Of thy wordes either thou shalt be iudged good, if good wordes issue oute of a good hearte, or thou shalt be condemned as vniust, if yll wordes issue out of an ill harte. And here vnderstande ye the perfect iustice of the kingdō of heauen, far passing the iustice of Moyses law. For that lawe punysheth onely the manyfest blasphemy against god: here shal be punished also the taunte againste thy neyghbour, and not only the noysom and perilouse saying, but also the idle and vayne worde. For any reuylyng which is vnprofitable on ỹ tree, is the burden of the tree & not the fruyte: & therfore it is noysom, because it occupieth the time & the eares of ỹ hearer wout any fruit or profit of the hearer, whereas the tonge is geuen for this intente, that therwith we should profyt our selues and our neyghboure, and that with this member we should celebrate and magnifie the glorye of god.

For out of the aboundaunce of the herte the mouth speaketh.

A good mā out of the good treasoure of his heart bringeth forth good thynges.

But I say vnto you: that of euery ydle worde that mē shall haue spoken, they shall geue accounte in the daye of iudgemente.

For of thy wordes thou shalbe iustyfyed, and of thy wordes thou shalte be condemned.

¶ Than certayne of the scribes and pharisees asked him sayinge: master we wyll see a signe of the but he answered & sayd vnto them: The euyl and aduouterouse generation seketh a signe, and there shal no signe be geuē to them, but the signe of the prophet Jonas. For as Jonas was three dayes and three nyghtes in ỹ whales belly: so shal the sonne of man be three daies & three nyghtes in the harte of the yearth. The men of Niniue shal arise in the iudgement with this nacion, & condemne it, because they amended at the preachyng of Jonas: Beholde here is one greater than Jonas. The quene of the sowth shall rise in the iudgement with this generatiō: & shal condemne it. For she came frō the vtmost partes of the worlde, to heare the wisdome of Salomon. And behole in this place is one greater than Salomon.

Certayne of the scribes & pharisees whan they had hearde these thynges dissemblyng the rage of theyr myndes, goe vnto Jesus with more gentyll wordes, as though they would now beleue him, yf for theyr sake he would showe sum myracle, worthy and meete for them and also for him, who challenged to him the spirite of god, and had alwayes in hys mouthe the heauenly father. Master (q they) we which be not of the common sort, but lerned men, desyre of you to see sum notable signe from heauen, whiche maye declare that ye be derely beloued of god, and that ye doe that thing whiche ye doo by his power & myght. But Jesus knowyng theyr subtill thought and obstinate malice, whiche requyred a signe for none other intent, but to take a newe occasion hereby falsely to accuse hym, chyefly sithe it is more easie to pycke a quarell at those thynges, whiche be showed from heauen, than at those thynges whiche appere before the eyes, be heard wyth eares, and touched with handes: not bearynge so greate frowardnes, but in maner turning frō thē, & takynge it angerly (as it wer) wt hym selfe, made answere, saying: O naughty & countrefayte nacion, which doeth glorye that they haue god to theyr father, which doeth crake of her progenitour Abraham, where as it foloweth rather them whiche forsakyng god, worshipped the golden calfe: whych styrred sedicion againste Moyses: which murmured in the desert, whiche kylled the prophetes: where as it declareth that it hath Belzebub to her father, with whose spirit beyng replenyshed, it doeth rebel agaynst the spirite of God.

The cupll and aduouterous generacion seketh a sygne.

But it shall haue no signe geuen from heaueu, whiche maye calumniate and reproue it, and which it is vnworthye to haue, for as muche as it is wholy sette and geuen to the yearthe, but once there shall be a sygne geuen to it out of the yearth, whereby it maye be ouercum and vtterly perysh, yf it wyll not conuerte. This nacion meruayled at the myracle of the prophet Jonas, which swallowed vp of a beaste in the sea, was restored agayne alyue after thre dayes. This shalbe a sufficiēt signe for them, yf they may see him reuyue agayne by the diuine power, whome by theyr malyce they haue slayne. This myracle shortely shal be shewed vnto them, whiche they wyl falsly slaunder. For lyke as Jonas wyllyngly delyuered hym selfe to death, & was receyued of the beast of the sea, & was in her belly thre daies, and thre nyghtes, and beyng past hope of all menne, by and by thorough the healpe of god was restored alyue: so the sonne of man shal be dead in the harte of the yearthe thre dayes and thre nyghtes. By this figure and darke example, Jesus signifyed his deathe and buryal, and furthwith hys ryssing from death. And he added: As Jonas was to the Niniuites: so am I to you. He tolde them that the vengeaūce of god, and the destructyon of theyr citie was at hand, vnlesse they would repent: I declare the same vnto you al. But the Niniuites whome ye despise as heathen & ydolaters in comparison of you, shall ryse in the iudgemente of God, and shall declare you worthylye to be dampned in comparison of them. For they althoughe they were synfull, yet beynge afeard at the threatenynges of the prophete, humbled them selues vnto penaunce. And beholde: here is one greater than Jonas, whyche preacheth to you in vayne.

For as Jonas was thre daies and thre nightes in the whales belly.

The men of Minine shall aryse &c.

Because they amended at the preachyng of Jonas. Beholde here is one greater then Jonas.

The Niniuites were people farre frome the worshyppyng of God, Jonas vnknowen and symple and meke came vnto them. No man commended him, or tolde before of his cummynge, he shewed no myracles, he allured vnto him no body with benefite, he promised no greate thyng. Onely he threatened vndoyng and destruction, and he preached no lengar than thre dayes. I beyng promised by thoracles of the prophetes, so often commended by the testimony of John, by the testimony of the father, beyng your countreyman, being cum also of the same parentes of whome ye glory and crake: haue taught you now so long time, testifyng by so many miracles, that my doctryne is not vayne: haue holpe so many wyth my free benefites, and do not thunder sore threteninges, but of myne owne accord prompte forgeuenes of all symes: I offer euerlastyng felicitie of the heauenly kingdome: yet it is sayd that I haue the spirite of Beelzebub: I am layed at with deadly deceytes, so far ye be from bending and bowynge to true penaunce. Furthermore the quene of Saba, shal rise in the iudgemēt to the reproche and condemnation of this generacion, because that she by the reason of tidinges brought far of, leuyng her kyngdom & her contrey, toke a long iourney vnto Salomō, not moued by any feare, but only for ȳ desire of wisdō. And she did not onli cum to Salomō, but also she brought with her great gyftes. And beholde, there is one in this place greater than Salomon. For what lyke thing did Salomon to the thinges, which ye see me do? or what lyke thyng taught Salomon? And yet ye put me to all kynde of rebukes, whiche of myne owne accorde bryng vnto you the doctrine of the gospel, wherby ye may be saued: furthermore also ye go about to do me more greuouse displeasures whiche am beneficiall vnto you. But the greater the wonders & benefites be, whereby ye be prouoked vnto penaunce: the greuouser shal your punishment be, vnlesse ye repent in tyme.

The quene of ſ̄ south shall rise in the iugment with this generacīō, and shalcōdemne it And behold in this place is one greater then Salomō.

The texte. ¶ Whan the vnclene spirite is gone out of a man, he walketh thorough dry places seking rest, & kyndeth none. Than he sayeth: I wyl returne into my house, frō whēce I came. And whan he is cum he kyndeth it empty, & swepte, and garnished. Than he goeth and taketh vnto him seuē other spirites worse than him selfe, and so entereth in, & dwelleth there. And the ende of that man is worse thā the beginnyng. So shal it be also vnto this frowarde generacion.

Further what thing should chaunce vnto them, and into what blindenes the people of Israel should cum, and how miserably it should be handeled of the princes of Rome, and how it should be banished thorough oute the worlde, reiected and dispised of all nations: Iesus had rather to signifye by a certayne darke example, than to declare it manifestly.

And he taketh a similitude of a manne whiche was possessed of a deuyll, who where as he was once delyuered and restored to his righte mynde, afterwarde by his owne defaulte receyuynge the deuyll agayne, was more greuously vexed, than he was before. Whan an vncleane spirite (q̄ he) goeth out from a man, being banished from his olde hospital, walketh in dry and barren places seking rest and kindeth none.

Than sayth he with himselfe, I wyll returne into the house frome whence I went: where when he cummeth, he kindeth it decked and clensed, but with out any geest. Than he seyng that there is a place not occupied of anye other, not beyng content to returne thyther hymselfe alone, he taketh vnto him seuen other spirites worse than hym selfe, whiche entrynge into the house together, make theyr dwellyng there. And it cummeth to passe, that the man is more greuously vexed than he was before. So shall it happen to this vngratiouse nation. By this similitude Iesus noted the obstinate and wylfull malice of the people of Israell, fallynge backe oftentymes to theyr olde maners. In tymes paste they serued and folowed the deuillyshe vyces and desyres. It was sumwhat delyuered by the lawe and the prophetes, but returned often agayne to her owne manner and disposition. It returned to Idolles, it dyd sacrifice in the woodes, it killeth ȳ prophetes. It was redressed and amended thorough afflictions by Pharao in Egypt, by Nabuchodonoser in Babilon, and by diuerse other calamities

and miseries. Fynally prouoked of the sonne of god so many wayes, hathe not onlye renewed, but also farre exceded al the wyckednes of her forefathers, not onlye arayinge the harmelesse and the well doer wyth all kynde of spytefulnes, but also dryuynge him vnto the crosse and passyon wyth false accusementes. Whereof a certayne monstruouse blyndnes and seuen tymes more miserable than the blyndenes of theyr fathers, hath possessed theyr heartes, and therfore they shal be more cruelly handled and destroyed than they haue bene hitherto.

¶ And when he yet talked to the people, behold his mother and brethren stode without desyryng to speake with him. And one sayd vnto him: Beyold, thy mother & thy brethren stand without, desyryng to speake with the. But he aunswered & sayd vnto him that had told him. Who is my mother, or who be my brethren: & he put furth his hand towarde his disciples, saying: beholde my mother & my brethren. For who so doth the wyl of my father which is in heauen, the same is my brother, & sister and mother. The texte.

As Jesus spake these thynges to the people, there came the mother of Jesus with certayne of his cosens which desyred to speake with him. But when they coulde not cum vnto him for the multitude beynge so thycke, and standyng aboute the doores of the house, a boyce passynge ouer from one to another, a certayne man interrupted the communycacyon of Jesus, and tolde him that his mother and hys brethren were at the doore which desyred to speake with hym. But Jesus offended wyth thys importunitie and troublesumnes, and wyllynge also to teache that suche affections should be passed lytle vpon, as often as the matter of the gospell is in hande, and that the kinred of the myndes oughte more to be regarded than the kynred of the bodies, whiche is gotten by vertue and not by the nerenes of bloude, the whiche also is more large than thother, he answereth hym whyche interrupted hym: Who is my mother, and who are my brethren: I beyng occupyed aboute the heauenlye busines, knowledge no mother nor brethren, ioined by carnal affinitie: wherof sum be farre of perchaunce in heartes. And holdynge oute his hande towardes his disciples, which sitting nere receiued gredely in sylence his wholsome doctrine: yf ye wyll knowe (q he) my very true kynsfolkes which be most dere vnto me: these be my mother, my systers, & my brethren. Here is no dyfference of kind or of age, no respect of kynred. Who soeuer doth obeye the wyl of my father which is in heauen he is my mother, he is my sister, he is my brother. I esteme highely the spirituall & not the bodely affinitie. This affinitie euerye man maye cum by. Euerymā like as he is most obedīēt vnto my fathers wyl: so he is most neere and most deere vnto me.

And he put forth his hand toward his disciples saying: behold my mother, and my brethren.

The. xiii. Chapter.

¶ The same daye Jesus went out of the house, & sat by the sea syde, & muche people were gathered vnto him, insomuche that he went & sat in a shyp, & the people stoode on the shoore. And he spake many thynges to thē by similitudes saying: Beyold the sowyer went furth to sowe. And as he sowed, sum seades fell by the wayes syde, and the foules came and deuoured them vp. And sum fell vpon stony places, where they had not muche yearth, & anone they sprong vp, because they had no depnes of earth. And whan the sunne was vp they caughte heate, and because the had no roote they The texte.

wythered awaye. Agayne sum fel emonge the thornes, and the thornes sprong vp & choked them. But some fell into good grounde, and broughte furthe frute: sum an hundreth folde: sum sixty folde. Who soeuer hath eares to heare, let him heare.

AT the same tyme whan Jesus sawe that the place was not able to receyue suche a multitude, he wente out of the house to the waters syde. And whan he came thyther he satte vpon the banke, teachynge the people whiche gaped after his doctrine insaciablye. Further when he saw the multitude so greate and thycke, that they thrust hym and prelled him: and to thintent he might be at more libertye from the people, he entred into a shyppe, and spake out of that as oute of a pulpet, to the people standyng vpon the banke. For so he myght be bothe better sene and better heard of many, because the sande of the bancke and the bryncke of the bancke, made as thoughe it were a rounde auditory. And because in in that multitude euerye man had not one mynde, he shewed and set furth many thynges vnto them by darke symylitudes, eyther because thys maner of speakyng is familiare and commonly vsed of the prophetes: or because it is most meete & conuenient for to teache and to moue the myndes of the people, because that cõpatison taken of thynges that be wel knowẽ and perceyued also of them that be vnlerned, by and by toucheth and moueth euery one: or because by this feate and pleasaunt maner of speaking, thynges that be spokẽ both crepeth into mennes myndes more pleasauntlye, and stycketh more surely: or els because that this manner of monitton slaunderynge no man, but secretly by similitude touchynge euery mannes conscience, is wonte commonly lesse to offende. And fyrst of all he setteth fourth a parable, signyfying that many on euery side cum runnyng to the preachynge of the gospell, and yet fruite springeth not in them all: which chaunceth not by the faulte of the teacher, but by the faulte of the hearers. Nor lyke frute springeth not in all the hearers, but accordyng as euery man bryngeth a mynde voyde from worldlye cares and desyres: so is the frute of the worde that is hearde of him greatest. Therfore exhortyng to geue audience, he putteth furthe this parable sayinge: The sowyer wente furth to sowe his sede, & as he casted his sede abrod, certayne cornes fel by the wayes syde, and because they were bare & vncouered, the byrdes came flying & eate them vp. Agayne other sum fel in the roughe and stony places, which when they were not depely couered with yearth, because of stones that letted them, nor could not take roote depely ynoughe, they sprang vp shortely and before theyr time, throughe the warmnes of the sunne, because there was not moche yearth to kepe thẽ couered vnto theyr time, nor no deepe roote to minister humoure & moisture. Agayne other sum fel into the thornye grounde, and by the reason of increase of thornes, they were kepte downe & choked, and could not ryse nor springe vp at theyr libertie. Further other sum fel vpon a good and a frutful grounde, and springing vp luckeli, brought furth fruit, yet not al a like, but according to the goodnes of the ground: sum an hundreth fold, sum thre score folde, sum thyrty folde as muche: so that of one sede, sprang an eare that bare an hundrethe cornes: of another, that bare thre score, of a nother, that bare thyrty. Jesus speakyng these thynges dyd not as thã explicat and declare the darke riddel and dell and similitude, but leaueth it to euerye man to coniecture and thinke vpon in his minde. Onely he made an exhortacio that they that had meete eares should heare the parable dylygently.

The texte. ¶ And the disciples came, and sayde vnto hym: Why speakest thou to them by parables: he aunswerynge, sayde vnto them: It is geuen vnto you to knowe ꝑ mysterye-es of the kyngdome of heauen, but vnto them it is not geuen. For whosoeuer hath, to him shal be geuen, and he shall be made more abundaunte. But whosoeuer hath not, from hym shall be taken, that also whiche he hath.

But an other tyme when the disciples had Jesus alone, they went vnto him, & asked hym why he spake vnto the people by darke & obscure simplitudes. Unto whome Jesus aunswered on this wyse: because as yet they yelde not themselues mete to haue the truthe opened vnto thē, by the whiche certaine of thē emōg the multitude be not onely not the better, but also be pricked & styred to be the worse. Wherfore I vtter vnto thē like māner of preachyng as they bryng hartes to heare. They wil not vnderstād thinges that be moste manifest, I do inuolue & wrappe my language with darkenes, that by suche meanes I may prouoke them to the desire of learnynge and searchyng. But ye whiche receyue symple and desirouselye the thynge that is geuen, ye are worthy to be partakers of the more secrete thynges concernynge the wysedom of the gospel. For vnto hym ꝑ hath, it shall be geuen, that he maye haue abundantlye, but vnto hym that hath nothynge, nothyng shal be added, in so muche ꝑ he shal be also spoyled of that whiche he semed for to haue. In other thynges it is a cruell thynge to spoyle hym that is nedy: Here because pouerty cummeth throughe the defaulte of the nedy, it is mete and right to take away from the vnkynde man. We bring and offer frely certayne principles of heauenly Philosophy, & that accordynge to the capacitie and simplicitie of the myndes, as castynge certayne seedes, whiche who so receyueth desirously, truely he prouoketh vs to commit mo thynges vnto hym. Contrarywyse who so despiseth and reiecteth that which is geuē frely, & turneth it to occasiō of more yl, is he not worthy to be spoyled of that whiche he had vnworthyly?

The texte. ¶ Therfore speake I to thē by similitudes, because they seyng, se not, and they hearyng, heare not: and vnderstāde not. And ꝑ Prophecye of Esaye is fulfylled in them. whiche sayeth: Ye shall heare with your eares, and shal not vnderstand: & seynge ye shal see, & shal not see. For ꝑ harte of this people is waxed grosse, & their eares be dull of hearyng, and they haue shutte their eyes, least at any tyme they should see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstande with their harte, and be conuerted, and I heale them.

For this cause I speake to them in darke parables, because they wyll heare the manyfest truth eyther with no profyte, or els to their owne hurt. For it cōmeth to passe throughe their frowardenes, that where as they haue eyes and se manifest tokens, yet beynge blynded with enuy, they se not that whiche they see: And where as they haue eares and heare the truthe that can not be confuted, yet they heare not that, that they heare, nor vnderstāde not that whiche they heare, although they vnderstande. Truely the saying of Esaye is fulfylled in these men: Ye shall heare with your eares and not vnderstande, and ye shall se with your eyes, and yet not see. For the hart of this people is hardened, and they be dull of hearinge, and they haue closed their eyes, least they might see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstande with their harte, and at laste turne vnto me, and I make them whole. Truely these men therfore be infortunat, but not to be pitied though they be very miserable, which wittyngly and wylyngly seke their owne destruction, and reiect theyr owne health.

The texte. ¶ But blessed be your eyes, for they see: and your eares, for they heare. For verely I saye vnto you, that many prophetes and righteouse men desyred to se those thinges which ye see, and they haue not sene: and to heare those thynges which ye heare, and they haue not heard.

Contrarywyse your eyes are blessed, because they see the thynges that we do: youre eares are blessed, because they heare the thinges ꝑ we speake: Your hartes are blessed, because they vnderstande the wyll of my father. This is no meane nor cõmon felicitie, truely many prophetes, and manye iust and holy men haue desired to see the thynges which ye see, and happened not to see them: and to heare the thynges whych ye heare, and they had not the gyfte to heare them. And they trulye as in a dreame, gessed at the thynge that should cum, which ye see before you, and also heare.

The texte. ¶ Heare ye therfore the similitude of the sowyer. Whã one heareth the worde of the kyngdome, & vnderstandeth it not, than cummeth ꝑ euil one and taketh awaye that which was sowẽ in his hart, this is he which was sowẽ by the wayes syde. But he that receyued ꝑ sede, which was cast in stony places, ꝑ same is he ꝑ heareth ꝑ word, and anone wt ioye receiueth it, yet hath he no roote in hymselfe, but dureth for a season: for whan tribulation or persecution happeneth, because of the worde, by and by he falleth. He also that receyueth sede into ꝑ thornes: is he that heareth the worde, and the care of this worlde, and deceitfulnes of ritches choke vp the worde, and so is he made vnfruitful. But he that receiueth sede into the good ground, is he that heareth the worde and vnderstandeth it, whiche also beareth fruyte and bringeth furth, sum a hundreth folde, sum sixty folde, sum thirty folde.

Therfore because youre simplicitie and desire of knowledge deserueth this, harkẽ ye what the parable doth meane, which I put furth of ꝑ sowier sowing his sede. There be thre sortes of men, in whom the sede of the word of the gospel either bringeth furth no fruyte, or els bringeth not to perfection, the fruyt that is spronge vp. And the first is moste baren of all. These be they which lyghtly and negligently heare the wordes of the heauenlye doctrine, and suffer them not to entre into their myndes, nor fasten them in their remẽbraunce, to thintẽt they maye be rooted there: but their myndes beyng compassed and fensed with no desire nor care, beynge armed with no purposes against the assaultes of vaine thoughtes, at euery light occasion they suffre that that is sowen, to be spurned at and troden downe. That perceyuynge the yll and naughty one, whiche lieth in wayte and enuyeth good beginninges, by and by sendeth into the minde, certaine sleyng and wauerynge cares, which maye destroye the sede before that it spring vp in grasse, or haue any roote, that they be no better thã yf they had not heard at all. These be sygnyfied by the sede that fell by the hye waye, where go bothe men and beastes, that is to saye, all maner of cares, affectyons of kynred and of affinitie, care for common offices, loue, hatred, suspition, and suche other. These thynges chase awaye the worde of the gospell out of the mynde, welnere before it be receiued. Agayne there is an other, whiche receyueth as it wer seede, the worde of the gospell with his eares, and gredely putteth it into his harte, recordyng and deuysynge with hymselfe, to frame his life after the rule therof: but because he prynteth it not vtterlye in the inwardes of his minde, but after the fashion of men he doth that he doth lightly, with a certayne affection for a time, he nourysheth the seade

that he hathe taken, vntyll it be growen vp to a grasse, and showeth a certayne hope of euangelicall godlines, absteynynge from great sinnes, and florysshynge with meane vertues. But if any storme of persecution begyn to ryse, and yf for the gospel sake banishment be offred, or prison, punysshment, death, and suche other, whiche require a stedfast strength of the mind, than as at the vehement heate of the sunne, they wyther awaye, and vtterly faynte and decaye. A figure of this was the stonie grounde, which receyued the sede, & brought it forth in to grasse, but it was not able to succour and defend it with humour agaynste the heate of the sonne, for throughe the stones it can haue no depe nor sure roote. Againe there is an other whiche gredely heareth the worde of the gospel, and setteth it depe ynoughe in his mynde, and kepeth it long, but his minde being intangled and choked with troublesum cares of this worlde, and especiall of riches as it were w certayne thycke thornes he can not frely folow that he loueth. Because he wil not suffre these thornes which cleaue together & be intangled one with another emonge themselues to be cut awaye, the frupte of the sede that is sowen doth vtterly perish. This was signified by the similitude of ỹ sede whiche was receyued in the grounde full of thornes & breers. Further the sede that was receyued in the good grounde, signifieth them, whiche both heare the worde of the gospell and recorde it with them selues, and kasten it surely in theyr remembraunce, & so do powre it in to thaffections of theyr mynde, that they wyll not swarue from it to dye therfore, who also do ryd and deliuer them selues from affections and fylthy cares of ryches, which suffre not the mynde to be free and at libertie, but geue themselues wholy to the heauenly inspiracion. The sede of the doctrine of the gospel is not vnprofitable to suche mindes.

He also that receyueth sede into the thornes.

But he that receyueth sede into the good grounde.

But like as one kynd of wheate bringeth not forth like frute in al grounds, but it springeth with lesse or more increase accordyng to the goodnes of the ground: So after the godly desire and capacitie of them that heare the worde, the fruite of godlines commeth forth more aboundantely. By this parable Jesus taughte vs, with what studie & desire the heauenly doctrine ought to be receyued, if we desire that frute should spring of it.

Whyche also beareth fruit and bryngeth forth sum an hundreth fold, sum lyxtye folde, and sum thirtye folde.

These thynges Jesus dyd interprete and declare vnto his disciples a parte.

The texte.

¶ Another similitude put he furth vnto them saying: The kyngdome of heauen is likened vnto a man, whiche sowed good seede in his fyelde. But while men slepte, his ennemye came and sowed tares emonge the wheate, and went his waye. But whan the blade was sprong vp and had brought furth fruite, then appered the tares also. And the seruauntes of the householder came and sayde vnto hym: Syr dyddest not thou sowe good sede in thy felde: From whence then hath it tares: he sayd vnto them: The enuyouse man hath done this. The seruauntes sayd vnto hym. Wylt thou than that we go and wede them vp but he sayde: nay, least whyle ye gather vp the tares, ye plucke vp also the wheat with them: Let both growe together vntil ỹ haruest: and in tyme of haruest, I wyll saye to the repers, gather ye first the tares, and bynde them together in sheues to be brent, but gather the wheate into my barne

But let vs retourne vnto thorder of our former communicacion. The Lorde Jesus purposed vnto them another parable, to shewe them also that there was another poison and mischief to be taken hede of, yf a man wil laye vp pure and fine corne in his barne. For the other ylles do onely hurte the seed lately sowen, or springyng into grasse. This doth corrupte

the corne nowe spronge vp and well growen. This poyson is, whan Sathan which coulde not choke and destroy the seede of the euangelicall doctrine with flying, waueryng, and ydle thoughtes, nor with troublesome persecutions, nor with carefulnes of riches, honours & like thinges, wherwith mannes life is entangled, goeth aboute to infecte by false Apostles and wicked Byshoppes and Heretikes, whyche wresteth and wryeth by subtyll interpretacion, the heauenly doctrine after their lustes and desires, and myngle true thynges with false, and sincere and pure thynges with viciouse and fawtie. The parable is after this sorte. The kingdome of heauen (q he) is like vnto an husband man, whiche beyng a good husbād, sowed good seede in his felde. But his seruauntes beyng aslepe there came priuily a certayne aduersary, whiche bare the husbande man no good wil, and because he coulde not in the nyghte take awaye the seede whiche was nowe laied safely in the grounde: he vseth crafte and deceite to hurte it. He scattereth and mengeleth with the wheate that was sowen, the vnprofytable seede of cockelles, and this doen he went away. First no man perceyued this deceite. But whan the seede was nowe sprong vp into grasse, and the stalkes were laden & burdened with eares: than at length the cockelles growynge vp together, (their vnlykenes vtteryng or shewyng them,) began to appere. Than the seruauntes marueyling how this shoulde cum to passe, go vnto the husbande man. Master (q they) dyddeste not thou sowe good sede in the felde, howe is it than that cockelles be mēgled with them? But the master suspectyng who was aucthour of the shreude turne, sayth: Wyne aduersary dyd this, whiche beareth me so euyll wyl, that he hath a pleasure to hurte me, though he haue no profit himselfe therby. Thē spake the seruauntes: wyl ye than that we go and gather the cockelles & cleanse the corne? The mayster sayeth: In no case, least peraduenture as ye plucke vp the cockels vnaduisedly, ye plucke vp also therwith the wheat ꝑ groweth nere by. Suffer the wheate to growe together with the cockelles vnto hauerst tyme. Than wyll I commit this matter to the haruest folkes, that before they mowe and cut downe, they shall first gather the cockelles and bynde them together aparte in bundels for to fede the fyer, & afterwarde lay vp and couche the cleane wheate in my barne.

But whyle men slepte

But whan that sede was nowe sprong vp.

And the seruauntes of the householder came, and sayd vnto hym: syr dyddeste not thou sowe good sede in thy fyelde.

The texte. ¶ Another parable put he furth vnto them, saynge: The kyngdom of heauen is like to a grayne of mustarde seade, which a man toke & sowed in his felde, whiche is the least of al sedes. But whan it is growē, it is the greatest emong herbes, and is a tree, so that the byrdes of the ayer cum and make their nestes in the braunches therof.

Agayne Jesus minding to shewe by a similitude how that the Philosophy of the gospel first in apperaunce abiecte and homly through the ignominy, and slaunder of the crosse, being as it were planted by a fewe vnlearned men, shoulde by litle and litle through the strength of the truth, growe to suche might and power, that it should go ouer all the worlde, & shoulde embrace al kynde of mē: proposed this riddel & similitude: The kingdome of heauen (q he) is lyke vnto a musterde seede, whiche a certayne man toke and sowed in his felde. Whiche of it selfe is lest emong al pulse. But whā it is growne vp, it is greater thā al kyndes of herbes, & riseth vp as bigge as a tree, insomuch that the birdes make their nestes in the bowes therof.

The texte. ¶ An other similitude spake he vnto them: The kingdom of heauen is like vnto le-

uen, which a woman taketh, and hydeth in three peckes of meale till all be leuened. All these thinges spake Jesus vnto the people by similitudes, and without a parable spake he nothynge vnto them, that it myght be fulfilled whiche was spoken by the prophet that sayeth: I will open my mouthe in parables, I wil speake furth thinges hydden from the begynnyng of the worlde

Agayne Jesus did inculcat and beate in the selfe same thing, doing the to vnderstande by what meanes the strength and might of the doctrine of the gospell secretely crepyng in, and dispersed and set abrode by a fewe apostles, should altre & transforme all the worlde into her nature: and whan it shall seme most to be consumed and extinct, than chiefly it shall set forthe and shewe strength. The kingdome of heauen (sayth he) is lyke vnto leuen, whiche being but a litil quantitie, the woman put in three measures of meale, and there left it vntill the litill piece of leuen had chaunged by litill and lytil the whole quantitie of the meale and turned it in to her owne nature.

All these thinges Jesus declared vnto the people in riddelles, & cloudes of parables, and spake nothyng vnto the than, without a parable, to thintent that he might both excite and stirre their mindes with darke speking, and make them desirouse to learne, & yet geue them no holde thoughe they sought occasion busilye, vniustly to reproue hym. And the soothe saying of the Prophet tolde of this before in tyme past, I wyll open my mouthe in parables, I will showe furth thinges whyche hath ben hid hitherto, sith the worlde was made.

¶ Whan the people were sent away, Jesus came into the house, and his disciples came vnto him saying: Expounde vnto vs the parable of the tares of ꝑ felde. He answered and sayd vnto them: He that soweth the good seede, is the sonne of mā. The felde is the worlde. And the chyldren of the kyngdom, they are the good seede. The tares are the children of that naughty one: The enemy that sowety them is the Deuell. The harueſt is the end of the world. The reapers be the Aungels. As the tares therefore are gathered and brent in the fier: so shall it be in the end of this worlde, The sonne of man shal sende forthe his Aungelles, & they shal gather out of his kingdome all thynges that offende, and them whiche do iniquitie, and shall cast them into a furnace of fier. There shalbe wayling & gnashyng of teth. Than shall the righteouse shine as the sonne in the kyngdome of their father. Whosoeuer hath eares to heare, let him heare.

Than Jesus departyng from the multitude went home, and they folowed not for that they vnderstode not what he ment, and that none occasion was geuen of falfe reproue. Further whan he was at home alone, hys familiar disciples came vnto hym, requiryng hym to expound them the parable of the cockels mengled w̄ wheate. For the parable of the seed diuerſly sowen once declared, they gessed wel of thē selues what he mēt by ꝑ musterd seede, & the leuē put in the meale. Jesus without any griefe declared it playnely. The good husband (sayth he) whiche sowed the good sede is the heuenly father: the felde in whiche he sowed, is the whole worlde, and not only Jewry. Further the good wheat that sprang vp of the good seede be they, whiche by the doctrine of the gospel behaue thē selfe worthily for the kyngdome of heauen, agreing to their profession in life and dedes. The naughty cockels springing of the yll sede mengled with these, be yll men whyche profesſe not purely nor sincerely the doctryne of the gospell. And the aduersary whyche mengled hys sede prpuely in the nyghte, wherof

sprynge the peruerse & yl doctrine, is the deuil. The seruantes whiche would gather the cockel before the time, be they whiche thinke that the false apostelles and chiefe heretikes shoulde be rydde out of the way with swoorde and death, where as the good man of the howse willeth not ỹ they shoulde be killed, but suffered, yf happe be that they repent, and be turned from cockelles in to wheate. And that if they repente not, they shoulde be kepte and preserued to their iudge, of whom once they shall be punyshed. The tyme of harueste is the ende of the woorld. The harueste folkes be the angels. In the meane season therfore the ill mengled with the good muste be suffered, when they be suffered with lesse daunger and peril, than they be taken away. Further whan the last time shal cum, whan the good shall be seuered from the ill, when rewardes shall be geuen to euery man for hys dedes: than the sonne of man the iudge ouer all, shall sende furth hys angels to clense hys kyngdome, and they shall suffer none offence to remayne there, for than neyther the good can profite the ill: nor the ill shall be suffered any more to trouble the good: but who so euer liuynge emonge the good had rather molest and trouble them, than to be made better by their cumpany, he shall gather them togethere and shede them from the others, and deliuer them to the fier of hell. There shall they be punished woorlde withoute end for their shorte and false lustes and pleasures remoued from the flooze of the churche and cast in to a darke den of hell, ỹ is to say in to the kingdom of their father: where as now ouer late & vnprofitable penaunce shal force those miserable people to wepe & to wayl, & to gnashe with their teeth. Further they that cum and spring furthe of the good seede & perseuer and continue vnto thende, although in the meane tyme they appere here vile and abiecte, and be afflicted of the ill sorte: than all vilenes of mortalitie set a parte, they shall shyne like the bright sonne in their fathers kingdō. These thynges because they be greate & weyghty thinges, of both partes ought not to be heard negligently. They perteine eyther to ỹ euerlasting felicitie, or to the euerlasting destruction of all men. Wherfore who so euer hath an eare neyther deaf nor stopped with the delires of the woorlde, let hym heare, that he may auoide euerlasting punishemētes, & obteine ỹ life euerlasting.

Is the tares therfore are gathered and brent in the fyer: so shall it be in the ende of this woorld.

Then shall the righteous shyne as the sonne in the kyngdome of their father.

Whosoeuer hath eares to heare, let hym heare.

The texte. Agayne the kingdom of heauen is like vnto a treasure hyd in the felde whiche a man hath found and hid, and for ioye therof goeth and selleth al that he hath, and byeth the felde.

Beside these, to thintent he might the more kindle and stirre the mindes of them that were his, to the desire of theuangelicall godlines, he addeth two other similitudes, wherby he teacheth that the professiō of the gospell, is a thing not to be desired lightly, or after the cōmon maner, but that this onely thinge ought to be laboured for with greate study, all other thynges set a parte, and that this excellent good thyng must be purchased and obtayned by the losse of all our goodes. Which thyng though it chaunce not easily to euery manne, yet whan it is once found, it hath high felicitie: And although in the meane season it be hyde emong men, and setteth not forth it selfe: yet he that hath it, reioyceth secretly with hym selfe, lokyng safely for that daye, in the whiche the felicitie that is nowe obscure and darke, after shal be made manifest and open. The kyngdom of heauen (ỹ he) is like to a treasure hyd in the fyelde, whiche yf a man perchaunce do get, he blab-

Agayne the kyngdome of heauen (sy he) is lyke vnto a marchaunte man whiche delyteth in goodly Margarites. And when he had gotte a notable good one, by and by he solde all that he had, and bought it. And he thought not him selfe the poorer, because he had nowe lefte hym nothyng of hys olde ryches. Nay than at the length he thought him selfe ryche, because he was priuy to hym selfe, that he had in secret possession a precious Margarite, whiche thoughe it were but lyttel, yet it passed the pryce and value of all the other possessions.

CAgayne the kyngdome of heauen is lyke vnto a nette, that is cast in to the sea, and gathereth of all kynde of fyches, whiche whan it was full, men drue it to lande, and sat downe and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the ende of the worlde. The angels shall cum and seuer the bad from amongt the good, and shall cast them in to a fornace of fyer, there shalbe waylyng and gnashing of teeth.

The texte.

Unto these he added also an other parable, not vnlyke to the parable of the wheat and cockelles, exhorting his disciples, whome of fyshers he made apostles, that is to say fishers of men, that they shoulde study & endeuor to allure and draw many to the profession of the gospel, & that they should not by & by cast away and destroy the ill myngled with the good, but saue them and kepe them to be punished of theyr iudge, yf after that al thynges were proued, they woulde not repent. Againe the kingdome of heauē (sy he) is like a net cast into the sea, whiche beyng spred abrode, doth take and embrace all kynde of fishe. Whiche when they nowe perceyue to be full, than they drawe it to the banke, and nowe sittyng vpon the drye lande, chose the good fishes and put them in theyr vesselles, the yll and vnprofitable fishes they cast away. So shal it be in thende of the world. Thangels shal go furth & loke about what the net of the gospell doth take and draw. They shall not suffer the good to be mingled with the yll any more in one net, but they shal esteme euery man by his merites, not by his profession. They shall separate the yll from the cumpany of the good, and shall laye vp the one safely for their master, thother they shall cast into a burning fornace: there shalbe intollerable torment whiche shalbe testifyed by wepyng and gnashyng of teeth.

Jesus sayeth vnto them, haue ye vnderstand all these thinges? They saye vnto him, yea lorde. Then sayde he vnto them: therfore euery Scribe whiche is taught vnto the kingdome of heauen is lyke vnto a man that is an housholder, Whiche bryngeth furth out of hys treasure thynges newe and olde.

Jesus to thintent he might the more surely fasten these sayinges in the mindes of hys disciples: he asked of them, whether they vnderstode these thynges well. When they made aunswere that they vnderstode them, he added yet an other parable, wherby he monished them that these and many suche ought to be learned, and surely remembred, to thintent that by and by vpon euery occasion, they might redely take them furth: whether the hearer shoulde be allured with rewardes, or elles put in feare, by the feare of punishement. For the brest of the euangelicall preacher ought to be (as it wer) a certayne store house and a riche, & a plentifull treasure, from whence they may easely take out diuers thinges, sumtyme out of the bokes of the olde testament, sumtime out of the euangelical Philosophy, as shalbe most expedient for theyr hearers. For one thing must not be spoken at all tymes, nor after one faschion, nor all men be not moued with all thinges. Therfore they haue nede of a certayne riche treasure furnished with all kynde of learning. The parable is thus. The Scribes of the Jewes (sy he) when they be consulted, make aunswere out of theyr bokes. But whosoeuer will be a cunning Scribe in the kingdom of heauen, it is not sufficient for hym to bryng furth olde thinges, vnles he bringe furth newe also, lyke a certayne riche householder whiche hath all thynges in hys treasure, whether a man desire newe thinges, or whether he woulde haue olde thinges, to satisfie & content all men.

The texte. And it came to passe that when Jesus had finished these similitudes he departed thence. And whan he came in to his owne contrey, he taught them in theyre synagoges, in somuche that they were astonied, & sayde: whence commeth this wisedome and powers vnto hym? Is not this the carpenters sonne? Is not his mother called Mary? and hys brothren, James and Joseph, and Simon, & Judas, and are not all hys sisters with vs. Whence hath he all these thynges? And they were offended at hym, Jesus sayde vnto them: A prophet is not without honor saue in hys owne cuntrey, and in his owne house. And he did not many miracles there: because of theyr vnbelefe.

When that Jesus had taught sufficiently with these diuers parables, bothe the people and hys disciples, he went into hys countrey, that is to Nazareth, that by often chaunginge of the place, the doctrine of the gospell might be the farther spred abrode. In the whiche cuntrey of his, he beganne not hys prechyng, lest he shoulde seme any thing to folowe mannes affection, and yet he woulde not passe it ouer, to teache that we ought to do good vnto all. Jesus therfore entering into their congregacion, began to teache them as he had taught other. Here that thing hindred the matter of the gospell, whiche ought to haue furdered it, because the common sorte of men had rather to enuy thinges that be knowen and familiar, than fauour them, where as they make muche of straunge thynges fondely and folishely, esteming a thyng therfore to be goodly because it commeth far of. Therfore whan Jesus was knowen here of certaine which knewe the lowenes and simplenes of hys stocke, and the pouertie of hys parentes and also the arte wherby Joseph (commonly thought to be his father) founde and nourished hys wyfe and her sonne, knowing also that Jesus was of the same arte, and where as they neuer hearde saye, that he was brought vp in learning, thus they mutter and murmer amonge themselues: howe hath he this notable wisdome? or fro whence hath he power to showe myracles? Is not this Jesus the carpenter, Joseph the carpenters sonne? Is not hys mother mother pooze, and a meane woman amonge vs, whiche is called Marie: Be not hys cosens with vs James, Joseph, Simon, and Judas: Do not as many as be hys next kinsfolkes dwell here with vs: How is it than, that he sodenly being made another man, returneth vnto vs preaching, & mighty in miracles. Doth he thinke that he is vnknowen vnto vs: So the kindred & poore estate of Jesus, dyd offende them, and made them to stumble, thinking as yet nothing of him but as of a man, & one of the common sorte of people, and for tholde poorenes and lownes of hys lyfe, enuyinge the newe renoune and honour. But Jesus rebuking theyr grosse and ouer rude iudgement, esteming a man not for hys vertues, but for fortune and nobilitie of birthe, sayeth vnto them: A prophete is no where lesse set by, than in his owne cuntrey, and in hys owne familye, and among his owne kinsfolkes. And where in other places he was redely beleued, and showed many miracles, here he did worke none, but that with laying on his hãdes, he healed a fewe that were sicke. Not because his power was straighted or diminished, or hys wil chaunged, but because theyr vnbeleefe did let it. For like as a physicion can not profit the sicke if he refuse hys medicine: not because the arte of the physicion is not effectuall, but because the sicke man is in faute: so because it is the fayth vnto the whiche miracles be geuen, & vnbeleefe is a let to hym to showe them furthe, whiche lacketh neyther power nor might, but that he was letted by the defaulte of others. Therfore Jesus reprouing them for so greate malice, sayde: This is no newe thynge that ye now doe vnto me. The same chaunced in tymes past to the holy prophetes Hely and Helisee, whose tumbes ye haue now in veneration. For whan it rayned not three yeres and a halfe, and therfore a greate famyn was thorroughout all that cuntrey: Helyas beyng in daunger for hunger, was commaunded to go to no nother wedowe, where as there were many in Jewry, but vnto the straunger Sarepta, in the cuntrey of the Sidonians. Of this woman onely was he receyued, & founde fayth, and wrought a miracle. Farther in the time of Helisee, there were many lazares in the nacion of Israel, and yet for all thys there was none healed, but onely Naman a Syrian, whose fayth in a maner forced the Prophete to showe a miracle.

And hys bretheren James, and Joseph, and Simon, and Judas. Whence hath he thã al these thinges.

Jesus sayde vnto them: A prophet is not without honoure saue in his owne cuntrey

And he did no miracles there because of theyr vnbeleefe.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the .xiiii. chapter.

The texte. AT that tyme Herod the tetrarche heard of the fame of Jesu: and sayde vnto hys seruauntes: This is Johu the baptist, he is risen from the dead, and therefore are miracles wrought by hym. For Herod had taken John and bounde hym, and put him in prison because of Herodias hys brother Philips wife. For John sayde vnto hym: It is not lawful for the to haue her. And when he woulde haue put him to death, he feared the people, because they counted him as a prophet. But whan Herodes birth day was kept, the daughter of Herodias daunced before hym, and pleased Herode. Wherfore he promised w an othe that he woulde geue her what she woulde aske. And she being instructe of her mother before, sayd: geue me here John Baptist hed in a platter. And ꝑ king was sory, neuertheles for the othes sake, and thē which sat also at the table, he commaunded it to be geuen her, and sent tormentours, and beheaded John in the prison, and his head was brought in a platter, and geuen to the damsell, and she brought it to her mother.

IN the mean time Herod the Tetrarche of Galile, ꝑ sonne of hym whiche had slayne the chyldren of Bethlehem, heard the rumour and fame of the doctryne & miracles & wonders of Jesus: Of whom when ꝑ multitud had diuerse opiniōs, sum saying that he was Helie, sum that he was Hieremy, & sum that he was one of thold prophets, and there were that sayde that he was John, who restored agayne to lyfe, was becum now more myghty, Herode laughing them to skorne, sayde: I did cut of Johns head, and how thinke ye that he is alyue, and not onely alyue, but also to be mighty with miracles? Furthwith when he was certified by dyuers, of so many and so notable wonders, that the rumor now coulde not appere false, he sayde vnto hys seruauntes. He of whom they tell suche greate wonders is not Jesus, whiche of late was killed of my father in the number of the childzen of Bethleem, but it is John whiche is rysen from death: and therfore he is now becum more diuine and godly, and is notable by miracles. For Herod had layed handes vpō John Baptist, and cast hym into prison: although he had the man in estimacion, and did many thinges after hys aduyse and councell. But thys fauour of the tiraunt was turned into hatred, for the vnchast woman, whose fauour and loue obteyned by fylthy seruice coulde do more with the kyng, than the authoritie of John. For he had taken vnto hym for displeasure of hys brother that was alyue, Herodias hys brother Philippes wyfe: by whom also Philippe had a doughter. John monished the kyng frankly and freely, and tolde him that the mariage was vnlawfull, bothe because hys brother was alyue, and there was a doughter alyue also whiche hys brother had by her. Further Moyses law bad that the brother should mary the wyfe of the brother departed, yf it chaunced hym to dye withoute childzen. Herod louinge the woman the more outragiously, the lesse it was lawfull for hym to loue her, was greately offended with this libertye, insomuch that he would haue slayne him, but that he feared the styrring of the people, with whō he knewe that John was greately in fauoure, because both he baptised many, and had many disciples, and was thought of many to be Messyas. Truly euery man thought him to be a man indued with the spirite of prophecy & of great holynes. But afterwardes excesse and ryon, and vnreasonable loue towarde the mayde hys nece, shaked of thys feare. For whan after the maner of the heathens, he dyd solempnisat the day of hys birth, vpon the whiche there was

And when he woulde haue put him to death, he feared the people because they counted hym as a prophet.

was all maner of voluptuous pleasures vsed Herodias doughter daunsed at the kynges table, with wanton gesture, and pleased Herod whiche was nowe warme with wine, that he swore that he wolde geue vnto the mayde what so euer she asked, yea yf she wolde aske halfe of hys kingdome. The wenche, lest she shoulde leese so greate opportunitie, and by and by to abuse thys filthy lust of the kynges harte, she counselled with her mother what was to be asked. She fearyng lest the kinges minde beyng reconcyled agayne to John, might breake of the incest mariage, counselled her doughter to aske nothyng, but that furthwith she might haue the head of John Baptiste geuen vnto her in a dishe. The wenche by the counsell of her vngracious mother came in to the feast, & euery man lokyng what she wolde wishe & desyre: she asked furthwith that she might haue geuen vnto her the head of John in a dishe, as though her mother wolde esteme and make more of this dishe, than of halfe the kingdome. Whan they heard this otherwyse than they loked for, the kinge counterfeiteth heuines in hys countenaunce, & alleageth for a cloke of hys crueltie, the feare he had to breake his othe, chiefly because he made it before so many gestes, lest he shoulde seme light or periured, he commaunded that the thinge whiche the wenche desyred, shoulde be done. By and by the executours of death were sent in to the prison, and the head of the innocent man was cut of, and was brought in a dyshe, and geuen to the wenche, the wenche gaue it to her mother whiche was the chefe deuiser and doer of all this matter. And thus luckelye was the byrth daye of Herode celebrated. This rewarde was geuen vnto hym that moued & called to honest thynges. With this syght were the iyes of the gestes fedde whom the kynge dyd vouchesafe to set at hys table. Therfore the vnchaste woman had Johns head.

And she being instruct of her mother before sayde: geue me here John baptistes hed in a platter.

And the kyng was sory, neuer the lesse for the othes sake, and this whiche sat also at the table.

¶ And hys disciples came, & toke vp the body, and buried it, and went and tolde Jesus. Whan Jesus heard of it, he departed thence in a shyppe vnto a deserte place out of the waye. And when the people had hearde therof, they folowed hym on foote, and left the cyties. And Jesus went furth and sawe muche people, and was moued with mercye towarde them, and he healed of them those that were sicke. And whan euen drewe on, his disciples came to hym, sayinge: This is a desert place, and the houre is nowe paste, let the people departe, that they may go in to the townes, and by them vitayles. But Jesus sayde vnto them: they haue no nede to go away. Geue ye them to eate. They sayde vnto hym: we haue here but fyue loues and two fishes. He sayd: Bryng them hyther to me. And he commaunded the people to syt downe on the grasse, and he toke the fyue loues & two fyshes, and lyfte vp his iyes towarde heauen, and blessed. And when he had broken them he gaue the loues to the disciples, and the disciples gaue to the people, & they dyd all eate and were fylled. And they gathered vp the fragmentes that remayned, twelue basshettes full. And they that did eate were aboute fyue thousand men besyde women and chyldren.

The texte.

But the disciples of John caried away hys body and buried it. Whan Jesus by the tellyng of Johns disciples, knewe of this so cruell a dede (for as man he suffered it to be tolde vnto hym as though he knew it not, where as he knewe it before it was doen) departed into a shyp, that beyng separate from the multitude, he myght go into sum desert and secret place, shewyng a certayn apperaunce of manly feare, but in dede cuttyng of occasion from the wicked kyng, that he shoulde not heape murder vpon murder: Chefely sithe the time of Jesus was not yet cum, and therwith also teachyng vs to geue place sumtime to the furies of princes, least they beyng prouoked and chafed with well doynges, bothe hurte the innocentes, and they themselfes be made the worse. It is lawful to shune the wicked, ready to do vngraciously, that we may profite and helpe the good men. And this goyng aside declared the notable fayth of certayne. For assone as it was heard that Jesus had lefte the cyties, and was abyding in desert for feare of Herode as they thoughte, they wente oute of the cities into wildernes to hym, whiche hyd hymselfe in secrete places: & because they coulde not go to him by bote or by wagon, & suche like for the coumbrouse places, they folowed hym a foote: neyther feared nor discouraged by the hardnesse of the way, nor by the daunger of lacke of foode. So gredely nowe they began to hunger for the doctryne of the Gospel. Jesus perceyuing that, cummeth oute of the darke corners, and came to mete them that were desirouse of hym, like as he withdrewe himselfe from the wicked. And whan he sawe a greate multitude of men flockyng thither, whiche brought with them many encumbred with diuerse diseases, he moued with pitie, and considerynge and perceiuyng their fayth by the difficultie and hardenes of the way, of his owne accorde he healed all that were diseased. And so greate was the feruencie of the multitude, that where as they brought with them into wildernes sicke folkes, children, and many women, yet they brought no vitaill with them. Therefore when the nighte nowe drewe nere, & their stomackes wer pricked with hunger, the disciples whiche had seen so many miracles, hauing not yet throughly a perfect opinion of Jesus (for so it was thought good vnto the diuine wisdome to frame them by littell and littell vnto perfeccion, to the entent the fayethe of thynges that were done, myghte be the more firme & sure, & to teache them withall, by what meanes they shoulde heale and helpe the infirmitie of others) put theyr master in remembraunce that night was at hande, and the multitude was greate, and that it was high tyme than to take meate, and to sende them away, that they myghte go into the next villages, and euery man to prouide hym of vitayles. But Jesus to the intent the miracle myghte be the more euident and open, he aunswered: They nede not to go any whyther, rather geue ye them to eate. But the disciples as thoughe they had forgotten all that they had seene, nothyng awaked at thys saying, aunswered very grosly: But so that their weakenes set furth the greatnes of the myracle: shal we (qthey) geue a supper to so many: where as we be but thirtene in number, we haue very littell vitayle, truely nothyng els but fiue barley loues, and two fyshes. In case they delyde not, nor lothe not this supper, how shall it suffyse them whiche wyll scarce suffyse vs few? Than Jesus commaunded whatsoeuer they had to be brought vnto hym. The disciples obeyng symply not disputing the matter thus: than ye kil vs with hungar yf ye geue them thys littell that we haue, they broughte their whole vitayles.

Here Jesus exhibiting an euangelicall feaste, where lyke as it behoueth to be none excesse, so it is mete there shoulde be an equalitie of all thynges: He commaunded them all to sytte downe vpon the grasse, so that syttes shoulde sit together, that the number of geastes myghte better appeare. And also he folowed the maner of them whiche makyng a feast or geuyng a dole to many, deuide the multitude into cumpanies, that no man shoulde lacke and no man haue to muche. Thys done, Jesus than at lengthe taking vpon

And Jesus went forthe

And sawe much people, and was moued with pitie towardes them.

And he healed of them thofe þ were sicke.

His disciples came to hym, sayinge: this is a desert place.

But Jesus sayd vnto thē they haue no nede to go awaye. Geue ye thē to eate.

We haue here but fyue loues, & two fyshes.

He sayde: bringe them hither to me.

And he commaunded the people to sit downe on the grasse.

kyng vpon him to be a feaster and a feader of the bodies also, whiche came to fede the soules, and to teache in dede his disciples that they should neuer lacke foode, whiche beyng geuen vnto the gospell, regarded littel theyr vitayl: toke in his handes the fiue barley loues, and two fishes: first declaring vnto all men with what maner of vitayle the Apostolicall ambassadours ought to be content: furthermore shewyng plainly before the iye, ỹ sincere fayth of the multitude, whiche seyng howe littel vitaile there was, and was not ignorannt howe many thousand men there were, commaunded to sitte downe: sate downe. Therfore Jesus the feastmaker, holdyng in his handes the breade and the meate, lifted vp his iyes into heauen, shewynge that whatsoeuer is nedefull to the vse of man, it cummeth from the heuenly father, and whan he had praysed his bountifulnes and liberalitie, he breake the breade and fishes, and so deliuered them vnto his disciples, ỹ they should sette them before the people, puttyng them in remembrannce as it were by a darke figure, of what sort the doctours ought to be, whiche fede with worde the mindes of the simple.

And he toke the fiue loues and two fishes, and lifte vp his iyes towarde heauen, & blessed.

He gaue the loues to the disciples.

For as Christe loking vp into heauen, declared that he taughte nothing, but that came from the heauenly father, so the Apostolicall men as oftē as they see the people to depend of their mouthe, with a plaine and a simple fayth, they should deliuer nothyng vnto them, whiche they had not receiued of Christ: nor should not propose vnto them sundry deinties out of the shoppes of worldly philosophie: neyther bryng out vnto them humayne doctrine after theyr owne affections, but should distribute vnto them the simple and playne euangelical doctrine, as they had receyued of their maister: nor should not otherwise cut it and minse it, than he had broken it wt his handes, for by suche maner of preparation bothe many be refressched, and the glory redowneth to Christe, and not to the distributor. Wouldest thou knowe thende of this feaste? The disciples doubtyng nothyng, made distribution: and they doubtyng nothyng, fell to theyr meate on all hādes, not to excesse, but to sufficiency. And the feast of suche a numbre lacked nothyng, in so much that whan supper was done, the scrappes furthermore that were gathered vp fylled twelue baskettes. And the numbre of menne was fyue thousande besyde women and childzen.

And the disciples gaue thē vnto the people.

And they gathered vp of the fragmentes that remayned. xii. baskettes ful.

¶ And streyghtwaye Jesus made his disciples to get vp into a shyppe, and to go before him vnto the other side while he sent the people awaye. And whan the people were sent awaye, he went vp into a mountayne to praye alone, and whan nighte was cum he was there alone. But the shippe was now in the middest of ỹ sea, and was tost of the waues, for it was a contrary wynd. And in the fourth watche of the night Jesus went vnto them walkyng on the sea. And whan the disciples sawe hym walkyng on the sea they were troubled, sayyng: It is sum spirite, and they cryed but for feare. But streightwaye Jesus spake vnto them, saying: be of good chere, it is I, be not afrayde. Peter aunswered, and sayed: Lorde if it be thou, byd me cum vnto the on the water. And he sayde: cum. And whan Peter was cum downe out of the shippe. He walked on the water to cum to Jesus. But whan he sawe a mighty winde he was afrayde: And whan he began to sincke, he cryed, saying: Lorde saue me. And immediately Jesus stretched furth his hande, and caught him, and sayd vnto him: O thou of littel fayth wherfore diddest thou doubte?

The texte.

These thynges done, Jesus desiring to teache, that after that the necessitie of the body was satisfyed, we ought not to go vnto wantonnes or sleepe, but vnto prayer: vnto which prayer solitarines is most mete: he forced his disciples (for it greued them to departe frō theyr dere Lord) to go to the mere and to rowe ouer the water before, & he would cum after, whā he had sent awaye the people. But they although they departed from him against theyr wil, yet they murmour not, they make not theyr excuse, that ꝑ night was at hande, they aske not whan he would folowe, but they obey simply his cōmaundemētes. Therfore whā they were gone, Iesus sending away ꝑ multitude, whom he had satisfied by al meanes, went vp to a hil to pray there alone. For so he taught his disciples to pray. Therfore in ꝑ toppe of the hil, Iesus was alone a good parte of the night. And the disciples in the meane tyme, theyr lord beyng absent, as they rowed in the water were in peril. For as they entred vpon the water, by and by there arose a contrary winde, & the shippe was tossed, not without peril of the swelling waues of the water. The night made theyr feare double. What should they do? They were in daunger, and he was not there whose helpe they might call vpon. Iesus lefte his disciples in this perill, almost all the whole night, to harden them by litle and litle against all feares, and to teache them that ꝑ helpe of God shall neuer lacke to them that be in perill, although it cum sumwhat late. Therfore at length aboute the fourth watche of the night, they almoost beyng in dispeyre, and now sore amased in theyr minde, & ready to geue ouer out of hande: Iesus came, not in a bote, but walking vpon the waters. They when they sawe one walking in the darke, and knew not Iesus well, they were more afeard and sayde among them selues, it is a goost that we see, and not a mā. And the common sorte of shipmen thinketh that suche maner of sightes, doe signifye vtter destruction to them that rowe on the water. Therfore they were so sore afeard, that beyng almoost beside them selues they cryed out for feare. But Iesus suffered them not to be in daunger any longer, but by and by spake vnto them, that they might know hym by his speche, whom in the darke they could not see. Be of good chere (sayd he:) it is I, feare not. At this worde by and by theyr mynde was comforted. But Peter whiche alwaye had a synguler loue toward Iesus, thinkyng nothing at all harde that he would commaunde, sayed: Lorde if thou be he, commaunde me to cum vnto the vpō the water. For he meruey-led not that Iesus walked vpon the water, but he thought that he him self might do so likewise, if Iesus would. But Iesus framing and fashyonyng his weakenes by all meanes vnto the strengthe of perfecte faythe, bad hym cum. At the whiche worde Peter nothyng lyngering, leaped downe out of the bote, and began to haste to Iesus, walkynge vpon the water. And as long as his faythe nothyng wauered, the moyst element serued hym. But whan he cast his yes a lytle from Iesus, and began to looke about hym, and to consider the bousteousnes of the wynde, the hurlyng of the waues, and his owne feblenes, he was afrayde agayne: and begā to sincke downe and be in daunger of drowning. Feare came of the boysterousnes of the windes, perill came of feare, and feare of distruste. And agayne the greatnesse of perill rayled vp the sparke of fayth, and nowe beyng almost ouerwhelmed with waues cryed oute: Lorde saue me, I perysshe. But Iesus putting his disciple in remembraunce, that the perill whiche he feared came not of the waues or windes, whiche before serued hys tourne, but of the weakenes of fayth: reachyng out his hand catched hym and lifte hym vp, saying:

And whan ꝑ people were sente awaye, he went vp into the mountayne to pray alone.

But the ship was now in the middest of the sea, & was tost of ꝑ waues, for it was a contrary winde.

And in the fourthe watche of ꝑ night Iesus wente vnto thē walkynge on the sea.

And whan ꝑ disciples sawe him walking on the sea, they were troubled.

Straightewaye Iesus spake vnto them, sayng: Be of good chere, it is I.

Peter answered, and sayde: Lorde if it be thou, byd me cum vnto the on the water.

But whan he sawe a mightye wynde, he was afrayde.

O thou of litle faythe, wherfore diddest thou doubte.

saying: O thou that yet hast littell trusted me, why diddest thou wauer? For it is not inough to haue a strong faithe for the tyme, but it must be continual and constant: nor thou must not loke how great the peril is, or what thy strength is able to beare, but what I am able to do to hym that doeth trust and beleue in me. Therefore furthwith as he entered into the shippe, the wynde ceased. And they that were in the shyppe seyng suche a meruaylouse wonder, perceyuing that there was sumwhat in hym more than man, fell downe at his feete and wurshipped hym, saying: Thou arte the very sonne of God. And when they came to the banke, he wente into the countrey of Genezareth, where he had shewed many miracles before: They after that they had knowledge that he whom they had sene before, was cum agayne, they sent through out all the countrey to tell that Jesus was present, that if they had any sicke folke, they should bring them. For nowe their fayth began to encrease, by the miracles ẏ were done before. Therfore flockynge together on euery syde, they offer vnto Jesus as many as were diseased, desiring hym, that at the least they might touche the hem of his garmente, if it were to paynefull for hym to touche them one by one, or to speake vnto them. So strong was their fayth, and their fayth deceyued them not: for as many as touched hym, were healed.

Of a truthe thou art the sonne of god.

Then came to Jesus Scribes and Phariseis, which wer cum from Hierusalem, sayinge: Wherefore do thy disciples transgresse the tradition of the elders? for they washe not their handes whan they eate breade. But he answered, and sayd vnto them: Why do ye transgresse also the commaundemẽt of god, because of your owne traditions?

AT the more glory of God these thinges were done, the more the Phariseis were fret with enuye, seyng their glory to be darkened thereby, by ẏ which glory hitherto they had magnified them selues amonge thẽ. They hunted in euery corner for a quarell, but the more they go againste Jesus, the more they blase abrode their owne blyndnes, beyng so manifest & open that the people also spyed it. Therfore certayne Phariseis of Hierusalem (for there were the most arrogant and proude) go together vnto Jesus, that the numbre mighte make their false accusation to be beleued. And where as Moyses forbad that any thyng shoulde be taken awaye or put to the wordes of the lawe, the Phariseis that they might seme to be, not onely therpounders of the lawes, but also the makers, they added certayne trifeling thynges, as be those: That no man should take meate with vnpure hãdes, which they called vnwashed, as who should saye the hãdes did defile the meate or the man, or as who should saye, the licour of the water should washe away the filthynes of the mynde. Againe ẏ no man returning frõ the market & had ben amõgst ẏ cõmon people, should eate meate, but he had first washed his body: as who should saye the touching of men, fyled man, or as who should saye, he is pure and cleane whiche is washed. Agayne, that their flagons, pottes, brasse, stoles, beddes, and other stuffe which which was daily occupied, ſhould be often waſhed. With theſe & many like ſuperfluouſe and trifeling thinges, they burdened the ſimple people, which thynges they would haue ſo muche made of and honoured, that for theſe preceptes they neglected oftentymes the commaundemētes of God. Therfore when they couldē no wayes ley to the diſciples charge, the trāſgreſſion of Moſes lawe, they finde faulte with their maiſter, becauſe he ſuffered his diſciples to neglecte mannes conſtitucions: not that they diſpiſed them, although they were worthy to be diſpiſed, but that beyng geuen to ſeriouſe and earneſt matters, ſumtymes they paſſed litle vpon them. Therfore they ſpeake vnto Jeſus and ſaye: Why doe not thy diſciples kepe the conſtitucions of their forefathers? For they waſhe not their handes whan they go to meate. Chriſt not ſuffering ſo malicioufe rebukyng, for a thyng of nothyng: payeth them home with a more ſharpe rebuke. Nay with what face do ye which picke quarels for theſe trifles, make ſo muche of mannes conſtitucions, whiche can bringe nothyng elles but paynefull ſuperſtition, and yet for them, ye ſticke not to breake the greateſt commaundemente of God.

Wherfore do thy diſciples tranſgreſſe ỹ tradicion of the elders

Why do ye tranſgreſſe alſo the cōmaūdemēt of god becauſe of your tradicīō

The texte. For God commaundeth, ſayinge: Honour father and mother. And he that ſhall curſe father or mother, let him dye the death. But ye ſaye: euery one ſhall ſaye to his father and mother: What gifte ſo euer ſhould haue cum from me, the ſame is turned vnto thy profit. And ſo ſhall he not honour his father or his mother. And thus haue ye made the commaundement of God of none effecte, becauſe of your owne tradicion.

For God confirmyng the lawe of nature, cōmaunded earneſtly that euery man ſhould honoure and ſuccour his father and mother, promiſing long life, and felicitie of this lyfe vnto the doer hereof: threatenynge death to him that doeth the contrarie. But you folowing your auarice, ẏe may turne that to your owne gayne and aduauntage, whiche ſhoulde haue bene beſtowed in helpynge of your parentes: do teache, that it is holyer and better for men to enriche the temple wt̄ giftes, than to helpe their nedye parentes: and ye haue ſhewed a caſt, how the childzen maye mocke their parentes, aſkyng helpe and ſuccoure of them: that is, to ſaye thus to the father or mother, the gifte that I offer to the temple, thincke it beſtowed vpon you. For that, that is offred to God the high parent, is rightly beſtowed, & the godlines of the ſonne ſhall profit the parentes: and by this craft, vnder the coloure of falſe godlines againſt the commaundement of God, the father is forſaken, that the prieſtes māye be better at eaſe. The thynge cummeth to you, to the helpe and ſuccour of the parentes nothing cummeth but wordes. And ye coloure a wicked dede, vnder the pretenſe of godlines. What cā be more arrogant than to preferre your conſtitucions before the commaundementes of God, and vnder the pretenſe of them, to hynder and breake the holy commaundement of God? It is a wicked dede to burden the people with ſuche maner of conſtitucions, which is ouer burdened with the burde of the lawe. But it is intollerable wickednes vtterly to abolyſhe goddes lawe agreable vnto the lawe of nature, through your owne inuencions.

What gifte ſo euer ſhould haue come frō me, the ſame is turned to thy profit.

And thus haue ye made the commaūdemēt of god of none effect becauſe of your owne tradicion.

The texte. O Hypocrites? full well did Eſaye prophecie of you, ſayinge: This people draweth nygh vnto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with lyppes, but their harte is farre from me: in vayne doe they worſhip me, teaching the doctrines, mās preceptes. But he calleth the people vnto him, and ſayde vnto them: heare and vnderſtand. That which goeth into the mouth defileth not the man, but that whiche cummeth out of the mouth defileth man.

This

This is your counterfeyte religiō, whiche is nothing lesse than as it appereth. O Hipocrites, Esaye wozthely pzophecied of you, saying: This people honoureth me with theyz lippes, but their harte is far frō me. And they wurship me in vaine, teaching doctrines, whiche be the pzeceptes of mē. Jesus whē he had spokē these, as though he had turned away frō ỹ phariseis, which hunted foz nothing, but foz occasion of false accusing: cōmaunded the multitude to cum nere, saying: Heare and vnderstande how trifling thinges they be, whiche the phariseis pzescribe vnto you, carefull in litle thynges, neglecting great thinges. They with awkewarde iudgemēte, put that chiefe poynt of godlines in outward thinges, as in choise of meates, and neglecte those thynges that be of the soule. They abhozre vnwashed cuppes, and neglecte vncleane soules: they washe theyz handes and their skinnes oftentymes, but they suffer theyz minde to be defiled wỉ all maner of vices. That whiche entreth into the mouthe maketh not man vncleane, but that whiche goeth out of the mouth maketh mā vncleane. Foz it is no matter what meate a man eateth, but with what mynde he eateth it.

The texte.

Than came his disciples, and sayed vnto him: Knowest thou not that the phariseis were offended at this saying? But he answered and sayde: Euery plante whiche my heauenly father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the rootes. Let them alone, they be blynde guydes of the blynde. If the blynde leade the blynde both shall fall into the dyche.

Jesus semed by these wozdes to haue geuē vnto the phariseis a iust occasion to repzoue him, because he toke away ỹ choise of meates, which gods lawe pzescribed. In which thyng also his disciples did not dissagre from the phariseis, thinking it a wicked thyng to eat common and vncleane meates, which truly Chzist did not yet cōdēne, but declared ỹ they of their owne nature wer neyther good noz yl, but of incident causes, & therfoze lesse to be estemed than those thinges, which alway & of theyz owne nature be godly oz vngodly, & declareth also ỹ suche maner of pzeceptes of the law, which wer ozdeyned foz a tyme, & do not so much bzing holines as signify it, begin now to be obscured & darkned, & shoztly shal banish away & perish at ỹ clere light of the gospell. The disciples not yet vnderstāding this thing, go vnto theyz lozde, & monish him secretly of the daunger, saying: know ye that ỹ phariseis although they dissemble the matter, be offended wỉ this cōmunication of youres, ỹ meate defileth no mā. But Jesꝰ minding to teache ỹ thoffence of ill men, which riseth of thinges of nothing, and the doers of it also, ought māfully to be despised: chiefly whā in obeying of them, none other good riseth of it, but increasing & nozishing of their malice: not wout ỹ vndoing of ỹ simple people, which trusting to such maner of obseruaciōs, neglect ỹ deuocio of true godlines, answered thus vnto his disciples, which were sumwhat offended also. Euery grafte ỹ my heauēly father hath not grafted, shal be plucked vp by ỹ rootes: euery ozdinaūce ỹ mē hath inuēted of thē selues foz their owne glozy, & not foz true godlines, shall perish, & cum to naught. These thinges sauour of ỹ yearth, & be carnal, made & geuē foz a time, to repzesse & kepe vnder ỹ excesse & outrage of grosse folke. The law of ỹ gospell is spirituall & heauēly, noz resteth in these visible thinges, but in thaffeccios of ỹ minde. These therfoze ought chiefly to be regarded: Foz wout these, thother pfit nothing but to vaine ostētacion. Seing therfoze ye haue begū to pzofesse this heauēly philosophy, ye haue nothing to do wỉ ỹ coūterfeting and dissem-

Knowest ỹ not that the phariseis wer offended at this saying.

Euery plant which my heauenly father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the rootes.

and diſſembling Phariſeis, who promiſe perfect holines through ſuche obſeruacions, in whiche is no godlines, or ſuerlye very litle. They ſhow and boſt them ſelues to be doctors and captaines to true religion, wheras they know not in what thinges true religion ſtandeth. Therfore they be blinde, & leaders of the blinde. And if the blynde lead the blynde on the way, what ſhall happen: bothe together ſhall fall in the dyke. They knowe not what they teache, and they take vnto them folich and groſſe diſciples. Therfore let the folich Phariſeis goe, with theyr folich and vnprofitable conſtitucios. Regarde and care ye for thoſe thynges, whiche make man cleane or vncleane, that is to ſay, for thoſe thinges whiche do defile or cleanſe the minde, rather than the bodye.

They be blind gydes of the blynde.

¶ Then anſwered Peter, and ſayd vnto hym, declare vs this parable. And Jeſus ſayde: Are ye alſo yet without vnderſtanding? Do not ye yet vnderſtande that what ſo euer entereth into the mouth, goeth into the bely, and is caſt out into the pryuie? But thoſe thynges whiche go out of the mouthe, cum forth from the harte, and they defyle the man. For out of the hart cum ill thoughtes, murders, aduoarries, horedomes, theftes, falſe witneſſes, and ſkoldynges. Theſe be the thynges whiche defyle mā. But to take meate with vnwaſhen handes, doeth not defyle man.

To theſe Peter made anſwere, not yet perſuaded, becauſe of the ſuperſtition which he had depely receyued of his forefathers, that theſe conſtitucions could not be neglected without daunger: wheras he durſt not reſiſt any more the ſayinges of Jeſus, required him gentilly ỹ he would vouchſafe to declare plainly the thyng whiche he had ſpoken darkely to ỹ people, concernyng thynges that goeth in and cummeth out of the mouth. Jeſus mynding to ſharpen the deſire of his diſciples with a litle chidyng, whiche ſhould haue ben now more cunning in vnderſtanding of parables, and out of one to haue diuined and geſſed an other, ſayde: Be ye alſo yet without vnderſtanding: vnderſtand ye not that meate which receyued, and taken with handes, waſched or vnwaſched, entreth in to the mouth, goeth downe into ỹ ſtomake, and afterward the groſſer part of it is caſt out by the bely into the pryuie: Theſe be bodily thynges, and affect and touche nothing but the body. As for the ſoule they neyther help nor hurt, vnleſſe a man miſuſe them. And to miſuſe them is not the faute of the meates, but of the miſuſer. But the thinges whiche go out of the mouth be the thynges whiche men do ſpeake. Talkyng commeth not from the bely, but from the hart. And that ỹ is in mānes hart, that in dede is pure and cleane, or els vnpure & vncleane. For from that fountayne do ſpring noyſum thoughtes, wherewith men go about to lye in wayt to hurt theyr brother, from thence do ſpring murdre, adultry, rape, theft, fraude, deceyte, enuy, arrogancie, ſtrife, falſe witnes and blaſphemy. Theſe thynges though they go not out by the mouth, yet they make men vnclean and abhominable in the ſight of God. If they burſt out in maner of a peſtilent breth out of a filthy lege lyke as they declare mā to be vncleane, ſo with theyr infection and blaſtyng they do defile others alſo.

Are ye alſo yet without vnderſtandyng?

But thoſe thiges which go out of the mouth, cum frō the harte & they defile the man.

But to take meat with vnwaſchen handes, doth not defyle man.

But whether thou take thy meate with handes waſched or vnwaſhed, ſo thou take it to the vſe of nature, maketh not mā vnclean. Neither drinke takē out of an vncleane cup defileth not man, ſo thou take it meaſurably for ỹ vſe & not for therceſſe. Lykewiſe to ſit vpon an vnwaſhed ſeat, doeth not defile the minde of man, lyke as the waſhed ſeat, doth not make pure & cleane hym that ſitteth in it. Therfore where as the Phariſeis teache and obſerue-superstitiously these folysh trykles, yet they doo not abhorre those thynges, wherby the mynde is defyled in dede. They ly in wayt for him that doeth thē good, they do suborne & prepare false witnes, they do backebite ỳ fame of theyr neighbour, & so seke for theyr own glory, ỳ they enuy ỳ glory of god, falsely reprouyng the workes whiche be done by his spirite, & ascrybing thē to Beelzebub. They should abhorre these thinges, yf they would seme cleane in dede. But what aukwarde kynde of holynes is this, to haue washed & clean hādes, & to haue both mynd & tōg defiled wᵗ so many mischeuous vices.

¶ And Jesus goyng thence, departed into the coast of Tyre and Sydon. And behold a woman of Canaan whiche came from the same coast, cryed vnto him, saying: Haue mercy vpon me lorde the sonne of Dauid, my daughter is miserable vexed with a deuil. But he answered her nothyng at all. And his disciples came and besought hym, saying: sende her a waye, for she cryeth after vs. But he answered and sayed: I am not sent but vnto the lost shepe of the house of Israel. Than came she and worshypped hym, saying: Lord helpe me. But he answered and sayed: It is not mete to take the childrens breade, and to cast it to dogges. She answered and sayed: Truthe lorde, for the dogges eate of the crūmes whiche fall from theyr masters table. Than Jesus answered, and sayd vnto her: O woman great is thy fayth, be it vnto the as thou wilt. And her doughter was made whole frō that time

After ỳ Jesus had spokē these thinges he left ỳ cuntrey, & went into ỳ coastes of Tyrus & Sidon, in maner prophecyng wᵗ that dede, that ỳ Jewes through ỳ superstycion of their law, should expel ỳ doctrin of the gospel, whyche the Gentils through sincerite of fayth should take vnto thē. For Tyrus and Sidon wer inhabited of Idolaters. Jesus wēt thither not to preache as he dyd in Jewry, for the tyme was not yet cum, but to be secrete and hyd there, for he entered into a house desiryng to be secrete, but the fame did vtter hym. This was doen for the inuincible malice of the Jewes, lest they might complayne that the wicked & prophane Gentiles were preferred before them. Therfore he would that the myracle that he shewed there, should not seme to be sought after or done of purpose, but offered by chaunce, & in maner extorted & obteyned of hym by force. Therfore when ỳ rumour was spred abrode, that Jesus was present whose fame increasing by litil & litil went beyonde the coastes of the Jewes: a certayne womā of Canaan cumming out of her coastes, durst not cum nere to Jesus lest she beyng vnclean might seme to defyle him whiche was cleane, but a far of called vpon hym wᵗ a myserable crye: haue mercy vpon me ỳ sōne of Dauid, telling him ỳ she had a doughter at home miserably vexed with a deuil. This Jesus so mercifull and easie to be entreated, whiche was wont to be prompt and ready vnto all men: to thintent both that he might make open vnto all men the very constant fayth of the woman, & also ley vnto the Jewes charge, their very stiffe and obstinate vnbeleke, and to teache vs with all, of what efficacy & power importune and ernest prayers powred out of an humble harte, be wᵗ god: he dispiseth the peticioner whiche cryed out for sorowe of her harte, insomuche that he would not vouchesafe to make her answere: showyng therby a certayne fashion of the Jewes arrogancye, bycause the Jewes coūted the Chananes their olde enemyes, & worshippers of Idolles, to be abhominable, and that they be defiled yf they doge but talke with them. And the apostles at ỳ tyme were yet of the same affection & mynde. But the womā ceased not, although she wer repelled. For sorowe and fayth made her importune. She followeth at his backe, and cryeth lamentably: haue mercye vpon me lorde, the sonne of Dauid.

And behold a woman of Canaā, which came from ỳ same coast, cryed vnto hym, saying: haue mercye vpon me Lorde the sōne of Dauid

But he answered her nothing at al

And his disciples came and besought him saying: sende her away, for she cryeth after vs.

The disciples not yet vnderstanding what was in doing, moued wt shame rather than with pitie, because of the importune cryng of the woman, of a straunge contrye, speake vnto Jesus: desiryng him not to haue mercy of the wretched woman, but because of her importunitie to sende her awaye with sum answere. Therfore Jesus made an answere more sore & hard, than the former repulse and shaking of, to thintent he might make the constancy and coldenes to the straunge woman more maruelous: & also by the example to charge the Jewes with theyr pride and arrogācy. I am not sent (q he) but vnto the lost shepe of the house of Jsraell. For the Jewes stode meruelously in their owne conceyte, because of this title, that they were the stock of Jsraell. The woman was not wered with so many repulses and dentals, insomuche that she durst yet drawe nere vnto Jesus, and falling doune at his knees, sayed: Lorde succoure me. She dyd not confute the saying of Jesus, but with often repeting of her prayers she went about to wery him. She layed not for her, right & iustice, she requireth nothing but mercy. Jesus not content with this, goeth on stil, to try the sobre importunitie of the woman. Jt is not meete (q he) to take the childrēs bread, & cast it to dogges, calling ỹ fruite of the gospel which is by fayth, bread: calling the childzen ỹ Jewes, which did glory ỹ they had god to their father: calling the dogges straungers, & aliens frō the religion & worshipping of God. Which of the Jewes would not haue ben stirred and āgered with suche a rebuke: but the womā not refusing the name of a dog, enuieth not the Jewes the honourable title of the childzen, but calleth them also lord whom Jesꝰ called childzen. She embraceth the answere rebukefull in apperaunce, and taketh occasion of it not to be repelled, wherwith it appered that she was vtterly repelled. I denye not (q she) that the Jsraelites be the childzen, and we the dogges, and therfore I am not vtterly to be repelled. I take not awaye from theym their fyne & delicate breade, whiche they eate sitting at theyr fathers table: This onelye I require, whiche masters are not wonte to denye to their dogges. The table is ryche & plentyfull of suche thynges, it sufficeth me yt I chaūce to haue the crummes whiche fall from their tables. Than Jesus maruayling at the infatigable and great constancie of the straunge woman, in maner ouercumme, sayd: O woman I can no longer resiste thy prayers: greate is thy fayth, wherwith thou constrayuest me. Wherfore be it vnto the after thy desyre. And by and by euen at the same tyme it was proued, that her doughter was delyuered from the deuyll.

It is not mete to take ỹ childrens breade & to cast it to dogges.

O woman, greate is thy fayth.

¶ And Jesus goyng from thence, came nigh vnto the sea of Galile, and wente vp into a mountayne and sate downe there. And muche people came vnto hym bryngyng wyth them thole that were lame, blinde, defe, maymed, and other manye, & caste them downe at Jesus feete. And he healed theym, insomuche that the people maruayled whan they sawe the dum speake, the maymed to be whole, the lame to walke, and the blynde to see. And they glorifyed the god of Jsrael.

Whan Jesus in maner constrayned had wrought this one myracle in ỹ borders of the Sidonias & the Syrians, to prouoke & stirre vp his owne people he went agayn into Jewry, to declare howe more ready he was towardes his owne coūtrey men, thē to straungers: if they might haue bene ouercum and wunne with benefites. And he came vnto a mere whiche is called the sea of Galile, and there goyng vp vpon an hylle, sate downe, that by goyng aside and by the difficultie of the place, he myght a lytel and a litell plucke vp the faythe of his disciples and make it firm and stable. Anon there flocked about him many flockes of men, brynging with them dum, blynd, lame, weake, and dyuerse other vexed with diuers diseases: of whom there was so great a multitude, that they caste them at the feete of Jesus. He wel perceyuing theyr fayth by the hard and cumbrouse iourney, healed them all: and so spedely healed so manye, that the multitude whiche came vnto hym was muche amased, seyng howe sodeinly the blynde receyued theyr sight, the dum spake, the lame walked, the feble was whole of lymmes. And they glorykied ỹ God of the people of Israel, which dyd vouchesafe to bestowe so great benifites vpon his people.

¶ Than Jesus called his disciples vnto hym, and sayed: I haue compassion on the people, because they continewe with me nowe thre dayes, and haue nothing to eate, and I wyll not let them departe fastyng, lest they faynte in the waye. And his disciples sayeth vnto him: whence shoulde we get vs so muche bread in wildernes wherewyth we myght suffice so great a multitude? And Jesus sayth vnto them. Howe many loues haue ye? and they sayed vnto hym: seuen, and a fewe lytle fyshes. And he commaunded the people to sit doune on the grounde, and tooke the seuen loues and the fyshes. And after that he had geuen thankes, he brake theym, and gaue to his dysciples, and the disciples gaue them to the people. And they al dyd eate, and were suffised. And they tooke vp of the broken meate that was lefte seuen baskettes full. And yet they that dyd eate were fower thousande men, besyde women and chyldren. And he sente awaye the people and toke shyppe, and came into the coastes of Magdala. The texte.

This kindnes of the people caused hym to heape benefite vpon benefite of his owne accord. For whan Jesus knewe that the multytude taried and byd by him thre dayes (suche was theyr feruency towardes Jesus) & knew also if they had brought any bittell with thẽ, it was consumed and spent a good whyle before: and ỹ many wer in ieopardie for hunger: Furthermore that the iorney was long, and that there were no villages nor tounes nere: he calleth his disciples vnto him & sayd. I haue pitie on this multitude. For nowe it is three dayes, that they haue taried with me in deserte, nor they haue nothyng to eate, and I will not send them awaye fastyng, least they fainte in the waye, beyng longer than they be able to go fastyng.

With these sayinges he put his disciples in remembraunce of the former myracle, when he fed certayne thousandes of men. But they yet rude and forgetting those former thinges, beyng carefull & doubtful as though they hadde ben commaunded to feade suche a greate multytude of men, do make answere: Where than can we get suche a deale of bread that maye suffyse suche a greate multitude? This simplicitie & forgetfulnes of the disciples, dyd set furth ỹ greatenes of the miracle. They therfore beyng in dispayre, Christ taketh in hand the matter of the myracle. He asketh them how many loues they had. They answered, seuen, and a fewe fishes. And furthwyth he commaunded theym to sit downe vpon the grounde. And takyng the seuen loues and the meate in hys handes, after that he had lifted vp his eyes vnto heauen, and geuen thankes vnto his father, he brake them, and deliuered them to his disciples, and they distributed them to the people. Euery man dyd eate hys fyll: and there was nothyng lacking, insomuche that seuen baskettes were filled of the gatheringes of scrappes, whiche remayned. And there were of them that dyd eate, in nũbre fower thousande, beside chyldren and wemen. But Jesus so many notable miracles shewed in the

The texte. ¶ And the Pharisees with the Saducees came and tempted hym, and requyred of him to shew them a signe from heauen. But he answered, and sayed vnto them: whan the euentyde begynneth to drawe nere, ye saye: It will be fayre wether, for the skye is red. And in the mornyng: It will be troubulsome wether: for the skye is glowming red. O ye Hipocrites: ye can decerne the face of heauen, but can ye not discerne the signes of the tymes? The frowarde and aduouterouse nacion requireth a signe, and there shall no signe be geuen vnto it, but the signe of the Prophet Jonas.

Elus beyng here, there came vnto hym agayne certayne Pharisees and Saduceis beyng of a contrary secte, notwithstanding of one consent and agremente to lye in wayte for Jesus. And craftely they requyre him to shewe sum token from heauen, as though here after if he would haue so donne, they would haue beleued in him, where as they wēt aboute nothing els, but to seke occasion to reproue him. But Jesus when he perceyued ꝑ after so manye miracles they remayned yet in theyr malice, mourned in the spirit and sayed: Ye hypocrytes vttering one thing w̄ your mouth, & cloking another in your hart, in lesse thinges when ye marke heauen, ye can tel before what weather shall folow the daye after. For whan ye see the sonne go to glade, ye say: to morowe shalbe fayre weather, for the ayer is cleare and bryghte. Agayne when ye see the sonne ryse in the morneyng, by & by ye geue sentence, that that shalbe a fowle and a boisteouse day, because the lowryng ayer is red. Whan ye see the fashion & countenaunce of heauen, ye can gesse whether the tyme will be meete for towneying, rowing, sowing, or mowing, or for any other thinges apperteyning to the vse of the body: And are so dull and negligent in knowledge of the tyme, that maketh for youre soules helth. Ye haue the scriptures, ye see what thinges be doen, ye see how the world is renewed, and vnderstande ye not yet, ꝑ the tyme spoken of before by the Prophetes, & loked for so long tyme, is nowe at hande. Of one signe ye geue sentence, of fayre or foule wether: of so many signes whiche ye se dayly do ye not perceyue the thing that is present. If ye would haue ben made better by wonders and miracles, ye would haue beleued me long agon. Nowe ye requyre a signe and a tokē to be the worse therby. O naughty and adulterous generacion, whiche goeth farre out of kynde frō her forfathers, of whose tytles she magnifieth herself.

O ye Hypocrites, ye can decerne ꝑ face of heauē, but can ye not discerne ꝑ signes of the tymes?

She seketh

She seketh craftelye for a wondre out of heauen, to pycke a quarrell and to reproue it: but in tyme to cum she shal haue a sygne that she shall feare & not reproue. In the meane time she shal haue no signe nor wondre but out of ỹ yearth, whiche shal frustrate and dispoynt all theyr endeuours, when they shall see hym alyue agayne, whome they thought to be dead and buryed. It semeth a monsterous thyng vnto theym whiche chaunced to the Prophete Jonas: they shall haue a lyke monster, but more wondrefull. By this ryddel and darke figure, the lord Jesus signifyed that he should be fyrst slayne, and buryed of them, whome they thought to be nothyng els but man, and furthwith should ryse agayne, through the power of god.

¶ And he left them and departed. And whan his disciples were cum to the other syde of the water, they had forgotten to take bread with them. Than Jesus sayed vnto them Take heede & beware of the leuen of the pharisees, & the Saducees. But they thought in them selues saying: we haue taken no bread with vs. Whiche when Jesus vnderstode he sayed vnto them: O ye of lytle fayth, why take ye thought within youre selues because ye haue brought no bread? Do ye not perceyue nor remembre the .v. loues when there were fiue thowsand men, and how many baskettes toke ye awaye? Nether the .vii. loues when ther were .iiii. thowsand men, & how many baskets toke ye away? How happeneth it that ye do not vnderstande that I spake it not to you concernyng bread that ye should beware of the leuen of the Pharisees and of the Saducees. Than vnderstode they howe that he bad them not beware of the leuen of bread, but of the doctryne of the Pharisees and of the Saducees. The texte.

Jesus therfore leauing them with their blindnes, went ouer the water by shyp, & the disciples had forgotten to prouyde thẽselues of bread before they entered into the shippe. For they had but one lofe in the shyppe. Jesus therfore to put them in remembraunce, sayd: take diligent hede and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees and the Saducees: noting & touchyng darkely their Jewishe superstition, because they thought it a great matter to eate these meates or those meates, whereas they were taught before, that man was not defyled with the thynges that entered into the mouthe. The disciples although they vnderstoode not what it meant, were yet monyshed with this saying, that they had forgotten to put vitayle in theyr shyp.

Take heede & beware of ỹ leuen of the Pharisees & the saducees.

Jesus therfore chydeth them beyng carefull for this thyng, blaming theyr dulnesse: whiche taught so often bothe with sayinges and doynges, vterly to cast oute of theyr mynde carefulnesse for vittayle, yet wer incumbred with cark and care for suche maner of thynges: O (ye) ye that so lyttell trust to me, why do ye bere your mynde with this carefulnes, that he haue forgotten bread, as who sayth: we shall lake any thynge, althoughe ye prouide not for it? Dyd not I teache you that fyrst of al the kingdõe of god must be sought for, and that these thynges shalbe cast vnto you? Haue ye not sene nowe twyse ỹ suche a greate multitude lacked not meat? So many wayes taught and monyshed, vnderstand ye not yet? remembre ye not yet? Is your harte yet blynded with suche maner of cares? and see ye not after ỹ Pharisees fashyon, that which ye see with your iyes? and that whiche ye heare with youre eares, is it as thoughe ye hearde it not? haue ye forgot that, whiche was lately done, your selues beyng not onely witnesses but also ministers? When that fyue thousande men wer fully fed wyth .v. barlye loues and two fyshes, the numbre of geastes beyng so greate, the preparacion so smal, how many baskettes dyd ye fyl of the scrappes, whiche remayned of the feast? They answere hym: twelue. And agayne when fower thousande men wer fylled with seuen loues and a fewe fyshes, ye beyng the diſtributoures, howe many baſkettes fylled ye with the ſcrappes? They anſwere, ſeuen: Why dooe ye not yet vnderſtande the maner of my ſpeakyng, whyche ye turne to the care of bodely thynges: where as my talkyng ſtudieth and prouydeth for the myndes, rather then the bodyes? Nowe ye ſhould of youre ſelues haue coniectured what my ryddell mente when I ſayd: beware of the leauen of the Phariſeis and Saduces. I had now taughte you, that it litel ſkylled what kynde of meate we eate. I had now diuerſly declared and beaten vpon it, that they whiche haue in hand the matter of the goſpell, ſhould vtterly caſt awaye ſuche vyle cares.

O ye of litle fayth, why take ye thought in your selues, because ye haue brought no bread.

The diſciples beyng more attent and diligent by this litel chyding, vnderſtode that Jeſus ment that they ſhould take hede diligently, and beware of the doctrine of the Phariſeis, which had nothyng that was ſincere & cleane but was corrupte with ambicion, auarice, enuye, and other vices: Where as the doctrine of the goſpell taſted of no ſuche thing. For theyr doctrine doth rather infecte man, than feede him: and therfore it muſt be taken hede of diligently, becauſe they be wonte for to deceyue vnware and ſimple men by the falſe cloke of godlines, which is the very poyſon of true godlynes.

The texte. When Jeſus came into the coaſtes of the citie whiche is called Ceſarea Philippi, he aſked his diſciples, ſaying. Whom do men ſay that I the ſonne of man am? they ſayd: ſum ſaye that thou arte John the baptiſt, ſum Helyas, ſum Hieremias, or one of the nombre of the Prophetes. He ſayth vnto them: but whom ſaye ye that I am? Symon Peter anſwered & ſayd: Thou arte Chriſte the ſonne of the lyuyng God. And Jeſus anſwered and ſayed vnto hym: happy arte thou Symon the ſonne of Jonas, for fleſche and bloude hathe not opened that vnto the, but my father whyche is in heauen. And I ſaye vnto the, that thou arte Peter, and vpon this rocke I wyll buylde my churche, and the gates of hell ſhall not preuayle agaynſte it. And I wyll geue vnto the, the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen, and whatſoeuer thou byndeſt in earth ſhall be bounde in heauen, and whatſoeuer thou looſeſt in yearth, ſhalbe looſed in heauen.

Whom doo men ſay that I the ſonne of man am?

Here when Jeſus came into the coaſtes of the citie called Ceaſarea which Philip the Tetrache ſo named in the honour of Ceaſar, folowyng his brother Herode which chaunged the name, and called that Ceſarea, which before was named the tower of Straton. He thought to proue howe muche his ſcholers had profyted by hearyng ſomuche cõmunicacion. and by ſeyng ſo many miracles: and whether they had anye higher or better opinyon of hym, than the vulgare ſort. Therfore he demaundeth of thẽ ſaying: whome do men talke that the ſonne of man is? They ſay: ſum ſaye that he is John the baptiſt. For ſo the Herodians dyd ſuſpect. Sum ſaye that he is Helyas, becauſe he was taken vp: and they ſuſpecte that he doth appere now accordyng to the prophecy of Malachye. Sum ſaye that he is Hieremy, becauſe he was a fygure of Chriſt, and that it was ſayed of hym: Beholde I haue ſet the this daye ouer nacions and kynges to plucke vp & to diſtroye, and to plante: whiche in dede ſhould be fulfylled in Chriſt. Jeſus hearyng theſe, to thintent he would get out ſum more certayne and higher profeſſion, ſayeth: ye (or he) whyche ſhoulde knowe me better, who ſaye ye that I am? Here Symon Peter as he loued Jeſus beſt, as the chyefe of the Apoſtolicall order, anſwered for them all: Thou art very Chriſt the ſonne of god aliue, not ſpeakyng of ſuſpicion, but profeſſing certainlye and vndoubtedly that he was Meſſias promiſed of the Prophetes, and the ſonne of god after a certayne ſinguler maner. Jeſus delightyng with this cherefull and ſubſtan-

He ſayth vnto them: but whome ſaye ye that I am? Symon Peter anſwered: Thou arte ꝓ Chriſt ꝓ ſun of the liuyng God.

ctall profession, sayed: blessed art thou Simon the sonne of John. The affection of man taughte thee not this worde, but the heauenly father put it in thy mynde by a secret inspiracion. For no man hath a worthy opinion of the sonne, but by the inspiracion of the father, whiche onely knoweth the sonne. And I agayne, leaste thou shouldest adourne me thankeleslie with suche a noble testimonye, assure thet of this, that thou arte very Peter, that is to say a sound and a sure stone, not wauerynge hither or thither with sundrie opinions of the vulgare sorte: and vpon this stone of thy profession wil I buyld my churche, that is to say, my house and my palace: whiche beyng set vpon a sure foundacion, I wyl so fortefye, that no power or strength of the kyngdome of hell shalbeable to beate it downe. Sathan will cum vpon you with many engins: he wyll rayse a cumpany of wicked spirites against you, but thrzough my defence my buildyng shall stande impzennable, onely let this sure and sounde pzofession abyde. The kyngdome of heauen is the churche, the kyngdome of the deuell is the worlde. Of this no man nede to be afearde, so that he be Peter, that is to say lyke vnto thee. And the keyes of this heauenly kyngdome I wyll delyuer vnto thee. For it is meete that there he be lyke in auctoritie whiche is lyke in the pzofession of the faith, and in charitie. And truely this kyngdom of heauen is in earthe, but it hath to do with heauen, wherof it doeth depende. Wherfore he that is yet entangled with sinnes, doeth belong to the kyngdome of hel, nor cannot enter in to the kyngdome of heauen. But he shall entre yf he pzofesse that whyche thou doest pzofesse, and be losed from his sinnes by baptisme, & so thzough thy leadyng and thy openyng of the gates, he shall enter into the kyngdome of heauen. This is my peculyar and pzopze power, to forgeue synnes: but this power I wil geue vnto the after a maner, that that whiche thou shalte loose with my keyes, receyued of me vpon earth before men, shalbe losed also in heauen before God. On the other side, that whiche thou shalt bynde in the earth, shalbe bound also in heauen, for God wyll allowe thy iudgement cummyng from his spirite.

For flesche & blud hath not opened that vnto thee. &c. And I say vnto thee, that thou art Peter, & vpō this rocke wyll I build my churche &c. And I wyll geue vnto the the keyes of the kingdome of heauen.

And what soeuer thou byndest in earthe,

CThan charged he his disciples that they shoulde tell no man that he was Jesus Christ. From that tyme forth, began Jesus to shewe vnto his disciples how that he must go vnto Hierusalem, and suffer manye thynges of the elders and hye priestes and Scribes, and must be kylled and raised vp agayne the thyrde daye. And whan Peter had taken hym aside he beganne to rebuke hym, saying: Master fauour thy selfe, thys shall not happen vnto the. But he turneth hym about, and sayd vnto Peter: go after me Sathan, thou hynderest me, for thou sauourest not the thinges that be of God, but those that be of men. The text.

Whan Jesus had spoken these thynges, he commaunded his disciples ỹ they should as yet kepe this goodly opinion of hym, secrete with themselues: nor open it to others, that he was Messias. For fyrst the sacrifice of the crosse must be accomplyshed, and the veritie of his manlye nature declared, and further by his resurrection, and the holy ghost, his diuinitie muste bee declared. For although the voyce and sentence of Peter was praysed of Christ, as the sentence of them whiche now began to profyt and sprynge vp by litle and litle, vnto thynges of more perfection: yet they dreamed of a certayne kyngdome not vtterly vnlyke a worldlye kyngdome. And therfore Jesus darkely and as in a riddle promised vnto Peter the ryght of ỹ keyes, but he deliuered them not by and by. For as yet he was not mete to vse thē, as yet he was not sufficiently taught with the instruccion of the holye spyrite. And therefore Jesus calleth them backe to the misterie of the crosse and of his death, by the whiche mystery that kyngdom must be prepared, the deuil once ouercum, and synnes abolyshed, that they myght be the lesse troubled in their myndes whan they should see thynges chaunce, whiche they knewe should cum to passe a little after. They desyred rather to glory in that mighty and high sonne of the liuyng God: but no man can truely glory in hi but he whiche is not offended with his humilitie and lowne. Jesus therefore began to prepare his discyples to this storme whiche was at hand, shewyng theym that he must firste goe to Jerusalem, and that he should haue many griefes and displeasures of the Scrybes and Pharyseis, and also of the chiefe priestes, and fynally that he should be kylled, but on the thirde daye ryse agayne. Whan the disciples beyng yet carnal vnderstoode not fully this communicacion, because they iudged these thynges vnmeete and vnworthy for hym, who through so many myracles declared hymself to be the sonne of God: yet they durst not demaund of their maister, what it mēt to dye and ryse agayne. Therefore Peter, who for the speciall loue that he had to his maister was bolder then the other, taketh hym aside from the other of the Apostles, as though he would tell hym a thyng more familiarly: and chidyng hym, and abhorryng the speakyng of death and afflictions, sayde: Lord be good to your selfe.

And whan Peter had taken hym aside, he beganne to rebuke hym, sayeng: Master fauoure thy self, &c,

These thynges shall not happen vnto you. For it is in you, that they cum not to passe: For although Peter pronounced hym to be the sonne of God alyue, rather by the instigacion of the father thā by his own reason or wit: yet he was farre from the vnderstandynge of that mysterye, that Jesus by his death should redeme mankind, and by his resurrection declare vnto the worlde the myghte of his diuine power. Therefore Jesus to reformme the affeccion in his disciples, turned vnto thē and beheld them, whom he knewe to haue lyke mynde and affeccion (albeit onely Peter durste blame ꝑ Lord) sayde vnto Peter: Cum behynde me Sathan. Be not agaynste the wyl of my father: it is thy parte to folowe me, not to go before. Now thou dooest withstande, and indeuour to let that thyng, whiche both my father willeth to be doen, and also it behoueth me to do, for the health and saluacion of mā kynde. Thou desirest to be a felowe of the kyngdome, and thou arte against me, makyng speede vnto the crosse of myne owne accord, to thentent I may wyn and get this kyngdome to my father: what way ye see me go, the same ye muste goe also to the kyngdome of Heauen. But thou sauerest not yet the thynges whiche be of God, but led by mannes affeccions, repinest againste the wyll of god. Resiste not therfore thou vnprofytable counselour, but folowe after me, becum rather a scholler then a maister,

But he turneth hym about, and said vnto Peter: goe after me Sathan.

Thou sauourest not the thynges that be of god, but those that bee of men.

The texte, ¶ Than sayd Jesꝰ vnto his disciples: If any man wil folow me, let hym forsake hiself, & take vp his crosse & folowe me. For who so wyl shaue his life shal lose it. Again who so loseth his life for my sake, shal find it. For what doth it profite a mā if he win al ꝑ whole world, & lose his own soule? For what shal a mā geue to redeme his soule again wal? For the sōne of man shal cum in the glory of his father with his angels, & then shal he reward euery man accordyng to his deedes. Verily I say vnto you, there be sum standyng here whiche shall not tast of death, tyll they see the sonne of man cum in his kyngdome.

When that with these sayinges Jesus had cutte the combe of Peter for his importune frowardnes: turnyng to all his disciples began to declare at large large what it was that he sayd to Peter: cum behynde me. Whosoeuer (sayth he) wyll be my disciple and partaker of the kyngdome of heauen, let hym folowe my steppes: And lyke as he seeth me despysyng al the goodes of this worlde, to bestowe my lyfe also willyngly for the saluacion of men and glory of my father: So must he also refuse and caste of al humayne affections, ready to all kyndes of death for the Ghospelles sake: and take his crosse and folowe me, whiche am goyng to the crosse. So to suffer is a blessed thyng: so to be rebuked is a glorioufe thyng: so to be killed is a winnyng of lyfe. I knowe there is nothyng more dere then lyfe: but so euery man must lese his lyfe yf he will saue it: and excepte he lose it, he shall lose it in dede. He loseth it for auauntage that loseth it for the Gospelles sake. He looseth it in deede whiche forsakyng the ghospel, prouydeth for this temporall lyfe, and loseth the lyfe euerlasting. There is no man so folishe that would winne this hole world with the losse of this corporal and short life. To what purpose serue rychesse, yf the owner perysshe. So it is a madde mannes parte to make so muche of his affections, of rychesse, ozels of his body, which within short tyme should perishe, yea thoughe no man kyll it: that for mennes pleasure he well leese the lyfe euerlastynge, whiche who so hath not, hath all the other in vain. Therfore nothyng ought to be so dere vnto any man, the gayn wherof he woulde chaunge with the losse of his soule. For the losse of other thynges may sum wayes be recompensed, the losse of the soule canne not be recouered. He that loseth his lyfe for my sake dooeth not lose it, but committeth it to me for auauntage, & shal receiue it agayn w̄ lucre whan ꝑ maiestie of the kyngdome of God shall appere. Nor ye ought not to be discouraged in your mynde, because I haue shewed you that ye muste suffer muche aduersitie for the ghospell. They shall haue an ende shortelye, and euerlastyng glorye shall folowe the temporall ignominie and rebuke. For the sonne of man whom ye shall see oppressed and troden downe of all men, and counted for a worme: shall cum once in an other lykenesse, and shall shewe vnto all men the maiestie and glory of his father, beeyng garded and accompanyed with his aungels. Than he that was iudged here and condempned with a shamefull death, shall bee the iudge of all men bothe quicke and deade, and shall yelde a rewarde vnto euery man accordyng to his dedes. Than shall they be appoynted to euerlastyng deathe, whiche here regarded more their life than me: and they shalbe rewarded with immortall life, whiche for my sake despised the life of the body for a tyme. Nowe is the tyme of stryfe and trauayle, hereafter shalbe ꝑ tyme of rewardes. And truely this felicitie shal than be made absolute and perfecte, when it shalbe seene good vnto the father. For it belongeth not vnto you to knowe the tyme. And yet in ꝑ meane season there shalbe geuen to you a certain tast of his glory. For be ye assured of this: there be sum here standyng whiche shal not tast of death before that they see the sonne of man shewyng the maiestie of his kyngdome, as it may be seene with bodely yyes. Surely before death they shall see the kyngdome of god shewe furth his power: and nowe by little and little, vanquishe and ouercum the whole power of this worlde.

For what doth it profit a manne if he winne all the world. &c.

For the sōne of man shall cū in the glory of his father with his angels, &c.

Uerely I say vnto you there be sū stādyng here whiche shall not taste of death tyll they see the sonne of man cum in his kyngdome.

The paraphrase of Eraſmus vpon The.xvii. chapter.

The texte. ¶ And after ſyxe dayes Jeſus taketh Peter and James and John his brother, and bringeth them vp into a high mountaine out of the way, and he was tranſfigured before the, and his face did ſhyne as the ſunne, and his clothes wer as whyte as the light. And behold there appeared vnto them Moſes and Helias talkyng with him. Than anſwered Peter, and ſayde vnto Jeſus: Lord here is good being for vs. If thou wilt, let vs make here thre tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Helias. As he was yet ſpeaking, beholde, a bryght cloude ſhadowed them. And behold, there came a voyce out of the cloud, ſaying: this is my welbeloued ſonne in whom I delyght muche, heare hym. And whā the diſciples had heard theſe thynges, they fell on their faces, and were ſore afrayed. And Jeſus came and touched them, and ſayde: Ariſe, and be not afrayed. And when they had lyfte vp their yes, they ſawe no man ſaue Jeſus onely.

After ſyxe dayes Jeſus willyng by ſum meanes as it were by a dreame, to ſhew vnto his diſciples, that ſight and apperaunce, in the whiche once he ſhall cū to be iudge of the worlde: he choſe oute three of the number of his diſciples, Peter, James, & John his brother: and whā he had brought them vp into a very hye hyll, far from the ſyght of men, he was tranſfigured before them. And his face ſhined like the ſunne, and his garmentes wer bryghte with whyteneſſe as whyte as ſnowe, & as no fuller can make vpon the earth. And there appered also to them, Moſes and Helias talking with him, of the glory of his death, whiche he ſhould ſuffer at Jeruſalem. This was thought good to Chriſt ỹ thapoſtles ſhould be confirmed by thoſe auctors, whō all the Jewes magnified moſte: and that they ſhould not ſuſpecte that he would abolith ỹ law, ſith Moſes ſtoode with hym: nor the Prophetes, ſith Helias was preſente: neyther that they ſhould abhorre his death as a ſhamefull thyng, whiche ſo great men ſet forth, and ſhewed it to be gloriouſe. Theſe thynges wer ſeene to the Apoſtles as to men newely waked from ſlepe: for theyr yes wer heuy and grieued. For mortall febleneſſe was not of capacitie to receiue the greatneſſe of the viſion. The diſciples therfore beeyng afeard and amaſed with ſuche a wonderfull and incredible ſyght, Peter not yet fully wel aduiſed, but rauyſhed wholly with the pleaſure and maieſtie of the ſyghte: whiche ſemed to be farre from mencion of death, ſayde: Lorde let vs buyld here thre tētes or pauilions: one for thee, another for Moſes, and the thyrde for Helias. This was thought vnto Peter more wiſdom than to be ſlain at Jeruſalē. Peter had not yet ended his cōmunicacīō, behold, a bryght & pleaſaūt cloude ouerſhadowed thapoſtles, leſte they ſhould be abſorpte and ouercūmed with the highneſſe of the ſyghte. And beholde the voyce of the father ſounded out of the cloude, witneſſynge of his ſonne with theſame wordes, with the whiche he witneſſed of hym, when he was baptyſed in Jordane: This is my onely beloued ſonne, in whome my minde hath delyghte, heare hym. Whan the diſciples heard this voyce, full of diuine maieſtie, and not to be borne of mannes eares, they fell downe grouelynge vpon their faces, and were more afeard. For they wer afeard of their lyfe, becauſe they had learned that God ſayde thus: man ſhal not ſee me and liue. But Jeſus receyuyng againe his former ſhape, touched them with his handes, leſt they ſhould ſuppoſe that he were a goſte, and with his accuſtomed and knowen voyce

And beholde there appered vnto theym Moyſes and Helyas talkyng wt hym.

As he was yet talking, beholde. ic.

boyce he comforted them, saying: Aryse and feare nothyng. Further when they were cum to theymselfes and lyfted vp theyr yes, they sawe no man there but Jesus alone, euen lyke as he came vnto the hyll.

The texte.

¶ And whan they came downe from the mountayn, Jesus charged the, saying: Shew the vision to no man vntyll the sonne of man be rysen agayne from the deade. And his disciples asked hym, saying: why than say the Scribes that Helias must first cum? And Jesus aunswered, and said: Truely Helias shal first cum and restore al thynges. But I say vnto you, that Helias is cum already. And they knewe hym not, but haue doen vnto hym whatsoeuer they lysted. In lykewyse shal the sonne of man also suffer of them. Than the disciples vnderstoode that he spake vnto them of John Baptiste.

And when they came downe from the hyll, before they came to the cumpany of the other disciples, he commaunded them to tell no manne of these thynges that they had seene, vntyl the sonne of man were rysen from deth. For vntyll that tyme the tale should be vnprofitable, and not beleued. And the disciples kepte it to theymselues, and conferred betwene theymselues what it myght meane, that Jesus sayde: after that he be rysen agayne from death. Theyr harte was so wrapt and entangled, that that woorde so often hearde, could not enter into their harte. But a certayne doubte rose in theyr myndes of that, that they sawe Helyas standynge with Jesus, this doubte they propose vnto hym in the waye. What meaneth it than (q they) that the Scribes teachyng and tellyng of the cummynge of Messias, be wount to saye oute of the auctho[r]itie of Malachie, that before the cummynge of Messias, Helias Thesbites shal cum. And he wente not before thy cummyng, but this daye was seene in the hyll. Vnto whom Jesus making aunswere, sayde: Truely Helyas shal cum lyke as Malachyas said: and accordyng to his Prophecye shall goe before my cummynge, and shall restore all thynges, the residewe of the people of Jewes beyng conuerted vnto the ghospell, least the wholle nacion should be condempned. But this cummyng shall bee in tyme to cum, when I shall be here agayne with the maiestie of my father, rendryng rewardes vnto euery manne accordynge vnto his dedes. And yet a certayne Helyas went before this my cummyng also, whome the Jewes despyted, euen as they dyd me, and dyd vnto hym not after his desertes, but whatsoeuer it pleased the. And the sonne of man shal be handeled of them with lyke mekenes and gentilnes. Than the disciples vnderstode that he called John Baptiti Helyas, for the lykenes of lyfe, and frenesse in reprouyng of kynges.

And his disciples asked hi, saying: why than saye the Scribes that Helias must first cume Helias is cu already, and they knowe hym not.

¶ than the disciples vnderstoode that he spake vnto the of John. Baptist.

¶ And whan they wer cum to the people, there came to him a certain man kneling down, and said: Lord haue mercy on my sonne, for he is lunatike and sooze vexed, for oftentymes he falleth into the fyer, and ofte into the water: And I brought hym to thy disciples, and they could not heale hym. Jesus aunswered, and sayd: O faythlesse and croked nacion, how long shal I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bryng hym hyther. And Jesus rebuked the deuill, and he went out of hym. And the chylde was healed from that tyme.

But now when Jesus wēt vnto his disciples, he sawe a great multytude of men about them, and the Scribes disputyng with theym. The people marueilyng whyther Jesus was gone, ran vnto hym and saluted hym. He demaunded of thē what the matter was ẏ they disputed among thēselues. Than one of the multitude made aunswere: maister I brought my sonne to thee, whiche is miserably vexed of an vncleane spirite: whiche as often as he taketh hym, the chylde is beaten againste the grounde, sumtyme he is driuen into the fyer, sumtyme into the water, he foometh, he gnasheth with with his teeth, and consumeth away. And because I coulde not haue you, I desyred your disciples to caste out the deuill, and they coulde not. But Jesus to heale the vnbeleefe of all menne cryeth out in maner angerly: O nacion vnbeleuyng and without faythe, howe longe shall I be among you in vayne, howe longe shall I suffre your vntractable and frowarde maners? I haue dooen so many myracles and profitte nothyng: and therewith commaunded the chylde to be brought, because the myracle myghte bee the more euident and notable to all menne. Whiche when he was broughte and seene of Jesus, forthwith euen there before them all, the spirite toke hym, and the chylde was hurled vppon the grounde, and tumbled, and foomed, a myserable syghte to see. Than Jesus the more to declare the greatnesse of the dysease, asked the father howe longe it was, sith the chylde beganne to bee vexed with this disease. The father made aunswere and said: from his infancie, and not without daunger of his lyfe. For oftentymes he droue hym into the fyer, sumtyme into the water to destroy hym. I knowe that it is a sore disease, yet yf thou canste do any thyng, haue mercye vpon vs and helpe vs. Jesus hearyng (yf thou canste) sumwhat reprouyng the weakenesse of his faythe, as who sayeth any disease were of greatter might than the power of god, sayth vnto hym: Aske not what I am able to do, but loke what thou art able to beleue. For yf thou truste fully, nothyng is so harde but it may cum to passe to him that doeth beleue and truste. At this woorde the father conceyuyng a truste, and a more sure hope, with plentiful teares cryyng out, made aunswere: Lord I beleue, and yf any thyng wante in my trust and beleefe, supply thou it of thy goodnesse, and healpe my vnbeleefe. In the meane tyme when Jesus espyed the multitude of people runnynge to gase, desyrous to see whether the thyng that came not to passe to the disciples shoulde cum to passe to Jesus: he threatened the vncleane spyrite, saiyng: thou deafe and dumme spirite, I commaund the go out from him, and returne not agayne vnto hym hereafter. But the spirite wente from the chylde with howlyng, yet firste he tore him and vexed hym so vehemently that he lay for deade, and many warranted that he was dead. So strong and toughe was the vyolence of the disease. But Jesus takyng the chylde by the hande, lifted him vp: and he arose. Lyke as the father dyd hardely beleue: so his sonne was hardely healed.

O faythles & croked nacio, how long shal I be wyth you? how long shal I suffer you?

And Jesus rebuked the deuill, and he weare oute of hym.

The texte, ¶ Than came the disciples aparte to Jesus, and sayde: why coulde not we caste hym out? Jesus sayd vnto them, because of youre vnbeleefe. For verely I saye vnto you, if ye haue faythe as a grayne of mustarde seede, ye shall saye vnto this mount ayne. Remoue from hence to yonder place, and it shal remoue: and nothyng shalbe vnpossible vnto you. Albeit this kynde goeth not out, but by prayer and fastyng.

Jn the meane season the disciples were heauy in their myndes, fearynge least thorough their defaulte they had loste the power of dooyng miracles, where as before they had gloryed, that deuilles also were obedyente vnto their woorde: before the multitude they keepe sylence for shame. But whan Jesus was cum into the house, they goe vnto their mayster and demaunde of hym: why coulde not we caste out this deuell, sith this power was once delyuered vnto vs from the? Jesus to confyrme the faythe and truste of his disciples, whiche ought to bee so great that sumtyme it myghte healpe the distruste of others, sayth. The weakenesse of your fayth partly was the cause. For the vyolence of the disease was vehement, and the fathers faithe

Why coulde not we caste him out?

Because of your vnbeleefe

weake and waucring, & your fayth was not so mighty, that it was equall and hable against both these difficulties. For it is somwhat werish with mānes affections, and fauty by the reason of the leauen of vayne glory. And ye had fayth like the seade of mustard, whiche beyng vile and litill, yet whē it is bruled, it showeth a sharpe quicknes of her nature, and sowed in the grounde springeth vp into a large tree: nothyng shulde be so harde, but wt a worde it should be brought to passe out of hande. Yea yf ye should saye to the hill remoue the from hence, & go into an other place, it would do it forthwyth as t was commaunded. But this kynde of deuils wherewith the childe was possessed, is not caste out, vnlesse fayth be confirmed & strengthned by prayer and fasting. The violence of the disease was strong & towgh, and by continuance of time, it was turned into nature. Against suche maner of fautes we must fight with fastynges, which do subdew the body being brought lowe, vnto the spirite, and also with prayer which obteyneth ẏ helpe of god. By this communication Jesus taught that greuous, vehement, and muche accustomed diseases of the minde, must be driuen awaye with strong and vehement remedies.

If ye haue fayth as a grayne of mustard seede ye shal say vnto this mountayn, remoue from hence to yonder place, and it shal remoue.

Albeit, this kinde goeth not out, but by prayer and fasting.

¶ And when they were in Galile, Jesus sayd vnto them, It wyl come to passe that the sonne of man shall be deliuered into the handes of men, and they shall kill him, and the third daye he shall ryse agayne. And they were exceding sory. The texte.

But now Jesus whan he was in Galile, to thintent he might fortifye & make strong the mindes of his disciples, lest they should be ouer much troubled with his death: againe he doth iterat and beate it in to them, that the sonne of man must be deliuered into the handes of men, and killed of them, and that the thirde day he should rise agayne from death. This saying dyd greue the mindes of the disciples aboue measure, whiche so loued their lord (albeit their affection and loue was yet carnall) that their eares coulde not suffer any mention of death. For they coulde not vnderstande that Moses and Helias called the death of Jesus a glory and renowne, and that ẏ death shoulde bring healthe and saluacion to the whole world. And although like as they were heuy and sad at the mencion of deathe, so they ought to haue ben cherefull and glad at the mencion of the resurrection: yet their minde abhorred so muche from the remembraunce of deathe, that surely they vnderstode not what it ment to dye and the thirde daie to rise agayne. For they thought it better vtterly not to dye, seing that he was hable to do ẏ, whych was hable to reuiue agayne from death.

¶ And whan they were cum to the citie of Capernaum, they that vse to receiue tribute money called a didramme, came to Peter, and sayde: Doth your master paye a didramme? he sayth, yea. And whan he was cum into the house, Jesus preuented hym, sayyng. What thinkest thou Simon? Of whom doth the kinges of the earth take tribute or toll, of theyr children, or of straungers? Peter sayeth vnto him, of straungers. Jesus sayth vnto him: thā the children be free. Notwithstāding lest we should offend the go to the sea and cast an hooke, and take the fishe that cummeth first vp, and whan ẏ hast opened his mouth, thou shalt finde a stater, take it, and geue it vnto them for the and me. The texte.

After that he came to the citie of Capernaum, they that demaunded trybute in Ceasars name, being afrayed to speake to Jesv, because of his authoritie, which he had gotten him nowe by my̆racles: they went to Peter whō they sawe in maner next about hym: Doth your master (ẏ they) paye a Didram for trybute? Peter, where as he had no money, and woulde not offend the gatherers of trybute, made aunſwere that he payeth. For Jeſus hytherto had payed ſuche maner tributes. And whan they were now entred into ỹ houſe (for Jeſus had anhouſe there) Peter beyng perplexed, thought in his minde to ſpeake to Jeſus, as touching paymente of the tribute: For he had prompted, and had not to paye. Then Jeſus not ignorant what Peter had in his hart, preuēted his queſtion. Simon (q he) what thinkeſt thou? Of whō be kīges wont to take tribute or ſubſidie, of theyr childrē or of strāgers? Of ſtraungers q Peter. Thē (q Jeſus) ỹ chyldrē be free: ſignifyīg therby though ſomewhat darkely, that he being lorde of the lande and the ſea, & of all thinges, oweth tribute or ſubſidie to no mortall Prince, and that his diſciples as the children of the kingdome be not bounde: but yet mynding to teach that in ſuche thinges whiche make nothyng agaynſte godlynes, obedience ought to be geuen to this kynde of men, leſt beyng prouoked they offēd more greuoully, he added: yet (q he) leſt we offende them, go to the ſea and take the fyſh whiche cummeth out fyrſt, open his mouthe, and thou ſhalte fynde a piece of coyne called a Statere, whiche is fower drammes. Take it, & geue it, for me & ỹ. With this dede Jeſus both ſhewed his power, whereby he was ſubiecte to no mā, & his modeſtie, whereby he would geue place vnto them whō it is not mete to ſtyrre or prouoke for a thing of litle value, & to be ſet nothing by. For he ỹ can geue after that ſorte, is greater than he that ought to geue: & yet when he geueth that he ought not, he teacheth that it is better ſumtyme for to geue ouer thy right than to ſtryue for thy ryght vñ them that be froward: chyefely in thoſe thinges whiche diminiſh thy ſubſtaunce, but hurte nothing godlynes. The worlde hath his ordre, which muſt not be troubled in no caſe, by occaſion of libertie of the goſpell.

The .xviii. Chapter.

AT the ſame tyme came the diſciples vnto Jeſus, ſaying, Who is the greateſt in the kyngdome of heauen? Jeſus called a chylde vnto hym, & ſet him in the middeſt of them ſaying: Verely I ſaye vnto you, except ye turne, and becum as chyldren, ye ſhal not entre into the kingdome of heauen. Whoſoeuer therfore humbleth him ſelfe as this chylde, the ſame is the greateſt in the kingdome of heauen. And who ſo receyueth ſuch a chylde in my name, receyueth me. But who ſo offendeth one of theſe lytle ones whiche beleue on me, it wer better for him that a mylſtone were hanged about his neck, & that he were drowned in the depe of the ſea. Woe vnto the worlde becauſe of offences. Neceſſary it is that offences cum, but woe vnto the mā by whome the offence cōmeth.

AFter ỹ theſe thinges were thus doen, ther entered into ỹ myndes of thapoſtles, a certayne worldly affection, and a pricke of enuie and ambicion. They heard of the kingdome of heauen, they ſawe three apoſtles led aparte into the mountayne, they hearde that the kayes of the kyngdome of heauen were delyuered vnto Peter, and that it was ſayde vnto him: bleſſed arte ỹ Simon Bariona, & vpon this ſtone I will buylde my churche, they ſawe hym talking with their maſter of certayne thinges both familiarly & boldly, & euen nowe they ſawe him preferred before thother apoſtles in payment of tribute, and in maner made equal vnto Chriſt, therfore they ſumwhat enuied Peter, vnto whome the principalitie of the kingdome of heauen ſeemed to be appoynted vnto, where as he was yonger in yeares.

Therefore they go vnto Jeſus, & demaunde who ſhould be chief in the king

Therfore they go vnto Jesus, & demaunde who should be the chiefe in the kingdome of heauen. For yet they dreamed vpon suche certayne dignities, as we see in princes courtes. But Jesus to plucke this affection vtterly out of theyr myndes, he called vnto him a certayne childe, and set him in the middes of his disciples, a litill one, and yet far from all affections of ambicion and enuy, simple, pure, and liuing after the onely course of nature. Be ye sure of this (q he) vnlesse a man be wholy chaunged, & cast awaye vtterly all suche affections, and be transformed into the facion and simplicytie of this chylde, he shall not once be receyued into the kyngdome of heauen. So that in no wyse preeminence and soueraintie ought ambiciously to be desired. Wherfore who so doth submit hym selfe, and becum like vnto this babe, in that he humbleth hym selfe to be as the lest of all, he shall be greatest in the kingdome of heauen. For who so through modesty and sobrenes, maketh him selfe as least, the same is the greatest in vertue.

Except ye turne and becum as children, ye shall not enter into the kingdome of heauen.

Who soeuer therefore humbleth him selfe as this childe, the same is the greatest in ỹ kyngdome of heauen.

Princes loue them that be like vnto them, & among them he is most esteemed ỹ preferreth him selfe before others. I delight in my like. In courtes of this world the prince thinketh it to redounde vnto his rebuke, yf a man vse any of his nobles contumeliously: and he taketh the gentilnes to be bestowed vpon him selfe, which is bestowed vpon them. But ỹ fauour of true, symple & humble men is so great w̄ me, ỹ who so euer receiueth any one of these for my sake, I would it shoulde be counted as done to my selfe, euen as though he receyued me. Contrary wise whoso hurteth or offendeth any one of these litill ones, whiche trust in me, and depende wholy vpon me, he shall be more greuously punished, than yf he should be drowned in the deape sea with a milstone at his necke. For what is more wicked than to offend them, which beare to no man ill wyll, whiche enuieth no manne, whiche preferre them selfe aboue no man, which loue all men indifferently? But alas, wo be to ỹ worlde for offending and greuing of lyke litill ones. The frowardenes of men is the cause that offences must nedes chaunce. There shall be men, whiche stirred vp with enuy and hatred, wyll persecute them that do for the, will say yll by them that wisshe them well, will kill them that bringe euerlasting health. And truely these offences and griefes shall profit thē that shal suffer them, yea they shal be profitable to all ỹ worlde. But yet it shal turne him to displeasure, thorough whose defaute this offence shall rise.

And who so receiueth such a childe in my name, receyueth me.

Wo vnto the worlde because of offences. Necessary it is, that offences cum.

But woe vnto the mā, by whom the offence cumeth

¶ Wherefore yf thy hand or thy foote hinder the, cut him of, and cast it from the. It is better for the to enter into lyfe halte or mayned, rather than ỹ shouldest hauinge two handes or two feete, be cast into euerlasting fyre. And yf thyne ye offend the, plucke it out, and cast it from the. It is better for the to enter into life with one ye, rather then hauing two yes to be cast into hell fyre. Take hede that ye despise not one of these litill ones. For I say vnto you that in heauen their angels do alwayes behold the face of my father, whiche is in heauen.

Therfore they that desire to enter into the kingdome of heauen, let them diligently auoyde the offences and griefes of litill ones, but rather let them helpe one a nother. And it is not ynough to beware that a mā offend not an other, but also to take heed that he offende not him selfe. For then they be offences in deede, whan a man is an offence vnto him selfe. Therfore let none affeccion be so dere vnto any man, but that forthwith it be cut of yf it be an offence and a let to him that hasteth to the kyngdom of heauen. In so much that yf thy hande or thy fote, that is to saye a membre most necessary, be offensiue vnto the, it must be cut of and cast awaye. For it is better for the to be receyued into the lyfe euerlasting maymed or lame, than with perfecte handes & feete, to be cast whole into euerlasting fyre.

Wherefore if thy hande or thy foot hinder the cut hi of and cast it from the.

The eye is not only a necessary membre to be vsed, but also very pleasaunt vnto man. And yet in case it offende the, plucke it out, and cast it awaye. It is better for ỹ to be receyued into euerlasting lyfe wt one eye, than to be caste headlong into hel fyre wt both eyes, perfect & whole. But Iesus speakinge thus, meant not that any membre of ỹ body should be cut of, but that all affections shoulde be cut of, whiche wdrawe vs from the care of euerlasting saluacyō. For a frēd whō ỹ canst vnneth forbeare, is as it were amānes hād.

And yf thyne eye offend the plucke it out, and cast it frō the.

Thy father vpō whome ỹ stayest, is thy foote: thy wyfe or thy childe whō ỹ louest tenderly, is thy eye. Therfore as there is nothing that ought to be so precious, & nothing that ought so highly to be estemed of mā, wherby he ought to be withdrawen from the kyngdome of heuē, so no man be he neuer so poore, so base, & humble, ought to be dispysed, but holpen rather to cum forwarde to better & better. Ye haue an example. Se therfore that ye dispise none of these lytill ones. Although wt ỹ world they be abiectes, yet wt god they be greatly regarded. For this I tell you certaynely, angels whiche as their ministers haue charge of thē, do continually behold ỹ face of ỹ father which is in heauē.

Take hede ỹ ye dispise not one of these litill ones.

Hereof ye may esteme how much they be regarded wt god sith he hath appointed thē suche kepers & guides. They be yet rude & rawe, they may fal, they may be deceyued, but their simplicitie is worthy helpe and not punyshment.

¶ For the sonne of man is cum to saue that whiche was loste. What thinke ye yf a man hath a hundred shepe, and one of them be gonne astray, doth he not leue nynety and nyne in the mountaynes, and goeth and seketh it that was gone astraye? And yf he chaunce to finde it, verely I say vnto you: he reioyseth more of that shepe, thā of nyntie and nine which went not astraye. Euen so it is not the wyll of youre father in heauen, that one of these litell ones shoulde perysshe.

For the sonne of man came not into the yerth to destroye any man, but what in hym is to saue all men. But many will not be saued, and persecute hym whiche is willing to saue. These be they whome ỹ world hath in great veneracyō. They be high in auctorytie, they be mighty wt riches, they seme to excell in learning, they be commended & setforth with a certaine meruelous coūterfeityng & colour of false holynes. Truly suche must not be prouoked willingly, but must be despised stowtely, yf they fearig lest their own power decaye, oppresse the power of god: if they seking their owne glory, enuye to the glorye of the gospell: if they folowing their lucre be against the profytes of all men: if they bosting their vayne learning, do corrupt ỹ doctrine of ỹ gospel, if vnder ỹ pretence of false religiō, they go about to extincte true religion, yf they were fierse, & cruell by benefites & good turnes: These maner of mē must thanke thē selues for their owne destructiō. But this ought to be our study & endeuour, ỹ we suffre none to perish of these litil & weake ones which so do erre ỹ they be in ỹ way of recouery, beig more like to shepe thā woulues. Coniecture by your selues what great care ỹ father (which is naturally good) doth take, least any mā should perish, whō he made to ỹ intēt they should be blessed. For yf there be a true & a faythfull shepeard, lorde

ouer an hundred shepe, and one should be lost of so greate a number, would he not leaue the nintie and nine in the hilles and seke her which is wandered from the flocke: and is so greued with the lacke of one lost sheepe that he would put the hole flocke beside in daunger. And yf he shoulde chaunce to fynde her, certainely I saye vnto you that he wyll reioyce more for that one gotten again, than for all the other whithe were not loste. Wherfore if a man beyng a sheperde beare such affeccion toward his flocke which he doth possesse onely, but created not: how muche more is it my fathers wyll whyche is in heauen that none of these littel ones whom he hath created, shoulde perysh: whome he regardeth so that he hath appointed his aungelles to the kepyng of them, and hath bestowed his onely sonne to call them to saluacio.

What thinke ye? yf a man haue an hundred shepe, and one of the be gone a strays.

Euen so it is not the wil of youre father in heauē that one of these litle ones should perysshe.

¶ Moreouer if thy brother trespasse against the, go and tell hym his faulte betwene hym and the alone. If he heare the, thou hast wonne thy brother, but yf he heare the not take with the one or two, that in the mouth of two or thre witnesses euery matter maye be stablyshed. If he heare not them, tell it vnto the congregacion. If he heare not the congregacion let him be vnto the as an heathen man, and as a Publican. Verely I saye vnto you: whatsoeuer ye bynde in earth, shalbe bounde in heauen, and whatsoeuer ye loose on earth, shalb. loosed in heauen. Agayn I saye vnto you that if two of you agre in earth vpon any maner of thing, whatsoeuer they desire, they shall haue it of my father whiche is in heauen. For where two or thre are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middest of them.

Therefore alwaye with offences from your company, whiche breake brotherly peace, but let there be mutuall charitie, wherby ye may louyngly helpe and heale eche others faultes if any chaunce: and the waye to heal shal be this. If thy brother do any thing against the whiche is worthy to be loked vpon, leape not out forwith to vengeaunce: neyther again suffer him not by thy silence to be lost, whilest that he sinneth frely and at large, drunken with his owne affections: but fyrst trye him with a very gentyl remedy whiche shall not so muche as put him to any shame. Go vnto him alone, and debate the matter betwyxt you none other beyng by. If he do not acknowlege his faulte, reproue him, and lay it before his yes howe muche he hath erred from the dewtie of brotherly charytie. And let thy monicion be suche that it may declare the to seke nothing els, but his health, and the restoryng of olde amitie. And yf he be so curable, that he commeth to hym selfe at this secrete monicion, there is no cause why thou shouldest reuenge or put him to open blame: it is inoughe for the, that thou haste wonne thy brother. And in the meane season thou haste gayned by it. For thou shouldest haue loste a frende, and god should haue loste a soule. But yf the dysease be so greuouse that it cānot be healed with this lyght medicine, yet thou must not vtterly dispaire, nor furthwith run to the extreme remedies. But if that he wyl not heare the alone, go to hym againe, takyng with the one or two, eyther that he may be amended with sum lyttell shame whiche shalbe no infamy vnto him, or els that he maye be confuted and ouercum by the testimony of two or thre. But yf he be so vntractable that he wyll not be moued neyther wyth shame, nor wyth feare of iudgemente: bryng the matter to the cōgregacion ỹ he may be reformed eyther by the consent of the multitude, or by the auctorite of them whiche be rulers ouer the multytude. But if he be so farre paste cure, that he wyll not be corrected, neyther by secrete and brotherly monicion, neyther by the knowledge and consente of two or thre, neyther by the shame of his faulte vttered and disclosed, neyther

Moreouer yf thy brother trespasse against the, go, and tell hym his faute betwene hym & the alone.

Yf he heare the, thou hast wonne thy brother.

But yf he heare the not, take with the one or twoo.

If he heare not them, tell it vnto ỹ cōgregacion.

If he heare not the cōgregacio let hym be vnto ỹ as an heathen man.

there by the auctoritie of the chiefe rulers: leaue him to his disease. Let him becut of from the congregacion, & taken in none other wyse but as an Heathen or a Publicane. Let this be the greuousest punishment amongest you, whiche notwithstandynge is vsed for no nother purpose, but that the brother eyther shulde come vnto hym selfe by shame, considerynge that he is shunned and fled of al men, or els lest he being mingled in the flock, shoulde hurte other with his infection.

Merely I say vnto you what so euer ye bynde in yearth, shalbe bounde in heauen.

No man ought to saye vnto me: the iudgementes of thy kyngedome be but weriche and weake, naye they be verye seuere and sore, yf a man wyl cõtemne them obstinately. For mannes lawes when they punyshe a greuouse offence with death, they do nothing but kyl the body, and sumtyme they kyl him whome god doth not condempne, and they kyll onely, and they amende him not, for he is not alyue to be amẽded. But this condemnaciõ, although it procedeth leasurelye to punyshmente, yet for this cause it is very seuere & sore that he that is condempned, vnlesse he dothe repente, is punyshed wyth euerlastinge payne, whiche by no meanes he can escape. Whom Ceaser doth condempne, God sumtyme doth assoyle: and whome the prince doth assoyle, god sumtyme doth condempne. The prynce whome he doth assoyle, liueth in the company of men, to make other lyke him selfe: whome he kylleth he taketh from the company of men not onely not healing him, but makyng him in case that he can not be healed. These be mannes iudgementes, rather necessary then prayse worthy. But your sentence so remoueth a man that is vncurable, that he can not infecte them that be good: and yet he is in case that he maye repent: because that ye haue power to saue and not to destroye. And yet they shall not sinne vnpunyshed, whome ye suffre to haue theyr lyke. He shall be punyshed eternallye, god beynge his iudge, whose sentence shall approue and confirme youre sentence, vnlesse the condempned person do repent. For he that seketh not reuengyng, but the amendement of his brother: he that is ready to forgeue the iniury done agaynst him: he that is carefull for his brothers health: he that wyllynglye cummeth vnto the sicke to heale him being offended himselfe: he that once or twyse repelled, yet ceaseth not to helpe and heale: he that trusteth not to his owne iudgement, but taketh one or two vnto him not to reuenge but to heale: this mannes sentence because it cummeth from an euangelycall mynde god wyll allowe, and neuer wyll breake it vnlesse the condempned person wyll condẽpne that that he hath done. Although therfore your iudgement haue not in apperaunce such seueritie and sharpnes as the iudgementes of prynces hath, yet it is more to be feared than theyr sentence, wherewith oftentymes the best be condempned and the most sinful assoyled. It is a terrible thinge to be condẽpned of god: And he is condemned of hym, whosoeuer is condẽned of you, agreyng together wt a sincere minde. For that that ye iudge by ỹ spirite of god, is not your iudgemẽt, but his by you. But if ye cõdẽpne a mã by the spirite of mã thã it is mannes iudgement and not goddes: and he that by your iudgement is cast out of your company, is not furthwith banysshed from the company of heauen. Therefore the strength of your authoritie resteth in affectiõs, which onely onely god doth beholde and see. Trulye these be the keyes, whyche I wyll geue vnto Peter professynge me: wherewith that, that shall be bounde in yearth, shall be bounde also in heauen: and that, that shall be loosed in yearth, shall be loosed also in heauen. This power although it be specially meete for the heades and chiefe, yet I wyll geue it vnto all men, yf so that they haue a consent and agremente amonge them, not of mauue but in my name. Yea and moreouer I will saye vnto you, your consent shal not haue auctho̅ritie only in pardonynge and condempnynge offenses, yf ye with me and among your selues do agree: but also yf any two be founde in yearth whiche do truly agree in my spirite, that is to saye: not moued with the affection of man, but ioyntly louynge the thinges that be of god: whatsoeuer they aske, they shall obteyne it of my father which is in heauen. Such loue hath the father towarde the euangelycall and holye concorde. Therfore for asmuche as ye maye do so muche with the pryncethat is almighty, ye nede not to repent you of youre power and auctho̅ritie: although before men ye appere feble & weake. That that is asked of Ceasar, is not furthwith obteyned, nor he is not able to performe whatsoeuer is asked hym. For he cā not put away the agewe, or make the dum to speake agayne. But there is nothynge so harde or incredyble whiche my father wyll not geue you, yf ye aske of hym with one consent and agrement.

For where two or.iii. are gathered together in my name: there am I in the middest of them.

¶ Than came Peter vnto hym, and sayde: Lorde how oft shal I forgeue my brother yf he synne agaynst me, tyll seuen tymes? Jesus sayeth vnto hym: I saye not vnto the vntyll seuen tymes, but seuenty tymes seuen tymes. Therfore the kyngdom of heauē is lykened vnto a certayne mā that was a kynge, whiche wouldе take accompte of his seruaūtes. And whan he had begnne to reckē, one was brought vnto him which ought hym ten thousande talentes, but for asmuche as he was not able to paye, his lorde cō̄maunded hym to be solde, and his wyfe and chyldren, and all that he had, and paymente to be made. The seruaunte fell downe and besought hym, saying: Syr haue pacience with me, and I will paye the all. Than had the lorde pitie on the seruaunte, & loosed hym, and forgaue hym the det.

Than came Peter vnto hym, & sayde: lorde how oft shal I forgeue my brother yf he synne agaynste me, tyll seuē times

After that Peter had heardе these thynges diligently, supposynge that all that Jesus hadde reasoned of condempnynge & assoylynge, pertayned chiefly vnto hym: he conceyued in his mynde a certayne doubte, because ẏ Jesus saying (after the thyrde reprouyng let hym be vnto the as an Heathen or a Publycan,) semed to appoynte a certayne numbre: whiche whoso passed, although he ẏ had offended dyd repent, yet he shuld not be receyued vnto grace. Therfore to be more exactly taught in this thynge he went vnto Jesus: Lorde (q̄ he) how often shal I pardō my brother, yf he offēde me, and after what numbre of faultes shal he be repulsed from pardone? After the seuenth faulte? This numbre Peter dyd propose as greate ynoughe, where as Jesus made mencion, but onely of the thyrde reproke. Than Jesus showynge that in these thynges whiche be done agaynste vs we muste be very gentle and easye in forgyuenes: I do not saye (q̄ he) that ye muste forgeue vnto the seuenth faute, but vnto the seuentye tymes seuen: showynge ẏ no numbre ought to be prescribed to a christē forgeuyng: but as often as he ẏ hath offēded doth repēt, so oftē euen vnto the harte his offēce is to be forgeuē: vtterly plucking out frō a christē mīde al desyre to reuēge. And least ẏ any mā shoulde thincke it harde & vniust, Jesꝰ teacheth it to be very equall and iust by a similitude. For this is not so muche a clemency as a recompense. For whan we offende sumtyme agaynste oure neyghboure:

Therfore the kyngdome of heauē is likened vnto a certayne man ẏ was a king which wolde take accompt of his seruaūtes.

But muche more both oftener and more greuouſly agaynſte god, agaynſte whome as often as we offende, the more greuouſlye we ſynne, the greater that he is agaynſt whom we ſynne. And the greater benefites that we receyue of hym, the more vnworthy we be to obteyn pardone eyther of oure neyghboure or of god (who doth pardone hym that ſynneth a thouſande tymes, yf that he repent) yf we thynke it muche to pardō our brother offendyng much leſſe: chiefly ſyth god doth forgyue vs our treſpaſſes on this condition, that we moued by his example, ſhulde be gentyl and eaſy to be intreated towardes our neyghboure. Therfore (ſ̄ he) the kyngdon of heuen is lyke a tyche and a myghty man: who hauyng a great familie, thought to take a counte of his ſeruauntes. And whan he began to count, he founde one that ought hym ten thouſande talentes. And whan the ſum was greather than the detter was able to paye, the lorde cōmaunded both hym and his wyfe and chyldren and all that he had to be ſolde, that the creditour myght be contented with the moneye that was made. But the ſeruaunte fallynge downe with meke ſupte at the lordes knees: I praye the (ſ̄ he) to graunt me ſum reſpyte, and in proceſſe of tyme I wyll paye all. And the Lorde hauynge compaſſion of the ſeruant whiche humbled hymſelfe before him, graunted more than he deſired. For he did not onely not bryng him vnto the lawe, but forgaue hym the whole ſumme.

The texte. ¶ The ſame ſeruaunt went out, and founde one of his felowes, whiche ought him an hundreth denaries, and he layde hand on him, and wrything his necke, threwe hym, & ſayde: paye that thou oweſt. And his felow fell downe, & beſought him, ſayinge: haue pacience with me, and I wyl paye the all. And he wuolde not, but went and caſte hym in to priſon, tyl he ſhoulde paye the det. So when his felowes ſawe what was done, they were very ſory, and came, and tolde vnto theyr Lorde euery thynge that was done. Than his Lorde called hym, and ſayde vnto him: O thou vngratiouſe ſeruaūte, I forgaue the all that det whan thou deſyredſt me, ſhouldeſt not thou alſo haue had compaſſion of thy felowe, as I had pitie on the? And his Lorde was wrothe, and deliuered hym to the tormentours tyll he payed all that was due vnto him. So lykewyſe ſhall my heauenly father do alſo vnto you, yf ye from your hartes forgeue not euery one his brother theyr treſpaſſes.

But that ſeruaunt beyng nowe free and at lybertie, whan he was gone out of his maſters ſyght, by chaunce met with one of his felowe ſeruauntes, whiche owed hym a lytle money, that is an hūdreth denaries: he forgetting his maſters clemencye towardes hym, furthwith layed hande vpon hym and beganne to pluck the miſerable man, ſaying: pay thy det. This felowe ſeruaunt fallyng downe at the knees of his felowe ſeruaunt, beſeched him, with as many wordes as thother beſought his lorde and maſter: deale pacientlye with me, & I will paye you all. But the creditour wouldе not be intreated, but repelled the humble ſutour, and plucked him in to priſon, tyl he had payed his det. Now the other felowe ſeruaūtes, which had ſeene ẏ meruaylous clemēcie of their maſter toward the ſeruaunte, whan they ſawe ſo great crueltie of their felowe ſeruaunt, moued vō great grefe & ſorowe, declared vnto theyr maſter al the matter toward hys felowe. Thā the maſter ſtyrred vō anger called vnto him his ſeruaūt, whome he had pardoned all. Thou naughty ſeruaūt (ſ̄ he) dyd not I beyng thy maſter forgeue ẏ ſuche a great ſū, for none other cauſe but ẏ thou madeſt hūble ſupt vnto me: was it not mete therfore ẏ thou beyng a ſeruaunt, ſhouldeſt forgeue thy felowe ſeruaunt a litle money, and haue cōpaſſion vpon the hūble ſutour, lyke as

I had compassion of the: surely so greate gentylnes of myne towarde the ought to teache the gentylnes towarde thy felowe seruaunte. And now the master beyng sore angrye, delyuered hym to the turmentours to be kepte in prison vntyll he repayed the whole sum that was forgeuen before. After this example your heauenly father wyll deale with you. Euery of you is in det vnto hym much more, whom euery man often doth offende. We also do trespasse against me, but yet farre lesse. But vnlesse euery man forgeue his brother and that with all his harte lyghter offences done agaynst hym: the father wyll not onely not forgeue you the greater trepasses done agaynst hym, but also wyll reuoke and call backe those whiche he had forgeuen.

The .xix. Chapter.

¶ And it came to passe that whan Jesus had fynished these sayinges, he departed from Galile: and came into the coastes of Jewry beyonde Jordane, and muche people folowed hym: and he healed them there. The texte.

After that Jesus with this cōmunicacīō had instructed and framed his disciples vnto well doynge towardes the symple, and vnto gentylnes toward the offēders, he left Galile and wente ouer Jordane, into the coastes of Jewry, as goynge towardes his death to cum, whiche the Phariseis secretlye wente aboute. And thyther also folowed manye flockes of people, bearyng with them diuerse sycke and diseased: and he healed them there.

And the Phariseis came vnto hym, and tempted hym, and sayd vnto hym: Is it lawful for a man to make a diuorcement with his wife for any maner of cause? he answered, and sayde vnto them: haue ye not red how that he whiche made man at ꝑ beginnyng, made them man & woman? and sayd: For this cause shal a man leaue father and mother, and shall cleaue vnto his wife, and they twayne shalbe one flesshe. Wherfore now they are not twayne, but one flesh. Let no mā therfore seperate that god hath coupled together. They sayde vnto him: why dyd Moyses than cōmaunde to geue a testimoniall of diuorcement, and to put her away? He sayde vnto them: Moyses because of the hardenes of your hartes, suffred you to put awaye your wyues, but from the begynnyng it was not so. I saye vnto you: who so euer putteth awaye his wyfe, excepte it be for fornication, and marryeth another, he committeth aduoutrye. The texte.

And agayne the Phariseis seynge so many wonders, and the loue of the multitude towardes Jesus, began to renewe theyr enuy agayne. Who craftilye and subtylye came vnto hym, takynge occasion of the communicatton wherewith he taught before, that the wyfe ought not to be repudiat and cast of. Therfore they propose a question wt two pykes: whether it were lawfull for a man to caste of his wyfe for euery cause. And yf he had answered: it is lawfull, he should seme contrary to hymselfe, where as he taught that diuorce is not lawful: yf he had denyed it, he should seme to haue bene agaynste Moyses lawe, whiche doth permit for euery cause to geue a boke of diuorce, and to sende her awaye. But Jesus so doth tempre and ordre the answere, that he hurteth not thautorite of Moyses, nor recanteth not his doctrine, and stoppeth the mouthe of the Phariseis, whiche were skylfull in the lawe, by thautorytie of the lawe. Haue ye red (sayd he) that whan God made mankynde he ordered ꝑ fyrst matrimonye so, that one was coupled vnto one with a knot that could not be broken? For he made bothe man & woman

And the phariseis came vnto him, & tempted him, and sayd vnto hym: Is it lawefull for a man to make a diuorcemēt with his wife for anye maner of cause.

For this cauſe ſhall a man leaue father, and mother and ſhall cleaue vnto his wyfe, and they twayne ſhall be one fleſhe.

woman of one piece, that by thimbracyng of theſe, mankynde ſhould ſpryng further. And by and by expreſſyng the indiſſoluble knot of the man and of the wife, not Moſes, but god hymſelfe the maker of the mariage, ſaide: For this mutuall charitie, man ſhall forſake father and mother, and be faſtened and coupled vnto his wyfe. And this couplyng ſhall be ſo ſtrayte and faſt, that of two in maner ſhall be made one perſone, which before were two. Therfore once ioyned in matrimony they be not now two, but one body: inſomuche that it is as farre agaynſte nature to ſeparate the wyfe from the man, as to cut awaye a membre from the bodye. Therfore that whiche god hath knyt once together with ſo ſtrayte a bonde, let not man ſeparate. Here the Phariſeis thynkyng that they had caught nowe an occaſyon to catche Jeſus: yf god (ſ they) meante this that thou doeſt ſaye, why than dyd Moſes geue huſbandes leaue to caſte of their wyfe for euerye cauſe ſo that they geue her a boke of diuorce: how durſt he permit that, whiche god would not to be done: Jeſus aũſwered: He dyd not permyt you this, becauſe it was ryghte and good of nature, but knowyn ge the hardenes of youre harte, he ſuffered the leſſer ill, that ye ſhould not commit the greater. For he doth not allowe diuorce whiche had rather ſuffer that, than murder. And the boke of diuorce dothe not make that the diuorce is righte and good: but it wytneſſeth thy hardenes, whiche wilt caſt of thy wyfe for euery lyghte cauſe, & prouideth her of a new huſbãde, takynge awaye libertie from the, that thou ſhalte not call her agayne once caſte of.

Let no man therfore ſeparate that god hath coupled together.

They ſayde vnto hi: why dyd Moſes thã cõmaũde to gene a teſtimoniall of diuorcement, and to put her awaye:

Moſes becauſe of the hardeneſſe of youre hertes ſuffred you to put awaye your wiues.

But frõ the begynnyng it was not ſo.

But from the begynnyng, where as the malyce of man was not yet increaſed, nor ỹ nature of men was not yet infected with ſo many vyces: becauſe there was not ſo cruell hatred, that poyſonynge or murder ſhoulde be feared, there was no licence of diuorce, and the ſame lawe ſhall not nowe be loſed and ſette at libertie, after that the doctryne of the Ghoſpell dothe renewe and make perfecte the ſincerities of nature. Moſes wyſched the ſame that I do teache, but youre manners bent ouer muche vnto murther, put hym in feare that he durſte not requyre this of you. I who doth not abolyſſhe the lawe but make it more perfecte, playnelye ſaye vnto you, that it is vnlawefull & agaynſte the mynde of god, and agaynſt the wyl of Moſes whyche ye do commonlye: refuſynge your wiues for euery cauſe.

And it is not therfore ryghte that ye do, becauſe ye do it without puniſhemente. There be manye myſcheuouſe thynges before god, whiche be not punyſſhed by mannes lawes. Therfore ye ſhall vnderſtande, that whoſoeuer caſteth of his wyfe for euerye cauſe, and marryeth an other, bothe cõmytteth aduoutrye him ſelf, & gyueth alſo a cauſe of aduoutry to his wife, vnleſſe ſhe whome he doth leaue of, hath deſerued diuorcement by aduoutrye. For ſhe ỹ hath geuen another man libertie ouer her, ceaſeth nowe to be wyfe, & hath taken away frõ her ſelfe the ryght of matrimony, the fleſſhe beynge deuided, whiche god woulde haue to be one & vndeuided. But he ỹ for ſuche cauſes leaueth his wyfe, for whiche ye oftentymes do caſt her of, yf he couple himſelfe to another, it is not matrimony but aduoutrye. And who ſo marryeth her ſo caſt of, he marrieth not his owne wife, but another mãnes: & therfore he doth not marry but commytteth aduoutrye. But the whole of al theſe miſchiefes doth redoũde to him ỹ is the refuſer and caſter of. For fyrſt he is ſtubburne & cruel, whiche neither coulde beare his wyues

faulte,

kaulte, nor woulde go aboute to amẽde it. Furthermore he geueth her that is dryuen out of his house, whiche can not lyue without a husoande, an occasion to commit aduoutrye.

¶ His disciples sayde vnto hym: If the matter be so betwene man and wyfe, than it is not good to marry. He sayde vnto thẽ: All men can not comprehende this saying, saue they to whom it is geuen. For there are sum chaste, whiche are so borne out of theyr mothers wombe. And there are sum chaste whiche be made chaste of men. And there be chaste whiche hath made them selues chaste for the kyngdome of heauens sake. He that can take it, let hym take it. The texte.

The disciples hearyng these thynges, saye vnto Jesus: If matryed mẽ be in this case, that they can not be dispatched from theyr wyfe, yf she displease thẽ, it is better to forbeare matrimony. For it is an harde bõdage to suffer at home a wayward, a brawlyng, & a drunken womã, or els paynefull and greuouse with sum other lyke faulte. Jesus dyd not reproue thãswere of his disciples, whom he desyred to be free from the bondage of matrimony, because of preachynge of the gospell: but he doth them to vnderstande, that it is no safe and sure thynge to flee from matrimony, vnlesse a man be of so fyrme & stable mynde, that he is able vtterly to absteyne from the acte of matrimony. But there be very fewe that can do so, because that this affection of the body is so common to all men that there is none affection more violẽt or more inuincible. Therfore thoughe it be a greater fredome not to be tyed in matrimony, yet is it more sure to be kept within the bondes of matrimony, than to be defiled with lyinge here and there. Therfore Jesus showynge what was best, and prouokynge this waye with the rewarde of libertie, dareth not yet exactly require that whiche in maner exceedeth mannes power. All men (sy he) be not able to receyue this worde, but they onely vnto whome it is geuen of god: who haue so great a feruencye towarde ỹ holynes of the gospel, that of theyr owne accorde and willyngly can neglecte this affection. For chaste singlenes hath no prayse, vnlesse it be taken for loue of the euangelicall godlynes. For there be thre kyndes of Eunuches. One of them whiche be so borne, and abhorre frõ wiues thorough the defaute of a colde nature, or sum other secret affection of nature. Another kynde of thẽ, whome men hath gelded. The chastitie of these men deserue no prayse, because it cõmeth of necessitie, not of the loue of vertue. But the gospel also hath his Eunuches very blessed, which be not geldinges of nature, nor gelded of mẽ, but they gelded thẽselues for ỹ kingdom of heauen: not cuttyng of the membre of the body, but for loue of the gospell, ouercummyng the desyre of matrimonie. Ye see victory set out before you, let hym trye that will, and knoweth his owne strengthe: Let hym beare awaye the game that can: They that contende valiauntlye and wyllyngly, shall not wante the fauour of the master of the game. Bycause cõmunication was of the puritie of virgins, and of the hyghnes of that noble vertue, whiche chaunceth to fewe: as by occasion there is brought in also an example of perfect cleanzes, and great modestye: without the which, virginitie deserueth no prayse.

If the matter be so betwene mã and wife, than it is not good to marrye, &c.

All men can not cõprehẽd this sayinge, saue they to whom it is geuen. For there are sum chaste whiche are so borne oute of their mothers wombe. And there be chaste whiche hathe made them selues chaste for the kyngdome of heauens sake. He that can take it, let hi take it.

¶ Than were there brought vnto hym yonge chyldren, that he shoald put his hãdes on them and praye, and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus sayd vnto them: Suffer the children, and forbid them not to cum to me: for the kyngdome of heauen belõgeth to suche. And whan he had layde his handes on them, he departed thence. The texte.

There

There were preſent fathers & mothers, whiche deſired to offer their babes vnto Jeſus, that he might laye his handes vpō them, & praye for: thinking that likewiſe as they ſawe diſeaſes driue away through his touching, ſo the touching of Jeſus ſhoulde preſerue them frō diſeaſes, frō falling of houſes or walles, or other like thinges vpō theim, frō euil ſpirites, & frō other hurtes, whereby that age often tymes myſcarieth. But the diſciples, (who, though they had oft tymes heard many a good leſſon of great modeſtie & coldenes, yet had not vtterly ſhaken of from theim mānes affections,) thinking it not meete that the greatnes or dignite of their maſter ſhoulde be letted or wered wᵗ thimportunitie of babes, & of their mothers: kept them of, when thei deſired to cum nere. Jeſus marking this to thintēt that he might the better empʒinte euangelicall moderacion in the mindes of his diſciples, whiche doth lothe no man, be he neuer ſo lowe: ſuffer (ꝙ he) the childʒē to be bʒought vnto me: nor let them not, to cum to me. For they that be like vnto theſe, be moſt acceptable vnto me: whom though ꝑ world doth hate and dyſpiſe, yet I vouchefake to haue none other in the kingdom of heauē. What nature doth geue vnto theſe, ꝑ ſame muſt godlynes geue vnto you, if ye will be receyued into the kingdome of heauen. Therfore the littel babes were bʒought vnto Jeſus, and he put his handes vpon them, inſpiring into the littel babes (for the ſimple faithes ſake of their parētes,) a ſecrete power through the touchinge of his holye body. Which dooen, Jeſus departed from thence, geuyng a leſſon by the ſame facte of his, that the littel babes muſt be ſatiſfied, but yet that we ought not to tary long with them, but to make ſpede to thynges of more perfection.

Suffer the childʒen, and forbid them not to cū to me.

And whē he had layde his hādes on thē, he departed thence.

¶ And beholde one came, and ſayd vnto him: good maſter what good thinge ſhall I do, that I may haue eternal life? he ſayde vnto him: why calleſt thou me good? There is none good but one, & that is god. But if thou wilt enter into life, kepe the cōmāndementes. He ſaith vnto him: whiche? Jeſus ſayd: Thou ſhalt not cōmit manſlaughter. Thou ſhalt not cōmit adultery. Thou ſhalt not ſteale. Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witnes. Honour father & mother. And thou ſhalt loue thy neyghbour as thy ſelfe. The yōg man ſayeth vnto him: All theſe thinges haue I kepte frō my youth, what lacke I yet? Jeſus ſayde vnto him: yf thou wilt be perfect, go & ſel al that thou haſt, & geue it to the poore, and thou ſhalt haue treaſure in heauen, & cum and folowe me. But whan the yonge man hearde that ſaying, he went away ſory. For he had greate poſſeſſions.

And loe, as ſoone as he had doen with the childʒen, there cūmeth next after theim a yong mā which talketh of perfectiō. But Jeſus like as in ꝑ littel babes, he ſhewed his diſciples an exāple of ſimplicitie & modeſtie ſo in ꝑ yonge man being in dede deſirous of perfect godlines, but ouer ſore burdened wᵗ riches, he ſetteth before their iyes, howe harde it is for them that be geuē to riches, to cum forwarde to perfectiō of the euāgelical godlines: & how muche more ready they be to the cauſe of the goſpell, whiche poſſeſſe nothing, or elles very littel of the gooddes of this world: & yet pouertie & riches ſtande not ſo much in poſſeſſions, as in the affections of the minde. The yong man had a deuoute minde: but becauſe he heard of Chriſte certayne newe and ſtraunge preceptes, he went vnto him, and falling downe at his knees aſketh him, ſaying: good maſter what good ſhall I do to obtayne euerlaſtinge life? The yong man called Jeſus good, to obteyne his good will by fayre ſpeking: where as yet he toke him to be nothing els, but a verie mā, although of more excellencie than other men were. Afterward where as he demaunded of good, he meneth not of euery good thing, but of a certayne notable good thyng, which may deserue euerlastyng life. But no moztall man is absolutely good: and there is no wozke of men which can be so good, that it may deserue the rewarde of euerlastyng lyfe. Jesus therfoze prickynge forwarde the yonge man, to haue a better opinion of hym, and to cal him from the trust of his wozkes, and to cause him to put the trust of life rather in the free gifte and benefite of god, who is naturally good, and frely beneficiall towardes all men, answered in thys maner: why callest thou me good, oz why dooest thou aske me of good? But yet yf thou desirest to be receyued vnto the eternall lyfe, kepe the commaundementes. And whan the yonge man asked what the commaundementes were, (foz he had hearde him teache that the preceptes of Moses lawe be not enough to obteyne the kingdō of heauen) Jesus to plucke away from all men the trust of the lawe, answered: Thou shalt not kill: thou shalt not commit aduoutry: Thou shalt not steale: thou shalt not beare false witnes: honour thy father and mother: and loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe. Than the yong man beyng sumwhat chered, sayde: All these I haue kept from my childehode: what lacke I be-syde? He loked that Jesus shoulde haue aunswered him: Thou lackest nothyng. But the lozd showyng what difference there was betwene the Jewishe righteousnes and the righteousnes of the golpell: betwene a good Jew and a good Christian man, sayde: If thou wilt be perfeicte, go and sel al that thou hast, and geue the money to the pooze: thou shalt not leese thy money, though it be dispersed among many. So to disperse it, is to laye it vp: foz in the stede of wozldly riches, thou shalt haue a better treasure in heauen. Whan thou hast doen this beyng now at libertie, and dispatched of all beastie cariage, bare and pooze, cum and folowe me being also bare and pooze. Whan Jesus sayeth: If thou wilt, he shewed that it was a greate matter: but he added the rewarde: Thou shalt haue a treasure in heauen. Anon he moued him to the loue of perfect godlynes: Cum, folowe me. Whan the yonge man hearde this communicacion, he went away with a discouraged and heuy mynde, because he was a lozd of much possessions, and he thought it harde to leaue them all at once. He desired to get euerlastyng lyfe, he desired the honour of perfection: but the thozues of ryches ouerwhelmed & choked this affection which was a good seade. Therefoze he departed home heuylie, not vnderstandinge that Jesus did not condemne riches, but thaffection and loue & carefulnes of riches: to which they can scarcely bee any lesse then bounde, that haue them. And he wolde not that alwayes they shoulde be forsaken: but yet alwayes set littell by: yea and forsaken also, yf they at any tyme withdrawe vs from the loue of the golpell.

Why callest ỹ me good.

All these thinges haue I kept from my youthe.

But whā ths ponge man heard ỹ saying he went away sozy.

Foz he had great possessions.

The texte.

Than Jesus sayde vnto his disciples: verely I say vnto you, it shall be harde foz the riche to enter into the kingdome of heauen. And agayne I say vnto you: it is easier foz a camel to go thzough the ye of a nedle, than foz the riche to enter into the kyngdom of god. Whan the disciples hearde thys, they were exceedingly amased, saying: who than can be saued? But Jesus beheldē them and sayde vnto them: with men thys is vnpossible, but with God all thynges are possible.

Whan the yonge man was gone, Jesus turning to his disciples (foz he showed thys sight foz them, because they shoulde at no time repent them of their pouertie, noz be entangled with the loue of money) how harde a thing it is (qᵗ he) foz a ryche manne to enter into the kingdome of heauen. Signifyinge, that the desyze of moneye, and the desyze of the Euangelycall gelicall philosophie, hardely agree together: because thone requyreth the whole man, thother taketh vnto it, almost the greatest parte of man.

It shall be harde for the ryche to entre into the kyngdome of heauen.

And to make the difficultye of the thyng the greater, hys disciples mulyng muche, he sayde more: Yea (q he) I saye more vnto you: It is more easy for a Camell to go through the ye of a nedle, than for a ryche man to entre into the kyngdome of heauen. For the gate is lowe and strayghte, and it receyueth no Camels laden with burdens of rychesse. For so he reproued the couetouse ryche men, vnto whome ryches be rather a burden, than profyt, whiche they beare for others, rather than for them selues.

Thys saying because it was not well vnderstande of the Apostles, put in theyr myndes a certayne heauynesse, because they were sory that so many men for ryches sake, shoulde be shut out from the kingdom of heauen. Therfore whan the disciples maruayled muche what it shoulde meane that Iesus spake of the Camell, and the ye of the nedle, they aske hym: If it be so, who than can be saued. For howe many men are there, whiche can cast awaye the ryches that they haue, or not wysh for them yf they haue none.

Who than can be saued.

But Iesus beholdyng them, to thintent he woulde asswage the heauynes that they had conceyued in theyr mynde, declareth that there is some hope for ryche men also to cumme to the kyngdome of heauen. To men (q he) thys is impossible, no lesse than for a Camell to goe thorough the ye of a nedle: but to god nothyng is impossible. Only he chaungeth the myndes of ryche men, that they wyll carefully eyther cast away that whiche they do possesse, or elles possesse them as common and not proper, euer ready to leaue them, yf the matter of the gospell at any tyme requyre the same.

With men this is vnpossible, but with god all thinges are possible.

For why shoulde it greue them to dispyse ryches, whome it grieueth not to bestowe theyr lyfe.

The texte.

¶ Than aunswered Peter, and sayde vnto hym: Beholde we haue forsaken all, and followed the, what shall we haue therefore? Iesus sayde vnto them: Verely I saye vnto you, that whan the sonne of man shal sit in the seat of his maiestie, ye that haue followed me in the regeneracion, shal sit also vpon twelue seates, and iudge the twelue tribes of Israell. And euery one that forsaketh house, or brethren, or systers, or father or mother, or wyfe or chyldren, or landes for my name sake, shall receyue an hundred folde, & shal enherite euerlastyng lyfe, but many that are fyrst, shal be last: & the last shalbe fyrst.

Thys communicacion whiche Iesus had with the yonge man: sell that thou hast and folowe me, made Peter to haue sum good hope, whiche although he were not ryche, yet that that he had, he left it carefully, bothe hys shyppe and hys nettes, and followed the lorde. Lorde (q he) beholde we haue done that that thou requyredest of the yonge man: we haue lefte all thynges and folowe the: what rewarde shall we haue therefore.

Beholde we haue forsake al and followed the, what shall we haue therefore.

But Iesus wyllynge to showe that this hyghe prayse was not offered to ryche men onelye, but also to poore men: whiche gladlye forsake whatsoeuer they haue for the gospelles sake: for as muche as thys vertue is more estemed of thaffection of the leauer, than of the greatnes of the thyng that is lefte: did not reiecte the saying of Peter, although it was to highe & stout for so symple a matter: but teachyng that no small rewarde shall be rendered for suche small thinges, lefte of and forsaken with a good wyll, sayeth.

Ye that haue followed me in the regeneracion. 12.

Thys I warraunte you that ye whiche haue forsaken nothynge for my sake, but your boate & your nettes, but yet with suche a wil that ye woulde haue forsaken verye greate rychesse for my sake, & hytherto you beyng bare and poore haue folowed me in likewyse bare and poore, yf ye persever & continue, in the worlde to cum when the dead shall ryse, and every man shal receyue reward after hys desertes, and whan than the sonne of man, (hys humilitie that ye now see, set aparte) shall sit in the seate of hys maiestie, ye fyshers than beyng partakers of honor, whiche are nowe partakers of afflictions, shal sit in twelue seates, & shall iudge the twelue trybes of Israel: because the cumming of the same stocke, hauyng knowledge of the same lawe, prouoked with the same myracles, and benefites, yet by no meanes coulde be brought to beleue: where as ye meane persons, and vnlearned, by and by at my simple bidding, haue left, yea those thynges wherby ye sustteyned your lyfe. And this rewarde shall not be youres onelye, but whosoeuer for the profession of my name, forsaketh his house, hys brothers or systers, hys father or mother: hys wyfe or chyldren, his landes, or any other possession: he shall not lose that whiche he left for my sake, insomuche that he shal haue a greate gayne thereby. For in this worlde he shall receyue an hundred folde for the thinges that he hath left, & in the tyme of resurrection, he shal possesse euerlasting lyfe. For in the stede of the thynges that he hath lefte, the whiche be casuall and vyle possessions, he shall possesse here in the meane tyme that precious Margaryte of the euangelycall mynde, whiche is to be estemed and compared with no marchandise of thys worlde: In the stede of one house that ye haue lefte, the doctrine of the gospell shall make open vnto you a number of houses thorough out ỹ world. For one piece of grounde, manye groundes shall serue your necessities: for one father or mother ye shall haue so manye as there shall be olde men and olde women, whiche ye shall conuert vnto the gospell. Ye shall haue so many brothers, systers, sonnes and daughters, as your equals or yongers shalbe, whiche by youre preachyng ye shall bryng to euerlastyng lyfe. Theke shall geue vnto you euery where of theyr owne accorde, yf ye shall nede any thynge, and theyre affections shall farre passe thaffections of them, whome onely kynrede of blood hath ioyned vnto vs. For the kynred of the felowshyp of the gospel, is more nere than fleshly affinitie: and they loue more behemently, whom godlynes hath coupled togyther, than they whome carnall byrth hath ioyned together. Vnto thys greate rewarde that shall be added also, whiche is the greatest of all, that for thynges whiche shortly shall perysh, ye shal possesse euerlastyng lyfe. I saye not thys that the profession of the gospel doth teache vs to dispise them, whome nature hath ioyned vnto vs: but such maner of affections must be neglected as often as they withdrawe vs from euerlasting saluacion: This greate felicitie is set furth indifferently to al me. There is no difference of fortune, condicion, age, or person. But in thys estimacion and iudgement whiche shall be made of god the equall iudge, many shall be last, whiche seme nowe to be fyrst. Contrarywyse many whiche seme nowe vyle, & of no reputacion with men, shall there be counted chyef. There shall be preferred a common woman, before a scrybe, a Publycane before a Pharisee, an heathen before a Iewe, a poore man before a ryche, a plough man before a kyng: and they that semed nerre to the kyngdome of heauen shall enter in last: and they that semed farre of, shall entre in fyrste. The heathen men thorough fayth shall goe before, the Synagoge thorough vnbelefe, shall be set beside.

and

Euery one that forsake house, or bretheren, &c.

But many that are fyrste shall be last, & the last shalbe fyrste.

¶ The.xx. Chapter.

The texte. For the kingdome of heauen is like to a man that is an housholder, which went out earely in the morning to hyre labourers in to his vineyard. And whan the bargayne was made with the labourers for a denary a daye, he sent them into his vyneyarde. And went out aboute the thirde houre, and sawe other standyng ydle in the market place, & sayde vnto them: go ye also into the vineyarde. And what so euer is right, I will geue vnto you. And they went theyr way. Agayne he went out aboute the syxte and nineth houre, and dyd lykewise. And aboute the eleuenth houre he went out, and founde other standing idle, and sayde vnto them: why stande ye here all the day idle? They say vnto him: because no man hath hyred vs. He sayeth vnto them: go ye also in to the vineyarde, and what so euer is right that ye shall receyue.

AND because it semed a darke riddell that he spake concernyng the first and the last: he declareth the thyng that he spake with a parable, wherby he showeth that men were called to the kepyng or obseruing of righteousnes in diuers ages: & yet al the seruauntes of righteousnes haue one, & the same rewarde of euerlastyng saluacion: so that they which be called, labour diligently in the vineyarde of righteousnes. For they haue no lesse, whiche be called in the time of Christ, than they which be called in the time of Abrahã, or Moyses, or Dauid. And they haue no lesse which be called and drawen to the seruice of the gospel being aged than, they which be children or yong mẽ. The one and the same denary and rewarde of euerlastyng lyfe, is geuen vnto them al. And yet they that came late seme to haue greater honour by this, that the liberalitie of the lord maketh them equall to them whiche came before. The Jewes were first called, but yet the Gentiles called afterward, be not onely made equall vnto them, but also preferred before the vnbeleuing Jewes. The parable is after this sorte: The kyngdome of heauen (sayth he) is lyke vnto an house holder, whiche went abrode earely in the morning to hire workemen in to hys vineyarde. And gettyng certayne & bargayninge with them that they shoulde haue eche of thẽ a denary a pece for their dayes worke, sent them into hys vineyarde. He went out agayne aboute three of the clocke, and when he sawe certayne stande idle in the market, sayde vnto them: go ye also into my vineyarde, & I shall geue you that shall be mete. He went oute agayne aboute sixe of the clocke, and agayne aboute nyne, and did likewise as he did at one, and three of the clocke. Agayne going out aboute three of the clocke towarde night, he founde certayne other in the market, to whom he sayde: why stande ye here all day idle? They saye: because no man hath hired vs. He sayeth to them go ye also in to my vineyard.

The texte. ¶ So, whan euen was cum, the lorde of the vyneyarde sayeth vnto his stewarde: Cal the labourers, and geue them their hier, beginning at the last vntill the first. But whan they did cum that came about the eleuenth houre, they receyued euery man a denary. And whan the first came also, they supposed that they shoulde haue receyued more, and they also receyued euery man a denarie. And whan they had receyued it, they murmured against ỹ housholder, saying. These last hath wrought but one houre, & thou hast made them equal with vs, whiche haue borne the burden, & heate of the day. But he answered one of them, saying: Frend I do the no wronge. Hast thou not couenaunted with me for a denary? Take that is thine, & go thy way: I will geue vnto this last, euen as to the. Is it not lawfull for me to do as I wil with mine owne goodes? Is thyne eye euill, because I am good? So ỹ last shal be first, & the first last. For many be called, but few are chosen.

Further towarde night the lorde of the vineyarde geueth commaundement to his bayly: Call all the workemen and pay them their hyer: so that thou beginne with the last & cum to the first. Therfore they that came laste

that is aboute a leuen of the clocke, and laboured in the vineyarde the leste parte of the day, were called first of all, and a denary was geuen to eche of them. Whan they that were called earely in the morning perceiued this, because they came long before into the vineyarde, they thought that after the rate of the time, they shoulde receyue greater wages. But a denarye was geuen vnto eche of them. Therefore when they sawe, that they whiche were not like in space of tyme, yet were made lyke in wages, they departe murmuring againste the lorde of the vineyarde, and saye: These whiche came at a leuen of the clocke, haue labored but one houre, and yet thou makest them lyke vnto vs in wages, who haue continued the whole day in laboure, and haue suffered the heate of the day, where as they came a litill before night, when the heate was nowe past. But the householder made answere to one of them for all: Frende why hast thou enuy that I am liberall vnto others? My fre liberalitie towardes other, hurteth not the. For I do the no wrong. Did I not bargayne with the, so that thou shouldest haue a denarie for thy dayes labour? Thou hast done thy labour, thou hast thy couenaunte: I haue nothing more to do with the. Take that that is owed vnto the, and departe. Thou werte hyered hither for wages to dooe thy labour, not to appoynte me what I shall dooe. Thus it is thought good vnto me, to geue hym that came last as muche wages as I geue the. Thou doest leese none of thyne, yf I geue this man any thing of my liberalitie: Shall I not be at libertie because of the, to do with my owne what I will? Is thy ye therfore vexed with enuy, because thou seest me liberal towarde whom it pleaseth me? This similitude Jesus brought, willing depely to grafte in their mindes that god naturally beneficial towardes al mē, ceaseth not by diuers wayes & in diuers ages to prouoke & moue al men to the seruise of true godlynes: In whiche they that haue exercised them selues diligently, shal haue for rewarde euerlastyng life, from the whiche none is excluded, geuing eare whan he is called. This reward like as it is in no case due vnto our merites, but is of the goodnes of god, yet it commeth not without our endeuour: yet we be bounde to the caller for this also, that we cum to the seruise of godlynes, and that we continewe in it vnto the euentide of the day. For they that be called and refuse to go in to the vineyarde, they disapoynte them selues of their wages. And although among saynctes there is neyther enuy nor murmuring againste god: yet with these sayinges he expressed the highe honour that was showed to ỹ last, which had the first place in reward. Which dignitie is so noble, that a man might haue cause to enuy. Yet ỹ good Jues also at the beginning murmured agaynst the gentils, because they cūming of ydolaters, straungers frō Moyses lawe, finally vncircumcised, shoulde sodenly be made equall vnto them in the grace of the gospel, & be admitted to the same saluacion, being encumbred with no burden of the lawe, whereas they long exercised in the ordinaunces of Moyses, were nothing better thē gentiles, which were now admitted to the professiō of the gospel, being a litil before of a wicked life. Therefore the gentiles had more forgeuen thē, but the Jues haue no cause to brawle with god therfore, sith they also may attayne to like felicitie. And if they had rather enuy than folow, let thē thanke them selues that they be cast of for their vnbeleefe, the gentiles in the meane time obteyning for the redines of their faith, ỹ thing which ỹ Jues thought that they onely ought to haue. Therfore who so is called, let him furthwith make hast, or elles he shall be called in vayne: but take he hede that he be also elected. And all be called, but few deserue to be counted amonge the elect. Therfore Jesus ended his parable with the same clause that he beganne with: So shall they be laste that were fyrste, and fyrst that were laste. For manye be called, and fewe chosen.

For many are called but few are chosen.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus goynge vp to Hierusalem toke his twelue disciples aside in the waye, and sayth vnto them. Beholde, we do go vp to Hierusalem, and the sonne of man shalbe betrayed to the chiefe of the priestes, and to the Scribes, and they shall condemne him to death, and shall delyuer hym to the gentyles to be mocked and scourged, and crucifyed, and the thyrde daye, he shall ryse agayne.

After this Jesus beyng a whyle in Galile, began to drawe nere to the place of his death, going toward Hierusalem. And now whan he had instructed and framed his disciples manye wayes as concernynge dispysinge of ryches, neglectynge of parentes and kinfolkes, of chastitie, of greate modestie, of the rewardes that they shoulde haue also in this life: he ledeth secretly aparte his twelue apostles, whom he had chosen and thought mete to committe the mistery of the crosse vnto, whiche the multitude was not yet able to beare: And yet he tolde of hys death vnto the people, when he spake of Jonas, and of the pullynge downe of the temple, and the makynge vp of it agayne in three dayes: but so he tolde them of it ỹ they vnderstode not what was sayde, before that they sawe it done. He had opened the mystery of the crosse vnto his disciples, as to them that were more strong & able, now once or twise speakyng vnto them plainely. But because men forget lightly that, which they be not glad to heare of, & do not lightly let sinke into their hertes the thyng whiche the mynde abhorreth: the Lorde Jesus to confyrme hys apostles agaynst ỹ stormе that was at hand, openeth vnto thē more playnely & distinctely not onelye that his death was nere, but also telleth thē of the mockes and afflyctions whiche oftentymes be more greuouse than death itselfe. Beholde (sayth he) we go to Hierusalem, and the sonne of man shalbe betrayed to the chiefe priestes and Scribes, whiche now go aboute to laye in wayte for hym. And they will not rest to blame and accuse hym vntyll they haue brought hym to condemnacion of death, and they shall delyuer hym vnto the Gentyles to mocke hym, to scourge hym, to spyt vpon hym, and to nayle hym vpon the crosse, and when that he is deade and buryed, the thyrd daye he shall ryse agayne.

Beholde we doo go vp to Hierusalem, and the sonne of man shalbe betrayed to ỹ chiefe of the priestes.

The texte. ¶ Than came to hym the mother of Zebedees children, with her sonnes worshipping and desyrynge a certayne thynge of hym. And he sayeth vnto her: What wylt thou? She sayde vnto hym: Graunt that these my two sonnes maye syt, the one on the ryghte hande, and the other on the lefte hande in thy kyngdome. But Jesus answered, and sayde: Ye wote not what ye aske. Can ye drynke of the cup that I shall drynke of? and be baptized wt the baptisme that I shalbe baptised with? They saye vnto hym: We can. He sayde vnto them. Truelye ye shall drynke of my cuppe, and be baptised with the baptisme, that I am baptysed with: But to sit on my ryght hande and on my left hande is not myne to geue: But it shall chaunce vnto them, for whom it is prepared of my father.

In the meane season James and John the sonnes of Zebede, because they had heard that the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen were geuē to Peter, and had heard also of the honoure of twelue seates, beyng yet rude and dreamynge of worldly thynges, and supposyng that this kingdome and these honoures shoulde cum immediatlye after the resurrection: because he sayde

ſayde the thyrde daye he ſhal riſe: to get them ſelues now ſum excellēt dignitie, they ſent furthe their mother to be a ſuter vnto Jeſus for her ſonnes. She after that ſhe had done her dutie and worſhipped him, requiring him not to denye her ſute, beyng required what ſhe would, ſayeth: Geue commaundement that theſe my two ſonnes may ſit in thy kyngdom, one on thy right hande, the other on thy left hand. Jeſus turning vnto the childzen, of whom he knewe that the mother was ſent furth, aūſwered them: ye know not what ye aſke. Ye delight in the ſpeaking of a kingdom, which is farre of an other ſorte than ye dzeame, but at this preſent we muſt rather talke & debate of affliction, and of the croſſe, whiche is the waye to the kingdome. ye require the rewarde oute of ordze, where as firſte ye muſte trauell and ſtryue. I haue opened vnto you now what I muſt ſuffer. Can ye dzinke of the cuppe that I ſhal dzynke of? Can ye be baptiſed with the baptiſme that I ſhall be baptiſed with? They as yet litle knowyng theyr ſtrengthe, but for the gredines ỹ they had to obteyne theyr petition, they aunſwere raſhely rather than valiantly: we can. But Jeſus was content that they ſayde they were readye to kolowe his croſſe, but as touchyng the rewarde, becauſe they vnderſtode not what they aſked, and becauſe it was not for that tyme to commune of it, he ſayeth that it is not in him to geue them: but that ſuche dignitie ſhould not chaunce but vnto them, vnto whom it was geuen of the father, for to deſerue the chiefe place thzough notable and excellent vertue. Truely to encourage all men to clyme vnto the higheſt, he ſayeth: ye ſhal dzincke of my cuppe, but to ſit one of my right hande, and the other on my left hand, it is not in me to geue, vnto thone or to the other, but this ſhall chaunce vnto them to whome it ſhal be geuen of my father. Euery man as he doth trauell, ſo he ſhall be rewarded.

¶ And whan the two heard this, they diſdayned at the two brethzen. And Jeſus called them vnto hym, and ſayde: Ye know that the princes of nations hath dominion ouer them. And they that be greate men exercyſe power ouer them. It ſhal not be ſo amonge you, but who ſo euer will be greate among you, let hym be your miniſter, & who ſo will be chiefe among you, let hym be your ſeruant, as the ſonne of man cam not to be miniſtred vnto, but to miniſtre, and to geue his lyfe a redemption for many. The texte.

Whā thother ten afterward heard theſe thinges, they were agreued at the two brethzē, becauſe they required ſo great dignitie. They had not yet receyued the holy goſt: they were led yet with certayne affectiōs of men beyng ambitiouſe and enuieng one an other. And Jeſus ſuffered his diſciples to be troubled long w theſe affections, to thintent he would plucke them vtterly out of the mindes of them all, which ſhould ſuccede in the roumes of thapoſtles. And they thought & were glad that therfore the lord did refuſe the requeſt of John & James, not becauſe they dzemed of carnall thynges, where as the ſpiritual kingdom was in hande, but becauſe they required honoure aboue theyr merites, whiche other thought that it ought rather to be geuen to them. Therfore Jeſus like as he did repzeſſe the ambition of the foliſhe futours, becauſe they knewe not what it was that they aſked: ſo he repzeſſed the enuy & indignatiō of the other, whiche iſſewed out of the ſame fountaine of ambitiō, opening vnto them ỹ there was a farre diuerſe kinde of the worldely kingdom from the kingdom of the goſpell. For there in the worldly kingdō he ỹ is leſſe, is oppzeſſed with the tiranny of ỹ mightyer. Here the primacie is nothing elles, but ỹ great deſire to do good vnto

all men. There the prouder a man is, the greater he semeth: here none is more meke in harte, than he that deserueth chiefly to be the highest. That he might fasten this doctrine in all mennes hartes, he called vnto him the other of thapostles. Ye knowe (q̄ he) that they that beare rule amonge the Gentyles, vse lordlines and tiranny vpon them, whom they rule: and they that be chiefe, exercyse theyr power vpon their subiectes. For with the hurt of the people, they prouide for theyr owne authoritie, & care for those thinges, which do not profit the multitude, but make for the stoutenes and florishyng of theyr welth and glory. But it is not meete to be so emong you, but who so euer will beare rule emong you, let hym be the minister of all men, not vsing honour for his owne commoditie, but for the commoditie of the people, whom he ruleth. And he that among you will haue the fyrst place, let hym be the seruant and the lowest of all. For he taketh vpon hym the chiefe place for no nother intent, but to loke for the cōmoditie of al men, hunting and seking therof neyther honour nor profite. And if ye thynke it harde, loke vpon me, for where as I am your Lorde & Mayster & the sonne of God, as ye truely profesle, yet I take not vpon me dignitie and honour, nor I abuse not my power to myne owne commoditie. But for this I am cum to serue all mennes turnes, and to wayte theyr commodities, in so muche that it greueth me not to bestowe my lyfe, that by the losse of one lyfe I maye redeme many. Emonge them therfore that be thus minded, there is no cause why any man should seke after honoure, neyther why any should be enuiouse at an other mannes dignitie: for who can enuy hym which studieth no nother thyng, but to do an other man good, and that if nede be with the losse of his lyfe. Also if honoure be geuen vnto them they take it not vnto them selues but yelde it vnto God.

Ye knowe þ the princes of nacions haue dominion ouer them.

It shal not be so emōg you: but who so wil be great emong you, lette hym bee your minister

As the sonne of man came not to be ministred vnto, but to minister.

And to geue his lyfe a redemption for manye.

The texte, ¶ And whan they departed frō Jerico, muche people folowed hym. And behold two blynde men sitting by the waye, whan they hearde that Jesus passed by, they cried saying: O lorde the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy on vs. And the people rebuked them, that they should holde theyr peace. But they cryed the more, saying: Haue mercye on vs o lorde the sonne of Dauid. And Jesus stoode stil and called them, and sayde: What will ye that I shall do vnto you? They saye vnto hym: Lorde that oure eyes maye be opened. And Jesus had compassion on them, and touched theyr eyes, and immediatlye theyr eyes receyued sight, and they folowed hym.

And whan he went with his disciples out of Jerico, a great multitude of men folowed him. And beholde two blinde men sate by the wayes syde, which when they perceyued by þ noyse, that there was a great multitude, & asking what it should be, knewe that it was Jesus which passed by: whē they could not see hym, and if they had sene him, could not go vnto hym, for the multitude, they spake vnto Jesus with a loude voyce, saying: Lord Jesu the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy vpon vs. Jesus made as though he heard them not, to thintent that theyr fayethe and feruentnes myght be the more manifest to all men. The people seyng that Jesus made no answere at theyr crying, & supposyng that it was paynefull to hym, that two blinde common beggers made suche a clamoure at his eares: rebuked them, and bade them holde theyr peace. But they throughe a constaunt trust in Jesus, whome they hearde saye, to be beneficial towardes all men: cryed out louder, and sayde agayne: Lorde the sonne of Dauid, haue mercye vpon vs. Jesus therfore when he had sufficiently declared theyr fayth to them all, &

had taught vs by theyr example, that we should beate at the eares of God feruently and constantly, if we will obtayne any thyng: stode still (for they could not folowe but onely with eyenge) and cõmaunded them to cum to hym. At his worde they cum. Jesus asketh them what they would vñ theyr great crienge, and what they would that he should do for them. Jesus was not ignoraunt what they desired, but he would that the disease that they were troubled with, should be knowen to all men by theyr owne cõfession, that the faythe of the miracle might be the more certayne. Lorde (q they) we desire that our iyes maye be opened by your helpe. They spekynge these thynges with a great affection, declare that blindnes was a great griefe vnto them. And he is nexte vnto lighte, whiche is very wery of his blindnes. Than Jesus shewyng his pitifull affection both in coũtenaunce and iyes, with which affection euery gospeller ought to be sory for other mennes harmes, touched theyr eyes: & forthwith theyr iyes beyng opened, they sawe, and with others they folowed Jesus. So Jesus with his touchyng healeth the mynde blinded with worldly desires, and light is geuen to this ende, that we may folowe his steppes.

And Jesus had compassion on them, and touched theyr iyes.

The. xxi. Chapiter.

The texte.

And when they drewe nye vnto Hierusalem, and came to Bethphage vnto mounte Oliuete: Than sent Jesus two disciples, sayinge vnto them: Go into the towne, that is ouer agaynste you, and anone ye shall finde an asse bounden, and a colte with her, loose them, and bryng them to me. And if any man saye ought vnto you, saye ye: The lorde hath nede of them, and streightwaye he will let them go. All this was done that it might be fulfilled, which was spoke by the prophete, saying: Speake ye to the doughters of Syon, beholde thy king cummeth vnto the, meke, sitting vpon an asse, & a colte, the fole of the asse vsed to the yoke.

Therfore Jesus goyng forwarde to Hierusalem, laboured aboute this diligently with his disciples, to fasten in theyr myndes, that he went to his death wittingly and willingly, and that no man should hurte hym, if he would resiste. Therfore he beate it into them so often, that he muste go to Hierusalem and there suffer death. And where as sumtyme he semed to withdraw himself from perill, it was not for feare, but to kepe hymself vnto the tyme apoynted of the father. The which when it was than at hande, he dyd not onely hyde hymselfe, but willingly put furth hym selfe, and so put furth hym selfe, that with the noueltie of his pompe, he styred the mindes of the whole citie against him. And in ỹ meane season ceaseth not from miracles: he ceaseth not from preaching of ỹ truth, also he reproueth the life of the Phariseis more frely or frankly: he casteth the marchauntes out of the temple, by the whiche thynges he knewe that all theyr myndes woulde be the more vehemently styred agaynst hym. Whom because he had prouoked agaynst hym with well doynge, he made them not vnfaultye, but gaue them libertie that they might do the thynge that they would do. Therfore nowe beyng nere to the citie of Hierusalem, he came into the mount of Oliues, where he thought good to frame a new maner of pompe of his cummyng, by the whiche in maner he mocked the pryde of this worlde, and by this spectacle he sumwhat cumforted his disciples, beyng yet but weake, that they might the more quietlye beare the death of their Lorde. Therfore from this hil, he sente two of his disciples, saying: Go ye into the village that is ouer agaynst vs, and as soone as ye entre in there, ye shal finde a femal Asse tyed, and her fole with her, wherevpon neuer hath any man yet sitten, loose them bothe, & bring them hither vnto me. And if any man say any thyng vnto you, demaundynge why ye loose them, whyther or to whome ye leade them, make none other answer, but that the Lorde hath nede of them. At this word they wil suffer them further with to be brought. These thynges were done partly because they should vnderstande that nothing is to hym vnknowen, and that he hath power to commaunde whome he will, and what he will, if he would vse his power: partely that the Jewes might knowe at leest wise by this verai token, that he was Messias, because they sawe this straūge kinde of entring prophecied in time past by the Prophet Zacharie. For thus he did prophecie: Say ye doughters of Syon: beholde thy kyng cummeth to the, meke and humble, sitting vpon a she asse, and vpon a colte the fole of a yoked beaste.

All this was done that it might be fulfilled whiche was spoken by the prophet.

The texte.

¶ The disciples went, and did as Jesus commaunded them, and brought the Asse and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and set hym theron. And many of the people spred their garmentes in the waye. And other cut downe boughes from the trees, and strawed them in the way. Ferther the people that went before, and they that came after cryed, saying: Osanna to the sonne of Dauid. Blessed is he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde: Osanna in the highest.

The disciples departed, they found true whatsoeuer Jesus had tolde them before. By and by at the mention of the lord, the beastes wer let loose, where as neither the Lorde was there present nor the disciples made any countenaunce of any autorite that they had. In dede the owners of the beastes knewe no suche thyng: but yet in their hertes they perceyued that he which was lord ouer all, commaunded this. The disciples because the Lord should sit the more at ease, caste on their clokes, and so sette him vpon the coltes backe, which colte did beare the figure of the Heathen nacīō being vncleane, and filthily folowing all yll desyres: whiche whan it was once couered with vertues apostolicall, and Jesus receyued vpon her backe, ceassed any longer to bee vncleane: ceased to folowe her olde vices, beyng made the bearer of hym, who purgeth and sanctifieth all thinges. This she asse is the dame of the fole, (because helth and redemption cūmeth out of the Jewes) but the same asse was fast tyed to the lettre of the lawe: Bare she was of euangelicall vertues: but at the lordes bidding they are bothe vntyed, and couered with the Apostles clothes. The Apostles as yet vnderstode not these thinges, but yet this it was which was signified thereby, & should more playnely be vnderstāded afterward. When Jesus was now tum to the foot of the hil, a great multitude of men came out of Hierusalem to meete him. Yea & the multitude had such a fauour vnto him, ỹ the moste part of them strawed the waye wt their garmētes, sum cut downe boughes frō the trees, & strawed them in the waye. Ferther the companye that went before, and also that folowed, declaring them selfes to bee glad of his comming, sang vnto him this saying out of the prophecie of the Psalme: Osanna to the sonne of Dauid, blessed be he ỹ commeth in the name of ỹ lord. Osanna on high. Others cryed: blessed be the kingdō of our father Dauid, the whiche is come. Others cryed: Blessed be the kyng of Israel whiche is come, & they prayed God for ỹ miracles which they sawe done by Jesus.

Hosanna to the sonne of Dauid.

This

This honour the Lozde Jesus who had euer tofore liued humble & lowe, suffred to be geuen vnto him, whereby he declared that he should not bee without the glozye of this wozlde, in case he were minded to haue it: but that he had rather to despise it, than to embzace it, to the ende it might bee so muche the moze shame that it should be sought foz of suche, as pzofesse them selues to be his disciples, where as he dispised it which onely deserued it. Yet this honoz was meete and semely foz the cumming of him, who by his death should redeme the whole wozlde.

¶ And whan he was cum to Hierusalem, al the citie was moued, saying: Who is this? And the people sayde: This is Jesus, that pzophete of Nazareth in Galile. And Jesus went into the temple, and cast out al them that solde and bought in the temple, and ouerthzewe the tables of the money chaungers, and the seates of them that solde dooues, and sayd vnto them: It is writte. My house shall be called the house of pzayer, but ye haue made it a den of theues. And the blinde and lame came vnto him into the temple, and he healed them.

Therfoze when Jesus entred into Hierusalem with this straunge and vnwoont pōpe, the whole citie was moued with this vncouthe syght, saying: What man is this? The multitude which folowed him, aunswered: This is Jesus the Pzophete of Nazareth the citie in Galile. This they thought a goodlye pzayse, although that it was farre vnder his maiestie. Foz the people as yet could suppose nothing of him aboue mā. And Chzist did purposely so ozdze his life, that he vttered not openly his godly nature, which he should haue persuaded in vaine, if they had sene hym afterward suffre death. Therfoze with this ruffling, Jesus entred into the temple, and there furthwith began to vse a certayne kyngdome. When he sawe in the temple a fashion of a market, sum sellyng, sum biyng, and the changers of money sitting, Jesus moued with the vngoodlinesse of the thyng, accozdyng to the saying of the Pzophete: The zeale of thy house hath eaten me, he made a whippe of littell coardes, and dzaue al the byers and sellers with theyr marchādise out of the temple, he cast downe the tables of the money-changers, & scatered their money vpon the ground: he cast downe ẏ seates of the doue sellers, allegyng furth of Esaye a iust cause of his griefe, who saith in the persone of God: My house shall be called the house of pzayer, but ye haue made it a den of theues. By this acte Jesus ment an other thyng. Foz ẏ the tēple was polluted wt marchādise of bullockes, shepe, gotes & doues, did not so greatly moue him, but it was his mynde to shewe ẏ auarice & lucre would bee a deadly poyson vnto his churche in time to cum, whiche was figured by that temple, whose religion should shoztelye after be abolished. Foz at suche tyme is the temple which is consecrate to offer vp to God spiritual sacrifice, turned into a denne of theues, whan vnder ẏ pzetense of religion and pziesthode, the people is robbed. Foz nothyng can be sincere and holy, where the loue of money doeth reigne. And this mischiefe is than a thyng vntollerable, when it is vsed vnder the roofe of the temple, when rauine is couered with the shadowe of religion. There was no sozte of men, against whō Jesus at any tyme shewed any moze rigour, then he did towardes these, and yet hath he reserued the same vnto him selfe to be cast out, when him selfe shall thynke best. Then vnto Jesus beyng in the temple, there came the blinde and lame, whome the lawe barred from entring into the tēple. But the tēple of Jesus receyueth al which make spede vnto vnto health. For the blinde came, that hauing their sight the might see Jesus, who they heard so spoken of. The lame came, ỹ folowing his steppes, they might cum into the kingdom of heauen. As many therfore as came to him, he healed them.

The texte. ¶ Whan the chiefe priestes and Scribes sawe the wonders that he did, and ỹ childzen cryinge in the temple, and sayinge: Osanna to the sonne of Dauid, they disdayned, and sayde vnto hym, hearest thou what these saye? But Jesus sayeth vnto them: Why not? Haue ye neuer red. Oute of the mouth of infantes and suckelinges thou hast ordeyned prayse. And he left them, & wēt out of the citie vnto Bethania, & abode there.

The chiefe Priestes and the Scribes thorough those thinges whereby they ought at last to repent, were the more kyndled with burning in enuy, when they sawe the people reioysing so louingly on euery side, and saw the great power in healing of the lame and blinde, and authoritie in castyng out of marchandise, no man being so bolde to resist: and the childzen also cryyng in the temple, Osana to the sonne of Dauid. They takyng these thinges greuously, monished Jesus to cease that crying, eis it would cum to passe that he should seme to acknowleage such honour, of whiche they iudged hym vnworthy, where as it should haue ben theyr partes rather more greatly to prayse him and to speake well of hym: whiche beyng auncient men and skilfull in the lawe and the prophecyes, seyng so many miracles, might vnderstande that this is Messias, whom they loked for so lōg time. Now the childzen by the instigacion of nature, or rather by thinspiratiō of God, spake that thing, which they could not vnderstande for lacke of age. Therfore they blinded with enuy, & dzuncken with angre, sayde vnto him: hearest thou what these childzē say: but Jesus stopping theyr mouth with testimony of scripture, did ye neuer rede (q he) of the mouth of infantes & sucklinges thou hast made perfect thy prayse: wil ye therfore that I should shut their mouth, whiche God hath opened to prayse his glory: I say vnto you, God will not suffer his prayse to be had in silēce, thorough your enuy, in so muche that if these holde their peace, the stones will cry, whose hardenes ye excede. Therfore Jesus leuing them with theyr enuy departed, and going out of the citie of Jerusalem went onto Bethania, and there tarryed.

The texte. In the morning as he re turned into the citie agayne, he was a hungered: and whan he had spyed a figge tre in the way, he came to it, and found nothing theron, but leaues onely, and sayde vnto it: Neuer fruite growe on the hence forwarde. And anon the figge tree wythered awaye. And whan his disciples sawe it, they maruayled, saying: how sone the figge tree is wythered. Jesus answering, sayde vnto them: Verely I say vnto you. If ye haue fayth and doubte not, ye shall not onely do this, that is happened vnto the figge tree, but also if ye shall saye vnto this mountayne, remoue and cast thy selfe in to the sea, it shall be doen. And all thynges whatsoeuer ye aske in prayer (yf ye beleue) ye shall receyue them.

In the morning by the way as he returned vnto the citie, he beganne to were hungry. And when he sawe a fig tree nere the way, he came toward it, as hoping to haue sum foode. And when he came at it, he found nothyng in it but leaues. Therfore as beyng greued that he was deceyued of hys hope, he cursed it saying: Neuer man see fruite of ỹ hereafter. And whā the disciples returned agayne the same way, seing the figge tree whiche Jesus cursed than to be withered, and the leues fallē of, marueyled and sayde vnto him: beholde the figge tree whiche thou diddest curse, is now withered, Jesus suffered this to be donne for this purpose, that he might inculcat diligently ligently saythe vnto his disciples, withoute the whiche he knewe that his death should be vnprofitable to men.

For he thyrsted maruelously after the health and saluacion of mankinde, & now desired & longed for his death. But where as he found an apperaūce of religiō in the Iewes, he found not the fruyte of faith, which only he hungered for. Unto his disciples therfore marueling at the figge tree so sodenly wythered, he made answere on this wise: why marueyle ye at this whiche is no great matter, a figge tree to wyther: the might of faythe can do more, whiche if ye possesse both strong and constant, ye shal not onely do, whiche ye sawe chaunce vnto the figge tree, but also yf ye say to this hill, remoue the from thy place, and go into the sea, youre commaundement shalbe doen forthwith. And whatsoeuer ye shall aske in your prayers, so that ye haue a sure trust, ye shall obteyne.

¶ And whan he was cum into the temple, the chiefe priestes and elders of the people came to him as he was teaching, and sayd: By what authoritie doest thou these thynges? And who bathe geuen the this authoritie? And Jesus answering sayed vnto theym: I also will aske you a certayne thyng, whyche yf ye tell me, I will also show you wyth what authoritie I do these thynges. The baptisme of Iohn whence was it? from heauē or of men? But they thought with theym selfes, saying: If we say, from heauen, he wyll say vnto vs. Why than did ye not beleue him? But yf we say of men, we feare the people. For all men take Iohn as a Prophete. And they answering to Jesus, sayd: we can not tel. And he sayed vnto them. Nor I do tell you with what authoritie I do these thynges. The texte.

And when he entred into the temple and taught the people, the chiefe priestes and certayne of the Sentours of the people, not suffering him to be there in his kingdome freely, go vnto him and say: By what autority doest thou these thinges? And who gaue the this authoritie? For sith no manne gaue him this authoritie, eyther he must saye that it was geuē him of god, or elles of Belzebub. If he had sayed of god, he shoulde haue sayed truthe, but he shoulde haue donne nothing but prouoked theim. For they aske not that they will beleue, which might appere by the thing it selfe: but falsely to reproue and blame. Jesus therfore not ignorant of this thing, requited theyr question with an other, as though a man should dryue out one nayle with an other. I wil aske you (sayd he) a certayne thing, and yf ye answere me to that, I will answere to your question. The authoritie wherby Iohn did baptize, from whence came it vnto him? from heauen or from men? They toke deliberacion with them selues, what they should answere. For they sawe it was a question with two pikes, and that they must nedes fall vpon the one. They thought in their mindes, if we say from heauē, he wil forthwith say vnto vs: why than did ye not beleue him? for he preched the kingdom of god, and witnessed with me. But yf we say, of men, it is to be feared least the people will make a sedition, because all men toke Iohn for a prophet. Therfore lest they should be reproued, they made answere that they coulde not tell. Than spake Jesus: And I wil not tell you (sayd he) frō whence I haue this authoritie.

¶ And what thynke you: A man had two sonnes, and came to the first, and sayed: Sonne go to day, and worke in my vineyarde. He answering, sayd: I wyll not. But afterwarde, he repented and went. Than came he to the seconde: and sayed likewyse: And he answered, and sayed: I will sir, and went not. Whether of them twayne did the will of the father? And they saye vnto him: the first. Jesus sayeth vnto theym, verely I saye vnto you that the publycanes and harlots goe before you into the kyngdome of God. For Iohn came vnto you by the way of rightuousnes, and ye beleued hym not, and the The texte.

publicans and harlottes dyd beleue hym. And ye when ye had seue it, were not moued afterwarde with repentaunce to beleue hym.

But because a simple and a playne question coulde not wryng oute the confession of truthe, Jesus putteth forth an other question by a riddell, that vnwares they shall geue sentence against them selues: what thynke ye (q he) of that I will propose now? A certayne man had two sonnes. He came to the one and sayed: Sonne, go and worke this day in my vineyarde. He answered frowardely, I will not. But strayte afterwarde repenting him selfe, went into the vineyarde. The father likewise came to the other sonne and sayed: go, and labour in my vineyarde this day. He answereth redely, loo I go sir, and yet he went not. Therfore of these two, whether thinke ye fulfylled his fathers wyl? They not vnderstandyng to what ende these went, answered: The first sonne, whiche repenting forthwith, went into the vineyarde. Than Jesus turning the parable vpō them: Certaynlye I tel you trueth, that the publicans and common women shall go before you in the kingdōe of heauen. They beyng rebelles agaynst god before with their wicked life, yet by and by towched and moued by penaunce obeyed the doctryne of the gospell. ye whiche be the people of God by title and profession, and ye whiche sayed in tymes paste, and thys daye saye, we will do all thynges whatsoeuer the Lorde sayeth vnto vs, whyche also haue euer in your mouthe the preceptes of god, and the lordes temple, the lordes temple, the lordes temple, beyng so many wayes prouoked, cannot be moued to penaunce. For John came showyng you the waye of ryghtuousnes, and that the wrathe of God was at hande, and the axe sette at the tree rootes, vnlesse furthwith ye would repente. Ye sawe the Publicanes and common women desperate folkes after your iudgement, obediente vnto hym. ye could not be moued vnto penaunce neyther by the great holynes of John, neyther by his holsome doctrine, neyther by his threteninges, neyther by the example of the publycanes and common women. So it cummeth to passe, that they through fayth, take from you the kyngdom of God, ye vaynely professing god with your mouthe, be shut out for the vnbelefe of your minde.

Hearken an other similitude. There was a certayne man an housholder, whyche planted a vyneyarde, and hedged it rounde aboute, and made a wine presse, and builded a tower, and let it out to husbande men, and went furthe into a straunge countrey. And whan the tyme of fruyte drew nere, he sent his seruauntes to the husbande men to receyue fruites of it. And the husbande men takyng hys seruauntes, dyd beate one, killed another, & stoned another. Agayne he sent other seruauntes mo than the fyrste, and they dyd vnto them lykewyse. But last of all he sent vnto them hys owne sonne, sayeng: They wil haue my sonne in reuerence. And the husbande menne when they sawe the sonne, they sayed in them selues. This is the heyre, cum lette vs kyll hym, and let vs enioye hys herytage. And they toke hym, and cast him out of the vineyarde, and killed hym. Than whan the lorde of the vineyarde cummeth, what will he doo vnto those husbande men? They saye vnto hym: Sith they be ill he will cruellye distroye them, and will let oute his vineyarde to other husbande men, whiche shall delyuer hym the fruite in due season.

He put them another parable euen as darke, wherewith he doth recite secretely and leyeth before their iyes their notable vnkindenes, whyche beinge prouoked by so manye benefites of god, dyd not onely not amende but also cruelly killed the prophetes one after another, whiche were sente, that at their preaching they myght once repent. And not content herewith finally they would kyll the sōne of god himselfe, & that after that he was cast out of the vineyarde, showyng as it wer by the waye the place where he should be crucifyed.

be crucifyed. By the which cõmunicatiõ he declareth both that their inuincible malice is vn worthye pardon (seing that nothyng was omitted that might call them backe to a better mynde) and that he should suffre nothing of them, which he knewe not of before. This was the parable. There was (q he) a certayne householder, whiche planted a vineyarde, and hedged it about and digged in it a cesterne, to receyue the swete wine that was prest out of the clusters of grapes, and buylt in it a lodge for the kepyng of the vineyarde, & so whã it was wel garnished, he set it out to husband men: ỹ they should trustely tyl it, & rendre the fruites vnto the lorde. This done, he wente far of. Nowe when the tyme of gatheryng the frute approched nere, he sent his seruauntes to receyue the fruite of them. But the husband men did not onely not deliuer the fruites that wer due, but also layed handes vpon his seruauntes, and bet sum, killed sum, and stoned sum to death. This knowen the householder did not furthwith punishe them, but loking that they should repente and amende, sent vnto theim a greater number of seruauntes than he did before: trustyng that they beyng kepte vnder and in awe wt the multitude, they would do theyr duetie. But they handeled them also nomore gently, than they handeled the other before. The householder suffered thys displeasure also, and finally to ouercome them wyth softnes and gentilnesse. he sent vnto them his owne sonne, saying with hymself: although they haue ben cruell towarde my seruauntes, yet at the leaste they will vse my sonne reuerentlye, whan they see that he is cum. But the husbande men the more they wer prouoked to repentaũce, the more they were stirred vnto cruelnes. For whan they sawe the sonne, they did not reuerence him, insomuche that furthwith they consulted to slea him, saying: this is the heyre, cum let vs kill him, and we shall take his inheritaunce. And by and by they layed handes vpon him, & plucked him out of the vineyard, and killed him. Therfore (q he) when the lorde of the vineyarde shall cum, what shall he do to those husbande men? The Pharisees answered: those ill men he shal ill intreate & destroy, and set out his vineyarde to others, which may trustely render ỹ fruite in tyme vnto the Lord whiche lette it oute. So they deceyued by this riddle, condempne themselues wt theyr owne mouth: pronouncynge, that they theym selues for the inuincible frowardnes of theyr minde be worthy punishmente, & that ỹ gentils be worthy to be receyued to ỹ grace of ỹ gospel, which will till the vyneyard more trustely thã they dyd.

¶ Jesus sayth vnto them: Dyd ye neuer reade the scriptures? The stone whiche the builders refused, the same is made the head of the corner: this is done of the lorde, and is merueylouse in our yes. Therfore saye I vnto you, the kingdome of God shalbe taken from you and geuen to a nacion, whiche shall do the fruytes therof. And whosoeuer fallech on this stone, shalbe broken in pieces. But on whome soeuer it falleth, it shalbe all to bruled. The text.

After these thinges Jesus showeth that thorough their frowardenes he beyng condempned and reiected, should dye a spitefull death, but by his resurrection thorough the power of the father, he should be made noble thorough out all the worlde: and should be so sounde and stronge, that who so stumbled agaynst him, should be his owne destruccion. And that in declaryng of this, he might lesse offend them, he bringeth a prophecye out of the psalme. Neuer red ye in the scriptures (q he:) the stone which the buylders dyd refuse and cast awaye, the same is made the heade of the corner-

This is doen of the lorde, and it is wondrefull in our iyes: ſignifiyng that they buylded the Synagoge, but caſtyng out Chriſte, without whome no buyldyng was ſure: but yet that ſtone reiected of theim, ſhould be in great eſtimacion and pryce in the churche of the Gentils. And therfore Jeſus dyd adde: therfore I ſay vnto you, the kyngdome of god ſhalbe taken from you, which ye diſpiſe beyng offered vnto you, & it ſhalbe geuen to other people whiche ſhal bryng furth fruites meete for the goſpel. And as this ſtone ſhall bryng healthe to theym that obey the goſpell, ſo it ſhal bryng deſtruccion vnto them that be diſobedient thorough vnbeleke. For whoſo ſtumbleth at this ſtone, ſhalbe broken. Agayne vpon whome this ſtone falleth, he ſhall be bruſed.

The texte, ¶ And whan the chiefe prieſtes and Phariſeis had heard his parables, they perceyued that he ſpake of them. And they went about to laye handes on hym, but they feared the people, becauſe they toke hym as a Prophet. And Jeſus anſwered, and ſpake vnto them agayne by parables, and ſayed.

At lengthe, of the concluſion of this communicacion, fyrſte the chyefe prieſtes and Scribes vnderſtode that he ſpake the former parables alſo agaynſte them, in the whiche they beyng deceyued, gaue ſentence agaynſte them ſelues. And therfore theyr madnes was ſo ſet a fyer, that they would furthwith haue layed handes vpon hym: But they feared the people, becauſe Jeſus was made muche of, of many, and taken for a prophet.

¶ The. xxii. Chapiter.

The text. ¶ The kyngdome of heauen is lyke vnto a man that was a kyng, whiche made a maryage for his ſonne, and ſent furthe his ſeruauntes to call theym that were bydden to the weddyng, and they woulde not cum. Agayne he ſent furthe other ſeruauntes, ſaying: Tell them whyche are bydden. Beholde I haue prepared my dynner, myne oxen, and my fatwares are kylled, and al thynges are ready, cum vnto the maryage. But they made lyght of it, and went theyr wayes, one to his farme place, an other to hys marchandyſe, and the reſidue toke his ſeruauntes, and intreated theym ſhamefullye. And whan the kyng hearde therof, he was angrye, and ſent furth his men of warre, and deſtroyed theſe murderers, and brent vp theyr citie.

Agayne Jeſus added an other parable, to pryncte the more ſurelye in the myndes of the Jewes, ỹ it came to paſſe by theyr owne obſtinate malyce, that they were reiected from ſaluacion of the goſpell, and that the Gentyles ſhall take and enioye that, that they made them ſelues vnworthy of. There is none excluded from the kyngdome of God, but this honoure was geuen to the nacyon of Jewes, that they were called fyrſte of all, and gentelye called, not vnto ſower or vyle thynges, but vnto a mariage, that is to honor, delicates, and libertie of the goſpel. And they wer not inuited only by ỹ prophete John, & by Chryſt himſelf, but alſo after his death, they ſhoulde be called by the Apoſtles: and the preachers of the goſpel ſhould not go to the gentiles before that for theyr diligence and wel doyng, they had ben arayed long of the Jewes with many mockes, and puniſhmentes. That they can aſcrybe it to no man, that afterwarde they ſhalbe puniſhed with ſo many miſeries, whiche deſpyſed Goddes goodnes, ſo often offered vnto them. This is the ſimilytude. The kyngdome of heauen (ỹ he) is thorough you made lyke to a certayne kyng, who makyng a brydale to his ſonne, ſent out his ſeruaunte, to inuyte & call many to his sonnes mariage. But they once called, would not cum. Then the kyng sent mo seruauntes to bid them moze diligentlye to make haste vnto the wedding nowe in a redines, and to saye to them in his name: Beholde the diner is ready, my oxen and my pultrye be killed, and al other thinges be in a redines. Nowe nothing lacketh but the cumming of the gestes, that the preparaciō be not made in vayne. But they agayne neglected the bidder. And whan the bidders called vpon them, euery mā made his excuse: one sayd, he must go see his manour oz farme place, that he had lately bought: another sayd, he must go loke vpon his oxen, whiche he had bought. An other sayed, he had late maryed a wyfe, frō whome he could not departe. And these men wer onely madde to them selues, whiche preferred certayne vile and filthy cares of frayle thinges, before a feast of suche felicitie. But other ioyned cruelnes vnto their vnkindenes. Foz the kinges seruauntes whiche dyd once oz twyse inuite them vnto so great honoure, they handeled and vsed very sore with many rebukes, and at length killed them also. The which doyng when the king heard of, he toke it very greuously: & turnyng his gentilnes, whiche they had so dispised into a rage, & sending furth men of his garde, destroyed these murderers: and not content wyth that, set their citte a fyer also. These thinges spake Jesus, prophecying vnto them couertly the distruction of the citie of Jerusalem: and by and by, he geueth intelligēce that the gentils shalbe called on euery syde vnto the gospell, as these whiche wer better than the Jewes.

And whan ỹ kyng heardo thereof, he was angry, & sēt furth hys men of war and distroyed those murderers & brente vp their citie.

¶ Than sayed he to his seruauntes: The mariage is prepared, but they that were inuite were not worthy. Go ye therfore to the hye wayes, and as many as ye fynde, call to the mariage. Than his seruauntes wente out into the high wayes, and brought together as many as they coulde fynde, both good & badde, and the weddyng was furnished with geastes. The kyng came into see the geastes, & whan he spyed a manne there whiche had not on a weddyng garment, sayth vnto hym: Frende howe camest thou in hyther not hauing a wedding garment. But he helde his peace. Than sayed the kyng to the mynisters. Binde him handes & feete, & cast him into ỹ vtter darkenes, there shall be weping and gnaschyng of teethe. Foz many be called, but few are chosen.

The texte.

Than he sayed vnto his seruaunres, the bzidale is redy: but because they that were called, declared theim selues foz to be vnwozthye foz this feaste, whiche notwithstanding I prepared chiefly foz them: runne abzode euery where in stretes & crosse wayes, and call to the bzydale indifferently, whom soeuer ye find wozthy, vnwozthy, feble, maymed, blind, & lame, til my house be full. The seruauntes went fozth & brought together a multitude of all sozres gathered together from all places, & the feast was replenished with geastes. After this Jesus because he had showed before, that the Jewes should be greuously punished, whiche afflicted the apostles, calling theim so often, and at length killed them, declareth also that they shalbe sore punished which once professing the lyfe of the gospel, returne agayne to the filthynes of their olde lyfe. The king (q he) went in to see the geastes syttinge at the table, and amonge others he sawe one there, whiche had not on his wedding garment. Frende (q he) how camest thou in hyther, sith thou hast not thy wedding garment? But he beyng put to shame was dum, & had nothing to say. Than the king commaunded his seruauntes that they should binde him handes and feete, remoue him far from the feast, and cast him in to greate darkenes, where is weping and gnaschyng of teethe, the honoure and the light of the feast beyng chaunged into a vile prison, and great plea-

The king came in to see the geastes, and whan he spyed a man there whyche had not on a wedding garment, sayeth vnto hym: Frende how camest thou in hither, not hauing a wedding garmēt.

For many are called but few are chosen.

ſure beyng chaũged into great torment. Further though many be called, yet fewe be choſen: all be called freelye, but none be choſen, but they ỹ obey theyr callyng, & they that vnto the ende anſwere vnto the goodnes of god towardes them, continuyng in the ſtudy & loue of the euangelicall godlynes.

Than went the Phariſeis and toke counſell how they myght tangell hym in hys wordes. And they ſent furth to hym theyr diſciples with the Herodians, ſayinge: Maiſter we knowe that thou arte true, and teacheſt the waye of God truely, neyther regardeſt thou any man, nor thou haſt reſpecte of perſonnes. Tell vs therfore, howe thynkeſt thou? Is it lawfull that tribute be geuen to Ceaſar, or not? And Jeſus perceyuyng theyr malyce, ſayed: why tempt ye me ye hypocrytes? Shewe me the tribute money, and they toke hym a denarie, and he ſayed vnto them: whoſe ymage is this and ſuperſcription? They ſayed vnto hym: Ceaſars. Than ſayed he vnto theim: Geue therfore vnto Ceaſar, the thynges whiche are Ceaſars, and vnto god thoſe thynges that are goddes. When they had yearde theſe wordes, they maruayled, and left hym, and went away.

When the Jewes perceyued that they were touched with theſe parables, they were not yet moued vnto penaunce, inſomuche that nowe they muſed in theyr myndes nothyng els but how that Jeſus myght be kylled. So great a miſchiefe is enuye & ambicion. They had a wyll to murder, but they lacked opportunitie. They feared not god, the reuenger of ſuche miſchifes, but they feared ỹ people. They thought therfore to go a contrary way, & to do ỹ thing wt ſuche ſecrete vndermynyng, that the enuye of the deede, ſhould redound and reſte vpon Ceaſar and his officers. Therfore for the tyme they diſſembled theyr angre & went away. But conſultyng emong thẽ ſelues, it was thought good, that certayne ſhould be ſuborned & ſet furth to propoſe a queſtion vnto Jeſus, and to take hym in his anſwere, and to bryng hym into the prynces daunger, that by them as beyng giltie of treaſon, & the authour of ſedicion, he myght be put to death, the Phariſeis hauyng nothing to do with the matter. And theyr inuencion was this. When Jewry began nowe to be tributary to the Romaynes, kyng Herode the ſõne of Antipater was made officer of Auguſt to gather ỹ tribute. And of this thing euery mã had not like opiniõ: for ſum thought it not mete ỹ the people dedicate vnto god, ſhould pay tribute to prynces ỹ wer Idolatours. And in this opinion wer they which helde wt the phariſeis. Agayne there wer ſum ỹ fauorers of Ceaſar, which ſayd ỹ tribute ought to be payed: & the mayntenners of this opiniõ wer called Herodians, becauſe Herode was ỹ officer to gather the tribute. A lytle before there were two, Theudas and Judas, whyche whileſt they dyd defende openly that the Jewes, a people dedicate vnto God, ought no tribute to any prophan prynce: wer put to death lyke ſedicious perſones. Nowe the phariſeis truſted that Chryſte fauouryng religion more than Ceaſar beyng prophane & wycked, woulde pronounce and iudge accordyng to his accuſtomed libertie againſt the Herodians, ỹ tribute ſhould not be payed to Ceaſar: and furthwith by them ſhould be accuſed vnto Herode, and ſhould be puniſhed lyke as Theudas and Judas was before. And if he had pronounced that tribute ſhuld be payed, that they would haue layed to his charge that he had flattered wycked prynces, and not fauoured gods religion. Therfore they do ſuborne, and ſend furth certayne of theyr diſciples, whiche the Herodians beynge preſent with a great numbre of men, that the thyng ſhould not lacke witneſſes, colorablye with fayre ſpeakyng ſhould intiſe him into theyr net. ashamed of their inconstancye, nowe callyng hym mayster, where before they laied to his charge that he was possessed with the spirite of Beelzebub. And they commende his libertie, that he should not feare to offende the Herodians. Master (q they) we knowe that thou arte true, thou flatterest no man, thou lyest nothyng: But thou dooest teache with great lybertie the pleasure of god, not the phantasye of men. For thou fearest no mortal man, and regardest no person. Tell vs therefore what ye thynke: Is it lefull for the people of Iewes whiche is dedicate to the religion of God, to paye tribute vnto Ceasar or no: And shall we geue it hereafter or no: But Iesus to shewe that their craftye flatterynge coulde not deceyue hym, so ordered his aunswere with wonderfull wysdoome, that he endaungered hymselfe to neither of the factions: But monished bothe what did moste appertayn vnto their saluacion: that is, to paye vnto God the hygh Prynce, the tribute of godlynes. Ye Hypocrites (q he) why dooe ye tempte me: Shewe me a coyne of the trybute. For they went aboute to catche Iesus in his woordes. He agayne catcheth them in their aunsweres. Therfore they shewed hym a Denarie, whiche had the Image and name of Ceasar. And to declare that he came not for this purpose to make lawes of these thynges, whiche pertayne nothyng vnto godlines, and the whiche for the tyme may be wel or yll doen, when he sawe the coyne, as though he knewe no suche letters nor Images, who went onely about heauenly thynges: he asked whose title and Image it was. Aunswer was made: Ceasars. Than saide Iesus: Render therfore vnto Ceasar, if any thyng appertain vnto Ceasar, but first of all render vnto god the thynges that appertaine vnto God: meanyng that it is no hurte to godlines, if a man beyng dedicate to God, do geue tribute to a prophane prince, although he owe it not, desiryng rather to be obedient, than to prouoke and stirre him: chiefly in that thyng whiche maketh a man poorer, but not vngodly. Otherwyse if he doeth exacte that, whiche maketh vs vngodly, it is not nowe the tribute of Ceasar, but of the deuyll. When they had this aunswer they marueled: First because they perceyued that their suttel deuise was not hid from him: Furthermore for his wonderfull wisedome, whom mannes craftines went about to deceiue in vayne. They marueyled truely, but they were not chaunged. And forsakynge hym, they lefte of to prouoke hym, syth they coulde not ouercum him: but they did not leaue of to hate hym, whom they ought to loue.

Master we knowe that ꝑ art true & teachest the waie of god truly, &c.

Is it lawfull that tribute be geuē to Ceasar, or not?

geue therfore vnto Ceasar the thinges whiche ar Ceasars, and vnto God the thynges that are goddes.

¶ The same daye came vnto hym the Sadducels (whiche saye that there is no resurrection) and asked hym, sayinge: Master, Moses sayde: yf a man dye, not hauynge a chylde, that his brother would marye his wyfe, and rayse vp seede to his brother. There were with vs seuen brethren, and the fyrste maryed a wyfe, and dyed without issewe, and lefte his wyfe to his brother, lykewyse the secounde and the thyrde vnto the seuenth. Last of all dyed the woman also. Therfore in the resurrection whose wyfe shall she be of the seuen? For they all had her. Iesus aunswered and sayde vnto them: ye doe erre not knowyng the Scriptures, nor the power of God: For in the resurrection they neyther marry, nor be married, but are as the aungels in heauen.

¶But whan the Phariseis had heard that he had stopped the mouthe of the Sadduceis, they came together, and one of theym beyng Doctour of lawe, asked him a question, temptyng hym, And saying: Master, whiche is the great commaundement in the lawe? Jesus sayde vnto hym: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy god with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and with all thy mynde. This is the first and great commaundemente. And the seconde is lyke vnto it. Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. In these two commaundementes hang all the lawe and the Prophetes.

The Phariseis were not displeased that the Sadduceis were put to silence, chiefly in a matter wherin they were cleane contrary one against an other. Therfore whan the Phariseis sawe them put to silence, and rebuked also for ignorance of scripture, they takyng heart of grace agayne, gather togethe, and sette forewarde a certayne doctour of lawe, whiche should go vnto Jes⁹ with a clerkly questiō, that eyther he might reproue him of ignorance, or els he himselfe beare away the prayse of lernyng. Master (q he) whiche is the cheefe commaundemente in the lawe? Jesus purposynge to shewe that they whiche crake of the profession of the lawe, be furthest from keping of ỹ greatest cōmaundemēt of ỹ lawe, whiche wholy flame with enuy and hatred of their neighbour, and with other vices, whiche haue none affinitie with Christian charitie: and that no man loueth god, whiche is vniuste to his neyghboure, aunswered: Thou shalte loue the Lorde thy God with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and thy mynde: This is the chiefe and greatest commaundement. The whiche no man doth perfourme and kepe, vnlesse he kepe also the secounde lyke vnto that. For this: Thou shalt loue thy neyghboure as thy selfe, doth depend of the other. And whatsoeuer is commaunded in the whole lawe, whatsoeuer the Prophetes teacheth, al that is comprised in these two commaundementes. For whosoeuer loueth god with all his hearte, will neglect nothyng that he hath cōmaunded: And he that loueth his neighbour as himselfe, he wyll not steale, he wyll not commit aduoutrye, he wyll not beare false witnesse, he will not desire his neyghbours substaunce: Finallye he wyll dooe nothyng to another, whiche he would not to be doen to himselfe.

Whiche is the chief commaundement in the lawe?

In these two commaundementes hang al ỹ lawe the Prophetes.

Than the Phariseye whiche was becum nowe almost of a tempter a disciple, sayed: Master, thou hast spoken truely and rightlye that there is one god, and no nother but he, and that he onelye oughte to bee loued aboue al thynges, with all our power, and that we muste bende al our affeccions towardes hym onely: and that to loue oure neyghboure as our selfe, is more than all the holocaustes and sacrifices. Jesus seyng that he had aunswered wysely, and went not forwarde to lye in wayte, sayeth vnto hym: thou art not farre from the kyngdome of god. For he perceyued what was best, he lacked onelye this, to folowe in affeccion and harte that that he vnderstode. And in the meane time he touched secretely the conscyence of certayne Phariseis, whiche layed deadly wayte for Jesus. And therefore where as they demaunded onely of ỹ cheefe cōmaundement, the keppng of the whiche they falsely toke vpon them: he purposelye added the seconde, concernynge the loue of their neighbour, for as yet they supposed not that Christ was god, but to be their neighbour, and one that had doen muche for them, they could not deny, against whom notwithstandyng they dyd deuise that, that no mā would should cum vnto hymselfe.

The texte. ¶ Whan the Phariſeis wer gathered together, Jeſus aſked them, ſaying: What thinke ye of Chriſt: whoſe ſonne is he? They ſaid vnto him: The ſonne of Dauid. He ſaid vnto them: Howe than doeth Dauid in ſpirite call hym Lorde, ſaiyng: The Lord ſaid vnto my Lorde: ſit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy foote ſtole? If Dauid than cal hym Lord, how is he his ſonne? And no man was able to anſwer hym any thyng, neyther durſt any man from that day forth aſke hym any mo queſtions.

But now where as a greatter cumpany of Phariſeis wer gathered together, Jeſus beyng tempted of them with ſo many queſtions, propoſed vnto them again a queſtion, ſignifiyng vnto them ſumwhat obſcurely and darkly, that whiche he left to be declared afterward by his Apoſtles in tyme cõuenient: that he had not onely the nature of man whiche they ſawe, and vpõ whiche they would ſhew their crueltie, but alſo ẏ he had the nature of god, ẏ whiche ſũwhat they might haue cõtectured of his dedes, vnles enuy, hatred ãdictiõ, auarice & other vices, had blinded their mindes. Therfore he demaũdeth of thẽ beyng gathered together, what they thought of Meſſias, whoſe ſonne he ſhould be, that is, of whoſe ſtocke he ſhould cũ. They anſwer furthwith: of Dauid. Than ſayd Jeſus: what meaneth it that Dauid in ẏ myſticall Pſalme inſpired with the heauẽly ghoſt calleth hym Lord, where as he is his ſonne? For it is written: The Lord ſayd vnto my Lorde, ſitte on my right hande: vntyll I make thyne ennemies the ſtoole of thy feete. Howe agreeth it yf he be the ſonne of Dauid, that the father calleth his ſonne Lord? And there was not one of them that coulde looſe this knotte, becauſe that they could as yet thinke nothyng of the godly nature of Jeſus. For Chriſte as he was the ſonne of Dauid, touchyng the body of man: ſo touchynge the diuine nature, he was Lorde of all, and not of Dauid onely. And after this no man durſte queſtion with hym, when they ſawe that the baytes and ſnares whiche wer layed for him, redounded vpon their owne heade.

Neither durſt any man frõ that day forth aſke him any mo queſtions

¶ The. xxiii. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ Than ſpake Jeſus to the people and to his diſciples, ſaiyng: The Scribes & the Phariſeis ſit in Moſes ſeate. All therfore whatſoeuer they byd you kepe, kepe & do: but dooe not after their workes, for they ſay and do not. For they bynde together heauy burdens, & harde to be borne, and lay them on menne's ſhoulders, but they themſelues wyll not lyfte at them with one of their fingers. And they do all their workes to be ſeene of men.

Therfore whan Jeſus hadde put theym ſo often to ſylence, in the preſence of the multitude, leaſt their authoritie ſhoulde vtterly decaye with the people, ouer whom they wer ſette to be doctours and teachers, he declared that they ought to be hearde, but not to be folowed. For although it is moſte agreable, that he that taketh vpon him the office of a teacher, ſhould get credite and auctoritie to his doctrine, by vertuouſe lyuynge: yet it is not expedyent vtterly to deſpiſe the holſome doctrine for the naughtye lyfe of the doctoure. The reuerence whiche their maners do not deſerue, muſt be geuen vnto the author, whoſe commaundementes they recite, and preache. For the lawe of God is not polluted though it be vttered by the mouthe of a naughty preacher. Truely vnto him it is vnprofitable, but it is profytable to the taker. Therfore Jeſus tournyng away from the Phariſeis, in whom he ſawe no hope of better lyfe, he ſpeaketh vnto the people, and the disciples on this maner. The Scribes and the Pharisees bitter thē selues what corrupte myndes they haue, howe enuyouse, howe couetouse, how gredy of vayneglory they be. But yet for the authoritie of theyr office they must be heard. They occupy the chayre of Moyses, whose lawe they teache. The thynges ỹ they teache are holy: for they teache the doctrine of other & not their owne, but their life is farre & wyde in distāce frō their doctrine. Wherfore whatsoeuer they prescribe & point vnto you by thautoritie of Moses, kepe it & do it: but beware ỹ ye frāe not your maners after theyr life. If they liued as they teache, ye ought wholy to folowe thē. Now they do not as they teache. They exact more thā the lawe of other mē w̄ great seuertie, & they pardon thēselfes. They be very rigorouse towarde others, & gentle to thēselues. For they bynde together heauy and intollerable būdels of cōmaundementes, and lay them vpon other mēs shoulders, whiche they wyll not vouchesafe to touche with their finger. For they lode the lawe heuy inough of it selfe, with their constitucions, to get them a fame of lernyng and holynes. And yf they perfourme any thyng accordyng to the cōmaundement of the lawe, they do it not with their harte, but for prayse and fame of people. They be players, and as disguysed persons they play their parte, with a counterfaite viser of religion, to be sene of men. But no man kepeth the lawe but he that doeth as the lawe maker would, he requireth chiefly a pure and sincere mynde. But these men whatsoeuer they do, do it to hauke for a vayne opinion of holines with the simple people.

Al therfore whatsoeuer they bid you kepe, keepe & do.

And they doe all their workes to be sene of men.

¶ And they set abrode their Phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garmentes, and loue the vppermost seates at feastes, & to sit in the chiefe place in cōsels, & greetinges in the market, & to be called of mē Rabbi. But be ye not called Rabbi. For one is your master, that is Christ, & all ye are brethren. And call no man your father vpon the earth. For one is your father whiche is in heauen: neyther be ye called masters, for one is your mayster that is Christ. He that is greatest amōg you, shalbe your seruant. But who so exalteth himself shalbe brought low, and he that humbleth hymself, shalbe exalted.

The texte.

For whan God after that the commmaundementes of the lawe were geuen: Thou shalte tye them in thy hande, and they shall not be remoued from thyne yes: meanyng thereby, that we ought neuer to forget the cōmaundementes of God, but after their rule, to frame al the doynges of our lyfe: these men neglectyng vtterly to keepe the commaundementes of god, yet they magnifye themselues among the people with a false apperaunce. They walke vp and downe bearynge aboute brode Phylacteries, they go w̄ brode and gorgious imbrouderynges, & shew furth the commaundemētes of the lawe, written in them, where as in their lyfe they neuer appeare. These should haue been written in theyr hartes, and expressed in their lyfe. So they should please ỹ yes of god, vnto whō only our life should play her pageāt. But this beholder and loker on dispised, they seke after vile prayse of the rude multitude. And where as it becummeth a teacher euerywhere to expresse noble vertue in his maners and sayinges, and also in his countenaunce, these men do nothyng els but that: that is very vayn, and also scant worthye and mete for man. If they be called any where to supper, there they place themselues childyshelye and ambitiously, because the more honorable place is offered vnto them: In Synagogues and common councels they loue ỹ honour of the high seate. Whan they be in ỹ market, they reioice to be saluted honorably. They set vp their combes as often as they heare of the people that honorable title, Rabbi: as who sayth, they onely be worthy of honour, or be onely wise: where as for this they be lest estemed with god, because they seme to them selues greatest: and in this they be moste folishe, because they seeme to themselues moste wyse. Honour is due onely to god, who onely is great in deede, and to be honoured: The prayse of wisdome is due onely to god, & authoritie is due onely to God. If any of these thynges be in men, it is but a certayne shadow onely, yf it be compared to the greatnes of god, and it cummeth also from the bountifulnesse of god. Therfore if men yelde any honour vnto men for the gyftes of God, whiche they suppose to be in them, he to whom it is geuen, ought not to chalenge it to hymselfe, but to yelde the whole vnto hym fro whence he hath all, yea and that freely, if he hath any goodnes. But I would not that ye my disciples should be like vnto them: but rather remembryng my exaumple and doctrine, flee the arrogant name of wisedom, nor please not your selfes yf any mã cal you Rabbies, that is to say: our masters. For there is one vnto whom this name truly agreeth, and this is your common master. But you in comparison of him be nothyng els but felowe scholers and brethren together: among whome mutuall charitie maketh all lyke. And it is not cumly that any man preferre hymselfe before an other: but the contencion is farre contrary, that is to say: that one geue honour vnto another, and one with gentlenes and duetie preuente an other. Therfore call no man maister in earth, seyng that whatsoeuer holsom doctrine ye haue, ye haue it all of god, and be bounde to hym for it. By hym he teacheth, whosoeuer teacheth rightlye. By his inspyration he profyteth, whosoeuer truly profyteth. Nor yelde not hereafter vnto man in yearth, the honorable name of father, sith ye haue once professed the heuenly father, vnto whom ye be bounde both for life, and for whatsoeuer ye haue, and vpon whom ye do wholy depende. Let no man therefore chalenge vnto him the honour due vnto god onely, let no man geue that to mã whyche is due to god onely. To whõ onely all prayse, honour, & thankes must be geuen. If any man teache well, let the wisdõ of god be praysed in hym, whiche doeth shewe furth & cõmunicate herselfe by hym. If any mã doeth ẏ part of a father in diligence & carefulnes, let ẏ goodnes of god be praysed in him whiche doeth prouide for you by hym. But ẏ Lord Jesꝰ spake not these thinges as though it wer a wicked thyng to call a master by ẏ name of a master, or call a parent by the name of a parent: but by this cõmunication he endeuoreth to plucke out vtterly from the myndes of his, their pharisaical ambicion, whiche chalenge vnto them that, ẏ was gods, and required honour of the people for the doctrine, which was not theirs, but gods: as though they wer the authours, and not rather mintsters. Furthermore he noted the simplicitie and flattery of the people, whiche praysed them immoderatelye, as though they wer more bound to men than to God. And because he perceyued that there sprang of suche ambicion, poyson and destruccion of the congregacions, therfore he finysheth his communicacion and clause: he that is greattest among you, he shalbe your minister. For what he hath, he hath receiued it els where, and hath receiued it freely: and hath receiued it for this, that he should geue it to other. Therfore the greatter he is by the gyftes of God, he shall not be the more arrogant, but the more careful to bestow thẽ: and the more lowly and hũble, lest he should lese at once by arrogancie that, that goddes liberalitie hath geuen vnto him. Let hym geue all the glorye vnto god the aucthour, chalenging nothing vnto him selfe, but the diligence of an humble minister. He is greate in deede, whiche is lest in his owne conceite. And he begineth now to be lest vnto god, which is great in his owne conceyt.

And yf a man crake and auaunce him selfe of the free giftes of god, being spoyled of them whereof he maketh him selfe vnworthy, of the greatest, he is becum the leste. Contrarywyse he that doth submit and humble hym selfe, knowleaging and setting furthe his weakenes and knowleagynge the giftes of god, whereby he is great, or elles showig & vttering thē to the profit & cōmoditie of his brethren: he because he prouoketh goddes liberalitie thorough his modestie, the gyftes being increased, of great, he is made greater.

After these Iesus turning to the Scribes and phariseis, inueyeth, and speketh against theyr malice openly, & very frankly thretening them with the vengeaunce of god: that eyther they might repente for shame, or elles might turne to better for feare of punishment: and the counterfeting of holines set aparte, might beginne to be the seruauntes of the euangelical godlines. Wo be to you (sy he) ye scribes and phariseis hipocrites, who professing the knowleage of the lawe, & therfore in maner kepe the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: ye do not onely not enter your selues but ye shutte the dores againste them that woulde cum in, vnto whome ye ought to open the dores: and ye resyst them that be in a redynesse of them selfe, whom yf they were slacke, ye ought to pricke forward. For where as ye see, that the lyght of the gospel is now present, ye for your glory and for your auauntage, ye kepe the people still in the shadowes of the lawe, excluding them frō the truth.

by all thinges that are vpon it. And who ſo euer ſwereth by the temple ſwereth by it & by him that dwelleth in it. And who ſo ſwereth by heauen, ſwereth by the ſeate of god, and by hym that ſitteth vpon it.

Wo be to you ye blinde guydes, whiche take vpon you to be teachers and know not what ye teache, ſwaruing from the ſcope and ende of the lawe: and wreſting all thinge to no other ende, but to your owne lucre. For ye ſay, who ſoeuer ſwereth by the temple of the lorde, is not bounde by hys othe: but who ſo ſwereth by the golde, that is in the temple, he is bounde by his othe, leſſe eſteming thorough a corrupte iudgement, thoſe thinges that be holy of them ſelfe, than thoſe thinges that make for youre auarice. Or elles ye foliſh and blynde, aunſwere me, which is holyer, the golde that doth garniſhe the temple, and is turned to your lucre, and into matter of youre exceſſe and riot, or the temple it ſelfe: whoſe holynes cauſeth that the golde being prophane in other places, is there counted holy: Alſo ye ſaye: he that ſwereth by the aulter is not bounde by religion: but he that ſwereth by the gifte that is ſet vpon the aulter, is bounde by his othe. O blinde teachers, for whether ought more to be eſtemed, the gifte or the aulter, whiche ſanctifieth the gifte: For the gifte is holy by no nother meanes, but becauſe it is ſet vpon the holye aulter. And here thorough corrupte iudgemente, ye wyll haue the giftes eſtemed holyer than the aulter, becauſe they turne to youre profite, where as the temple and the aulter be builte to the worſhyppe and glory of god, whiche ye litell regarde. With theſe youre inuencions what elles do ye, but ſubuerte the lawe of god, whiche forbiddeth al periury: For like as by a glas ye ſubuert the commaundement of the honoring of father and mother: ſo here ye teche periury. It wer high perfection vtterly not to ſwere, but yet who ſoeuer ſwereth by any thinge, whiche is eſtemed holy with him to whō he ſwereth, he is periured, vnleſſe that he dothe perfourme his othe. Who ſo euer ſwereth by the aulter, ſwereth alſo by the thinges that be one the aulter. So who ſoeuer ſwereth by the temple, ſwereth alſo by god, who dwelleth in the temple. Who ſo euer ſwereth by heauen ſwereth by the ſeate of god, and ſo it foloweth that he ſwereth by him that ſitteth in it. Who ſo euer ſwereth by a nother mānes head, ſwereth by a thing conſecrate vnto god, wherof he that ſwereth hath no power.

And who ſo euer ſwereth by the aulter it is nothing, but who ſo euer ſwereth by the gyfte þ is vpon it he is giltie.

Who ſo ſwereth by þ temple ſwereth by it, & by him þ dwelleth in it.

¶ Wo vnto you ſcribes and phariſes hypocrites: For ye tyeth mynte, and anyſe, and cummyn, and haue left the weyghtier matters of the law: Iudgement, mercy, and fayth. Theſe thinges ye ought to haue done, but not to leaue the other vndone. Ye blind guides whiche ſtrayne out a gnatte, and ſwalowe a camel.

Wo be to you Scribes and phariſeis Hipocrites, whiche do exacte the leſte thinges that pertayne vnto your gayne, whiche make but litell vnto true godlynes: ye be ſo ſuperſticiouſe in requiring of tythes, that ye wyll gether your tythes of herbes, of moſt vyle pryce in eſtimacion: as of Mint Rue, Anyſe, and Cumyne: and in the meane ſeaſon, ye ſette litill by thoſe thinges that be of moſt value, and where vpon dependeth true iuſtice, that is to ſaye, Iudgement, mercie and fayth. Iudgement, that ye do iniury to no man: mercy, that ye helpe the oppreſſed and nedy: Fayth, that ye deceyue no man with periury.

Theſe thinges the lawe ſo requireth, that it would haue them chyefely regarded, where as for the other the lawe added them as thinges of leſſe value becauſe of the other. Therfore theſe thinges fyrſt of all ought to be regarded not be omytted. If ye obſerued and kepte all thinges to the vttermoſt, it might appeare a religion, nowe foꝛ as muche as ye let paſſe theſe thinges, without whiche there is no ryghtuouſnes, and care foꝛ thoſe thinges which be light and litill woꝛthe, it is hypocrylye, not religion, yea the diſtruccion of religion. Foꝛ bekoꝛe the tenthes were oꝛdeyned, yet vprightnes, well doinge, and kayth were required, and pertained vnto ỹ pꝛaiſe of rightuouſnes. O blinde guydes, whiche beinge of an aukwarde religion, do ſtreyne out a gnat, and ſwallowe vp a camell, ſuperſticiouſe in a litill thing, & negligente in a greate thing.

Ye blinde guides, whiche ſtrayne out a gnatte and ſwalowe a camell.

Wo vnto you Scribes and phariſeis Hypocrytes. Foꝛ ye make cleane the vtter parte of the cuppe and platter: but within they are full of bꝛybery and exceſſe. Thou blynde Phariſey make cleane fyꝛſt that whiche is within the cuppe and platter, that the oute lyoes of them alſo maye be cleane.

The texte.

Wo be to you Scribes and Phariſeis Hipocrites, becauſe ye be careful foꝛ clenlines diſoꝛdꝛely. Foꝛ ye clenſe youꝛ cuppes, diſches, and candelſtickes with often waſhinges, which becauſe they be outwarde thinges do not defile the mynde of man: and that, that is within, ye leaue vnwaſhed, that is to ſaye, youꝛ mynde. Foꝛ it defyleth not the mynde of man, yf he dꝛincke of an vnwaſhed cuppe, but yf he dꝛincke wyne gotten with fraude: yf he dꝛincke wyne foꝛ exceſſe and not foꝛ neceſſitie: lykewyſe ye waſhe the body, and the thinges whiche appertayne vnto the body, but ye purge not the mynde vncleane and defiled with rauen, fylthy luſte, and with other verye filthye thinges. Thou Phariſeye, I ſpeake to the, I ſaye, thou blinde Phariſey, which by thy tytle and religion doeſt boſt thy ſelfe to be a maſter ouer the people: Thou blinde, fyꝛſt pꝛocure foꝛ this, whiche onely pertayneth vnto ỹ matter: yf thou fanſye true cleanes, clenſe fyꝛſt that whiche is within, and than yf thou thincke good, clenſe the vtter thinges, the body, the apparel, the pottes, ỹ cuppes, ỹ ſeates, & ỹ other ſtuffe: oꝛ els to ſhowe furthe cleanes in theſe thinges, and to neglecte thoſe which onely make vs cleane oꝛ vncleane bekoꝛe god: is not cleanes, but Hipocriſye, & ỹ diſtruction of true cleanes.

Foꝛ with theſe youre conſtitucions ye cõꝛrupte the mindes of the ſimple, that they truſtinge vpon this cleanes diſpyſe thoſe thinges whiche onlye ought to be regarded.

The texte.

Wo vnto you Scribes and phariſeis, hipocrites: Foꝛ ye are lyke to paynted ſepulchꝛes, whiche appere beautifull outwarde, but within are full of deade mennes bones, and all filthines. So ye alſo outwardely appere rightuous vnto men, but within ye are full of diſſimulation and iniquitie.

Wo be to you ſcribes and phariſeis hipocrites, whiche be ſo farre from true cleanes, that ye be moꝛe like vnto whited gꝛaues and a fayꝛe couering ſhowing outwardely a counterfeyted cleanes, where as inwardely they be full of bones of dead karkaſes, and all filthines. Euen ſo ye with long pꝛayers, bꝛode phylacteries, large gardes, palenes & faſting, and like coullours & counterfeytinges, ſeme outwardly religiouſe & perfet, wher as youꝛ mind is full of hipocriſie on euery ſide, and berayed vꝫ all kinde of vices.

The texte.

Wo be vnto you Scribes and phariſeis: Foꝛ ye build the tumbes of the pꝛophetes, and garniſh the ſepulchꝛes of the rightuous, & ſay: If we had bene in the dayes of our fathers, we would not haue ben felowes with them in the bloud of the pꝛophetes. And ſo ye be witneſſes vnto youꝛ ſelues, that ye are the chyldꝛen of them which killed the pꝛophetes. Fulfill ye alſo the meaſure of youꝛ fathers. Ye ſerpentes, ye generacio of vipers, how wyll ye eſcape the damnation of hell.

Wo be to you Scribes & phariſeis hipocrites, becauſe thoꝛough falſe boſting of holynes, ye build vp honoꝛably the tumbes of the pꝛophetes, and garnische the graues of the iust men, whom your forfathers hath slayne: and making as thoughe ye fauored the vertue of them that were slaine, and detested the cruelnes of them of whom they were slayne, ye say: if we had lived in the tyme of our elders, we woulde not haue consented to the death of innocentes, wher as nowe ye go aboute more cruel thinges agaynst hym that excelleth the prophetes: and in tyme to cum, ye wyl endeuour no lesse against them, whiche shall open you the waye of euerlasting healthe. For as muche as ye be of this minde, truely ye declare that ye be the very naturall childre of them whiche killed the prophetes, of whom they were monished frankely and frely: and ye would haue ben no better than they, yf it had chaunced you to liue in there tyme. Go to, be like vnto your elders: and what is lacking to theyr extreme cruelty, fulfill ye the same, that nothing may wante. They killed the prophetes, ye kill him, whom the prophetes prophecyed. O serpentes, the ofspring of vipers, o murtherers, the childzen of murtherers. Sith youre malice is so inuincible, sith ye can be amended by no benefites, by no miracles, by no gentle nor roughe communicacion, by no promyses nor threteninges: in case ye maye escape in the meane season the iudgemente of men, how wyll ye escape the iudgement of hell? The whiche ye heape the more vpon you, because ye be not frayed from the desier of kylling by the wycked example of your elders. So many prophetes were sent, of whom ye haue slayne manye. At laste I came my selfe, againste whom, ye knowe what ye haue endeuored.

The texte. Wherfore beholde I sende vnto you prophetes and wysemen, and scribes, and sum of them ye shall kill and crucifye, and sum of them ye shal scourge in youre synagoges, and persecute them frō citie to citie, that vpon you maye cum all the righteouse bloud, whiche hath bene shed vpon the yearth: from the bloude of righteouse Abell, vnto the bloude of Zacharie the sonne of Barachias, whome ye slewe betwene the temple and the aulter. Verely I say vnto you: all these thinges shall cum vpon this generacyon.

And I not contente with this (that it maye be the more euidente vnto all men, that ye be most worthy most cruel condemnacion) behold I wyl sende againe vnto you other Prophetes, wysemen, and Scribes, whiche with greate gentilnes, maye reuoke you from this crueltie vnto a better mynde: and the murder of the former tymes shall not be layde vnto youre charge, yf ye do penaūce at their preaching. But ye wyl not fauoure them but sum of them ye wyll kill with the swerde, sum ye wyll beate downe wyth stones, sum ye wyll crucifie, sum ye wyll whippe in your synagoges: and wyll persecute them in no case, in so muche that ye persecute them from citie to citie, vntyll ye compel them thorough your vncurable malyce, to go to the gentiles. With the which thing ye shal so prouoke the ire of god agaynst you, that whatsoeuer manslaughter hath ben cōmitted of youre elders, from the first murder where Cain killed his brother Abel, vnto the slaughter of Zacharye the sonne of Barachi, whom ye killed betwene the temple & the aulter being nothing afrayed from murder, by religion of the place, the punyshemente of all them being put of & differred, shall be powred vpon youre head, who haue not only folowed, but also farre passed ỹ crueltie of al your forfathers. Therfore your misery shal be so notable, that the whole worlde shall vnderstand what greate cruelnes this nation hath vsed agaynst euery good man: and how stiffe their rebellion hath ben agaynst god, suffering

them so long with suche gentilnes, and prouokynge them so often wyth suche benefites vnto better thynges.

The texte. O Hierusalem, Hierusalem, thou that kyllest the prophetes, and stonest them whyche are sente vnto the: how often woulde I haue gathered thy children to gether, euen as the henne gathereth her chickens vnder her wynges, & ye woulde not: Behold your house is left vnto you desolate. For I say vnto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth tyll that ye saye. Blessed is he that cummeth in the name of the lorde.

After that these thinges were spoken, the most meke Lorde Jesus, who of his goodnes woulde no man vtterly to perysche, considerynge the mesprable destruction nowe at hande of the cytie of Hierusalem, (for all thinges were present vnto his yes) and therewith also their inuincyble stubbernes wherewith they should turne gods gentlenes into fury & rage: doth bewayle lamentably the destruction of the nacion of the Jewes, geuyng an inkling of his seconde cumming: when at last the Jewes shall repente them ouer late, and acknowleage Christe, whom nowe they denye: where as it were more for theyr profite, now to confesse their sauyoure sente them from god, and to sing the same hartily vnto him, whiche they disdayne that the children should sing: Blessed be he that cummeth in the name of the lorde. Hierusalem (sy he) Hierusalem, whiche killest the Prophetes, and stonest to death them that be sent vnto the, how often haue I trauayled to gather thy children together lyke as the carefull hen kearing her chickens doeth cloke them together, and nourishe them vnder her winges, and thou wouldest not. Nothing is let passe of my behaulfe, wherby thou mightest be saued, but contrary wyse thou hast done what thou canst to bring destruction to the, and to exclude saluacion from the. But to whome free will is once geuen, he can not be saued agaynst his wyl. Your wyl ought to be agreable vnto my wil. Beholde a myserable calamytie is ouer your heades. Your dwellyng place shal be lefte you deserte. Ye shall be lefte to your blindenes, vntyll that being once taughte with so greate miseries, ye kal to repentaunce. For I saye vnto you, hereafter ye shal not se me, vntyl ỹ tyme cũ, wherin ye beholding me wt ỹ yes of your faith, shal saye: blessed be he ỹ cũmeth in ỹ name of the lorde, whõ now ye falsly accuse, ỹ he cũmeth in the name of Beelzebub.

Ye shall not see me henceforth, til that ye saye, Blessed is he that cõmeth in the name of the lorde.

¶ The .xxiii. Chapter.

The texte. And Jesus went out & departed frõ ỹ temple: & his disciples came to him for to shewe him ỹ buyldinges of ỹ temple, Jesus said vnto thẽ: Se ye not al these thinges? Verely I say vnto you: There shall not be here left one stone vpõ another, ỹ shal not be destroied.

BUt Jesus to represent with a certayne sygne and token, that the temple and al the religion of the Jewes lawe shuld shortly be abolysshed, departynge out of the churche, began to go awaye. And the disciples because they hearde sum mencion of destruction, they showe theyr Lorde the bougenes of the temple, beynge suche a meruelouse piece of worke, that it semed pitie it should be destroyed, & further so fyrmely buylte, that it semed not possible to be hurled downe. But Jesus answered: se ye (sy he) all these? This be assured of, there is none of all these so strõg so goodly, or so holy, whiche shal not be throwen downe, and so hurlen in peices, that one stone shal not stand on another.

¶ And as he sate vpon mount Oliuete, his disciples came vnto hym secretly, saying: tell vs whā shall these thynges be: & what shal be the token of thy cummynge, and of ꝑ ende of the worlde? And Jesus aunswered, and sayde vnto them: take hede that no mā deceyue you. For many shal cum in my name saying I am Christ: and shal deceyue many. Ye shal heare of warres, and tydinges of warres, be not troubled. For al must cum to passe, but the ende is not yet. Nacion shall ryse against nacion, and realme against realme, and there shall be pestilence and hunger, and yearthquakes in all places. All these are the begynninges of sorowes.

These thinges spoken, Jesus went into the mounte of Olives. Here, as he sate, hauing the temple in his syght, fower of his disciples whome he called first of all, Peter, James, John, and Andrewe, wente vnto him seuerally to knowe more certaynely of the tyme whan suche greate miserye shoulde falle, for they supposed that by and by after the destruction of the citie of Hierusalem, and the hurlyng downe of the temple, Christ would cō agayne in his maiestie. But Christ to make them the more vigilaunt and ware, so tempereth his communication, that he willeth not that they should knowe the tyme of the latter cummyng, and yet through the rehersing of miseries, he maketh them carefull, and in a redines agaynst the commynge of miseries. The disciples therfore saye: Tel vs when these thynges which thou speakest of, shal cum to passe: and by what sygne and token may we knowe, thy cummyng and the ende of this worlde is at hande. But Jesus not aunswerying to that whiche they demaunded: turneth rather to those thinges whiche should prepare theyr myndes to continuall watche in the gospell. I shall cum in dede (q he,) but beware least any man makynge a lye as touchyng my cummyng deceyue you. For many shall cum, whiche shall take vpon them my name, and saye that they be Christe, and shal finde cum to deceyue, folyshe and light of belefe. The tumulte and hurly burly of al thinges shall showe a certayne apperaunce, that the ende of the worlde is at hande. For ye shall heare of warres, and of sondry rumoures of warres more sore and cruell (as it is wont to be) than the thinges theyr selfe. But let not these thinges by and by discourage your myndes, that ye shuld thinke the latter tyme is nowe at hande. This troblesum worlde must nedes aryse, but the ende of illes shall not be furthewith. This storme shall spred farder abrode. For not onely Hierusalem shall be destroyed, but the whole worlde shall buckell together with warres and slaughters. Nation shall ryse agaynst nacyon, and kyngdome shall skirmishe with kyngdome, and the greatest parte of myschyefe and miserye, menne shall suffre of menne. Furthermore god taking vengeaunce, shall put vnto his scourges, pestilence, famine, and in diuerse places erthquakes. And these thynges be yet no certayne argument of the worldes ende, but only signes and tokens of the ill and miserye, and as it were a bredyng of that last & greteſt storme wherwith the worlde shal perishe.

Nacion shall arise against nacion, and realme against realme.

And there shall be pestilence and hunger, yearth quakes in all places.

The texte.

¶ Than shall they put you to trouble, and shall kyll you, and ye shall be hated of al nations for my names sake. And than shall many be offended, and shall betraye one another, and hate one another. And many false prophetes shall aryse, and deceyue many, and iniquitie shall haue the vpper hande, and the loue of many shall be colde. But he that indureth to the ende, the same shalbe safe. And this gospell of the kyngdō shall be preached in al the worlde for a witnes to all nacions, and than the ende shall cum.

And

And ye in the meane season shall not be free from suche maner of illes and miseries. For in this tumult & hurly burly of thinges, men shal plucke you into diuerse afflictions, and finally kyll you: and in the meane season ye shall be hated not only of the Iewes, but of al the gentiles, not for your ill deedes, but because ye professe my name. In the meane time many being offended and greued with aduersities, and ouercõmed with punishementes shall swarue from the professinge of my name, & one shall betraye another, one kinsman shall betray another, one frende another, and whome nature hath coupled with the bandes of charitie, they shall hate eche other. There shall be also another kynde of ill more greuouse and intollerable. There shall arise false Prophetes and false teachers, who counterfeytynge to preache my gospel, shall see to and prouide for their own glory, their own lucre, and theyr owne belly: and in the stede of my spirite they shall inspire theyr owne disciples with the spirite of Sathan, and in the steede of the kingdome of heauen, they shall teache the kingdome of this worlde. They whome punishmentes and tormentes coulde not ouercome, shal be caught in the snares of these men. For there is no more deadly ennempe than a familiar and a fayned frende. In these mischiefes and miseries a man shall not loke for muche cumfort of his brothers and frendes. For the multitude of sinnes beinge so greate, the charitie of manye shal waxe coulde. But yet as for you there is no perill, so that ye perseuer and continue vnto thende wt a constant & a valiaunt courage. No greatnes of aduersitie can destroye any man, but him that lacketh the ryghte minde. And I will not suffre you to perishe, nor the ghospell to be oppressed. May by these tumultes & troubles the strength of the ghospell shall increase more & more: and the storme of illes shall be able to do no nother thing against you, but to make your godlines to be the better tried, & the more to appere. For the ende of ỹ world shall not cum before that this ghospell of the kingdome of heauen be preached through out all the kyngdomes of the worlde, and hath cum to all nations, lest they ỹ woulde not obey, might pretende ignorannce. When this shall be done, than shall cum the ende of the worlde.

And ye shall be hated of al natiõs for my names sake.

And than shal many be offended, and shall betraye one an other.

And many false prophetes shal arise, & deceyue many.

And iniquitie shall haue the vpper hande.

And the loue of many shall wex colde.

But he that endureth to ỹ ende, the same shall be safe.

And this gospell of ỹ kingdome shall be preched in all the world for a witnesse to all nations.

And than the ende shall come.

¶ When ye therfore shall see the abhomination of desolation that was spoken of by Daniell the Prophet, standyng in the holy place: who so readeth it, let him vnderstad.

The texte.

Whereof yf ye seke a token, this is it. When ye shall see the abhominable Idoll whiche shall endeuour vtterlye to subuerte the religion of the ghospell, of the which Daniell in tymes past prophecyed vnto you, saying: and in the myddes of the weke, the sacrifice and offerynge shall be taken awaye: and the abhomination of desolations shall be in the temple vnto the ende of the worlde: when ye shall see (I saye) this abhominable y doll set in the temple, that is, in the towre of holynes: he that readeth the prophecye of the prophete, let hym vnderstande. This worde is misticall, and requireth a spirituall reader.

Than let them that be in Iewry flee vnto the moantaynes, and let not him which is in the house toppe cum downe to take any thynge out of his house. And let not hym that is in the feldes, returne backe to fetche his clothes.

The texte.

Therfore when this storme shall be at hande, they that be in the cities of Iewry, let them forsake the cities, and flee into the mountaynes: and they that be in the toppes of the houses, let the leape downe, & not cum downe to take any thynge awaye with them, out of their houses: & they that be foũde in the felde at that tyme, let them not runne backe to their house to fetche theyr apparell. For than there shal be no leysure to prouyde for their goodes. For it is a great matter yf they can saue theyr life w̄ spedy flighte. For thother thinges maye be recouered, but ẏ life once loste, can not be restored.

The texte.

¶ Wo shalbe in those dayes with them that are with chylde, and to them that geue sucke. But prayè ye that your flyght be not in the wynter, or on the sabboth daye. For than there shalbe great tribulation, suche as hath not bene from the begynnyng of ẏ world, vntyl this tyme, nor shalbe. And excepte those dayes should be shortened, there should haue bene no flesh saued, but for the electes sake, those dayes shal be shortened.

Therfore women with childe, & women that geue sucke, shall be in an yll case in those dayes. For they that be great can not caste of the burden of theyr bely to flee awaye spedelye: nor they that geue sucke can not caste of theyr chyldren, whome they loue more tenderly than themselues, lyke as they do cast of moneye or apparell. But as for you, who shal not be let neyther with house, neyther with possessions, nor with chyldren, ye muste onelye prayè that it chaunce not so, that ye be cõpelled to flee in the winter, or on the sabboth daye. For ye must flee spedelye & farre. But the wynter by the reason of roughnes and shortenes of dayes, is not commodious for the that iourney, and on the sabboth daye the religion of your law letteth you, that ye can not flee far. For at that tyme, there shall be so sore and vehemẽt affliction, as was neuer synce the world was made vnto this daye, & hereafter neuer shalbe. And yf the calamitie should be so cõtinual as it is vehemẽt, no man should be left alyue. Their malice did deserue vtter destructiõ, but for the electe (be they neuer so fewe) those dayes shall be shortened.

Pray ye that youre flyghte be not in the wynter, or on the sabbothe daye.

For thã there shalbe greate tribulation.

But for the chosens sake those dayes shalbe shortened.

¶ Than yf any man saye vnto you: Lo here is Christ: or there, beleue it not. For there shall arise false Christes and false prophetes, and shall show great sygnes and wonders, in so muche ẏ (yf it were possible) the very elect should be brought into errour. Beholde I haue tolde you before. Wherfore if they saye vnto you: lo, he is in the deserte go not ye furth: Beholde he is in ẏ secrete places, beleue it not. For as the lyghtnyng cummeth out of the East, and appeareth vnto the west, so shal the cumming of the sonne of man be. For where soeuer the deade carcas shall be, thyther will also the Egelles be gathered togyther.

In this confusion and hurly burly of thynges, whan my cummyng shall be loked for, men muste take diligente hede, that they be not decepued throughe the crafte of deceyuers: For there shall ryse many false Christes, which shall boaste them selues to be Christ, & be not: but be rather myne aduersaryes: which also shall saye that they be prophetes, and be not, but rather be the teachers of errours. They shall not be onelye furnysshed with craftes, & a false cloke of holines, but also they shall counterfeyte my power with wonders, and magicall meruayles: and they shall take vpon them my person with so many marueylouse iuglynges, that the electe also (yf it were possible) shoulde be brought into errour. Ye therfore beyng monysshed bewate, for I haue tolde you before to the intente ye shoulde beware. Than yf they saye Christe is in the desert, go not oute: lo, he is in the innar parlers, go not in: lo, he is here or there, beleue it not. The seconde cũmyng shall not be after suche sorte, as ye see this, ẏ is to saye, softe, mylde, & humble, but sodayne and cumpassyng the whole worlde with the sodayne lyght of maiestie. For lyke as the lyghtnyng shynyng furth flasheth sodaynely from the East to the west: so shall be the cummyng of the sonne of man.

And

And ye nede not to feare, that ye shall not be with me in suche a confusion and hurly burly of thynges. Whereseuer the body shall be, thyther shall the Egelles flocke and gather. The heade shal not lacke his membres.

¶ Immediately after the tribulacion of these dayes, the sonne shall be darkened, and the moone shal not geue her lyght, and the sterres shall fal frō heauen, & the powers of heauen shal be moued. And than shall appeare in heauen the token of the sonne of man, & than shal al the kynredes of the yearth mourne, and shall se the sonne of mā cummynge in the cloudes of heauen with greate power and glorye. And he shal sende his aungels with a great voyce of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his chosē from the fower wyndes, from the hyghest parte of heauen vnto thendes of them. The texte.

The heauenlye bodyes also shall feele the greatnes of this calamitie. For bothe the sonne shal be darkened, and the sonne beyng darkened wherof the moone borowed her lyghte, the moone also shall showe no lyghte. The starres shall fall from heauen, and the powers of heauen shall shake, beyng in daunger of fallynge. Than amonge the greate and thicke darknes, the signe of the sonne of man shall shyne from heauen, the sygne I say, wherby he ouercame Sathan; and consumed all hys tyranny: the sygne wherby Sathan craked in vayne that he had the hyghar hande. The which once sene, the nations of ỹ whole worlde shal strike their brestes, when the Iewes shall see whome they haue offended, when the Gentiles shall see the maiestie of the crosse, whiche they laughed to skorne. For they shal see the sonne of man, whome nowe they despise, humble and symple: cūmynge an highe in the cloudes of the ayer with a great armye of aungels, with a wonderfull maiestie and glorye. Than he shall sende furth his aungels, to gather together wō a sounding trumpe, all his electe from the fower wyndes, from the hyghe toppe of heauē to the vttermost coaste of the same.

¶ Learne a similitude of the fyg tree: When his boughes be yet tender, and the leues spryng out, ye knowe that Summer is nyghe. So lykewyse ye when ye shall see all these thynges, be ye sure that it is nere euen at the dores. Verely I saye vnto you: this generation shall not passe, vntill all these thinges be donne. Heauen and yerth shall passe, but my wordes shall not passe. But of that day and houre no man knoweth, no not the angels of heauen, but my father onely. The texte.

But at what tyme these thynges shall cum to passe, it is not in me exactlye to determyne. But yet of those aduersities whiche I haue recyted, as of certayne preambles and tokens before ye mayt gesse, that the tyme is not far of. Lyke as the fygge tree doth declare before by certayne tokens that Summer is at hande, as whan at the blowinge of the westerne wynde the boughes beginne to were tender, & the buddes spryng furth, and ỹ leaues desire to spredе abrode: so ye also whan ye shall see all these thinges whiche I haue spoken of, knowe ye well that the cumminge of the sonne of god is at hande. I assure you, this generation shall not passe, but that all thinges whiche be spoken before, shall cum to passe. Heauen and yerth shall perysshe rather than my worde shall be vayne. Therfore it is ynoughe for you to knowe the signes whiche do portende and showe the daye of my comminge, lest it cum vpon you vnwares. But it is not youre parte to serche out exactlye the daye or houre whan the sonne of man shall cum, forasmuche as the knowledge of these thinges is not geuen to the angelles of heauen, no the sonne of man knoweth them not. The father hath reserued this vnto hym selfe alone. And so it is expedient for you to thintent ye maye be alwaye in a readines. But of that daye & houre no man knoweth, no, not the aungells of heauē, but my father onlye.

But

The texte. ¶But as the dayes of Noe were: ſo ſhall alſo the cummyng of the ſonne of man be. For as in the dayes that went before the fludde, they dyd eate and drincke, marry, and were maryed, vntill the daye that Noe entred into the chippe, and knewe not til the fludde came, and toke them all awaye, ſo ſhall alſo the cummyng of the ſonne of man be. Than ſhall two be in the felde, the one taken, the other refuſed. Two women ſhall be grindyng at the mil, the one receyued, the other refuſed. Two in a bed, the one ſhalbe receyued, and the other refuſed.

That day ſhall cum ſodaynely, and vnwares vnto others. Lyke as in the tyme of Noe whan the fludde was tolde them certayne yeares before, yet they thinking that it ſhould not cum to paſſe, did eate and drincke, and maried furthe their doughters, and maryed wyues vntill the laſt daye in the whiche Noe entred in to the arcke, and beleued not that the fludde ſhulde cum to paſſe, vntill they ſawe it nowe at hande: wherwith all they were deſtroyed, who by example of Noe, would not prepare thē ſelues agaynſt that day. Lyke as than a few that were taken in to the arcke were preſerued, the other whiche were left without, periſhed: euen ſo at that tyme whan the ſonne of man ſhall cum, they that ſhall peryſhe, ſhal ſodaynely be deuyded from them that ſhall be ſaued. There ſhall be two labozynge in one felde, felowes in wozke and wages, of whome the one ſhall be taken, and the other ſhall be fozſaken. There ſhalbe two grindyng in one mill, wherof the one ſhalbe taken, ỹ other ſhalbe fozſaken. Yea & of two ỹ lye in one bed, the one ſhall be taken, ỹ other ſhal be fozſaken. For it is not ỹ wozke, oz ỹ place, oz the maner of life, but the affection & good deſyer, ſhal make man bleſſed.

The texte. Watche therfoze, foz ye knowe not what houre your Lorde will cum. Of this yet be ſure, that yf the goodman of the houſe knewe, what houre the theefe would cum: he would ſurely watche & not ſuffre his houſe to be broken vp. Therfoze, be ye alſo ready, foz in ſuche an houre as ye thincke not, will the ſonne of man cum.

Wherfoze ſemge that theſe thinges vndoubtedly ſhall cum to paſſe, & it can not certaynely be knowen vpon what daye they ſhall cum: wake and watche continually, leſt that day cum vpō you vnwares and vnprepared. If men watche that theyr money periſhe not, muche moze ought ye to watche that your ſoule periſhe not. For what houſeholder is ſo negligēt which yf he knewe that the theefe would breake into his houſe in the nyght ſeaſon, woulde ſleepe all nyght, and ſuffre his houſe to be broken downe? Therfoze ye muſt wake all your lyfe, becauſe ye be certayne that the daye wyll cum, whan ye loke not foz it. For ſo ye muſt lyue, that whan ſoeuer the day doth cum, it maye fynde you doynge your dutye, that furthwith ye maye be rewarded.

The texte. ¶Who is a faythfull and a wyſe ſeruaunte, whome his lozde hath made ruler ouer his houſeholde, to geue thē meate in ſeaſon. Bleſſed is that ſeruaunte, whome his lozd (whan he cummeth) ſhall fynde ſo doynge: Verely I ſay vnto you, that he ſhall make hym ruler ouer all his goodes. But & yf that euyll ſeruaunt ſaye in his harte, my lozd wil be long a cummyng, (and ſo begyn to ſmyte his felowes, yea, & to eate & drincke with the dronckē) the ſame ſeruauntes Lozd ſhall cum in a daye, whan he loketh not foz hym, and in an houre that he is not ware of, & ſhal hewe hym in pieces, and geue hym his pozcion with Hipochrites: there ſhall be weppynge and gnaſhynge of teeth, Wyll not a wiſe and a faythfull ſeruaunt do the ſame, whom his mayſter goynge far from home, hath made ruler ouer his familie, to geue thē meate in due ſeaſō? The mayſter doth not poynte hym whē he wyll returne home, leaſt he ſhoulde be ſlacke in his office: but whanſoeuer the mayſter ſhall returne, ſhall not the ſeruaunte be happy if his mayſter fynde hym doinge his duety? Certaynely I ſaye vnto you, that the mayſter haupnge a tryall of his trustines, wyll be bolde to truste hym with greater thynges, and wyll make hym ruler ouer al his goodes. Contrarywyse yf the yll and vnfayth-full seruaunte wyll saye in his harte: my mayster is long awaye, and per-chaunce he will neuer returne: and vpon this hope begynneth to beate his felow seruauntes, and neglectyng the familie, eateth and dryncketh with dronckardes. how vnhappy shall he be, when his mayster shall cum at the daye, when he loked not for hym, and the houre when he thought that he wolde not returne: For he shal not onely set him besyde his office, but he wil also cutte hym a sundre in the myddest, and ioyne his parte with the Hypo-crites, whiche hath the tytle and name of the offyce of the gospell, where as in their doynges, they be contrarye to the gospell. And there for his sensual pleasures of wrong shaped swetenesse wherewith beeyng inebriate & drou-ken he had not awaited for ỹ cumming of his mayster, he shal be punysshed w̄ intollerable torm̄ete: his laughyng shalbe turned into weppynge, and his songes into gnasshyng of teethe.

There shall be weppynge & gnasshyng of teeth.

The. xxv. Chapter.

Then shall the kyngdome of heauen be lyke vnto ten virgins, whiche takynge theyr lampes, went furth to mete the spouse. But fyue of them were folyshe, and fyue were wyse. They that were folysh, takynge their lampes, toke no oyle with them: but the wyse toke oyle with them in their vessels with the lampes. Whyle the spouse ta-ryed, they al slumbred and slepte. And at mydnyght there was a crye made: Be holde the spouse cummeth: go furth to mete hym. Than all the virgins arose, and prepared theyr lampes. And the folysshe sayde vnto the wyse: geue vs of your oyle, for our lam-pes are out. But the wyse aunswered, saying: Not so, least there be not ynoughe for vs and you, but go ye rather to the sellers, and bye for your selues. And whyle they went to bye, the brydegrome came, and they that were redy, went in with him, to the marriage, and the dore was shut. Afterwarde cum the other virgins, sayinge: Lorde lorde open vnto vs. But he aunsweringe, sayth: Verely I saye vnto you: I know you not. Watche therfore, for ye knowe not the daye nor the houre, in the whiche the sone of man shall cum.

And Jesus to put in the myndes of his disciples surely, that they shuld not slacke or slepe in this lyfe, but ỹ throughe the continuall seruice of godlines & duties toward their neyghboure, they shulde get and prepare them thinges, for the waye to euerlastyng life: (for in the resurrection, we shoulde seke it to late, vnlesse we shoulde prepare in time) he set furth a parable of tenne virgines, who taking their lampes, went to meete the spouse. But of these, fyue were fooles, whiche proui-ded them not of oyle againste the cumming of the bridegrome, because they thought he wolde not cum so sodenly, but that they might haue had space to get them oyle sumwhere. But the wise virgins knowing that the time was vncertayne, whan theyr spouse shoulde cum, leste they might be founde vnready, carryed out with them in their vesselles, oyle for their lā-pes, whereby they might refreshe the lampes as they beganne to fayle. Therfore when the spouse differred his cumming long, all the virgines be-ganne to nappe, and at length fell a slepe. In the dead night sodainly roose a clamour and a noyse among the seruauntes, calling them out to mete the spouse: beholde the brydegrome is at hande, go furth and mete him. Than al the virgines wakyng from slepe, prepared their lampes. But the fooles when they sawe they must departe sodaynely at middenight, and had no oyle, their lampes now faylinge of light, they desired the wise virgines to geue them parte of theyr oyle.

But they made answere: we feare that we haue not ynoughe bothe for vs and you. Go ye rather to the oyle sellers and bye of them. And in the meane time as they went to bye, the bridegrome came: and they that wer ready entered in with him to the mariage, and furthwith the gate was shut. At last cum the foolishe virgines also, and knocke at the gate, and saye: Lorde lord open the gate for vs. Vnto whom the bridegrome made answere: truely I knowe you not. Wherfore after the example of the wise virgines, and of ỹ faythfull seruaunt, and the politike howseholder, watche ye, and prepare in time the store of good workes, because ye knowe not the daye, nor the houre of his cumming, and when he shall sodainely appeare, there shall be nowe no lenger time of well doing: but euery man shall haue rewarde according as he hath done before.

The texte. Likewise as a certayne man taking his iourney into a straunge cuntrey, called his seruauntes, and deliuered vnto them his goodes, and vnto one he gaue fiue talētes, and to another two, and to another one, to euery one according to his habilitie, and streightway departed. And he that had receyued fyue talentes, went and occupied with the same, and gayned other fiue talentes. Likewise also he that had receyued two, gayned other two. But he that had receyued one, went and digged in the yerth, and hid his lordes money.

Jesus added also another parable, stirring his disciples to the continuall desire of good workes, that they shulde not suffre the doctrine and giftes that he gaue them, to be barren and vnfruitefull thorough theyr negligence, but thorough their diligence and carefulnes, shoulde turne them to the profit of their neyghboure, and so make them selues meete for greater giftes because they had bestowed that thing whiche they had receyued after their measure and capacitie, for their masters auauntage, who desireth to be enriched wt such gayne. A certayne man (ỹ he) going far from home, called his seruauntes, and deliuered them his goodes, not to spende them and lauishe thē out for their owne pleasure, but to get sum vauntage therof to their master, of whom they had receyued ỹ stocke. And to one he gaue one talent, vnto another two, agayne to another fyue, as he thought euery man meete. This done, furthwith he toke his iourney: He therfore that had fyue talentes committed vnto him, ceased not, but went furthwith and lent furthe the money that he had taken to vsury, so often that at last by vsury he gayned almuche as his stocke came to, and of fyue talētes he made ten. In lyke maner he that had two talentes committed vnto him so occupyed them, that by vsury, he made his gayne as good as his stocke. Further he that had one talent delyuered him, went his wayes for slogyshnes, and hyd the talent that he had receyued in the grounde, thinckinge it ynoughe, yf he restored agayne the stocke to his master.

The texte. After a longe season, the lorde of those seruauntes came and rekened with them. And he that had receyued fyue talentes came, & brought other fyue talentes, saying: Lord thou deliueredest vnto me fyue talētes: Beholde I haue gayned with them fyue talentes moo. His lorde sayde vnto him: O good and faythfull seruaunte, thou hast ben faythfull ouer fewe thinges, I will make the ruler ouer many thinges: Enter thou in to the ioye of thy lorde. He also ỹ had receyued two talentes, came, and sayde: Lord thou deliueredest vnto me two talentes: Lo I haue wonne two other talentes with them: His Lorde sayde vnto hym: O good and faythfull seruaunt, thou hast ben faythfull ouer fewe thinges, enter in to the ioye of thy lorde.

Therfore after longe iourneying, the master returned home, and required accompte of his seruauntes, of that he had deliuered them, and of that,

that they had layd oute. Than came furth he whiche had receyued fyue talentes and brought other fyue whiche he had gayned by vsury, makynge hys accompte after thys sorte: Ye gaue me a stocke of fyue talentes, loe, I haue gayned as muche more to them. The master praysing the diligence of his seruaunt, sayeth: O good and trusty seruaunt, because I haue founde the trusty in a litill money, I will trust the with moo thynges: enter in to the ioye of thy master. After hym came he also vnto whome the master had committed two talentes, and beyng commaunded to make his accompte, sayeth: Syr ye committed vnto me the stocke of two talentes, lo I haue gayned as much agayne by vsury. The master cõmending the diligence of this seruaunt also, sayeth. O good and trusty seruaunte, because I haue founde the trusty in a littil, hereafter I will trust the with greater thinges: enter in to thy masters ioye.

¶ And he whiche had receyued one talent, came, and sayde: Lorde I knewe the that thou art an hard man, reapyng where thou hast not sowen, and gatheringe where thou haste not strawed, and therefore I was afrayed and went and hyd thy talent in the yerthe: Lo, there thou hast that is thyne. His lorde answered, and sayde vnto hym. Thou cruell and slothfull seruaunte, thou knewest that I reape where I sowed not, and gathered where I haue not strawed, thou oughtest therfore to delyuer my money to the exchaungers, & than at my cumming, shoulde I haue receyued myne owne with gayne. Take therfore the talent from hym, and geue it vnto hym whiche hathe tenne talentes. For to euery one that hath shall be geuen, and he shall haue aboundaunce. But he that hath not, from hym shall be taken away that whiche he hath. And cast the vnprofitable seruaunte in to vtter darkenes. There shalbe weping and gnasshinge of teeth. The texte.

Finally came he also, whiche had hyd in the grounde the talent that he had receyued, and being commaunded to render accoumpte, doth not onely not acknowledge the faulte of slowethfulnes, but also accusing hys master of roughnes, and greate couetousenes, dothe dubbell the faulte of hys duty neglected. Syr (quod he) I knewe that ye were a roughe and a sower man, ye take harueste there where ye sowed not: and gather gayne there, where ye dyd no cost: Therefore fearynge lest yf my stocke by any chaunce shoulde haue ben lost, ye would haue ben cruell and sore against me: I went and hyd your talent in the grounde. This had I rather do, than to go about to get gayne by vsury, and in the meane season to be in daunger of the stocke. Lo thou hast that, that is thyne owne. If I deserue not prayse for increase of gayne, yet I haue prouided that the stocke shoulde be safe and sure. This communicacion the master turneth in to hys owne heade, sayinge: Thou naughty and slowthfull seruaunt, thou knowest as thou sayest, that I am desirouse of gayne: and that I take my harueste there, where I haue not sowen: and gather gayne there, where I bestowed no cost. The more therfore oughtest thou to haue committed my money vnto the exchangers, and I that hunt for gayne, where as I haue done no cost, shoulde haue cum and required my money with gayne: and haue taken auauntage there, where as I had sowen and done cost. The stocke was myne, not thyne: Thou were bounde to be a diligent seruaunt vnto thy master.

Than he turninge vnto the other seruauntes, sayde: take awaye the talent from thys vnprofitable seruaunt, and geue it to hym that hath ten talentes. And as they maruayled that he commaunded more to be geuen vnto him which had already aboundantly, the master saieth, so it shall cum to passe in thys kinde of riches. Who so hath, he is worthy to receyue more, that he maye abounde and haue plentye: but he that by slouthfulnes hath gote hym no manner of gayne, shall be robbed also of that, that he semeth for to haue, because he is vnworthy to haue it.

Furthermore take awaye that vnprofitable seruaunt from my syght, and cast hym into the outwarde darkenes. There in the stede of the ioye of his master, whiche he woulde not deserue, he shall be payned with wepyng and gnashing of teeth. With suche parables the lorde Jesus pricked forwarde his disciples both with ỹ greatnes of rewardes, & with the feare of punishmentes, vnto the desyre of the euangelicall godlynes, & also to do for their neyghboures: and to feare them from slouthfulnes & from boldenes of ill doing.

The texte. Whan the sonne of man cummeth in hys glory, and all his holy angels with hym, than shall he syt vpon the seate of his glory, and before hym shal be gathered al nacions, And he shall separate one from another, as the shepeherd doth separate the shepe from the goates, and shall set the shepe on the right hande, but the goates on the left hande.

The whiche thinge he did also far more manifestly and clerely in his last narration, where he layeth before theyr yes, both the magestie of his cumming, and the separation of the good from the ill, whiche now lyue in the churche mixte together, and also the diuerse desertes and rewardes of both partes, shortely he setteth before theyr yes, thole maner of the latter iudgement: knowing & considering that the day of hys death was now at hand, to thintent his disciples being instructed with so many lessons, should in no case discourage their hartes for the shamefull death of the crosse: but should cumforte and solace this present affliction and shame, with the consideracion of the felicitie and glory to cum. And also that they shoulde not go about or wyshe any vengeaunce to the ill and wicked men, for as muche as they knewe that accordynge to theyr desertes, in that iudgement they shoulde be punished eternally.

When the sonne of man (qͦ he) whom ye shal see shortely most low and abiecte, shal cũ in his maiestie, the cumpanies of al angelles garding him: than he shall sit as iudge ouer all in the seate of hys maiestie, and all the nacions of the whole worlde shall be called before hym. For no man be he high or lowe, can escape that iudgement. Thys shall be donne not by mannes coniectures, but by the exacte iudgement of god, vnto whose yes all thynges be open. And first he shall separate the good from the ill, like as the sheperd when he numbreth hys flocke, doth shede the shepe from the goates. And he shall set the shepe: that is, the innocentes and well doers, on the right hand: and he shall set the goates, that is, the hurtful & ill doers, on the lefte hande. And so the whole numbre of men diuided in to two raies or sortes as a iust iudge he wil showe vnto bothe a iust cause of hys iudgement, that the good may knowe by what well doinges they haue attayned vnto so greate felicitie, and the ill may heare with what offenses they haue deserued euerlastynge punishemente.

And he shall separate the one from the other, as the shepeheard doth separate the shepe frõ the goates.

The texte. Then the kynge shall saye to those that be on his righte hande: Cum ye blessed of my father, possesse ye the kyngdome prepared for you, from the beginning of the worlde, for I was an hungred, and ye gaue me meate, I was a thyrst, and ye gaue me drincke, I was harbourlesse, and ye toke me in, I was naked and ye clothed me, I was sicke, and ye visited me, I was in prison, and ye came to me. Than the iuste shall aunswere, sayinge: Lorde, when dyd we see the hungry, and fed the? or a thirst, and gaue the drynke?

And whan dyd we see the harbourlesse, and toke the in? or naked, and clothed the? or whan dyd we see the sycke, or in prison, and came vnto the? And the kynge aunswerynge, shall saye vnto them: verely I say vnto you, in asmuche as ye haue done it vnto one of the least of these my brethren, ye haue done it to me.

And saluting the sorte on the right hande, with a milde and a mery chere, shall saye: Cum my frendes, whome the worlde toke for vyle and execrable, but whom my father taketh for honourable and prayse worthie. Nowe for the illes and displeasures whiche ye haue suffered for my sake, take the inheritaunce of the heauenlye kyngdome: whiche by the diuine prouision and counsel, was prepared for you of god the foreknower of al thinges, before the worlde was made. With this so great rewarde it is thoughte good to recompence the workes of your great loue towardes me, least ye might thinke that they were lost. For in times paste whan I was hungry, ye gaue me meate: whan I was thirsty, ye gaue me drynke: whan I was a straunger, and nedy of harboure, ye toke me in to youre houses, whan I was naked, ye couered me: whan I was sycke, ye dyd visit me: whan I was in prison, ye came to coumforte me: ye gaue me youres suche as they were: nowe I on the other side do communicate & geue vnto you, my whole kingdome, whiche is common to me and my father. Whan these thinges shal be hearde of the iuste men, whiche dothe so vse the workes of charitie that in maner they knewe not that they haue done them, they shall aunswere hym, sayinge: Lorde when sawe we the hungry, and fed the? thyrsty, and gaue the drynke? whan sawe we the a straunger, & brought the into oure house? or whan did we couer the being naked? When dyd we visit the beyng sicke? When dyd we cum vnto the beyng in prison? Than the kyng shall saye openlye, that he woulde it to be accounted done to hym, what soeuer is geuen to any one of them, whom the worlde despiseth for their pouertie and lowenes: yet he despised them not, in so muche that he did vouchesafe to honour them with the name of brethren.

Certaynely (shal he say) I say vnto you, although I haue nede of no mānes helpe, whiche am lorde ouer all, yet where as ye haue done these thynges for my sake to any of these my poore litil brethrene: Ye haue done thē to me.

Than shall he saye to those that shall be on the left hande: Departe from me ye cursed, in to fyer euerlastyng: whiche is prepared for the deuill and his angels. For I haue hungered, and ye haue not geuen me meate, I haue thirsted, and ye haue not geuen me drinke, I haue ben harbourlesse, and ye haue not taken me in, I haue ben naked, and ye haue not clothed me, I haue ben sicke and in prison, and ye haue not visited me. Than shall they also answere to hym, and say: Lorde when did we se the hungry or thirsty, or harbourlesse, or naked, or sicke, or in prison, and did not minister vnto the? Than shall he aunswere vnto them, saying: verely I say vnto you: in as muche as ye did not it to one of the lest of these, ye did it not to me. And they shall go in to euerlastyng punishement, but the iust in to lyfe euerlastyng.

Than with an horrible loke turning to them that shall stande on the left hande, he shall geue a terrible sentence: Go away from me ye whom the worlde flatered and praysed, but execrable and cursed of my father and me: go in to the fyer that neuer shall be quenched, which was prepared from the beginning of the worlde, for the deuill and his angelles, vnto whome ye had rather sticke then vnto me. For whan I was hungry, ye gaue me not meate: whan I was thirsty, ye gaue me not drincke: I wandred and lacked harborow, ye toke me not in, I was naked, ye couered me not: I was sicke and in prison, and ye did not visit me. Than shall they answer the iudge with as many wordes, as the iust men answered: Lorde whan sawe we the hungry or thirsty, or wandering or naked, or sicke, or in prison, and serued the not? Than the king shal aunswere them also: What so euer of these duties is denyed to any one of these litill ones, litill regarded of the worlde, and yet my brethren, I count it denied vnto me. I was nedy in them, I would haue ben refreshed in them. Thys sentence once geuen, from the whiche there shall be none appele, they that be on the lift hande, shall go in to euerlastyng fyer, and the iust men in to euerlastyng lyfe.

The.xxvi. Chapiter.

The texte. And it came to passe whan Jesus had finished all these sayinges, he sayde vnto his disciples: ye knowe that after two dayes shall be the Paasse day, and the sonne of man shall be deliuered vp to be crucified.

THan whan Jesus hadde ended thys communication, wherewith so many wayes he established the mindes of his disciples against afflictions now being at hande, that they shoulde vtterly be dismayed whan they should shortly after see their lorde caryed away to a shamefull punishement: at laste he was bolde to open vnto them the day & the manner of his death. The mencion whereof, he doth inculcat & beate in to hys disciples mindes: lest whan they shoulde se it, they shoulde be so amased at it, as a thing vnwares & not loked for, that they shoulde be vtterly discouraged: chiefly whan they shoulde perceyue that Jesus came vnto his death willingly, whiche he mought haue escaped, nor coulde not be killed before the day came, whiche he had hym selfe apoynted for his death.

And that was the Paasse daye, which among the Jewes was kepte with greate deuocion, renewing the yerely remembraunce of that daye, in the whiche in tyme past amonge the Egyptians, the postes beyng sprynkeled with the bloud of the lambe, they were delyuered from the killyng angell, and passed ouer safely the redde sea. In remembraunce of this thynge, they offered yerely a lambe of one yere withoute spot: and of the passyng by of the angell, and of the luckye passing ouer the sea, they called it Paasse. But this was a figure of Jesus Christ, whiche shoulde redeme the whole worlde with hys moost holye bloude, from the tyrannye of synne: who alone was cleane from the spottes of all sinne. Jesus puttyng hys disciples in remembraunce of this thing, sayeth: ye know that after two dayes the Paasse shal be offered, & the same daye the sonne of man shalbe delyuered to be crucified.

The texte. Than assembled together the chiefe priestes and Scribes, and thelders of the people into the palace of the chiefe priest, whiche was called Cayphas, and helde a counsell to take Jesus by deceyte, and kyll hym. But they sayde, not on the holy day, lest there be an vproze emong the people.

Therfore when that holy and cherefull daye was nere, for the kepyng of the whiche it was meete for men to prepare them selues with godly workes, the chiefe priestes and the seniours of the people, were gathered together: whose authoritie, yf there had ben any rage emonge the people, ought furthwith to haue pacified it. And they were gathered to gether in the courte of the chiefe of the priestes, whiche was called Cayphas. For these chiefely conspired against Jesus, because they feared lest (yf he shoulde be preserued) they should leese their lucre and authoritie. Therefore it was decreed there thorough wicked counsel, that they shoulde ley handes vpon Jesus and kyll hym, not openly and violently, but by disceyte & guyle. Therfore when these great men agreed emong them selues vngraciously of the murder, they consulted of the tyme. For althoughe they thyrsted sore for the innocent bloude, beynge mad with enuye and hatred, yet they thought best to differ the deathe to another tyme, because the daye chiefly holy and festiual emong the Jewes was at hand. For they feared if they shoulde set vpon hym on that daye, that the people be wonte to resort to gether, leste any tumulte or busines shoulde ryse, because there were many emonge the people, whiche seyng hys myracles, and hearyng hys marueylouse doctryne, and marking the greate soberues and gentilnes of his maners, had a great opinion of hym. They feared the people, whiche feared not god: nor feared not to defyle the holydaye with murder, whiche durst not eate leuen bred. Sathan gaue them this counsel, desyring to kepe close that sacrifyce which shoulde bring helthe and saluacion to the worlde. But it pleased otherwise to the diuyne counsell. For it was not semely that the sacrifyce shoulde be priuylye cast awaye, whiche the father wolde to be offered not onelye for the saluacion of the Jewes, but for the saluacion also of the whole worlde.

But they sayde: not on the holy day, least there bee an vprore emong ỹ people.

Whan Jesus was in Bethanye in the house of Symon the leper, there came to hym a woman, haynge an alabaster bore of precyous oyntment, and powred it vpon hys head as he sate at the boorde. But the disciples when they sawe it, disdayned at it, sayeng: what nede this waste: For thys oyntment myght haue bene well solde, and geuen to the poore. Whan Jesus knew thys, he sayd: What trouble ye the woma: For she hath wrought a good worke towarde me. For ye haue alwayes poore folke with you, but me ye haue not alwayes, and in that she hath cast this oyntment on my body, she did it to bury me. Verely I saye vnto you: Whereseuer this gospell shall be preached in all the worlde, that also, that she hath done, shalbe tolde for a memoriall of her.

Therfore whan Jesus was in Bethania, nere vnto Hierusalem, where he shoulde be crucified, and sate at meate in the house of one Simon called Leper, a certayne woman came vnto hym, hauing an alabastre of precious oyntment, who broke the alabaster, and powred the oyntment vpon hys head. The disciples seyng a thyng of so greate price powred and cast out at once they disdayned and murmured at it. For they knewe that Jesus was not wont to vse suche delicacies, and that it shoulde haue bene more for hys appetite, yf the woman had delyuered her alabaster whole, that the oyntement beynge solde, the poore men might be releued with the value therof. To what pourpose is it (ỹ they) to leese suche a precyouse thynge? For it myght haue bene solde for muche, and the value therof geuen to the poore. Thus sayde the disciples not vnderstandynge to what pourpose Jesus suffered thys to be donne. For he was not in loue with suche delicacies, but he woulde haue hys deathe to be adorned with suche honour which death he woulde suffer of no necessitie, but of hys owne wyll, for the health of the whole worlde. For where as in all hys lyfe he behaued hym selfe most lowlye, yet he honoured his death with a certayne magnificence, by the whiche death he shoulde ouercum the deuyll.

And therfore once he was caryed into Hierusalem with a greate triumphe: and than, as preuenting the honoure of hys buriall, he was embaumed with a swete oyntment: and whan he was dead, he would be buryed in a newe sepulchre grauen in stone: and he would be wynded in a cleane shete: and he woulde be buried weth the busy care of a noble mã. The karkales of ryche and honorable men, be wonte to be embaumed with precious oyntmentes, eyther for honoure, or elles to preserue theyr bodyes from corruption. And because he knewe that he shoulde reuyue and ryse agayne, before that hys frendes shoulde do him this honour, he suffred this pompe of buriall to be bestowed vpon hym before hys death: to thintente he myghte imprinte by many meanes in hys disciples mindes the mencion of hys death, and by honoure, to mittigate the horryblenes therof.

But the disciples whan they sawe it, disdayned at it, sayinge: what nedeth this waste.

Therfore when his disciples beyng ignorraunte of these thynges, murmured and grudged at the costes and expenses, Jesus refrayned them sayinge: Why be ye greued with this woman? She hath done a godly office and a louing benefyte to me, whiche shal shortly dye. It is not mete that ye shoulde haue enuye at this my last honoure. Poore men of the common sort ye haue alwayes with you, to whome ye maye do good, but ye shal not euer haue me. This oyntment is not lost, but this woman gessyng that I should shortly dye, with her office and duetie hath preuented my buriall: and hath powred vpon me beyng alyue, that ỹ is wonte to be powred vpon the dead.

where so euer this Gospell shalbe preched in al ỹ world, shal also that she hath done shalbe told for a memorial of her.

Therfore depraue not her godlynes, whiche is so acceptable vnto God, that where as the gospel of my death shal be preached throughe oute all the worlde, this woman also shall be mencyoned, whiche with a godlye and an holy duety, hath preuented my sepulture.

¶ Than one of the twelue whiche was called Judas Iscarioth went vnto the chefe priestes, and sayde vnto them: What will ye geue me, and I will delyuer him vnto you? And they appoynted to hym thirty denaries. And from that time furthe, he sought oportunitie to betraye hym.

Than one of the twelue whiche was called Judas Iscariot, went vnto the chief priestes, and said vnto thē.

Where as this communicacion had repressed the disdayne of others, whiche erred of a simplicitie, not knowing the mistery: yet it pacified not Judas Iscariote, whiche falsely pretended care for the poore, where as lucre and gayne were more pleasaunt vnto hym. For he bare the purse, and was wounte to stele sumwhat of the thinges whiche were geuen of the liberall frendes of Jesus, to be distributed emonge the poore, hereof by litill and litle he encreased hys money. Therefore whan he was wholy geuen to the filthye disease of auarice, minding to recompence that, whiche he counted lost in the oyntment, with the price of the Lorde, he went vnto the chiefe priestes and officers, whome he knewe with bent myndes had conspired the death of Jesus, and that there was nothing to lette them, but that he might be taken without tumulte or busines. To bring this to passe there were none more meete, than sum of the number of them, whiche were familiare with the lorde, and next a boute hym, who knewe certaynly whyther Jesus was wounte to go. For he had his secrete places to praye in. And ther was one fonde in that chosen and piked number of twelue, whome Christe toke vnto hym to be the chiefe ouer all: whiche loued better wicked gayne, than so mylde ſo milde & ſo beneficiall a lorde. So great a poyſon is auarice, if it poſſeſſe wholy the minde of man. But Jeſus would ſignifye by this example that there ſhould be men, which beyng corrupt with the deſyre of money, would betraye the worde of the golpell, and this miſchiefe ſhould chiefly cum of them, who being the chiefe and heades of the religion of the churche, ſemeth to be priuy of the ſecretes of theyr lorde: with whom they be ſo familiar, ỹ with wrong interpretacion they betray his doctrine to the wicked and prophane rulers, which ſeke for nothing elles, but the diſtruccion of the trueth of the golpell. Judas therfore going vnto the officers, ſayd: what rewarde wil ye geue me, if I deliuer you him into your handes? And they bargained with him for thirty denaries. With ſo littel wages could he be hyered to ſo beaſtely and cruel a deed: ſo lightly and vilely was that precious bloud eſtemed, whiche was ſufficient to redeme whole mankinde. Therfore Judas gredye and gaping for the money that was promyſed hym, by and by from that tyme forwarde ſought for occaſion to betraye Jeſus.

What wilt ye geue me, & I will deliuer hi vnto you.

¶ But the firſt daye of the vnleauened bred, the diſciples came to Jeſus, ſaying vnto hym: where wilt thou that we prepare for the, to eate the paaſſe? And he ſayde: Go into the cytie to ſuche a man, and ſaye vnto hym: The maſter ſayeth my tyme is at hãd, with the do I kepe my Eaſter with my diſciples. And the diſciples did as Jeſus had appointed them, and made ready the paaſſe.

Therfore whan the firſte daye of ſeuen was at hande, in the whiche the Jewes were accuſtomed to abſtayne from leauen breade, after the eating of the paſchall lambe, the diſciples go vnto Jeſus, ſaying: Lorde where will ye that we ſhall prepare you a place to feaſte and kepe your Paſche? ſo great was the ſcarcenes, that neyther he, nor his diſciples had any houſe of theyr owne to go to. But Jeſus to ſhowe that this whole matter was miſticall, and not done by chaunce or neceſſitie, but that all thynges were done by the preſcience and counſel of God, he anſwered them: Go in to the cytie, and anon as ye entre in, there ſhall meete you a certayne man bearing a potte of water, folowe him, and where ſo euer he goeth in, ye ſhal go in, and ſay to the houſholder, the maſter ſayeth: My tyme is at hande, at thy houſe I kepe my Paaſſe with my diſciples. He ſhall ſhowe you a great and a fayre parler, there prepare my paaſſe. The diſciples went and found all thynges, as Jeſus had tolde them before, and prepared him a feaſt in the place that he commaunded.

The texte.

Whan the euen was cum, he ſate downe with the twelue, and as they were eating, he ſayde: Verely I ſaye vnto you, one of you ſhall betraye me. And they were exceding ſorowfull, and beganne euery one to ſay: Lord is it I? He anſwered and ſayd: He that dippeth his hand with me in the diſhe, the ſame ſhall betray me. The ſonne of mã goeth as it is written of hym: But wo vnto that man, by whom the ſonne of man is betrayed. It had bene good for that man, if he had not ben borne. Than Judas whiche betrayed hym, anſwered, and ſayde: Maſter, is it I? He ſayde vnto hym: Thou haſt ſayde.

And towarde night Jeſus went thither, and ſate doune to ſuppe with his twelue diſciples. And now as they were at ſupper, Jeſus ſayeth vnto them: one of you ſhall betraye me. This he ſayed to declare that nothing at all was hyd from hym, and alſo that the conſcience of the traytour beyng touched, might be turned vnto penaunce. At this word al their hartes begã to be very heuy. Euery man ſuſpected and diſtruſted hym ſelf, knowing the weakenes of man. They deſiring therfore to be deliuered from this heauines, began for to aſke ſeuerally: is it I Lord? Thã Jeſus ſumwhat to con-

firme and establish the others, almost dead for feare, and to touche the conscience of Judas more sharpely, if perhappes he might be moued vnto penaunce, pointed the authour of the dede with a more certayne signe, and withall put him in remembraunce of the great familiaritie, which ought to haue withdrawen him from suche a mad mischiefe, saying: He that putteth his hande with me in the dishe, and is my felowe not onely of the table, but also of the dishe, shall betraye me, and for the office of familiaritie he shall rendre vnto me the office of extreme enimitie, where as the communion and felowshippe of breade and salt be wonte for to ioyne men vnknowen and vnaquaynted, with the bonde of amitie. And that these thynges should chaunce to the sonne of man, it was ordeyned heretofore of ỹ father, and prophecied before of the prophetes. But yet wo be to that man, thorough whose wickednes, the sonne of mā is betrayed. The diuine wisedom doth vse his wickednes to the saluacion of mankynde, but yet he is no lesse in faulte, which thorough his owne malice was brought to this dede, whereas I omitted nothing whereby I might heale his mynde. Wherfore for so wicked a deed, he shall be cruelly punished, vnles he repent, that it had bene better for him neuer to haue ben borne. This communication whiche with shame might haue healed an ill man, or with paine might haue feared a wicked man, made Judas nothing the better, in so muche that he ioyned impudencie and vnshamefastenes to his wicked dede, & as though he had knowen hym self to be nothyng culpable, asked the Lorde: Is it I? And here Jesus not forgetting his wont gentilnes, answered: Thou hast sayde: geuing an inckling rather than expressing plainly, that it was he, and maketh as though he had a suspicion, and not knowlege of it.

The sonne of man goeth as it is writtē of him, but wo vnto that mā, by whom the sonne of mā is betrayed.

It had been good for that man, if he had not be borne.

Than Judas whiche betrayed hym, answered, and sayed: Mayster is it I?

The texte. ¶ Whan they were eating, Jesus toke bread, and whan he had geuen thankes, brake it, and gaue it to the disciples, and sayd: Take, eate, this is my body. And he toke the cup, and gaue thankes, and deliuered it to them, saying: Drincke ye all of this, for this is my bloud whiche is of the newe testament, that is shed for many, for the remission of sinnes. But I say vnto you, I will not drincke hencefurth of this fruite of the vine tree, vntil the daye when I shal drincke it new with you in my fathers kingdome.

Therfore in this latter supper that he made with his disciples, before his death, he did institute that most holy remembraunce of his death: that beyng often renewed, it should be a perpetual memoriall emong them, of his great charitie, whereby he sticked not to bestowe his lyfe to redeme mankinde: that the remēbraunce of that godly sacrifice should neuer out of our mindes, wherein that most pure & immaculate lābe ỹ new & trewe paasle, offered him self in the aulter of the crosse for vs to God the father, whom beyng angrye, he hath made mercifull to vs by his bloud, suffering paynes him self for our offenses, which were due to our sinfulnes: Jesus did institute and consecrate this secrete signe and memoriall in two thinges, by the whiche, amitie emong men is wont to be intertayned: that the charitie by the which Christ gaue himself to his, should couple vs togither also: who oftentymes eate together of one breade, and drinke of one cuppe. And also shewyng by a certayne spirituall figure, the rites and manners of Moses his lawe, in the whiche was no purgation of sinne, but by bloud of the sacrifice: Furthermore signifying that he dyd consecrate a newe leage of the euangelicall profession by this mistery. For whan Moses had recited the rol of the lawe, wherein the preceptes of the lawe were conteyned, and the people had aunſwered: We will do al thinges ẏ the lord hath ſpokē, & will be obediēt, & parte of the bloud of the ſacrifices which they had killed, receyued in a veſſell, he ſprinckeled the people, ſayinge: this is the bloud of the leage, whiche the lorde hath made with you touchynge theſe wordes. And truely al theſe thinges ſignified & certaine figures & ſhadowes this moſte holy ſacrifice, wherin the lord Jeſus, deliuering his body willingly vnto death, & ſheding his bloud, went about to clenſe the ſinnes of ẏ whole world, reconciling vnto God all men freely, whoſoeuer would profeſſe this leage of the newe teſtamēt. And he would that this ſacrifice and this leage ſhould be commended & ſet furth to the myndes of his diſciples & certayne miſticall ſignes, before that it was offered: to thintēt that they ſhould vnderſtāde that his death was not a cōmon or an idle, but an effectuall ſacrifice to purge the ſinnes not onely of the Jewes, but alſo of all nations and of al times. But (becauſe the death of Chriſt ought not to be iterated) leaſt ſo greate a benefite might go out of mēnes myndes, or leaſt they might forget the holye leage once entred, and the authour of theyr health alſo, he did inſtitute and ordayne that with often communion of the holy breade, and of the cup, the memory ſhould be renewed among the profeſſoures of the euangelicall lawe. And he would that this ſigne ſhould be very holy among his ſouldiers, & to be had in ſuche veneration ẏ like as muche godly grace ſhould be geuē to them, which ſhould receyue the body & bloud of the lorde purely and worthyly: ſo they that ſhould take them vnworthily, ſhould be the cauſe of theyr greuous damnation. Therfore Jeſus toke the breade in to his handes, and when he hadde offered the ſacrifice of prayſe vnto God, he brake it and diſtributed it vnto his diſciples ſayinge: Take ye, eate ye, this is my body. Afterward he toke the cup into his handes, & whē he had geuen thankes vnto the father, he dranke before, and reched it vnto them, ſaying, Drinke all ye of this cuppe. For this is my bloud of the newe teſtamēt which ſhal be ſhed for many for the forgeuenes of ſinnes. As often as ye ſhall do this, do it in the remēbraunce of me. For as often as ye ſhall eate of this breade and drinke of this cuppe, ye ſhal declare the lordes death vntill he cum, not now as a ſauiour, but as a iudge. In ẏ meane tyme none other ſacrifice for ſinnes ſhal be loked after. For this one is ſufficient for to take away the ſinnes, of ẏ whole worlde. And I ſaye vnto you I will not eate of this breade hereafter, vntill I ſhall eate it with you cōplete and perfecte in my fathers kingdom, and I wil drinke no more of this fruite of the vine, vntil I ſhall drinke it nue with you in my fathers kingdom. And the moſt meke and gentill lorde did not exclude Judas the traytoure from this holy memorial, that by this ſo great clemency and gentilnes, he might be reformed. But becauſe he receyued the ſigne of the leage and teſtamēt, hauing treaſon in his harte, he departed more vncleane than he came.

Whan they were eating, Jeſus toke breade, and whan he had geuen thankes, brake it and gaue it to his diſciples, & ſayde: take, eat, this is my body.

I will not drinke hencefurth of this fruite of the vine tree, vntil that daye whan I ſhall drinke it new with you in my fathers kingdome.

And whan they had ſong the hymne, they went out vnto the mounte Oliuet: Than ſayde Jeſus to them: All ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night. For it is writte, I will ſmyte the shepeherde, and the shepe of the flocke ſhal be ſcattered. But after I am ryſen agayne, I will go before you into Galile. Peter aunſwered and ſayde vnto him: Though all men be offended becauſe of the, yet I wil not be offended. Jeſus ſayde vnto hym: Verely I ſaye vnto the, that in this night before the cocke crowe, thou ſhalt deny me thryſe. Peter ſayde vnto him: Yea, though I ſhould dye with the, I will not deny the. Likewiſe alſo ſayde all the diſciples.

And

And after that they had ſong an hymne in the prayſe of God, they roſe and went into the mounte of Oliues, which place he knewe to be wel knowen vnto the traytoure, leſt he ſhould ſeme to deſire to be hyd, as fearynge death: but purpoſely he withdrawed him ſelf in to a ſolitary place, that he might be taken without tumult of the people, which thing they wēt about and loked after. There he telleth his diſciples agayne how it ſhould cum to paſſe that by and by they ſhould be ſore troubled, ſeing the punichment of theyr lord: but leſt they ſhould be vtterly diſcouraged, he doeth cumfort them with a prophecy, and with the reſurrection that ſhould folowe furthwith, poynting alſo the tyme and the place nere at hāde, where they ſhould ſee hym agayne: all ye (ꝙ he) ſhall be troubled this night for my cauſe. For ſo God the father prophecyed by the mouth of his Prophete zacharie: I will ſtryke the ſhepherde and the ſhepe of the flocke ſhall be ſcatered abrode. But ye nede not to diſpayre. Death ſhall trouble your mindes, but by and by the reſurrection ſhall comfort you.

Than ſayed Jeſus to thē: All ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night.

But after I am riſen agai I wil go before you into Galilee.

Peter anſwered, and ſayd vnto him: Though all men be offended becauſe ỹ yet I wil not be offended.

For I wyll ryſe agayne the third daye, and after that I am ryſen, I wil go before you into Galilee. There I wil offer myſelfe to be ſene of you. Jeſus ſuffered al his diſciples to be thus troubled, to thintent he might teche them by the very dedes how great the weakenes of mannes nature was, and how foliſh a thyng it is for a man to truſt to hym ſelfe, that hauing experience of them ſelues, they might learne to helpe other mennes weakenes. Peter therfore not well knowyng him ſelfe, with a certayne manlye and worldly boldnes, denieth that it ſhall cum to paſſe, whiche Chriſte by the prophecy, ſayde ſhould cum to paſſe, and (whiche was a poynte of more rathnes) he preferreth hym ſelfe before all other: If all be troubled (ꝙ he) in thy cauſe, yet I wil not be troubled. To whome Jeſus anſwered: what ſayeſt thou Peter, wilt thou alone not be troubled? Nay this I tell the of a ſuertye, before that the cocke crowe twyſe this night, thou ſhalt denye me thryſe. Yet Peter not knowleagyng his weakenes for all this aunſwered ſtoutly: yea if I ſhould dye with the, I wil not denye the. And the other of the Apoſtles folowed ỹ rathenes of Peter, who would haue denied Chriſt alſo, if they had bene brought to a lyke ſtreyght as Peter was.

Than came Jeſus with them vnto a village, whiche is called Gethſemani, and ſayde vnto the diſciples: Sit ye here while I go and praye ponder, and he toke with hym Peter, and the two ſonnes of zebedee, and begā to were ſorowfull and heuy. Thā ſayd Jeſus vnto them: My ſoule is heuy, euen vnto the death. Tary ye here, & watche with me. And he went a litle farther, and fell downe on his face, and prayed, ſayenge: My father if it be poſſible, let this cup paſſe from me: Neuertheleſſe not as I will, but as thou wilt.

Than Jeſus knowyng that the tyme drewe nere, that the laſt ſtorme ſhould cum, he led a parte his eleauen diſciples (for Judas was gon out from ſupper) in to a village called Gethſemani. Here he commaunded eight of them to tarie, whiche yet were lothe to departe from theyr maſter, whom they loued hartely, but as yet with a worldly affection. Tary (ꝙ he) in this place, whiles I go into my accuſtomed place, and praye there. For he durſt not make them priuie of his conflicte, ſith they were yet but weake, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged, and taketh with him but onely thre, Peter, and the two ſonnes of zebedee, ỹ he might haue them to be witneſſes of his extreme manly weakenes, whom he toke with him in to the mounte to beholde his maiestie: and to teache with all, that as often as any greater storme of such troubles, than mannes strength can abide, is at hand, that we vtterly distrustyng our selues, commit vs wholy to the helpe of God. And the feare of death whan it cũmeth vpon a man, is more bitter than death it selfe. Therfore this horriblenes beganne than to cum vpõ Jesus, and he felt great sorow and heuines of mind. For he would not that his chosen frendes should be ignorant of the griefe of his minde, that they might playnely see that he was very man, troubled with affeccions both of body and minde: my soule (q he) is heuye euen vnto death. Tarry here and watche with me. For this tyme requireth not slepe, but waking and ernest prayer. Therfore Jesus going forwarde a litill, from his three disciples, hanging downe his head, bowed his face to the yerth, and so prostrate, prayed vnto his father, saying: My father if it be possible take awaye this cup of death from me, for I feele the affection of the body muche abhorring from death. Not withstanding let it be, not as I will, after the weakenes of the body, but as thou wilt to the health and saluacion of mankynde.

Than sayde Jesus vnto them: My soule is heuy euen vnto the death.

Tarry ye here and watche with me.

My father, if it be possible let this cuppe passe frõ me.

And he came vnto his disciples, and founde them slepyng, and sayd vnto Peter: could ye not watche with me one houre? Watche & praye, that ye enter not into temptacion. The spirite is ready, but the flesche is weake.

The texte.

When he had thus prayed, he returned vnto his disciples, and founde them slepyng, and sayeth vnto Peter: Thou that diddest crake a lytle before that thou wouldest dye with me, couldest thou not wake with me one houre? I wake and praye for you: Wake you with me, and praye to the father that ye fall not into temptacion and be ouercum. The victorye chaunceth not but vnto them that wake. Truely the spirite is redye, but the flesche is weake. Therfore we must wake, least the flesche ouercum the spirite, and the spirite muste be susteyned with the helpe of God.

Watche and praye, that ye enter not into temptacion.

The spirit is ready, but the flesh is weake

¶ Agayne he wente the seconde tyme and prayed, sayinge: My father if this cup can not passe away from me, but that I drincke it, thy will be done. And he came and founde them agayne slepyng. For theyr eyes were heuy. And he left them, and went agayne, and prayed the thyrde tyme, saying the same woordes. Than cummeth he to his disciples, and sayeth vnto them: Slepe now and take your rest. Behold the houre is at hande, and the sonne of man is betrayed in to the handes of sinners: Arise, let vs be going. Behold he is at hande, that doeth betraye me.

The texte.

So his disciples beyng rayled, Jesus went agayne and prayed againe, with as many woordes vnto his father: My father, if it be not possible that this cup shall passe from me, but that I shal drinke of it, thy wil be donne. Afterward he returned agayne vnto his disciples, and founde them againe slepyng. For theyr eyes were very heuy, by the reason of sorowe increasing theyr slepe. Therfore leauing them, he went alone the thyrde tyme to praye for his disciples, for the weakenes of ỳ flesh ouercame them. And he prayed likewise the thirde tyme, to teache vs to praye cõtinually and vehemently, as often as the storme of tentatiõ is at hãde. For than the angels be present & geue strength to the spirite. Afterward he returned vnto his disciples, and rebuked them for their sleping out of time, sith ỳ time required great watching. For now (saith he) the tẽpest is at hande which shall finde you vnready, and therfore vnmeete and ouermatched: now (q he) slepe and take your rest. Lo the houre is cum, that the innocent sonne of man shall be deliuered in to Agayne he went the seconde tyme & prayed, sayig: My father, if this cup can not passe awaye frõ me, but ỳ I drink it, thy will be done.

Slepe now & take your rest in to the handes of the wicked. Therfore ariſe, let vs go meete the hurte & diſpleaſure that cummeth agaynſt vs. Beholde he is at hande which betrayeth me.

The texte. While he yet ſpake: loe Judas one of the numbre of the twelue, came, and with him a greate multitude with ſwerdes and ſtaues, ſent from the chefe prieſtes and elders of the people. But he that betrayed hym, gaue them a token, ſayinge: Whom ſo euer I kiſſe, the ſame is he, laye hãdes on hym. And furthwith he cummeth to Jeſus, ſaying: Hayle maſter, and kyſſed hym. And Jeſus ſayde vnto hym: Frende, wherfore art thou cum? Than came they and layde handes on Jeſu.

Jeſus had not ended this communication, but lo, Judas Iſcariote one of the numbre of the twelue came, folowing Jeſus his captayne a littel before, and now become ouer a wicked cumpanye a more wicked captayne. For a greate cumpany of ſouldiers folowed him with ſwerdes & clubbes, whom the chiefe of the prieſtes, and the ſeniours of the people, had ſent for this intent, that Jeſus might be taken without tumulte of the people. For although they had purpoſed to differ this matter into another time, yet hauyng opportunitie of the traytoure, they chaunged theyr myndes. And therfore Judas chooſe both the night and the place, in the whiche Jeſus was wonte with a fewe to praye. Finally leſt they ſhould fayle of the perſon, the traytoure taught them by what token they ſhould knowe Jeſus: whom ſo euer (quod he) I ſhall kiſſe, he it is: laye handes vpon hym. Therfore Judas Iſcariote went before, and went vnto Jeſus as though he would ſalute him, ſaying: Hayle Rabbi, and therewith kiſſed him, whiche in tymes paſte was vſed in ſalutacions becauſe of honour and duty. Now Jeſus to geue a perfect example of mekenes in euery place, to his diſciples, did not repel the wicked diſciple from kiſſing, nor did rebuke him for his madnes, but with gentill ſpekyng touched his conſcience, ſaying: Frende, for what cauſe arte thou cum? For he cam with a kyſſe after ſuche ſorte as though he would haue tolde him ſum newes. At this token the multitude came running, and layed handes vpon Jeſus and helde him faſt. The diſciples mindes were ſore amaſed at this ruffling, whome Jeſus ſuffered to fall into this affection, becauſe he would vtterly plucke out of theyr mindes, al gredy deſyre to reuenge and to defende them ſelues.

But he that betrayed him gaue them a tokẽ, ſaying: whomſoeuer I kiſſe, the ſame is he: lay hand on hym.

And Jeſus ſayde to hym, frende wherfore art thou come?

The texte. And beholde, one of them which was with Jeſus ſtretched out his hãde, and drewe out his ſwerde, and ſtroke a ſeruaunt of the high prieſtes, and ſmote of his eare. Than ſayde Jeſus vnto hym: put vp thy ſwerde in his ſheath. For al they that take ỹ ſwerde, ſhall perithe with the ſwerde, Thinke ye not that I can praye to my father, & he ſhall geue me more then twelue legions of angels? How than ſhall the ſcriptures be fulfilled? For thus muſt it be.

And Peter, eyther becauſe he was more feruent euery where than the other, or elles becauſe he had made ſtoute promyſes of hym ſelfe before, leſt he ſhould ſeme not to do for his maſter, plucked out his ſwerde, and ſtrake Malcus the ſeruaunt of Cayphas, and cut of his right eare. Jeſus ſo ordering the ſtroke, that bothe it was a light wounde, & whatſoeuer the hurt was, he healed it, and reſtored the eare againe. But Peter erred by the reaſon of a certayne good loue towarde the Lord, and this errour he toke in maner of ỹ wordes of Jeſus not wel perceyued. For he cõmaunded them to ſell theyr coate and to bye ſwerdes: and whan they anſwered, there were two ſwerdes, he ſayed: it is ſufficient. But they thinckinge that he ſpake of a swerde of yron, where as Jesus mente a spirituall swerde, after supper they toke further their swerdes with them ready to defende their Lorde, yf the matter had so requyred, or yf he had commaunded. Therfore to plucke out this affection vtterlye oute of the myndes of all his disciples, he dyd chyde Peter sharpely, saying: put vp thy swerde into his place. They that do strike with the swerde, perysshe with the swerde, the recompence of vengeaunce turning backe vpon theyr owne heade. We haue no nede of this fence, which do get the victory better by suffering than by killing. Or elles thincke you that I could lacke helpe yf it pleased me to haue this defence? Coulde not I make suite vnto my father, and coulde not he sende to helpe me in the stede of twelue disciples, twelue legions of angles? But thus it is thought good to my father, thus it was spoke before of the Prophetes. And none of these thinges is done by chaunce or fortune.

For all they that take the swerde, shall perish with ỹ swerde:

For thus must it be.

¶ In that same houre, Jesus sayed to the multitude: ye be cũ out as it wer to a theefe with swerdes and clubbes for to take me. I sate daylye with you teachyng in the temple, and ye toke me not. But all this is done that the scriptures of the Prophetes might be fulfilled. Than all the disciples forsake him and fledde. And they toke Jesus & ledde him to Cayphas the highe priest, where the Scribes and elders were assembled. And Peter folowed him a farre of vnto the high priest courte, and went in, and sate wyth the seruauntes to see the ende.

The texte.

Than Jesus turnyng to the multytude, sayed: nowe weponed wyth swerdes and clubbes, ye cum furth to take me. But whan I sate daylye emong you teachyng in the temple, and healyng the sicke & diseased, ye layed no hãdes vpon me. Now in ỹ dead nyght, ye seke me out being, quyet & styll in a secrete place. But al these thinges be done not by your violence, but by the ordinaunce of goddes cõsell, whereof the scriptures of the Prophetes hath prophecyed long before. The disciples hearyng this, and seyng that there was no hope, for asmuche as Jesus offred him vnto death, they lefte their master and tanne awaye. But the ministers nothyng mitigate wyth remembraunce of the doctryne and benefit of Jesus, ledde him away lyke a prisoner, to the house of Cayphas the chiefe of ỹ priestes, whyther the scribes and seniours dyd resorte. But Peter alone (for the other disciples beyng afrayed, were fled euery man his waye) although his skirmishe came not well to passe, yet he coulde not leaue of vtterly the care of his master, whom he loued hartely: and yet agayne he durst not be present with him, notwithstandyng he folowed as it maye be, a farre of, and at length in the darke as vnknowen, he entred into the courte of Caiphas. Finally entring in, he sate amonge the ministers warming him at the coles, that whereas he couide not defende Jesus, yet at the lest he might see what should be the ende of the iudgement. For as yet Peter had sum hope in his mynde.

Than all the disciples forsoke hym and fledde.

Peter folowed him a farre of vnto the highe priestes court, & went in, and sat wt the seruãtes to see ỹ ende.

¶ The chiefe priestes and elders, and all the counsell, sought false witnesse agaynst Jesus, for to putte him to deathe, but found none: yea whan many false witnesses came, yet they founde none. At last came two false witnesses, and sayed: He sayed, I am able to destroye the temple of god, and buylde it agayne in three dayes. And the chiefe priestes arose and sayed vnto hym. Answerest thou nothyng? why do these beare witnes against the? But Jesus helde his peace. And the chiefe priestes answered and sayed vnto hym: I charge the by the liuyng God, that thou tell vs whether thou be Christ the sonne of god. Jesus sayeth vnto hym. Thou hast sayd: Neuertheless I say vnto you, hereafter ye shal see the sõne of man sitting on the right hand of power, & cũmyng in the cloudes of ỹ skye.

Further the chiefe priestes and the whole counsel, to make sum apperaunce of a lawfull and iust iudgement, went about to subborne and set furth false witnesses agaynst Jesus, whose innocency was so great, that it was very

The chiefe priestes & the elders, and al the counsell, sought false witnesse against Jesus, for to put him to death, but founde none. At laste came two false witnesses, & sayd. He sayed: I am able to destroye the temple of god and builde it agayne in.iii. dayes.

harde so to lye of hym, that the lye might haue any coloure of truth. And after that many false witnesses came furth, but of suche sorte ẏ theyr testimonies & sayinges wer so ill framed together, that they confoũded them selfes, in so muche that they wer not thought meete neyther of those iudges, neyther of that cumpany. At length cũmeth furth two false witnesses, whiche sayed: He sayed, I can destroy the temple of god, and after thre dayes make it vp. They toke occasion of this lye by the wordes of Christe, who sayed: loose this temple, and in three dayes I wyll rayse it vp, meanyng thereby that he should be slayne of theim, but within three dayes he should lyue agayn. The witnesses to make the thing more odious, dyd depraue & mysse take those wordes whiche they vnderstode not. For he sayed not, I can distroye, but loose ye: and he sayed not I wil buylde agayne, but I wil rayse vp, applying it to his body whiche should be slayne, & lyue agayne. Therfore as this testimony because it semed to be of sum weyght, and no nother was found more meete & conuenient, the chiefe of the priestes roose vp, and coũterfeyting the person of a iust iudge, as though he would geue Jesus libertie to defend himself, sayed: Doest thou make no answere to these testimonies whiche be brought agaynste the? But Jesus held his peace, knowing ẏ whatsoeuer he sayd, should be reproued & mistaken. Than ẏ chiefe of ẏ priestes desiring to wrest out sumwhat, whereby Jesus might be condẽned (for nowe his madnes was suche ẏ all tarryng semed to longe) sayeth vnto him: I coniure the by the liuyng god, tell vs whether ẏ be Christe the sonne of god. This was a crafty question of the wicked bisshoppe. If he had denied that he was the sonne of God he woulde haue cryed oute, why than takest thou vpon the, the thing that thou art not? If he had affirmed it, he would haue falsely accused him for blasphemy. If he had holde hys peace beyng required and adiured, he should seme to dispyse god, & the authorytie of the highe priest. And what was he that dyd adiure him? A wicked bisshop, whiche had bought of Herode for money the annuall honour, & he which dyd assault the sonne of god, adiured hym by god. yet Jesus as it were shewyng a reuerence to the honour ẏ he dyd beare, beyng demaunded whether he was Christ the sonne of god, answered: Thou hast spoken, so confessyng hymselfe to be that he was, that yet he auoyded the faulte of arrogancy. And he added a thing whiche ought to haue reuoked the wicked bisshop from his wickednes purposed, yet (ẏ he) this I saye vnto you, hereafter ye shall see the sonne of man sitting on the ryght hande of the power of God, and cummyng with maiestie in the cloudes of heauen. He gaue to vnderstand, that he beyng than lowe and condemned of the wicked, shuld once cum with the power of god to be iudge ouer all the world.

And the chiefe priestes arose and sayed vnto hym: Answerest thou nothing?

But Jesus held his peace.

I charge the by the lyuing god, that ẏ tell vs, whether ẏ be Christe the sonne of god.

Jesus sayeth vnto hi thou hast sayed:

Neuerthelesse, I saye vnto you: ye shall see the sonne of man sittyng on ẏ ryght hand of power, & commynge in the cloudes of ẏ skye.

The texte.

Than the high priest rent his clothes, saying: He hath spoken blasphemy, what nede ye of any moo witnesses? Lo, nowe ye haue heard his blasphemye, what thinke ye? They answered and sayed: He is worthy to dye. Than dyd they spit in his face, and buffered him with theyr fystes. And other smote him on the face with the palme of their handes saying: Tell vs Christ, who is he that smote the?

The chiefe priest beyng the more prouoked wyth this sayinge, to intent that thorough the counterfeyted zeale of religiõ he might make ẏ crime of Christe the more sore, he rent his garmentes, and sayed: he speketh blasphemously. He doth vsurpe and take vpon him diuyne honoures, where as he is but man. What nedeth there any more witnesses? Beholde nowe ye haue heard manifest blasphemy. What thincke ye? They answered: he hath deserued death. Than they began to handle him cruelly with mockes and skoznes, as though he had ben lawfully condemned, which also Jesus suffered mooste mekely, to geue vnto his a perfect example of pacięce. They dyd spette in his face, and couering hys face, they gaue him buffettes and blowes. Agayne, sum strake hym on the face with their handes, saying: Prophecy and tell vs Christ, who is it that stryketh the with these skoznes and rebukes they cast him in the teeth, because he woulde be taken for Messias, and because he was honoured of the people, by the name of a prophet.

Lo, nowe ye haue heard hys blasphemye, what thincke ye? They answered, and sayd: He is worthy to dye.

¶ Peter sate without in the courte, and a damsell came vnto him, saying: Thou also wast with Jesus of Galile, but he denied it before them al, saying: I wot not what thou sayest. Whan he was gone into the porche, another wenche sawe him, and sayed vnto them that were there. This felowe also was wt Jesus of Nazareth. And he denied it agayne wt an othe, saying: I dyd not knowe the man. A while after came they ꝑ stode by, & sayed vnto Peter: Surely thou art one of them, for thy speche doth bewraye the. Than he beganne to curse and sweare, that he knewe not the manne, and immediately the cocke crewe. And Peter remembred of the saying of Jesus, whyche he spake vnto him, before the cocke crowe, thou shalte deny me thryse, and he went out, and wept bitterly.

The texte.

In the meane season Peter sate without in the courte, beholding a far of the heuye syght, and lokyng for the ende of the matter, for he durst not cum nere, lest he should be knowen of the ministers. And a certayne wenche came vnto him, whiche partely knewe him, and sayed: Thou also wast one of the folowers of this Galilean. Here Peter being amased at the wenches worde, and forgettyng that stoute worde that he spake to Christ: and yf I should dye with the, I will not deny the: denied his lorde before thē all, sayinge: I cannot tell what thou sayest. And furthwith the cocke did crowe. And as he prepared to go oute, euen in the doze another wenche spied hym, whiche vttering him to the ministers standing by, sayeth: This man also was with Jesus of Nazareth. And agayne he denied it, swering that he knew not the manne. And a litle after certayne of them that stoode by, knowing Peter, sayed: Truely thou art one of this numbze. For not onely thy face, but also thy speche doth vtter the to be a Galilean. Than Peter being moze afrayed, began not only to abiure and forsake Jesus, but also so to execrate & banne himselfe, yf euer he knewe the man. And furthwith the cocke crowed agayne. After these, Jesus dyd behold him, & speaking (as it were) vnto him, wt hys yes monished him. Than at length Peter cuming to him selfe, remembzed that Jesus tolde him before, when he craked of his boldnes and valiantnes: before the cocke crowe twise, thou shalte denye me thryse. But because he sinned thozough the weakenes of man, beyng amased with feare, & not of purposed malice, he deserued mercy. Christ suffred this in his chosen apostle, that no man, offende he neuer so soze, shoulde dispaire of pardon so that he repent, and wash the spot of his minde with teares. For Peter whiche was as it were beside him selfe, at the loke of Jesus, by and by came to him selfe agayne and repented, and goyng furthe wepte bitterly.

¶ The. xxvii. Chapiter.

¶ Whan the morning was cum, all the chiefe priestes, and elders of the people helde a counsell against Jesus to put him to death. And brought him bounde, and deliuerd him to Pontius Pilate the debitie.

The texte.

THerfore that night was throughly watched of the heades of religion, with these wicked and cruel deedes. And when day dzewe nere, agayne the chiefe priestes and the senioures of the people went to counsell against Jesus, to put him to death. Therfore they deliuered him bounde vnto Pontius Pilate president, to take punishemente of the condemned man. Here Judas that betrayed him, seyng that he was nowe condempned, and that they wente to extremities, moued wyth repentaunce, brought agayne the thirty peyces of siluer to the heades of the priestes and the senioures of the people, saying: I haue sinned because I haue betrayed the innocent bloud. Truely this mānes confession should haue moued the princes myndes. He confesseth that it was done by the infection of auarice, and he confesseth that he hath betrayed an innocent. But they vtterly raging, and thirstyng after nothyng elles but innocente bloud, answered: what is that to vs, whether thou hast betrayed an yll doer or an innocent: Loke thou to that.

The texte. ¶ Than Judas whiche had betrayed him, seyng that he was condemned, repented himself, & brought agayn the thirty plates of siluer to the chiefe priestes & elders saying: I haue sinned, betraying ỹ innocent blud, but they sayd: what is that to vs: See thou to that, and he cast downe the siluer plates in the temple, and departed and honge him self.

Judas now repenting of his gayne, desyred to breake of his bargayne, but theyr cruelty couide by no meanes be mitigated. Judas therfore casting the pieces of siluer at theyr feete, departed awaye: heapyng and increasing his wicked dede with a more wicked dede. He knowleged the greatenes of hys sinne, but he knowleged not the greatenes of goddes mercy. Peter wepte bitterly, and obtayned mercye. Judas wepte also, but wyth a desperat mynde, rather than a conuerted mynd, and therfore he wēt aside, and hanged himself, and burst in the middes, and his bowelles fell out.

The texte. ¶ And the chiefe priestes toke the pieces of siluer, and sayd: It is not lawfull to put them into corbon, because it is the pryce of bloude. And they toke counsell, & boughte with thē a potters feilde to burye straungers in. Wherfore the feilde is called the feilde of bloude vnto this daye. Than was fulfylled that whyche was spoken by the Prophete Hieremye, saying: They toke thirtye siluer pieces the pryce of him that was valued, whome they bought of the chyldren of Israell, and gaue theym for the potters feilde as the lorde appoynted me.

After this the heades of the priestes went to counsell agayne, and that theyr crueltye myght be the better knowen to all menne, they dyd nothyng without a common counsel. They consulte to what vse the thirtye pieces of siluer should go, whiche Judas had cast at theyr feete. And beyng men of auke warde religion, hauing no religiō nor feare in killing of an innocente, who had done somuche for thē: It is not lawful (say they) to put this money into Corbon, that is emong the gyftes of the temple, whiche they woulde haue estemed and regarded religiously. For it is the pryce of bloud. But the holines of the temple must not be polluted wyth bloude. And in the meane season they disclose theyr vngracious conscience, confessyng hym to be innocent, whose betrayment they had bought. Therfore because that they al should be partakers of the sinne, they counselled together, and with that moneye they bought a ground of a certayne potter for godlye vses, ỹ straungers might be buryed there, as though they woulde haue recompenced the sinfull deade that they had in hande, with this good deede. And yet by thys meanes they prouyded verye ill for theyr good name. For they couide not by anye other meanes, more blase abrode theyr wickednes. For the thing is cum to suche a common saying, that at this daye that ground is called of the Syryans, Acheldema, that is to saye the grounde of bloude. Neyther was this thing done by chaunce, for Hieremye prophecied that it shoulde cum to passe: and they toke thirty pieces of siluer the pryce of hym that was pryced, whom they bought of the childzen of Israell, and they gaue theym for the grounde of a potter, as the lorde appointed me.

¶ Jesus stode before the debitie, and the debitye asked him, saying: Arte thou the king of Jewes? Jesus sayeth vnto him. Thou sayest. And when he was accused of the chiefe priestes and elders, he answered nothyng. Than sayed Pilate vnto hym: hearest thou not howe many witnesses they laye agaynst the? And he answered him to neuer a worde, insomuche that the debitie maruayled greatly.

Therfore whan Jesus stode before the president as giltye, they accused him bulily of many thinges, spekyng nothyng in the meane season of blasphemy, of the religion, of the temple defiled & broken, and of the cummyng of the sonne of man, with the whiche thinges they knewe that Pilate passyng litill of suche superstition, woulde be litell moued: They ley in other fayned fautes, which myght stirre ỹ presidentes mynde agaynst Jes⁹, saying: we haue found this man goyng aboute to subuerte our nacion, & forbyddyng trybutes to be geuen vnto Ceasar, and saying: that he is Chryste the king. Pilate hearyng mention of the king, because this semed to touche Ceasar, demaunded of Jesus: Arte thou the king of Jewes? Jesus least he should seme proude, yf he should make no answere, sayeth: Thou sayest: not vtterly denying that he was king, but yet addyng that hys kyngdome is spirituall not worldlye, that it pertayneth nothyng to Ceasar or Herode. Jesus stode before the debitie, and the debitye asked him, saying: Arte thou the kig of Jewes?

Agayne whan his accusers called vpon the mater, Pylate delyryng to get out of hym, whereby he myght be delyuered: Hearest thou not (q he) howe sore faultes they laye agaynst the? But vnto these Jesus answered vtterly nothyng, insomuche as the presidente maruayled greatly, that an innocent man in daunger of death, dyd kepe silence with so great meknes. Pilate perceyuing by the countenaunce and behauioure of Jesus, that he was far from suspicion of desyryng of the kyngdome, sayeth vnto the heades of the priestes and theyr folowers: I fynde no deadly offence in this man. But they were the more hote and vehement, saying: he is a seditiouse manne, he hath styrred the people with his doctryne, walkyng ouer all Jewry, beginnyng from Galile vnto this place. Pilate perceyuyng that Jesus was innocent, but that the priestes and the Scribes wēt about that theyr purpose of enuye and malice, and therfore sekyng occasion to deliuer Jesus, or at the least to sende him from the courte: whan he heard the name of Galile, he asked hym what countrey manne he was, and when he knewe that he came out of the coastes of Galile, where Herode had rule and imperye, he sente him agayne vnto Herode, who than as it happened, was at Hierusalem. Truely Herode seyng Jesus, was very glad. For of long tyme he desired to see Jesus, because the fame went that he dyd wonderfull thynges. Therfore he hoped wel, that he would worke sum myracle before hym also. And whan Herode asked him questions of many thynges, Jesus answered him nothyng, who came not for this purpose to delyght the curyositye of prynces, but to see & prouyde for the helth of men. And where as he was accused before hym for many causes, and answered nothyng, Herode contemned him with his garde: and putting vpon hym a whyte garmente in skorne, sent him agayne to Pilate. And by this occasion Pilate and Herode were made frendes, where as before they were at strife. Therfore Pilate calling together the heades of the priestes, the maiestrates, and the people, protested, that he had founde none offences in Jesus whiche they obiected agaynſt hym: and that Herode alſo had ſent hym away as innocent, which he woulde not haue done, yf he had iudged hym in daunger of a capitall crime. And to pacifie the enuye of the Jewes: I wyl reſourme hym (qͦ he) and let hym go.

And he answered him to neuer a worde: insomuche, that the debitie maruayled greatly.

The terte. ¶ At that feaſte, the deditie was wont to deliuer vnto the people a priſoner, whome they would deſyre. He had than a notable pryſoner, called Barrabas. Therfore whā they were gathered together, Pylate ſayed: Whether wyl ye that I geue looſe vnto you Barrabas or Jeſus, whiche is called Chriſt? For he knewe that for enuye, they had delyuered hym.

And whan he coulde nothyng preuayle by theſe wordes, he ſeketh another occaſion to deliuer Jeſus. There was a cuſtome emong the Jewes that vpon the holy daye, for religions ſake, the preſident ſhould ſet at libertie ſum one of them whiche were kept in holde. He had faſt in holde at that tyme a certayne notable & a famouſe theſe, named Barrabas, which name he knewe was hated of the people. Therfore callyng the Jewes vnto hym, he aſked them whether they would haue geuen them, and pardoned, Barrabas or Jeſus: hopyng that in comparſon of ſo famouſe and ſo ſtrong and violent a theſe, they would rather deliuer Jeſus.

The terte. ¶ Whan he was ſet doune to geue iudgement, his wyfe ſent vnto hym, ſayinge: Haue thou nothyng to do with that iuſt man. For I haue ſuffered manye thynges thys daye in my ſlepe, becauſe of him. And the chiefe prieſtes and elders perſuaded the people, that they ſhoulde aſke Barrabas, and deſtroye Jeſus. The preſident ſayed, and anſwered vnto them: whiche of the two will ye ꝑ I let looſe vnto you? They ſayed Barrabas. Pilate ſayed vnto them: what ſhall I do than with Jeſus which is called Chriſt? They all ſayed vnto hym: Let him be crucyfyed. The preſident ſayed, what cuyl hath he done? But they cryed the more, ſayinge: Let hym be crucifyed.

But the preſident ſittyng agayne in iudgemente, his wyfe ſendeth vnto hym one that ſhould ſaye to hym in her name, that he ſhould not contaminate himſelfe with the bloud of the innocent, ſaying that ſhe was vexed that nyght with horrible viſions for Jeſus ſake. And this chaunced not without cauſe, but by the ordinaunce of god, that there ſhould yet be ſum of whome Jeſus ſhould haue teſtimony of his innocencye. For that was very expedient for all men to knowe, that his death was freelye beſtowed to redeme vs. And where as the people were in doubte, whether of bothe they might deſyre to be geuen vnto thē, it came to paſſe by the coūſell of the prieſtes and the ſenioures, that they aſked Barrabas, that Jeſus in his place myght be killed. Suche is the iudgement, and this is the kyndenes of the people, this is the counterfeyted religion of the prieſtes, and the elders. It was a matter of religion to them to enter into the courte of Pilate ꝙ they myght eate theyr paſcall Lambe beynge pure and cleane, and it was no matter of religion with ſuche ragyng madnes to put him to death, whiche was innocent and throughly tryed with ſo many vertues and benefites towarde thē. Pilate therfore propoſed vnto thē againe whether they woulde haue Barrabas or Jeſus ſet at libertye. They cryed vnto hym: Barrabas. Pilate agayne ſayd: Thā what ſhal I do vō Jeſus, which is called Chriſt? truſtyng that they woulde be content with ſum more gentyll puniſhement. But they cryed with a greate conſent of voyces, let hym be crucifyed. This kynde of puniſhment was both cruel and very ſlaunderouſe, and ſhameful. Agayne (ꝙ Pilate) ſhal I crucifye an innocent? what hath he deſerued? I fynde nothyng in him worthy death: Therfore I will chaſtyſe hym, & let him goo. With theſe wordes the madnes of the people was more ſtirred, crying oute: vp with him, vp with him, crucifye the man.

Whan

¶ Whan Pilate sawe that he coulde preuayle nothyng, but that more bulynes was made, he toke water and washed his handes before the people, saying: I am innocente of the blonde of this iust person, see you to it. And all the people answered and sayed: His blond be vpon vs, and our children. Than let he Barrabas loose vnto theym, and scourged Jesus and deliuered hym to be crucifyed. The texte.

Pilate perceyuyng that prouyng all wayes and meanes he preuayled nothyng, but that the tumulte of the people was styrred vp more, he assoyled Jesus before that he condemned hym. For in the presence of the people he toke water and washed his handes, saying: I am innocente from the blond of this iust manne, ye be the authors of his death, and not I, the vengeaunce of the innocent blond shall lyght vpon your heade. yet the vnhappy Jewes were not feared with this saying, but the whole people cryed out all together. Let his blond lyght vpon vs, and vpon our chyldren. They wished destruccion to theym and to theyr successoures. But Christe more gentyll towarde theim, than they were to them selues, hath repelled none from pardon and forgeuenes so that they do repente. For many afterwardes dyd worshyp the Crosse of Christ, which thā cryed in the multitude vp vnto him, vp with him, crucify him. Therfore Pilate ouercum with their stiffe madnes, gaue vnto thē Barrabas ꝑ authour of sedicion, & a murderer, & condēpned by al mēnes iudgementes, yea, before iudgemēt. But after the maner of Rome, whan Jesꝰ was scourged, he deliuered him to be crucified.

¶ Than the souldiers of the president toke Jesus in the common hall, and gathered to him al the company. And they strypped him, & put on hym a purple robe, & platted a crowne of thornes, and put it on his head, & a rede in his right hand, & bowed the knee before him, & mocked him, saying: All hayle the kyng of Jewes. And whā they had spyt on him, they toke the rede, & smote him on ꝑ head. And after they had mocked him, they toke of agayne the robe, & put on him his owne garmēres, and toke him awaye to crucify him. The texte.

Than the souldiers of the president, after that they had receyued Jesus in the courte, gathered the whole garde aboute hym, cruelly to take theyr pleasure by mocking of the innocent, partely folowyng theyr owne naughty disposicion, partelye prouoked by the Jewes. And because they hearde, that he made him selfe kyng of the Jewes, they in maner hittyng him in the teethe, because beyng suche an abiecte he would proudely clyme vp to a kyngdome: they spoyled him of his owne garmentes, & put vpō him a purpull garment, that is to saye: a kingly roobe. After that in the stede of a diademe they sette a crowne vpon his heade made of thornes. In the stede of a scepter they gaue him a rede in his ryght hande. And nowe as salutyng theyr newe kyng, they knele downe before hym and mocke hym, sayinge: Hayle kyng of Jewes. For beyng content with the dispytes, they spyt vpon him, and strike his heade crowned with thornes with the reede, that they gaue him in stede of a mace. And whan they omitted no maner of dispite, he suffered all thynges with greate mekenes, to showe vnto his, a perfecte exaumple of pacience. Therfore after that the souldiers had satisfyed the mindes and the iyes of the cumpany with all kyndes of mockes & skornes, they plucke of his robe agayne, and put on his owne apparell, that he myght be the better knowen of all men.

¶ And as they came out, they founde a man of Cyren named Simon, him they compelled to beare his Crosse. And they came to the place, whyche is called Golgotha, that is to saye, a place of dead meanes sculles: and gaue him viniger to drynke, mengled with gall. And whan he had tasted therof, he would not drincke.

Than they bryng furth Jesus oute of the courte, bearing his crosse. And as they went, they founde one Symon a Cyrenian, whome they forced to beare the crosse of Jesus, and they came into the place where he shoulde be crucifyed, whiche of the Syreans is called Golgotha, that is, the place of Caluery, because it was horrible with bones and sculles of them that were put to death. Here that no part of his body should be free frō tormenting, or ỹ no mocking or scorning shuld be let passe, they offred him a cup to drincke tẽpered with vineger & gall, that it might be fulfylled whiche is wrytten in the prophecye: They gaue me gall to eate, and in my thirste they gaue me viniger to drincke. And whan Jesus had tasted, he would not drynke.

The texte. ¶ Whan they had crucyfied him, they parted his garmentes, and cast lottes, that it might be fulfylled whiche was spoken by the Prophet: They deuided my garmentes emong them, & vpon my vesture dyd they cast lottes. And they sate & watched him there, & set vp ouer his head the cause of his death written. This is Jesus the king of ỹ Jewes. Than were crucifyed w̄ him two theues, one on the ryght hand, and another on the left.

But after that they had crucyfyed him, they deuided emong thē the garmentes of Jesus. As for his cote whiche was so wouen that it could not be sipped, they cast lottes: that the saying of the Prophete might be fulfylled. They deuyded my garmentes emong them, and vpon my cote they cast lottes. And sittyng by the crosse they kept hym, that no man should take hym away. Also a tytle in mockage was set vpon the crosse: This is Jesus the kyng of Jewes. The whiche notwithstandyng was more honorable than the Jewes coulde suffer. For they were in hand with Pilate that this tytle myght be corrected, and it should not be put, kyng of Jewes, but he made hymselfe kyng of Jewes. And in this thyng onely they suffered Pilate to haue the higher hand. Also this was procured of the Jewes, that two theues should be crucifyed with him, so that Jesus beyng in ỹ middest, should haue one on the right hande, and another on the left hande: that he myght be taken of al men, both bayne himselfe, and a deceyuer, and lyke vnto them with whome he was matched.

The texte. ¶ They that passed by, reuyled him, waggyng their heades, and saying: Thou that destroyedst the temple of God, and buylded it in thre dayes, saue thy selfe. If thou art the sonne of god, cum downe from the crosse. Lykewyse also the hyghe priestes and the Scribes, and elders mocked hym, sayinge: He saued other, hymselfe he cannot saue. If he be the kyng of Israell, lette hym cum downe now from the crosse, and we wyll beleue hym. He trusted in god, let hym delyuer hym nowe, yf he wyll haue hym. For he sayed I am the sonne of God. The theues also whiche were crucyfyed with hym, caste the same in his teeth.

The cruelty of the Jewes was not yet saciat and fylled w̄ these so great mischeues. They skorne and reuyle him beyng crucyfyed, and passyng by, they rayled on him, and shakyng their heades, they mocked him saying: fye on the, art thou he that hurlest downe the temple of God, and in thre dayes makest it vp agayne. Thou diddest promise health to others, now saue thy selfe. Thou diddest boste the to be the sonne of god, nowe than cum downe from the crosse. Lykewyse also the heades of the priestes, with the Scribes and the sentoures of the people, mocked him and reuiled him: he gaue helth vnto others, nowe he cannot preserue himselfe. If he be the kyng of Israell, as he would appere, let him declare nowe what he can do, let him cum downe from the crosse, and we wyll beleue hym. He trusted in god, whome he craked to be his father, yf he loue hym, let hym nowe delyuer hym. And that of euery syde the moost innocent Jesus might be arayed with reuylinges, the theues also felowes with him in punishmente, in lyke maner rebuked hym.

ked him. The which all Jesus suffered with styffe and strong patience, to bryng to passe and offre for all men that healthfull sacrifice. He kepte styll the diuine power, & setforth the whole nature humain, to al maner of paines & tormentes. And he did not requite or reuēge so cruel reuilyng bestowed vpō him, as he was dying, beyng more bitter then the crosse it self, insomuche ỹ he prayed vnto his father for the souldiers & the Jewes that skorned him, & one of the theues repentyng hymself, he receiued hym into his paradise.

The texte. Frō ỹ. vi. houre was there darknes ouer al ỹ lād, vntil ỹ. ix. houre. And about ỹ. ix. houre Jesꝰ cried w̄ a loud voice, saying: Hely, Hely, lamazabathani, ỹ is to say: my god, my god, why hast ỹ forsakē me? Sū of thē ỹ stode there whē they hard ỹ, said: This mā calleth for Helias. And furthw̄ one of thē ran, & toke a spōge, & whan he had filled it full of vineger, he put it on a rede, & gaue it him to drinke. But other sayd: let be, let vs se whether Helias wil cō, & deliuer him. Jesꝰ, when he had cried again w̄ a loude voyce, yelded vp ỹ goost.

The very Sunne felte the punishement of the innocent, and could not abyde to beholde so wicked a dede. He couered his face with a blacke cloud, & all that countrey was couered with darkenes, from sixe of the clocke vntill nine. And yet in the meane season, the darkenesse of the Jewes hartes could not be shaken of. Further aboute nine of the clocke, Jesꝰ cryed with a great voyce saying: this sentence out of the psalme. Hely Hely lamazabathani, my god, my god, why hast ỹ forsaken me? And certayn ỹ stode by, & hering farre of, Heli, & supposig ỹ he had called to Hely for helpe, say: This felowe calleth for Hely. Let vs see whether he will helpe hym. Thā Jesꝰ to shewe ỹ it was a true death whiche he suffered for al men, cryed: I am a thirst. For thirste is wont to folowe vpon woundes & sheadyng of bloud, whiche oftentymes is a punishement more sore and painfull than death. And one runnyng to him, put vnto his mouth as he hanged, a sponge full of vyneger, put vpon ỹ top of the reede. Jesus thirsted sore for the helth of mē, but ỹ Jewes offred him nothyng but vineger & gall. Therfore he did forbeare from it when he had talked, saying: It is cōsumate & finished, signifiyng that nothing was omitted whiche did pertaine to the maner of the sacrifice. And anon to declare ỹ he left his life of his owne accorde, after ỹ he had cōmended his spirite vnto the father, he cryed with a loude voyce, and bowyng downe his head, dyed.

The texte. ¶ And behold ỹ vayle of the tēple dyd rent in two partes, frō the top to the bottom, & the yerth quaked, the stones dyd rent, & graues dyd open, & many bodyes of sainctes whyche slept, arose, & went out of ỹ graues after his resurrecciō, & came into the holy cirye, & appered to many. Whan ỹ Centuriō, & they ỹ wer w̄ him watching Jesꝰ, saw ỹ yerthquake, & those thinges, which happened, they feared gretly, saying: Truly this was ỹ sōne of god.

And furthwal thinges did testifie the effectual death of ỹ lord Jesus. For ỹ vayle of ỹ tēple whiche deuided the holy places frō the other part of ỹ tēple, of his own accord, was cut in two partes, declarig ỹ the shadowes of Moses lawe hereafter should vanishe away at ỹ bright light of the gospel. Furthermore the earth did quake, & the stones brake asūdre, reprouing ỹ Jewes for their inuincible hardnes of hart. The graues did opē, & many bodyes of holy men whiche wer dead, did reuiue & liue again, & goyng out of ỹ graues after ỹ resurrecciō of Christ, came into ỹ holy citie of Jerusalē, and appered vnto many, beyng the preachers and folowers of the resurreccion of Jesus. Furthermore the Captayne and his seruauntes whiche were there to kepe Jesus, perceiuyng the earthquake, the darkenes, the brekyng of the stones & other wōders, wer greatly afeard, saying: Truely this was ỹ sōne of god.

The texte. ¶ And many women were there, beholdyng a farre of, whiche folowed Jeſus from Galile, miniſtryng vnto hym, among whiche was Marie Magdalene, and Marie the mother of James and Joſes, and the mother of the children of Zebedee. When the euen was cum, there came a ryche man of Aramathia named Joſeph, whiche alſo was Jeſus diſciple. He went vnto Pilate, and begged the holy body of Jeſus. Than Pilate cõmaunded the body to be deliuered. And whan Joſeph had taken the bodye, he wrapped it in a cleane cloth, and put it in his newe tombe whiche he had hewen out in the rocke, and rolled a great ſtone to the doze of the Sepulchze, and departed. And there was Marie Magdalene, and the other Marie ſittyng ouer againſt the Sepulchze.

There wer alſo many women lokyng a farre of, vpon the thynges that wer dooen, whiche had folowed Jeſus from Galilee, miniſtryng vnto hym neceſſaries, among whom there was Marie Magdalene, and Marie ẏ mother of Jacob and Joſeph, and alſo the mother of the ſonnes of Zebedee, and diuers other with them. And when the nyght dzewe nere, a certain riche capitain of Aramathia called Joſeph, who alſo was the diſciple of Jeſ, wẽte vnto the pzeſident, aſkyng of hym the body of Jeſus. Pilate marueilyng yᵗ that he wer dead a man of luſty age, and not hauyng his legges bzoken, aſ ſone as he knew certainly of the captain that he was dead, he commaunded the dead body to be geuen vnto hym. He receiued it, and wzapped it in a cleane ſhete, & layed it in a newe graue, the whiche he had grauen in an hole ſtone. And rollyng a great ſtone to the doze of the graue, he departed away: And this was dooen by the pzouidence of God, that they ſhould vſe no cruelitie vpon the dead karcas, oz that no man ſhoulde digge vp the graue and ſteale hym away. And when the other wer departed, Mari Magdalene and another woman continued there ſittyng ouer againſt the ſepulchze, & marking the place where they layed the body, that at cõuenient time they might do the duetie of annointyng to it, and the lozd had ſtirred vp their great dyligence to this intent ẏ the beleke of his reſurrection might be moze certain.

The texte. ¶ The nexte daye that followeth the Paraſceue, the high prieſtes and Phariſeis came togither vnto Pilate, ſaying: Sir we remember that this deceiuer ſayde whyle he was yet aliue, after thze dayes I will ryſe agayne: commaund therfoze that the ſepulchze be made ſure vntyll the thyzde day, leaſt his diſciples cum and ſteale hym away, and ſaye vnto the people: he is ryſen from the dead. And the laſt errour ſhalbe woꝛſe than the firſt. Pilate ſayde vnto them: ye haue a watche, goe your way, make it as ſure as ye can. And they wẽt and made the ſepulchze ſure with watchemen, and ſealed the ſtone.

But the day after the Paraſceue, whiche is the day of pzeparacion, agayne the heades of the pzieſtes and the phariſeis cum vnto Pilate, confirmyng ẏ truthe of the reſurreccion, whyles they goe about to let it, and they ſay vnto the pzeſident: Sir we remẽber that that deceiuer beyng yet aliue, ſaide that he would ryſe again after thze dayes. Therfoze commaund the ſepulchze to be kepte vnto the third day, leſt his diſciples cum, and ſteale away his body and perſwade the people that he is ryſen ag..in. Which if it cum to paſſe, we ſhall pzeuayle nothyng, but the latter errour ſhall be wurſe than the fyrſte. Pilate ſayeth vnto them: ye haue a watche, goe and kepe as ye knowe. But they whyles they goe aboute to ſtoppe hym that woulde ryſe agayne, they encreaſe the miracle, and the fayth of the reſurreccion. They ſet kepers and made ſure the ſepulchze, they ſealed ẏ ſtone alſo whiche dyd ſhut the mouthe of the Sepulchze, leaſt there myght be any deceyte in ẏ kepers alſo.

¶ And vpon the euen of the Sabbothes whiche springeth in the firste day of ꝑ Sabothes Marie Magdalene and the other Marie came for to see the Sepulchre. And beholde there was a great yearthquake. For the Aungell of the Lorde came downe from heauen, and came and rolled downe the stone from the doore, and sate vpon it. And his countenaunce was lyke vnto the lyghtenyng, and his garment white as snowe. And for feare of hym, ꝑ kepers wer astonyed, and wer made as deade men. The texte.

AND when the euen of the firste Sabboth daye was cum, after the end of the whiche, was the morning of the daye folowynge, whiche was the fyrste daye of the weke nexte insuyng, Mari Magdalene, and the other Mari, theyr swete spices prepared ouer night, went again in the morynyng to the Sepulchre, to see what was doen, and to enbaulme the body of Jesv. And there was a great yearthquake. And whan the women deuised emong themselfes, how they might remoue the stoone from the doore of the graue (for it was to great to be remoued by ꝑ strēgth of women) beheld the angel of ꝑ lord came doune from heauē, & remoued the stone frō ꝑ doze of ꝑ graue, & than sate vpō it. And the countenaunce of the aungell was lyke vnto the lightenyng, and his garmētes shinyng as whyte as snowe. The kepers of the Sepulchre lokyng vpō hym, were afrayed, and so amased that they lay astonyed lyke deade men.

¶ And the aungell made aunswer vnto the women, and sayd: Feare ye not, For I knowe that ye seke Jesus whiche was crucifyed, he is not here, for he is ryssen as he sayde. Cum see the place, where the Lord was layed. And go quickely, and tel his disciples that he is ryssen agayne from death. And beholde he goeth before you into Galilee, there ye shall see hym. Loe I haue tolde you. The texte.

But the angell comforted the women, saying: These men worthily be amased at the glory of the resurrection, whiche do perseuer and continue styll in their vnbeleefe: But feare not ye, for I knowe that ye seke Jesus who was crucified. Now he hath left his sepulchre, and hath performed that he promised to do. This is the morynyng of the third day. ¶ Therfore he is risē. Cum and see the place, whiche beyng voide of the body, hath yet a signe where the body laye: It hath also the apparell of the bodye, the linnen wherin he was wrapped. Let these thynges make you beleue, yf ye beleue not me. But spedily depart hence, and tell these thynges that ye haue seene to the other disciples beyng sadde for the death of their Lord, that he is ryssen agayn. Whō yf ye desire to see, beholde, he wyll go before you into Galilee, lyke as before his death he promysed. There ye may see hym aliue, for whom ye mourned when he was dead. Loe I haue tolde you before.

¶ And they departed quickely from the sepulchre with feare and great ioye, & did runne to bryng his disciples word. And as they went to tell his disciples, beholde, Jesus mette them, saying: All hayle. And they came and helde his feete, and wurshipped hym. Than Jesus sayde vnto them: be not afrayed: go and tell my brethren, that they go into Galile, and there they shall see me. The texte.

And whan they had loked in the voyde graue, whiche they had found shut, spedily they retourned, partelye fearefull for the greatnesse of the myracle, partely rauysshed with greate ioye, for the desyre and hope to see their Lord alyue agayne, and they runne to communicate this ioye to the disciples of Jesus. And as they wente, Jesus met them, that they myght tell the more certayne tydynges. And to encourage theym beeyng fearefull, he sayd: All hayle.

hayle. They seeyng and knowyng the Lorde, went vnto him, and embracyng his feete, worshypped hym. Agayne Jesus to take from them al feare Be not afraid go and tel my brethren. that they might the better perceiue the thynges that shoulde be spoken, he sayeth: feare not, Goe and tell my brethren the thynges that ye haue sene, and bid them goe forward into Galile, there they shall se me.

The texte. ¶ Whan they wer gon, beholde sum of the kepers came into the citie, and tolde the chefe of the priestes all thynges that had happened: And they assembled together with thelders and toke councell, and gaue muche money to the souldiers, saying: Say ye that his disciples came in the nyght, and stole him away, whan ye wer a slepe. And if this cum to ꝑ pre sidentes eares, we wyll perswade hym, and saue you harmeles. But they toke money, & did as they wer taught, and this saying is noysed among the Jewes vntill this daye.

And when they wer departed, to thintent the trueth of the resurrection myght be confirmed also by the testimonie of the aduersaries, certayne of the kepers, leuing the Sepulchre, went vnto Jerusalem, & tolde the heades of the priestes, what thinges had been dooen, howe the sepulchre being shut & sealed, the body was not found. And howe the angell beyng of a maruailouse beautie, remoued the stone, and of the earthquake, and howe they were amased for feare. And how they heard ꝑ angel talking with ꝑ womā. Whā the priestes heard these thynges of the kepers, they went to councel again with the Senioures, for as muche as the thyng was to manyfeste to bee doubted, they bye a lye of the kepers for money, lyke as before they boughte the helpe of the traytour for money: but that they paye more for the laboure of the lyers, than of the traytoure: kepe close (q they) ꝑ thinges that ye haue sene, but make a brute abrode, ꝑ his disciples came in the nyght & stale hym away, when ye were aslepe. And yf this inuencion and sleyghte be brought vnto your president, we wyll perswade him & deliuer you from all daunger of this matter. Therfore the souldiers receyuyng money, dyd as they were instructed, & this trifelyng & bayne sleyght was beleued of the people. For this rumour is bruted abrode vnto this day emong the vnbeleuig Jewes.

The texte. ¶ Whan the eleuen disciples went away into Galilee, into the mountayne where Jesus had appoynted them. And whā they sawe hym, they worshipped him. But sum doubted.
And Jesus came & spake to them, saying: all power is geuen to me in heauen and yearth.

Nowe the eleuen disciples monyshed of the women, went forewarde in to Galilee, & went vp vpon the hyl whiche Jesus had appoynted thē. There he shewed hymself. They sawe and knewe hym to be their lord, & honoured hym, as nowe beyng an high & in heauen. Notwithstandyng sum yet doub ted, vntill they were made to beleue, w̄ many & very certayne argumentes. Albeit their doubtyng was profytable for the certayntie of our belefe. Therfore Jesus drawing nere vnto them, dyd not onely offer hymself to be sene & touched prestly, but also spake vnto thē w̄ his knowen & accustomed voice: declaring ꝑ by his death, he had obtayned a kingdō & authoritie bothe in heauen & in yearth. In heauen, where euer he reygned with the father: in earth where hereafter he should reigne, not by tyrannical powers & aydes, but thorough the faythe of beleuers: and that he shoulde dispose the office of this euangelical kingdome vnto his disciples, who should folowe his step-pes, commyttyng vnto them the office to preache the Gholpell not onely to the Jewes, but also to al nations: & also authoritie to baptise, & by the holy gost, to forgeue sinnes to all meune, that wyll profesle an euangelicall lyfe with a syncere hearte: and to enstructe and frame them, not after the law of Moses, nor after the constitucions of the Phariseis, but after his precep-

tes, vntil they wexed & grewe vp, vnto the perfeccion of ỹ wisedom of ỹ gospel. And ỹ they should nothing distrust, for ỹ he should not be cõtinually conuersaunt with thẽ, he promiseth that their felowship shal neuer fayle, & that he wil neuer forsake his, but be alwaies present wt his in spirite & power, vnto the last end of the world: Al power (qᵗ he) is geuẽ me in heauẽ and earth. Ye haue seen me by the reason of the weakenes of the flesshe, hungry, thyrstie, werye, nedye, dispised, taken, bounde, spetted vpon, condemned, beaten, crucified, couered with al kyndes of spitefulnes, and in maner deiecte vnder the lowest sorte of men. Because I haue suffered al these thinges willyngly and of myne owne accorde for the health of men: my father hath rayled me from death, and rewarded me with the glory of immortalitte, and hath lyfted me vp to the felowship of his kingdome, and hath submitted vnto my power & rule, al thinges ỹ be in heauẽ & earth. Ye haue an authour whome ye ought not to distruste, ye haue a Lorde, of whom ye ought not to repent.

Go ye therfore & teache al nacions, baptise them in the name of the father and the sonne, & the holy gost, teachyng them to kepe al thynges whatsoeuer I haue commaunded you. The texte.

Like as I dyed for the healthy of all men: so there is no nacion which belongeth not to my right. It shall be your parte to get vnto me as muche as lyeth in you, al kynd of men. But ye shal not get them by weapõs or warre, but by the same meanes that I gatte vnto me this righte, by wholsom doctrine, be a lyke worthy and meete for the gospell, with free well doyng, with pacient sufferyng of ylles. Go ye therfore as trustye Ambassadoures, and trustyng me youre authoure, teache fyrste the Iewes, than the next neighboures vnto them, afterwardes al the nacions of the whole world. Teache what they ought to beleue of me, and what they ought to trust of me. Fyrst to knowledge the heauenly father, the maker, the orderer, and the restorer of al thynges visible and inuisible. Whose power no man can resyst because he is almyghtye: whose knowledge no man doeth deceyue, because he seeth all thynges: whose iudgemente no man shall escape: From whom as from the fountayne cummeth all goodnes in the world: To whom is due al honour, prayse, and thankes geuyng. They must knowledge also his sonne Iesus, by whom through his eternall and vnsearcheable councell, he hath purposed to deliuer mankynde from tranny of synne and death, and by the doctrine of the gospell, to open the waye vnto euerlastyng felicitie. Who for this cause by his will. came downe into the earth, and was borne very mã, of the virgin Marie, and beyng man long conuersaunt emong men, taught the heauenly philosophy, whiche onely maketh men blessed. And beyng an innocẽt, was afflicted & punished for the sinnes of the whole world, & put to death vpon the crosse. And layed in his graue, the thyrde day he rose agayne accordyng to the prophecies of the Prophetes. After that beeyng conuersaunt many dayes with his disciples, and the truthe of his resurrection declared by sure argumentes: he went vp agayne into heauen, where as partaker of the kyngdome and glory of his father, he sytteth on the ryght hand of his father almightie. Once he shall cum agayne into the world, not lowe and abiecte as before: but with the diuine maiestie: not a sauyoure, but a iudge, bothe of those whom that daye he shall fynde alyue, and of those whõ nowe beyng dead, the trumpe of the ghospell shall soodaynly call agayn to lyfe: that by his ineuitable iudgement, euerye man maye receyue rewarde

woꝛthy and meete foꝛ his doynges. They muste knowledge also the holye goste, whom I haue nowe partely geuen vnto you, and wyl geue moꝛe plẽtuously, after that I cum into heauen, whose secrete inspiracion shal cũfoꝛt, teache & strengthen the myndes of thẽ that trust in me: and beyng powꝛed into the hartes of al mẽ, shal glue & cõfeder thẽ together wᵗ mutual charitie, as many as pꝛofesse hartely the faith of the ghospell, of what nacion so euer they cum of. And if a mã doth sinne any thing thꝛough the weakenes of mã, he shal obteyne foꝛgeuenes of his sinnes, so ẏ he doth not seuer hymself from the leage & felowship of the holy cũpany. And whosoeuer ioyneth hymselfe vnto this leage, all the synnes of his foꝛmer life shalbe foꝛgeuen him frely. Finally lest any man should thinke the rewardes of good deedes to bee desired in this life, oꝛ should goe about vengeaunce against ill doers, let them knowe that this hereafter shall cum to passe in theym whiche ye se dooen in me. The deade shall liue againe, and euery soule shall be restoꝛed to her owne bodye. The whiche as sone as it shall be dooen, whosoeuer shall belong to this holy felowshippe, and sticke constantly vnto me, shall bee translated with me vnto euerlastyng lyfe, to be partakers of felicitie, which wer felowes and partakers of affliccions. After that ye haue taught them these thynges, if they beleue the thynges that ye haue taught, if they repent them of their foꝛmer life, if they be ready to embꝛace the doctrine of the gospel, thẽ dippe them in water, in the name of the father, the sonne, and the holy gost, that by this holy signe, they may trust themself to be deliuered from the fylthinesse of al their synnes, frely thꝛough the benefite of my death, and nowe to be chosen to the numbꝛe of the childꝛen of God. Let no man be circũcysed, let no man be baptized in the name of Moses, oꝛ of any man. Let theym all know, to whom they be bound foꝛ their health, vpon whom they ought holy to hang. Let them not be burdened with the ceremonies of Moses, oꝛ of man. Let this token be sufficient foꝛ all men that cum to the pꝛofession of ẏ gospell, whiche is easye to be had in euery place. But least any man myghte thynke it sufficient to saluacion, once to be baptised, and to pꝛofesse the fayth of the ghospell, they must be taught againe by what meanes they may kepe their innocencie, by what meanes they may goe foꝛwarde to perfeccion of ẏ euangelicall godlynes: I haue omitted nothyng whiche may make to thobteinyng of euerlastyng health. And that heauenly spirite whiche ye shall receyue, wyll not suffer you to foꝛget that whiche ye haue learned of me. Ther foꝛe whatsoeuer I haue commaunded you, deliuer ye thesame to be kepte of them. I haue not pꝛescribed vnto you the ceremonies of Moses lawe, whiche lyke shadowes must now banishe away at the lyght of the euangelicall truthe, I haue not pꝛescribed vnto you pharisaicall constitucions, but those thynges, whiche onely bꝛingeth true innocencie and godlynes, and whiche onely may make you derely beloued of god, and truely happy.

Baptisyng the in the name of the father, & of the sonne, & of ẏholy gost

Teachyng the to kepe al thinges whatsoeuer I haue cõmaũded you.

Therfoꝛe teache these thynges to them that pꝛofesse my name, not onelye in woꝛde, but also in lyfe, as I, whatsoeuer I taughte, I perfourmed it in dede. Whyles ye be doyng of these thynges, and whiles ye bꝛing moꝛtal mẽ to heauen, the woꝛld wyl rise against you, lyke as it roose agaynste me. Foꝛ my spirite agreeth not with the spirite of this woꝛlde, and my doctryne is wholy against the affeccions of them, whiche loue the thynges that bee of

this worlde. They wyll ryse agaynst you with great tumultes, but there is no cause why ye nede to distruste, thoughe ye be but lowe and abiect, vnlerned, weake, and fewe. I haue ouercum the worlde, and ye shall ouercū thorough my helpe and by myne exaumple. Ye shall ouercum thorough my might, and not your owne, whatsoeuer is terrible in this worlde.

¶ And loe, I am with you alway, vntill the ende of the worlde.

The texte.

And lo, I am with you alway vntil the ende of the worlde.

And although I shall take vp this body into heauen, because it is so expedient for you, yet I wyll neuer forsake you. For after that I shall cease to be with you in body, than I shall be more effectually with you in my spirite. And I wil be with you vnto the worldes end, but whan the worldes end shalbe, it profiteth not, nor behoueth not you to know. In the meane season do what is commaunded you, euer ready against that daye. Whiche whansoeuer it shall cum, than ye also, your mortalitie laied apart, shall be wholly with me, felowes of my fathers kyngdome, whiche shall neuer haue ende.

FINIS.

To the moſt excellent and vertuous prīceſſe Quene Catherine, wife to our moſt gracious ſoueraigne Lord, Henry the eyght, king of Englande, Fraunce, and Ireland, defender of the fayth, and of the Churche of England, and alſo of Ireland in earthe ſupreme head, Thomas Key, her daily Oratour wiſheth perpetuall felicitie.

Among the innumerable benefites whiche we haue receaued of almighty God, moſt worthie and excellent Princeſſe, there is none in myne opinion for the whiche we are more bounden vnto his mercifull goodneſſe, then for that it hath pleaſed hym more clearely to illumine vs of this age with the knowledge of his holy woorde, then our forefathers and elders. For who knoweth not how long this realme hath bene miſerably ſeduced thorough ignorāunce of the Scriptures? Who, euen among the vplandiſhe, perceyueth not what intollerable abuſes haue bene vnder pretence of true religion, and Godlineſſe, maintayned in this Churche of England, till ſuche tyme that God of his infinite mercie, ſent vs a newe Joſias, by whoſe righteous adminiſtracion, and Godly policie, the lighte of Gods woord that ſo many yeares before was here extinct, began to ſhine againe: to the vtter extirpatiō of falſe doctrine, the roote and chiefe cauſe of all ſuche abuſions. This Joſias is our mooſte redoubted ſoueraigne Lorde kyng Henry theyght, a Prince garniſhed with ſo many excellent giftes of grace, nature, and Fortune, that he is in very dede, and therfore moſt worthely called the perfite mirrour, & pearle of all Chriſten princes. To wade here in the prayſe of his princely qualities, and noble actes atchieued to Gods honour, & the publique weale of this realme, is not my purpoſe, for that I knowe it to be an enterpryſe farre exceadyng the compaſſe of my ſimple learnyng, and barrayn eloquēce: But onely to declare how muche we are bounden, chiefly vnto God, and next vnto his moſt excellente Maieſtie, that we haue the Scriptures in our mother tongue, and are cured of our olde blyndneſſe by the medicine of bertie. For now hauyng our ſpirituall yes opened, and daily receiuing into the ſame the cleare light of goddes woord, we begyn to ſee, and perfitely to knowe our only ſautour Jeſus Chriſt: whom to knowe is euerlaſting lyfe and ſaluacion. But ſo longe as the layed Scriptures were hyd, and kept from the knowledge of the people, fewe knewe Chriſt aright: & none leſſe then they, who appeared to be the chiefe profeſſoures of Chriſtian religion. For what els is it to knowe Chriſt, but to knowe and confeſſe that of hym onely, and by hym commeth our ſaluacion: that by him our good dedes are acceptable vnto almighty God the father: that by hym the fathers wrathe is appeaſed: that by hym we bene fraunchyſed from the captiuitie & thraldome of the diuel: and to be ſhorte, that by hym we are adopted and choſen to be the childzen of God, and enheritours of the kingdome of heauē. Who ſo knoweth Chriſt aright, ſurely beleueth to attayne ſaluaciō by hym onely, who ſayeth: Come vnto me all ye that do trauaill, and are charged and I ſhall refreſh you. The very office of Chriſt is to ſaue: and therfore he was called by the high wysedom of God (Jesu) that is as muche to say, as a Sauiour, because (so saith the angel in Mathew) he shall saue the people from their sinnes: So that it appeareth hereby howe greatly they are deceyued that thinke to be saued by any other meane then by Christe, or that make them selfes quarter sauiours with hym, ascribyng any part of their saluacion vnto theyr owne workes and deseruinges. Now how could Christ be knowen aright, that is to say, to be our onely sauiour and iustifier, so long as the scriptures were shut vp, and kepte from the people: And Legenda aurea, with suche like trumpery lay open for them to passe the time withall, and read in stede of the Bible. For this cause chiefly, and also for lacke of good preachers, to preache and teache the trueth, it came to passe, that he was almost cleane out of knowledge in this realme, in so muche that (duryng the tyme of this great ignorauunce and blindnes) many a thousand put more confidence of soul health in workes that were but of mennes phantasyng, as in pardons, in pilgremages, in kissyng of reliques, in offring to saincres, in halowed beades, in numbryng of prayers, in mumbiyng vp of Psalmes not vnderstand, in the merites of those that called themselfes religious, and in other lyke thinges disalowed by God, and his holy word, then in Christ thonly auctor, as is aforesayed, of mans saluacio. But now that by the gracious permission of our sayed soueraigne Lord, the scriptures are open for euery man to reade soberly, and reuerently for his owne edifiyng in vertue and godly liuyng, it is right wel knowen that the forsayed abusions were doctrines of Antichristes inuencion, and not of God: and that all suche as teache any other way or meane to attaine saluacion, then by him who saith: I am the waye and veritie, are false teachers, seducers, and liers. Now do the commaundementes of God no lenger giue place, as they wer woont to do, vnto mans traditions. Now haue we learned what is our duetie to God, and what obedience we owe vnto our prince, Gods chiefe minister, & supreme head in earth of our churche and congregacion. Now is idolatry, hypocrisy, and superstition, cleane plucked vp by rootes, and true religion euery where planted. Now is al false doctrine exiled, & Gods word truely set forth and preached. Now hath England cleane forsaken Antichrist of Rome, the greatest enemy of Gods holy word, with al his most vngodly deuices, and deuelish inuencions. And all this came of the mere mercy & goodnes of almighty God towardes vs, who vndoubtedly for thassertion of his holy word, and the deliueraunce of vs his people out of captiuitie, ignorauunce, and blindnes, hath raised vp in our time this Christen Iosias, and ioyned vnto the same by most lawfull matrimony your noble grace, a Lady, besides other special giftes, and singuler qualities, wholy geuen to the studie of vertue and godlinesse. Wherfore all Englande hath iuste occasion to reioyce at this your graces honorable aduauncement, yea rather highly to thanke god that our most gracious soueraigne hath matched him self with so vertuous a Lady, in whom is the very expresse resemblaunce of all his maiesties excellent vertues, but spectally of that his graces ardēt zeale, and deuocion in fauouring & setting forth of Gods worde, the mother of all ioyfull prosperitie. A manifest argument wherof, besides many other, is that your grace so much desireth to haue the Paraphrases of the renoumed clerke Erasmus of Roterdame vpon ỹ newe testamēt (a worke very fruitfull and necessary for the true vnderstanding of this part of holy scripture) tourned into English. And for the exploiture and spedy accomplishment of this your graces most Godly desyre, hath (as is sayed) commaunded certayne well learned persons to trãslate the said worke, the paraphrase vpon S. Marke excepted, whiche the right worshipfull maister Owen (a man of muche learnyng, & no lesse honestie, and therfore worthyly Physician to the kinges most royall person) moued me, your graces pleasure first knowen, to go in hand withall, affirming that I should do a thing right acceptable vnto your highnes, if I woulde diligently trauell therin. The which thing, beyng very desirous to gratify your highnes, and with my poore seruice and diligence to further, as muche as in me lay, the godly purpose of the same, I right gladly promised him to do, trusting rather vpõ the benigne acceptacion of your gracious goodnes, then vpon the slendernesse of my witte and learning, farre vnable worthily to atchieue so weighty an enterprise. For thauctour hereof was a man of incomparable eloquence: and therfore it is not possible for a person scarcely of meane learnyng (as I am) to set out euery thyng, specially in our English tongue beyng very barrain of woordes and phrases (I wil not say barbarous withall) so liuely, and with like grace as he wrote it first in the Latine. Wherfore I minded nothing lesse then to contende with hym in ornate speach, and eloquence: but haue done my diligent endeuour so to enterprete ỹ said worke, that it should be both plain and pleasaunt vnto the reader: and not onely that, but also to discharge ỹ chiefest office of an enterpretour, whiche is faithfully to translate, and expresse euery thyng accordyng to the true sence and meanyng of thauctour. If I haue, most vertuous Princesse, any where fayled thus to do, it hath bene rather for lacke of learnyng, & better knowledge, then of any good will and diligence. To speke here any thing eyther in the praise of thauctour of this present worke, or of the worke self, in myne opinion shall not be nedefull, for that thauctour is so muche renoumed for his excellency in learning, that my prayses can no more illustrate & setfoorth his glory, then a candell (as the common prouerbe is) gyue lyght vnto the sunne: and the great vtilitie of thother, cannot so wel beset out by any mans praise and commendacion, as it shall euidently appeare vnto them, that will diligently reade and peruse it. If this my good wil, and endeuour maye be acceptable vnto your highnes, as the great fame of youre bountie, and gracious goodnes putteth me in comforte it shall be, I will hereafter, God assisting me, employe my whole study, and labours in suche wise, that the fruite therof shall be more worthy to be presented vnto your noble grace, then this rude translacion, the whiche I am bolde at this present through thaffyaunce of your natural gentlenesse to dedicate vnto the same. I beseche almighty God longe to preserue our saide soueraigne Lorde, your grace, and that most comfortable flower of all Englande, noble Prince Edwarde in continuall honour, ioye, and prosperitie.

To the moste christian prince

Frauncys the Frenche kyng Eraſmus of Roterodame ſendeth gretyng.

That I haue not tyl this day (moſte chriſtiã kyng Frauncys) enioyed the cõmoditee of your mateſties ſpecial fauour and beneuolence towardes me, hath neither been throwe my default or negligence, neither yet can the cauſe therof iuſtly be aſcribed vnto your excellency: but among ſondrye lettes and impedimentes there hath none ſo muche inuied me this felicitee, as hath this troublous and vnquiet worlde. For I haue euer looked when that in theſe long ſtormes and tempeſtes of warres there would ſome fayre wether or clerenes of peace ſhyne vpõ vs out of one quarter or other. Neither haue I thought my ſelfe at any tyme the leſſe bounden of an heere vnto your bountiful goodnes, then if I had accepted whatſoeuer your grace of your princely liberalite offred me. And I truſt ere it be long to haue an occaſion more euidently to teſtifie the earneſt zeale and good mynde I beare towardes your highnes. In the meane while vntill opportunitie ſhall ſerue me ſo to dooe, I haue thought good to ſend your grace the Paraphraſe vpon the goſpel of S. Marke as an earneſt penny of this my promiſe, where I was of my ſelfe very prone and ready this to dooe, and as it were runnyng forward ther vnto of myne owne accorde, the verye fitnes of the matier did not a lytle excite and moue me. For after I had dedicated Mathewe vnto myne owne natural liege lorde Charles themperour, and Iohn (vpon whom byandby after I had finiſhed Mathewe I made likewyſe a Paraphraſe) vnto Ferdinande his maieſties natural brother: and Luke (whiche was the third that I went in hande withall) vnto the kyng of Englande, then remained there Marke, who ſemed to be lefte behynd for your grace, becauſe the lower goſpels ſhould be dedicated vnto the lower chiefe princes and rulers of the worlde. And God ſend grace that the ſpirite of the goſpell may likewyſe ioyne the heartes of you all lower together in mutual amitie and concorde, as your names are in this goſpel boke aptely conioyned. Some there be whiche extend the biſchoppe of Romes dominion euen vnto hell or purgatory: other ſome geue him imperye and power ouer the Aungels: And ſo farre am I from enuiyng him this preeminente authoritie, that I would wiſhe him to haue a great deale more, but yet would I deſyre wal, that the worlde might once fele this his power good and holſome in ſettyng chriſtian princes at one, & in conſeruyng the ſame in peace and amitie, whiche haue a long ſeaſon with no leſſe diſhonoure, then ſlaughter and effuſion of Chriſtian bloud warred one againſt an other to the vtter decay of Chriſtes religion.

And all this while we curſſe & banne the Turkes. But what pleaſaũter ſight can there be vnto the Turkes, (or if any other nacion there be of the miſcreauntes ỳ are greater enemies vnto Chriſtes religion) then to ſee thre of the moſte florißhyng and moſte puiſſaunte princes of al Europe, thus by reaſon of miſchieuous diuiſiō to purſue eche other with mortal battaile? It wyll ſcarcely ſincke in my braine that there is any ſo cruel a Turke who wiſheth more miſchiefe vnto Chriſten men, then them ſelues worke one an other. And al this while ariſeth ther no peacemaker which with his authoritie may appeace this vngodly buſynes & ruffling of ỳ worlde, where as there lacketh not prouokers and ſetters on ynowe, and ſuche as poure oyle (as it is in the olde prouerbe) vpon the fyer. It is not my parte to make any ones title either better or worſe with my forefudgement. I knowe right well that euery one thynketh his owne cauſe moſte rightful and iuſt: I knowe alſo, that in al ſuche iudgementes that ſame partie is euer woont to haue more fauoure that defendeth him ſelfe from iniury offred him, then he that offreth the wrong: but yet would I very fayne that all chriſtian princes would debate the matter right, and would well conſider with themſelues how muche he hath gotten hereby whatſoeuer he be that had lieffer haue and embrace an vntuſt peace, then wage battaile be it neuer ſo iuſt and lawful. What is more brittle, more ſhorte, or more full of miſery and wretchednes, then is this preſent life of ours? I wyl not here ſpeake of ſo many kyndes of diſeaſes as reigne in ỳ worlde, ſo many iniuries, ſo many caſualties, ſo manny fatall calamities and miſauentures, ſo many peſtilencies, ſo many diuers kyndes of lightnynges, ſo many yerthquakes, ſo many ſortes of fyres, ſo many fludes and inundacions of waters, & other like calamities out of all meaſure and noumbre. For among all the euils that mannes life is vexed or troubled withal, there is none whereof more miſchief and hurte enſueth, then of battaile, the whiche yet doeth muche more miſchief vnto mennes maners, then it doeth vnto theyr ſubſtaunce or bodies. For he doeth the leſſe harme of bothe, that bereaueth a mā of his life, then he ỳ bereaueth him of his vertuous and good minde. Neither is battaile euer the leſſe deteſtable & leſſe to be abhorred, becauſe the moſte parte of ỳ euils therof lighteth vpō poore folkes neckes; & ſuche as are of lowe ſtate & degrees, as of huſbandmen, craftes men, and wayfaryngmen. For the lorde of all Jeſus Chriſt ſhed no leſſe bloud for the redemption of ſuche, be they neuer ſo vile raſcals and abiect perſons, then he did for the greateſt kinges and princes that be. And when at the dreadful day of dome we ſhal come before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt (where muſt ere long be preſented al the potentates and rulers of this worlde, how mighty and puiſſaunt ſoeuer they be) that rigorous iudge wyl requyre as ſtreight an accōpte for thoſe ſely poore wretches, as he wyll do, for the rulers and great menne. They therfore that thinke it but a ſmall loſſe vnto the comon wealth whē theſe poore ſoules and vnderlynges are robbed, afflicted, driuen out of theyr houſes, burned, oppreſſed, and murthered, do plainly condemne of folifhenes Jeſus Chriſt the wiſedome of the father of heauen, who for to ſaue ſuche, as the ſayd perſons are, did ſhed his precious bloud & ſuffred paſſion. Wherfore in myne opinion no kynde of people is more pernicious to the common weale then ſuche as put into princes heades thoſe thinges that may fyre and moue them to warre, who the more high ſto-

macked and courageous they be, the soner are they deceiued. And among all princely vertues high stomacke and noble courage of minde is reke-ned the chief. For this vertue was Julius Cesar of olde writers highly cõmended. And for the same is noble kyng Frauncys likewyse extolled in our tyme with the full consent & testimonie of all nacions. Now what greater argument is there of a verye lofftie & couragious mynde, then to be able nothing to passe vpon luxuries? The doughtynes & valiauntise of the old capitaines who warred for empyre, and not for defẽce of life, is muche renoumed & praised: but in Gentile writers, & of Panyms or Gentiles. Certes it is a much more honourable & glorious facte for a christiã prince to bye peace & trãquillitie of the cõmon wealth with the losse of some parte of his dominion and enheritaunce, then for victory obtained to be receiued with muche goodly triumph, bought with so great displeasures of theyr euyn christen. Therfore suche as haue encensed the myndes of princes with a desyre to enlarge theyr empyre, what els haue they inuented but a continual fountaine and quicke spryng of warres? Againe as muche mischief do they in the worlde that ministre vnto the same princes occasion and matter of wrath, bearyng them in hande that it is a thyng appertainyng vnto princely manhod or couragiousnes, to be auenged by force of armes for some foolishe worde spoken, whiche happely was vntruely reported, or at the leste wyse made a great deale worse, & more haynous then it was spoken in very dede. But how muche greater a poynt is it of a noble courage, for consideracion to haue the peace and tranquillitie of the common wealth conserued, nothyng to passe vpon a railyng worde? For if any hurte come therof, it is but a priuate hurte, yea, to say the trueth, it hurteth not at all, if it be neglected and not passed on. And in other matters concernyng worldly affayres, kynges peraduenture may take some vacacion, and now and then sequestre them selues from busi-nesse, at leste wyse if it be lawful for them to be any where idle and without busynesse, vnto whose office it specially belongeth to watche, for the preseruacion and safegarde of so many. But in takyng vpon them the daun-gerous enterprises & aduentures of warre, forsomuche as the same bryn-geth with it a wholle floud of great euils and mischiefes, they ought with al theyen in theyr heades to watche, and to be as circumspect as is possi-ble to be, lest they decree and determine any thyng vnaduisedly. Neither speake I these thynges (moste christian kyng) of any entent to plucke the sworde out of the handes of princes. For peraduenture it is the parte of a good kyng sometymes to make warre, but that must be at suche tyme, when all other thynges hauyng been assayed in vayne, extreme necessitie cõpelleth him so to do. The lorde Jesus tooke away the vse of the sworde from Peter, but not from princes. Saincte Paule also confirmeth theyr authoritie, cõmaũdyng suche, as in the title of Rome professed Christes re-ligion in no wyse to contemne thauctorite of theyr soueraigne rulers, al-though the same wer Gẽttles & mistropauntes, in somuche that he would not haue taken from them beyng as the very ministres of God, neither theyr customes, theyr taxes or talages, nor theyr honoure. Taketh he the sworde from them, who sayeth: For he beareth not the sworde for naught.

The ſelfe ſame thyng doeth Peter alſo teache beyng one of the chiefe Apoſtles, ſaiyng: Submitte your ſelues therfore vnto all maner of ordinaunce of man, for the lordes ſake, whether it be vnto the kyng, as vnto the chiefe head: either vnto rulers as vnto them that are ſent of him, for the puniſhment of euil doers, but for the laude and praiſe of them that do well. &c. Chriſt would haue Peter to haue no weapon ſaue the ſweord of the goſpel, whiche is the heauenly worde, the whiche as ſainct Paule teacheth in the epiſtle to the Hebrewes, is quicke & mightie in operacion, and ſharper then any two edged ſweord: and entreth through, euen vnto the deuidyng a ſondre of the ſoule & the ſpirite. For he that cõmaundeth the ſweord to be put vp into the ſcaberd, & taketh it not away, doeth more then if he toke it away. For why doeth he commaunde it to be put vppe? Truely becauſe theuãgelike paſtour ſhuld in no caſe make warre. Why doeth he neither cõmaunde it to be layde aſide? nor yet forbid it ſo to be? Literally to do vs to vnderſtãd that we ought not ſo muche as then to go about to be auenged, when we are of power to reuenge the iniuries done vnto vs. Wherfore I conclude that the euangelike paſtours haue the ſweord of ỹ goſpel deliuered them of Chriſt, wher with they ſleagh vices, and cutte away mans carnal luſtes and deſyres. Kynges alſo and tempo ral princes haue theyr ſweord by his ſufferaunce and permiſſion to make euil men afeardé and to preferre good men accordyngly. The ſweord is not taken from them: but the vſe therof is preſcribed. They haue it for a defence and cõfirmacion of the publike tranquillitie, and not to bolſter & maynteine ther with theyr owne ambicioulnes. There are two manier of ſweordes, & likewyſe two manier of kyngdomes. The prieſtes & biſhops haue theyr ſweord, and alſo theyr kyngdome. In ſtede of Diademes and helmettes they haue theyr Myters: In ſtede of a ſcepter they haue a croſyers ſtaffe: they haue theyr brigandine, theyr ſouldiers girdle, and to be ſhorte, all that cõplete harnes whiche that valiaunt warriour S. Paul deſcribeth vnto them in ſondry places. Theſe euangelike kynges are called paſtours, ſo likewyſe are temporal kynges named of the Poet Homer, paſtours of the people. They bothe do one thyng, and yet is theyr office and miniſtery diuers, euen like as we ſee that in the ſame enterlude and playe ſome playe one parte, and ſome an other. But if they bothe had eche of theim theyr owne ſweord in a readynes, I meane, if eche of theim would vſe the power geuen theim aright, & as they ought to do, I thinke verely that we (who are rather chriſten men by name, then in dede) would not ſo often tymes drawe out our wicked ſweordes to thruſt theim into ỹ bellies of our chriſten brethren. Now whiles they bothe nothyng regardyng theyr owne duetie, haue eche one a deſyre to entermeddle with that, whiche in no wyſe appertaineth vnto theyr vocacion, it commeth to paſſe that neither of theim both do maynteine theyr owne dignitie accordyngly nor yet conſerue the publike tranquillitie neither. When hath a kyng more kyngly maieſtie, then at ſuche tyme as he ſitteth in iudgement, and miniſtreth iuſtice, then when he repreſſeth iniuries, endeth cõtrouerſies, helpeth the oppreſſed, or when he ſitteth in counſaile ſtudiyng how to adnaunce the common wealth. On the other ſide, when hath a biſhop more of his dignitie, then at suche tymes as he preacheth ỹ doctrin of ỹ gospel out of a pulpit: For then is ỹ euangelike kyng in his seate royal. Looke how vnsemyng a thyng it was for the Emperour Nero to cõtende wt the masters of Musyke and with harpers in the stage, or to proue masteries with wagoners in the listes or turneiyng place called Circus: so vnsemely a thyng it is for a kyng to meddle with lowe and peltrie matiers that perteine vnto his owne priuate affeccions, and hurt the prosperous state of the cõmon wealth. Againe loke how vncomely a thyng it wer if a Philosophier would with his cloke & long bearde scip about ỹ stage: & play a parte in an enterlude: or els holde a bil or a net in his hande in the place where the sweordplaiers are woont to fight at vtteraunce, and syng their accustomed song: I would not haue ỹ, I would haue a fysshe, cocke why flyest thou from me: euen no lesse vnsemely a thing it is for the euãgelike kyng to play the warryer, to bye and sel, I wyll not speake of other thinges more vnhonest, and lesse agreable with his vocacion. How chaũceth it that there is any one bishop in our dayes that thinketh it a goodlyer thyng for him to haue in his traine. CCC. horsmen well appointed with crosbowes, tauelyns, and handegunnes, then to be accompanied with a good nombre of learned and vertuous deacons, and to carry about with him bookes of holy scripture: Why do they thinke them selues great by the pompous shewe and settyng foorth of those thynges, by contemnyng wherof, suche as they succeded were accompted great & worthy persons: Why haue trumpettes and hornes a sweter sounde in their eares, then ỹ readyng of holy scripture: Well then, what if a kyng in stede of a Diademe, and a robe of estate, put on a Myter and a priestes attyre: and contrary a bishop in stede of a Myter & priestes attyre weare a Diademe, & a kynges robe or kyrtle: wyl it not appeare a monstruous sight vnto vs. Now if the vnright and disordred vse of suche thinges as are but signes of their office and ministeries dooe so greatly moue vs, why then are we not a great deale more moued to see their offices turned cleane cam, and vsed contrary to their right fourme and fashion: Now if either kyng or bishop do any thing priuately, they must haue respect to nothing els, but to the health and conuersacion of the people. For if they do their duetie aright, either they admonishe suche as are out of ỹ way, correct suche as haue done amysse, or coumforte the dismayed, or kepe vnder the proude and hyemynded, or styre vp idle persons, or make those that are at variaunce frendes and louers againe. This is the very office of kynges, but specially of the euãgelike kynges, who in nowise ought ambitiously to desyre this worldly kyngdome. And forasmuche as the Lorde Jesus was in very dede both a spiritual and a temporal kyng (although he expresseth in verth but a spiritual kingdom alonely) it is both their partes to do what in them lyeth to counterfaite and folowe their prince.

He wholly gaue himselfe for his. And how then for shame dare any that calleth himselfe Christes vicar liue onely to his owne priuate wealth and commoditie. Christ whether he were in the temple, or in the Synagoges, or went abrode, or tarried at home in his seueral house, or were carried by water, or continued in the wildernes, did nothyng els all his life long but play the parte of a lautour, of a comforter, of a well doer. He taught the multitude, he healed the diſeaſed, he clenſed the lepres, he reſtored the ſicke of the paſſey, the lame and the blynd. Further he chaſed away hurtfull ſpirites, raiſed the dead, deliuered thoſe that were in perill, filled the bellies of the hungry, reproued ỹ Phariſeis, defended his diſciples, and alſo the ſynner that ſo lauiſchely poured out hir oyntment vpon him. He coumforted the ſynful woman of Canaan, and hir that was taken in adultery. Peruſe all the whoſle life of Jeſus, and it ſhall euidently appeare that he neuer hatmed any bodye, notwithſtandyng he had ſo many hurtes and diſpleaſures done to him of others, and that he could eaſely haue been auenged if it had pleaſed him. He euery where plaied the lautoure, euery where the well doer.

He reſtored Malchus eare againe whiche Peter cut of with his ſweord. He would not haue his ſafegarde defended with the leſt hurt or diſpleaſure that might be to any body. He made Herode and Pilate at one. Hangyng on the croſſe he ſaued one of ỹ theues. When he was dead he drewe the capitaine of the gariſone vnto the chriſtian profeſſion. This was the verye office and parte of a kyng, to do all men good and hurte no body. His example all chriſtian princes ought as nigh as they can to folowe.

And foraſmuche as your grace is called the moſte chriſtian kyng, the very name & title ſelfe that is geuē your highnes ought ſpecially to moue you to expreſſe in all your doynges as nere as ye can poſſible, the prince of all princes Chriſt. But what ſparcle of ſhame remaineth there in thoſe perſons, who albeit they haue a pleaſure to be called the vicars of Chriſt do notwithſtandyng require to haue (I ſay not their life or dignitie, but their auarice & pride) defended with great effuſion & ſheddyng of chriſten bloud? And this write I (right noble prince) not for to defame or reproue any biſhops (albeit I would wiſhe of God that there were not ſome chriſtian biſhops of whom theſe wordes might be iuſtely ſpoken) but onely to ſhewe wherin the true dignitie of kinges and biſhoppes conſiſteth, to the ende that bothe of them knowyng and mainteinyng their owne dignitie, may happily paſſeouer this tranſitorie life to Goddes pleaſure and contentacion. But muche farder are thoſe euangelike paſtours from doyng of their duetie, who, where it had been their parte to make princes beyng at debate & variaunce at one againe, do of their owne accorde incenſe thē to warre, & as it is in an olde prouerbe, do caſt brandes vpon the fyers or flames of battaile. Surely if euer it were nedeful for a good paſtour or ſhepherde any where to prouide for the ſafegarde of his flocke wt the loſſe and ſpendyng of his life: if the example of that chiefe ſhepherde Chriſt, in whoſe ſtede they are, were anywhere to be expreſſed & folowed, here chiefly ought they to haue doone their duetie, where ſo great a ſea of miſchiefes guſheth and floweth out into the worlde. But how chaunceth it that among ſo great a noumbre of Abbottes, biſhops, Archebiſhops, and Cardinals not one ſteppeth forth that dare putte, yea euen his verai life in hasarde, to make an ende of this great ſtirryng and troublous buſynes

of the worlde: How happily dyeth he whoso by his death causeth so many thousand mennes lyues to be saued: There is no crueller a thyng, then is that fyghtyng hand to hand, and butcherly mangling & cutting of sweard players: And yet was antiquitie so fondly delited with this sight, that the moste naughtie and detestable example remaynyng of the vse of the Gentiles, continued a long season, euen among christen men, namely in the Citie of Rome, whiche coulde not yet forget her old paganitie. But that this manour of fyghtyng is vtterly set aside, we maye thanke (as witnesseth the history called the tripartite history) one Telemachus a man of theyr order and profession, who for christian simplicitie, and a desyre they had to lead a solitarie lyfe, and to eschew the company of the synfull multitude, were cõmonly called monkes or solitarie persons. This Telemachus came for this purpose oute of the east parties to Rome, and entryng into the place (whiche was called of them Theatrum, that is to saye, a place ordayned to beholde shewes and pastimes in) when he sawe two armed men come into the fightyng place, and aboute to slay one another, he leaped betwixt them as they were in theyr fury and rage, crying and saying with a loude voyce: What do ye brethren: why go ye about lyke wylde beastes to murther one another: To make shorte tale, whiles the good man went about to saue both theyr lyues, he lost his owne being stoned to death of the people: So muche dyd the dotyng multitude set by this cruel lye pastime and pleasure. But what came of this: Honorius the Emperour assone as he was enkourmed herof, commaunded this manter of shewing the people pastyme by couplyng or matchyng together of sweard players, to bee left and vtterly abolyshed. Now marke me well how vnhoneste a pastyme it was, and how many thousandes had by reasõ therof bene miserably slaine & murthered, & then shall it euidently appere how muche the world is bõden vnto this one mannes death. And for this facte was Telemachus worthely canonized and made a saincte. How muche more then by all righte & reason should he deserue to haue lyke honoure gyuen hym that would aduenture his life to parte so mightie & puissaunte princes, that thus warre and fight continually one agaynst another: For the common welth sustayneth no great losse if a sweardplayer kyll a sweard player, and one vngracious varlet slayeth another: And yet as princes cannot be enemies together without the vtter detriment and annoyaunce of the whole worlde: so contrariwise may they with lesse ieopardy be parted, thẽ Telemachus parted the sweardplayers, fyrst bycause they are christen men, and secondarily because the more noble courage and stomacke they be of, the more tractable they are, if any bishop, or els any other prelate of the churche go aboute to perswade them without craftie or dissimulacion. Nowe if any chaunce vpon suche a prince as can by no meanes be intreated, but is of a tyrannous and cruell nature: then let hym consider how the greatest hurt and displeasure that the cruellest tyranne in the worlde is able to do, is but death.

And where I praye you shall the successours of the Apostles shewe an example of an Apostolyke spirite, yf they shew it not in this case: Some will here saye:

What

What ſhal my death preuayle, if I haue not my deſyre? I anſwere: Chriſt the rewardegyuer wyll not ſe this champion to loſe his rewarde. Albeit many tymes death obteyneth, what lyke could neuer bryng about. For the death of vertuous men is of no ſmall power & efficacie. I wyll not here ſtande in the rectall of olde exaumples whiche are innumerable. John Baptiſt was beheaded for his franke ſpeakyng: but all princes are not Herodes: nor all haue not ſuche paramours as Herodias was. Ambroſe byſchop of Myllayne chranke not to ſuſpend Theodoſius the Emperour out of the churche for his cruell and raſhe ſentence agaynſt the Theſſalonians, and after he had ſharply rebuked hym, and commaunded hym to make ſatiſfaccion, he put hym to his penaunce. And forthwith the maieſtie of ſo mightie a prynce gaue place, and was obedient vnto the auctoritie of a biſhop. The holy man Babylas byſchop of Antioche attẽpted to vſe lyke ſeueritie agaynſt a kyng whiche had murthered an innocent, and he was ſlayne for his labour: but anon as he was deade, he began to be feared, not only of the heathen Emperour, but alſo of the deuyls, whiche were as yet in theſe dayes worſhipped for Gods. I haue (right excellent prince) ſuche an opinion of the Emperours maieſties nature, of your Graces diſpoſicion, and of the kyng of Englandes good nature and vertuous inclinacion, that I put no doubtes but you all would long ere this haue followed good aduertiſementes, if there had bene any ſuche counſayloure, whiche would haue bene playne and franke with you all with diſcretion, and diſcrete with frank playnenes. And all this while there lacketh not great plenty of ſuche as incenſe the myndes of princes to battayle, namely of thoſe perſones whome it behoueth, foraſmuche as their profit and lyuyng dependeth therupon, to haue all the worlde in an vprore, and inquieted with warres. One ſayth: he ſetteth your maieſtie at naught: he gaue your grace ſuche a mocke: Another, if your hyghnes ioyne this parte vnto your dominions, you maye alſo at your pleaſure eaſely ioyne that. O vnaduiſed & raſhe counſaillour. Why doeſt thou rather put into his head how far he maye extende the boundes of his dominions, then put hym in remembraunce with how narrow lymittes the ſeignorye, whiche he hath now at this preſent was in olde time bounded? Why doeſt ỹ not ſhew him whiche waye ỹ he hath maye be well gouerned, rather then enlarged? The extendyng of boundes is endleſſe: and therfore moſte true it is ỹ Seneca reporteth: Many Emperours & princes haue encroched vpõ others, & take theyr marches from thẽ: & yet neuer none tyll this daye hath appoynted hymſelf any limittes to be content withall. But the very true cõmendaciõ of a prince ſtandeth in well gouernyng. Alexander the great when he was come to ỹ Occian ſea, wiſhed ther had bene another worlde for hym to conquere, as who ſaye this worlde was to litle to ſatiſfye his ambiciouſneſſe, and deſyre that he had to enlarge his Empier. Hercules neuer went beyõd the iles called Gades. But no Occian, no Gades can bounde out vnſatiable ambicion. Howbeit agaynſt the peſtilent wordes of ſuche perſones chriſtian princes ought to haue theyr myndes diligentlye fortified afore hand with the decrees and ſaynges of Chriſte, as it were with triacles or preſeruatiues agaynſt poyſon, and in all theyr counſayles to haue ſpecial regarde vnto the rule of the goſpell, as vnto a marke.

Peraduenture

Peraduẽture your maiestie will aske what I meane to syng so long a sõg vnto your highnesse, sence the same is moste occupyed about the weightie affaires of the cõmon wealthe. Yea, my desire was to haue this song songẽ to all men, for no cause els, but for that this vniuersall calamitie of the worlde greueth me very sore, and also for that I muche desyre to see more tranquillitie and quietnes in euery parte of Christendome, but specially in the realme of Fraũce, then whiche kyngdome I wot not whether there be any more excellent eyther in true christianitie and good liuing, or els in worldly aboũdaunce & prosperitie. Now if suche ruffling & troublous busynes did seldome when chaunce, like as great floudes, earthquakes, or tempyse are wont to do, then were it a thyng more tollerable: but so it is ỹ the world is continually troubled, & neuer at quiet by reason of suche discorde & diuision. The physicians whensoeuer ther chaunceth any newe bodely diseases do wittely searche out the causes of the maladye, the whiche once knowen, then do they easly cure it: And not only contented thus to do they also inuent wayes to let ỹ the same plague maye not often tymes begyn to rage afreshe, or reigne again. Wherfore in these so great euels, & so many tymes chauncyng, do not men of great wisedõ & experience lẽdably searche out the welles that all this troublous busines so oft springeth out of into the worlde, to thend that the rootes therof beyng cleane cut vp and distroyed, they maye perfitely cure and remeady the same? why are we quycke syghted in thynges of litell weight and importaunce or none at al, & in the weightiest thyng of all more then half blynde? Myne opinion is ỹ battayle for ỹ moste parte springeth of vayne wordes or titles as it were inuented to nourishe mannes pride & vaine glory, as who saye, ther were not ambition, ynoughe in the worlde, vnlesse we fed & mayntayned this naughtie vice with newly inuẽted titles, the which vice of it owne proper nature groweth to fast in vs. These, and suche other like rotes and chief causes of battaile beyng once cut awaye, then should it be easie to cõclude & establishe a peace amõg christẽ princes ỹ such lawes & conditiõs that would neuer suffer suche rufflyng busynes & hurly burly to begyn agayne. By this meanes should the princes encrease in ryches, now beyng cõmon vyt wene thẽ by reason of amitie & frendship: & the christen people should lyue in lonely peace & trãquillitie vnder their moste wealthy princes. So would the lorde Iesus that true kyng of the whole worlde be fauorable vnto vs: & cause al thynges to prosper & go forward with vs. So should we be feared of the enemyes of Christes religion, agaynst whõ we haue muche a do at this daye to defend our owne: muche lesse then are we able to discomfite them & chase them awaye far from vs. Albeit I had rather haue them reformed of their misbeleke, thẽ by force of armes chased away, & put to flyght. But howe is it possible for vs to reforme other, yt our selues be (I had almoste sayde) worse & more vicious in our conuersacion then they are? For I do not here esteme christen menne by the articles of the fayth whiche we professe with mouth, but by their maners and lyuing. Whersoeuer ambicion, couetousnes, pryde, wrathe, reuengemente, and a desyre to hurte reigneth, there (saye I) lacketh the fayth of the gospell. Nowe albeit this pestilence haue infected, euen these vnto whose office it chiefly appertayned to se a remedy for the decaye

of chriſten religion, yet haue I ſome good hope of reformacion, becauſe I ſee the bookes of holy ſcripture, but ſpecially of the new teſtament ſo take in hande, and laboured of all men, yea euen as muche as of the ignoraunt and vnlettered ſorte, that many tymes ſuche as profeſſe the perfite knowledge of Goddes worde are not able to matche them in reaſonyng. And ꝑ there be very many readers of the bookes of the newe teſtament, this one thing maketh me to beleue, becauſe notwithſtãdyng the prynters do verely publyſhe and put forthe ſo many thouſand volumes, yet all the bookeſellers ſhoppes that be are not hable to ſuffiſe the gredines of the byers. For now a dayes it is well ſolde ware whatſoeuer a man attempteth vpõ the ghoſpell. This ſo ſtrong a medicine once receiued and dronken canne not but worke and put forth his ſtrengthe. Wherfore me thynketh the world is in caſe lyke to a mannes body vexed with greuous diſeaſes, after it hath receiued and herbe called Elleborе, or ſome other ſtrõg purgacion. For then is it all together diſtempered and out of quiet, and fareth as though it would yelde vp the ghoſte. And god ſende grace that this euãgelyke Elleborе, after it haue once ſeatched and entred into al the veynes of our ſoule, maye ſo come vp agayne, that (the ſedes of vices beyng therby caſt oute and auoyded) it maye reſtore vs made whole and pourged of all our ſynnes, vnto Jeſu Chriſte, and maye alſo after this great ſuffryng and almoſte vncurable diſeaſe of the world bryng agayne vnto all men ꝑ ioyfull and muche deſyred tranquillitie. And verily I would hope better that the cõmon prayers of all good men to that ende & purpoſe ſhould not be made in vayne, if the chiefe eſtates of the worlde would lyke truſty and faythful phyſiciãs do theyr endeuour to helpe the worlde in this euil caſe, that is to ſaye, if the princes, in whome it chiefly lyeth to rule the world as they will, would call vnto theyr remembraunce that they ſhall ſhortly (for what thyng is ther in this preſent lyfe of any long continuaunce) gyue an accoumpt vnto ꝑ moſte ſoueraigne & highe prince how they haue gouerned theyr dominions: Agayne if the biſhoppes, diuines and all eccleſiaſticall perſones would like wyſe remember how they haue not ſucceded in ꝑ place of Annas and Caiphas, or of the Scribes & Phariſees, (who whiles they wickedly defended theyr owne kyngdome, wente about to oppreſſe ꝑ kyngdome of the ghoſpell: Whyles they vpheldе and defended theyr owne glorye, dyd theyr endeuour to bury and ouer whelme Chriſtes glorye: and finally whiles they laboured to approue theyr owne ryghteouſnes, made God vnrighteous) but rather in the place of the Apoſtles, who had a pleaſure euen with the leſing of theyr owne bloude and liues to defende Chriſtes kyngdome, Chriſtes glory, and Chriſtes righteouſnes, Chriſte hath once ſuffred: once aryſen agayn from death to lyfe, and neuer wyll dye agayne. But he ſuffereth the ſame paſſion afreſhe, ſo oft as the truthe of the goſpell is condemned, beaten, ſpytte vpon, crucified, and buried. To be ſhorte, he reckeneth done vnto hymſelfe whatſoeuer euell or diſpleaſure is done vnto his members.

Peraduenture (moſte Chriſtian kyng) I haue here ſpoken more frankelye, and more at large then it became me to do.

howbeit the great loue I beare towardes your grace hath made me bothe faultie of my wordes, and also more bolde to vtter my mynde vnto your highnesse: I beyng a christian man, do wishe well vnto all christen menne generally: but yet haue I a certaine speciall loue and affeccion to the most noble and florishyng realme of Fraūce, I beseche Iesu thimmortal kyng of the whole worlde, vnto whom the heauenly father hath geuen al power in heauen and in yearth, to geue his holy spirite both to the people, & also to the princes and rulers: to the princes that they may haue grace happely to passe ouer theyr lyues in mutual amitie and concorde vnder theyr commen kyng and prince Iesu: vnto the other, that they may liue in rest and peace vnder theyr moste godly and wealthy princes: and the ende of al to be this, that christian vertue and godlynes beyng wel plātes among vs, may be enlarged and spred abrode as muche as is possible to be, not by inuadyng or walkyng of others dominions or countreys (for so our enemies become the poorer, but neuer the better and more godly) but by preachyng euery where the doctrine of the gospel syncerely and truely, by theyr ministers that haue in them the spirite of the gospel: and by ordering our liues after suche sorte y verye many may be allured to praise our religion euen by the swete smel or sauour of our good liuyng. So begāne the christian empyre, so encreased it, so was it greatly enlarged, so was it established: & by the cōtrary we see how it is now almoste at a point & come to nothing, if we consider the greatnesse of the whole worlde. Wherfore loke by what aydes it first begāne, by what meanes it was encreased, and established, by thesame must we repayre it beyng decayed, enlarge it beyng brought into narrowe roume, and finally establishe it againe beyng vnstable and at no sure staye. These thinges wryte I (moste christian prince) of a pure zele and good mynde, neither reprehendyng any man, sence I beare all men my good wyll: neither flatteryng with any, or coueryng fauoure, because I seke naught at no mannes handes. Almightie God graunt your highnesse wel to fare. Geuen the first of December, in the yere of our lorde.

M. CCCCC. xxiii.

The lyfe of S. Marke writtē by S. Hierome.

MArke the disciple & interpreter of Peter, beyng desyred of the brethren at Rome, wrote a shorte gospell accordyng as he hearde Peter preache and shew euery thyng by mouth. The whiche gospell the same Peter, after he had heard it, dyd allowe and publyshe by his authoritie, because it should be red of the congregacion, as recordeth Clement in the sixt boke of his worke entitled: Dispositiones. Of this Marke, Papias also bishop of Hierusalem maketh mencion. And Peter in his fyrst Epistle, where vnder the name of Babylō by a figuratiue maner of speakyng he vnderstandeth Rome, hath these wordes: The congregacion of them whiche at Babylon are companions of your election saluteth you and so doth Marke my sonne. Wherfore he toke the gospell that hymselfe had written, and went into Egypt, and fyrst of all men preached Christe at Alexandria, where he ordeyned a churche or cōgregacion of suche pure doctrine and perfite lyuyng, that he made all y professed Christ to folow his example. To be shorte Philo the eloquentest writer of the Iewes, perceyuyng the fyrst congregatiō of Alexandria yet to perseuer in the Iewishe religion, wrote a boke of theyr conuersacion, as it were in the prayse of his nacion: And as Luke sheweth how al thynges wer common among the beleuers at Hierusalem, so dyd he put in writyng all that euer he se done at Alexandria duryng the tyme that Marke there taught & preached. He dyed in the eyght yere of Neros reigne, and was buried at Alexandria, in whose place succeded Anianus.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Gospell of saincte Marke.

The first Chapter.

IT is naturally gyuen to all men, to desire felicitie. This felicitie many worldly men right politique and wyse, as touchyng a certain kynde of wisdom, haue hitherto promised: some by suche lawes as they haue made & written: other some, by rules and preceptes that they haue giuen, to teache men how to leade a vertuouse & a godly life. But for as muche as they were mẽne, they wer not able to perfourme their promyse. For they neyther wiste them selfes what was the true, and perfyte felicitie of man, nor wherin it stoode. And for this cause it came to passe, that in stede of true felicitie, they embraced a certayne deceyuable image or shadowe therof, and infected other with their errour, being bothe deceyued them selfes, and deceyuers. Therfore bothe the lawe makers, and philosophiers brought vs a certayne gospell of theyr owne inuencion, but suche a one as was partly false, and deceyuable, and partly werishe and of no efficacie. Moyses and the Prophetes wrote a more certeyn and pitthie gospell than they, but to one nacion alone: and as that tyme required, wrapped with figures and shadowes, disposing men onely, to the knowleage of veritie, but vnsufficient to giue perfite saluacio, neuerthelesse sumwhat promoting therunto, wherin goddes wisdome resembleth nature, whiche bryngeth vs, and as a man would saye, leadeth vs by the hande, from the knowleage of thinges that are vndre our corporall sight, vnto the knowleage of thynges inuisible. And yet theyr gospell conteyneth in it more feare then glad and ioyfull promyse, & hath muche more bewrayed the wickednes of man, than taken awaye the same, rather beaten into mennes myndes goddes myght and power, than set out his mercie & goodnesse, caused more rather dreade, than emplãted loue. For what could man do but feare, tremble and despayre, after he had learned by the lawe, that he was alwayes in bondage and subiection of sinne, and not able to refrayne therfro, and also did knowe howe no manne coulde escape the iudgement of God, a very rigorous and sore auẽger of sinne and vngodlinesse. Who is he that can finde in his harte to loue him whome he feareth. Now the dreade of goddes iustice, although it be many tymes the beginning of saluation, euen as a bittre medicine that vexeth the whole bodie of manne, is the entrye to health yet is it not the thyng whiche maketh man to haue perfite felicitie. The grace and beneficiall goodnes of God, causeth man to loue God, and loue to godward is the thyng that auaunceth hym to happie state and felicitie. Therfore after the whole worlde was somwhat prepared, as well by the prophecies & foresayinges of the Prophetes, as by the commaundementes and figures of Moyses, in these laste dayes was opened & preached vnto the same, that verye ioyfull gospell, that all menne ought to embrace, and moste louingly to receyue, whiche of the owne accorde, or without any deſeruyng on mans behalfe, bringeth not only to the Iewes, but alſo to all nacions of the worlde remiſſion of all ſinnes. And leſt haplye any manne put doubtes in the certaintie of this promiſe, it is God that maketh it, and no manne: neyther is his ambaſſadour Moyſes, or anye of the Prophetes, but the very ſonne of God him ſelf, Ieſus Chriſt, who for our ſaluacion, came downe from heauen, and toke vpon hym our corruptible fleſche, to thintēt that he being giltleſſe, and without all ſinne, might by his paſſion and death, freely geue innocencie and life to all that beleue his promiſes, and put theyr whole affiaunce in hym. For God who is of his owne proper nature gracious and beneficiall, would by this meanes, ſhewe that exceding great and inestimable kindneſſe that he bare towardes mākinde: whiche was ſo greate, that greater can neyther be deſired, ne ought to be loked for. He coulde not ſend a more honorable meſſenger than his owne onlye begotten ſonne, nor ſhewe more kindneſſe, than through faythe only, freely to releaſe all mēnes offences wer they neuer ſo manye, neuer ſo great and heynous: yea and ouer this, through his holy ſpirit, chooſe thoſe that were before ſlaues and bondmē of the diuel, to be felowes with his ſonne, by whom he hath geuen vs all thinges both in heauen and in earth. And bicauſe nothing could be more ioyfull then this meſſage or tydinges, it is by right good ſkyll called of the Grekes, Euangelion, that is almuche to ſaye in Engliſh, as glad and ioyfull tydinges, to comforte you, that you ſhould no more feare the yoke and burthen of Moſes lawe:

The texte. ¶ The beginnyng of the goſpell of Ieſu Chriſte, the ſonne of God as it is written in the Prophetes. Beholde I ſende my meſſenger before thy face, whiche ſhall prepare the waye before the. The voyce of a cryer in the wildernelſe, prepare ye the waye of the Lord, and make his pathes ſtreight. Iohn did baptiſe in the wildernelſe, and preached the baptiſme of repentaunce, for the remiſſion of ſinnes, and all the lande of Iury, and they of Ieruſalem, went out vnto hym, and were all baptiſed of hym in the ryuer of Iordan, confeſſing theyr ſynnes.

And albeit ſomme men hadde leuer make a further reherſall of thiſtorye of the goſpell, and beginne the ſame with the natiuitie and birth of Ieſu Chriſt: Yet me thinketh it ſufficient for that I woulde be breke, to take my beginnyng of Iohn Baptiſtes preachyng: For like as the daye ſtarre goeth before the Sunne, ſo came he, and appeared vnto the worlde before Chriſtes preaching, not by chaunce and fortune, but by Goddes determinacion, to ſtyre vp the myndes of the Iewes, to loke for Meſſias that would ſtreightwayes come, yea and to poynte hym vnto them with his fingre, when he came: the whiche Iohn, the Prophetes ſo many hundred yeares ſythens, prophecied and told before ſhould come. For the ſame prophetes whiche prophecied and ſpake of Chriſtes comming, ſpake and prophecied alſo of Iohn, the forewalker of Chriſte. For in Micheas the Prophete, God the father ſpeaketh vnto his Sonne in this wiſe: Loe, ſaith he: I ſende my eſpeciall and electe meſſenger before thy face, who ſhall make a waye for the, that anon after ſhalt come, and take on the thoffice of preachyng the goſpell. Likewiſe the Prophete Eſaye ſignifiyng the preachyng of Iohn, ſayeth: The voice of a cryar in wildernelſe: prepare ye the waye of the Lorde, make ſtraight his pathes. In ſemblable wiſe the pacient is moniſhed before the comming of the Phyſician, to knowleage his diſeaſe, and reuerently to receyue hym whan he cōmeth, and in all thynges

to do after hym, and kolowe his counsail. When therkoze the tyme approched, that Jesus Chzist the sonne of God, who was not yet knowen vnto the wozld, should begin to take vpō him this ministracion, foz ẏ whiche he was sent downe frō heauen into earth, John accozding as the Pzophetes had pzophecied & tolde bekoze, played the kozecurrour, baptizing in wilderneſſe: not that he dyd therby washe awaye sinnes, but onely stzze and exhozt men to be repentaunte foz their kozmer life, ẏ they knowleaging their disease, should gredely delire his cōming, whiche only baptizeth with spirite and fyze, taking awaye at once thzough faithe in him, all sinnes: endowinge mennes sowles with heauēlye grace, whiche he poureth out of him selfe, as out of the well & kountayn therof: freely deliuering frō vnrightoulneſſe, freely geuing rightuoulneſſe, freely deliuering frō death, & freely geuing life euerlasting. The greater ẏ this loue & kindnes was whiche God shewed vnto mākind, the greuouser shal their punishment be, that haue set nought by the same, when it was offred them. And leſte any should so do, John came bekoze to pzepare & dispose all men by his carnal baptisme, to ẏ spirituall baptisme of Chzist: to cause them by exhozting, & making them afrayde, to kozthinke, & hate their kozmer lyfe: & finally to geue them kozewarning, ẏ Messias, & the kingdō of God, were at hād. John was not the light ẏ should lighten euery man, which cōmeth into this wozld, but a messenger of the light that anon after should appeare. He was not the phisician whiche should take awate mennes sinnes, & giue health, but made them inwardly to tremble in their cōscience, in that he declared vnto them the great daunger they stode in: Finally he stzyed vp all mennes hartes, to the greate desire of euerlasting saluacion, by pzeaching vnto them, how he was not farre of, the whiche only should deliuer from sinne. He was not the bzydegrome, but a kozewalker of the bzidegrome to wake and call vp all men, to meete the bzidegrome comming. He was not the sonne of God, but a voice kozeshewing the sonne of God, who anon after should be disclosed vnto the wozld. Moses lawe was a fearefull lawe, in so muche that the children of Israel could not abide the voice of God, when he spake vnto them. John being a limitte oz bozdze set betwene lawe & grace, & as a man mengled of bothe, did herin vse a poynte of the olde lawe, because in his pzeaching he manased all men with euerlasting death and dāpnacion, vnleſſe they would tourne in season from theyz sinful liuing. And againe this had he of ẏ new, ẏ he moued not ẏ people to sacrifices, burnt offringes, vowes, oz fastinges, but to baptisme, and repētaunce of the kozmer life: & shewed mozeouer how the moste mercifull Messias was already come and pzesent, who should freely forgiue all men their offences, that would put theyz whole trust and confidence in him. The kozmer lawe was wzitten oz published in wilderneſſe, and from thence also commeth the beginning of the newe. He muste cleane kozsake all the wozld, that wil be wozthy to be partaker of the grace of the gospell, whiche compēdiously geueth all thinges. In great cities are riches, delicacies, pleasures, pzide and ambicion: But specially Jerusalem had in it a famous temple by reason wherof she was not a litle pzoude and stately. The same citie had also carnal sacrifices wherunto the people trusted. Furthermoze it had holy dayes, obseruances of the sabboth, a pzescribed choise of meates, and other ceremonies, wherby she supposed that man was iustified & made rightuous before God: finally, there wer highe minded priestes, & dissembling pharisees. But who so desireth ỹ baptisme of the gospel, must vtterly laye apart al trust & cõfidence of these thinges. He must forsake all Jewry with her Jerusalẽ, her tẽple, her sacrifices, her priesthod, & pharisaicall fashions, & frõ thence depart into wildernesse, where he may heare the most ioyfull tidinges of our sauiour, ỹ straightwayes will come.

And they of Hierusalem went out vnto hym. &c.

To retourne to John, he cried not in vain. For he made a great many so afrayed wt his crying & preaching, ỹ they forsoke their dwelling places and hasted to the water of Jordan: & that not alonely out of al the countrey of Jewrie, but also out of Jerusalem it self. Thidre flocked a great rablemẽt of souldiers & publicanes, & also certaine of ỹ phariseis. John receiued and taught as many as came, without choise or regard of person, & did also baptise suche of them, as were displeased wt them selfes for theyr offences, & cõfessed the same: expressing hereby as it wer by a certain corporall figure, the very ordre of the newe lawe and gospell. For the firste office & ministerie in christian profession, is to teache. When the christian nouice (by this name vnderstand good reader suche a one as forsakyng eyther the Jewish or Paynims religion, and intending to be christened, is newely instructed in the fayth: in the whiche state he is called of thauncient fathers, catechumenus) when I saye, the christian nouice beginneth once through the doctrine of the teacher, bothe to knowe his owne filthye lyuing, and also the goodnesse of God, than is he wholely displeased with him self, and perceyuing no where els to appeare any hope of saluacion, hath straytwayes recourse for ayde and socoure to the beneficiall lorde, who frely extendeth his mercie and goodnesse towardes vs. It is a great furtheraunce to the recouering of health, if the pacient knowe his owne infirmytie. It preuayleth not a litle to the obtayninge of light, if a manne perceyue the present darknes he is in. He hath already muche profited to puritie of life, and vertuous lyuyng, who so abhorreth his owne vncleanesse. The preachyng of John, figureth the christian enstruction, or kyrst teachynge by mouthe of Christes religion. His baptisme representeth the baptisme of Christe. That he so gently receyued all that euer came vnto him, betokeneth nothing els, but lyke as euery man nedeth the grace of the ghospell, euen so no mã of what degree or nacion so euer he be, ought to be secluded frõ the same. The phariseis had theyr washinges. They washed theyr handes at meale tyme, or whan they should take theyr repaste: They washed theyr bodies at theyr retourne home from the market: they washed oftymes theyr cuppes, dishes, stooles, tables, and the rest of theyr houshold stuf, as though cleanesse, and puritie of life whiche God loueth, and alloweth in vs, stoode in ỹ obseruacion of suche trifles, or as though a litle quãtitie of the Phariseis water, were of suche force and vertue, that it could make a man euer the cleaner in the sight of almightie God. Suche maner of washinges & baptismes do not make a man cleaner in sowle, then he was before, but rather more proud & arrogãt. Happy therfore are they who haue vtterly forsaken Moyses, and the Phariseis washynges, and with all haste runne vnto ỹ bathes of Jordã. For in the Hebrue tõgue this word (Jordã) is as muche to saye, as the floude of iudgement. He is not iudged of the Lorde, who so iudgeth him selfe. This is that same purifyinge floude whiche issueth

out of two fountaynes, that is, out of the knowleage of our owne vnrighteousnes, and the remembraunce of the merciful goodnesse of God. This is that baptisme of repentaunce, and flood of teares whiche causeth streames of bitter water, to flowe out of the most inward vaines of mānes hart, but it hath suche strength and vertu, ỹ it doeth as it wer with the sharpnesse of saltpeter, scower and wipe awaye, all the spottes and filthe of the sowle. The Phariseis also haue a confession of theyr owne, but suche a one as plainly declareth theyr pryde and arrogancie. I fast, sayth the proude Pharisey, twise in the weke. I geue vnto the poore the tenth part of al my goodes, and I am not as other men be. The Jewes confesse other mēnes sinnes, and not their owne. Now they that prepare and make them selfes ready, to receyue the baptisme of the gospell, wil neyther be knowē of their owne good deades, nor make rehersall of other mens faultes, but eche of them truly confesse theyr owne. It is a poynt of arrogancie, for a man to stand in recitall of his owne good dedes, euen as to discouer other mennes offences procedeth of malice, and euill will. To be short, to acknowleage thyne owne sinne and iniquitie, is to glorifie the goodnesse of God.

¶ John was clothed with Camels heare, and with a Gyrdle of alkynne, about his loynes. And he did eate locustes, and wilde hony, and preached: saying, He that is strōger then I, commeth after me, whose shooe latchet I am not worthy to stoupe downe & vnlouse. I haue baptised you with water, but he shall baptise with the holy ghost. The texte.

And to thentent that John, who in like manour came before the first cōming of Christ, as Hely according to the prophecie of Malachi, shall come before the last, might the more in holy and perfite liuing resemble Hely, he led his lyfe in wildernesse, vtterly eschewing the sinful compainy of worldly people. He was not clothed with silkes, nor yet w̄ wollen clothes, but with a garmēt made of Camels heare, and gyrded about the loynes with a lether gyrdle. And by this straight manour of liuing, he shewed a certaine euangelike & christian perfeccion, euen before the gospel was published or preached. His foode was agreable to his dwelling place, & apparayle. For it was euen suche as came to hand, & was easie to be gotten: suche as the place of the own accorde, and without husbāding or tilling, gaue him, most cōmonly certain flies, called locustes, & wild hony. And here ỹ criar or preacher of Christ, did a great deale more then Moses lawe required. For that lawe made distincciō only betwene sundrye kyndes of beastes. But he vtterly, & ỹ without cōmaundement, abstayned from eating of all lower footed beastes, fowles, & fishes. That law forfended to weare any clothing of linsaye wolsaye: but he cleane depryued himself bothe from the vse of woll and flaxe. Suche a lyfe doubtles was conuenient for the preacher of repentaunce, who although he were sanctified in his mothers wōbe, yet woulde he neuertheles leade a straight life, lest his preaching should haue bene little estemed & set by, if his liuing & doctrine had in any poynt disagreed. And by this meanes he gate him self so great renoume, and auctoritie amōg the Jewes, that manye of them supposed he had bene very Messias indede. But John, albeit he was a man highly in the fauour of God, and endewed with many godlye giftes & qualities, yet perceyuing what a great offence it was, for manne to chalenge that glorye whiche is dewe vnto God, or for one man to put ayde of saluacion in an other, openly preached in the presence of them all, and sayde: I am not he whom ye suppose me to be. My doctrine is a base and a werishe doctrine. My baptisme is not effectuall. I am nothing els but a manne as ye are, cōceyued in sinne: nothing elles but his messenger, whiche will strayghtwayes come, to giue saluacion vnto all men. He is behinde me in tyme, and after the estimacion of the worlde, of muche lesse auctorite then I am: but he surmounteth me so farre in heauēly power, that I, whome you haue in suche reuerence and veneration, am not worthy to serue him in the office of ỹ vilest drudge or slaue, nor worthy I saye, to lye vpon the grounde, and vnlouse the latchet of his shoes. You ought to honoure hym. You ought intierly, and with moste feruent affection, to desyre his commyng. I preache vnto you earthly thinges: He shall teache you heauenly matters. I haue hitherto baptised you, as touchyng the bodie, with water, preparing your myndes to repentaunce: When he once commeth abrode, he shall baptise you with the holye ghoste, whose secret vertue sanctifieth all thynges. For as no man hath rightuousnesse of hym selfe, euen so can no man geue the same to an other. He muste nedes be of more power and excellencie than man, who so geueth that thing, which pertayneth to God alone to geue. Knowe you the difference betwene an vnworthy seruaunt, and the maister: betwene the minister, and the auctor: betwene the criar, and the kyng.

He that is stronger then I, commeth after me &c.

The texte

¶ And it came to passe in those dayes, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galile, and was baptised of Johñ, in Jordan: and assone as he was come out of the water, he sawe heauen open, and the spirite descendyng vpon hym, lyke a doue. And there came a voyce from heauen: Thou art my deare sonne, in whom I delite.

After that John hath with woordes of like sentence, moued and styred vp the myndes of a great manye of theim, to wayte for Messias that was commyng, then furth came Jesus when his tyme was come, forsakynge the litle village of Nazareth in the countrey of Galile, where bicause of his education, & long cōtinuaunce in the same, men thought he had bene borne. Certes this is the nature and propertie of al euangelike thinges, to begyn very baselye, and from suche begynninges by litle and litle, to come at the lēgth to highest perfectiō: where as cōtrarily all thinges ỹ euer the worlde & the deuel goeth about, are after merueylous goodly beginninges, sodainly cast downe, and brought to nought. So lucifer whiles he set his seate in the northe, ymagenyng to be equall with the highest, was sodainlye cast downe headlynge into hell. In semblable wise Adam when that thorough the diuels instigation, he desired to be equal with God, was by and by exiled, and cast out of paradise. Therfore if thou here conside the high excellencie, and greatnesse of Jesu, it will cause the muche more to wonder at his singuler humblenesse of mynd and modestie. He came out of a poore & homely village, out of Galile, the vilest coūtrey of all Jewrie. He that purifieth al thinges, came as one of the rascall sort, humble & lowly to the baptisme of repentaunce, amonge sinners, souldiers, brothelles, and publicans, without any seruaūtes to wayte & attend vpon hym. It was not ynough for hym to be circumcised accordynge to the ordynaunce of the lawe, & purified after the tradicion of Moyses: He desired also to receyue Johns baptisme, teaching & enstructing vs hereby, that who so maketh him self ready to be a ministre & preacher of the gospel, muste omitte nothing which in any wise wise perteyneth to the increase of vertue and godlines: And again eschew all thinges, wherwith the weakelinges may be offended. John taught vs this lesson, that a preacher of goddes word should not get himselfe estimacion and auctorite, by gorgeous apparell, or pompouse liuing, but by honest behauiour, and godly conuersacion. But the ensample that Christ shewed, was of muche more perfection, and farther from the Jewishe fashion then this: for that he differyng nothyng at all from other, neyther in hys apparell, nor yet in dyet, did neuertheless by hys godly liuyng, mekenesse, and benefitial goodnes towardes all men, vtterly dusk and deface the auctorite of John. For that is of hygher perfection whiche is geuen by the grace of the gospel, then that whiche procedeth from the austeritie, & straitnes of the lawe. The whole intent of the lorde Jesus was this, to make the world to knowe howe he was the onely aucthour of saluacion, to expresse and set out vnto vs, a certayne fourme of euangelike and true godlynes, to confirme the truthe and certentie of all that euer Moyses and the Prophetes had written of thinges past, and to make vs, as it were with the geuyng of an earnest peny, to haue a sure hope and expectacion of thynges yet to come. For we right gladly beleue hym, of whom we haue conceyued a maruelous good opinion, and vpon whom many witnesses doe consent and agree.

Wherfore it was procured by the prouidence & wisdome of god, that the Lord Jesus should euery where, haue an euident record & testimony of his deitie: Of the whole lawe of Moyses, of all the Prophetes, of the angels, of the sheaperdes, of the wise men called Magicians, of the Scribes, of Simeon and Anne, of John baptist, of the father, of the holy ghost, and fynally of Pylate, and the deuils. The miracles also that he wrought, playnely declared him to be the sonne of god. He did many thinges, not bicause hym selfe had any nede so to dooe, but for that he woulde set out vnto vs in his owne persone, a certain fourme & trade of liuing: as when he fasted, whē he was tempted, when he oftentimes praied, when he came to baptisme, when he obeyed his parentes, when he patiently suffered al iniuries & wronges, and finally when he came to his crosse and passion. He perfourmed many thinges that the prophetes had prophecied of before, lest the people should doubt of the promises afterwardes to be accomplished: as whē that in his baptisme he receyued the holy ghost in the lykenesse of a doue, lightyng vpō the croune of his heade: as when he arose again from death to lyfe. Wherfore he came as a penitent to John: he desyred his baptisme, and obteyned it. He was baptised in Jordan, wherin were baptised both tanners, Publicans, and souldiers, a sort of people so sinful, ỹ none are more blemished or defiled with sinne. Are not here the stately princes of this world ashamed, who wyll haue nothyng common with the vulgar people? No kyng, nor priest commeth to baptisme, & if it were their pleasure so to do, they would scarcely vouchesafe to receyue baptisme in a bason of gold or precious stones. Nowe our sauiour Jesus, that fountayne of all puritie, that kyng of al kinges, that lord of al lordes, disdayned not the common bathe, wherin the common sorte were washed. But who so humbleth him selfe before man, the same is highly exalted before god. Jesus was baptysed as the rest, and euerichone of the common people there present. But the father of heauen disseuered him from the residue, by a certayne notable signe neuer seene, ne heard of before. For as sone as he was come out of ỹ water of Jordã (whiche he halowed with the touche of his holy body) vnto lande, as he was in his contemplacion and prayers, John sawe the heauens open, and the holy ghoste flie doune from thence, and light vpon the holy croune of his heade, and there tarye. The pride of Adam closed the gates of paradise againste vs. The humblenesse of mynde and modestie of Christ, hath for paradise opened vs the gates of Heauen. There was a visible signe shewed vnto mans eyes, but by the same we were taughte what maner of mindes that heauenly spirite both loueth & maketh. The spirite of the deuell, & the worlde maketh and loueth such mindes as are haute, puffed vp with pride, & fierce: but that heauenly spirite loueth those whiche are lowly, meke, and peasible. There is nothing more harmeles, & more without gyle, then the doue: Nothing whose nature worse agreeth with fighting & raueny. It was plainly expressed and set out in the lord by this corporall figure, what is spiritually wrought in al those, that with a sincere and pure faith, receyue the baptisme of the gospell. The body is washed with water, but the soule is throughly anoynted with grace inuisible. Moreouer that the doue abode stil vpon the croune of the lordes head, signified that the holy ghost is geuen to all other godlye men, & good liuers, ratably after the measure & proporcion of theyr faith, as it is presently expedient. But in Jesus was the continuall fountayne of all heauenly grace. For the doue brought him not then any newe grace, whiche he had not before, but euidently declared how he was full of grace, and showed moreouer, from whence all grace and goodnes issueth, & commeth vnto vs.

And as sone as he was come vp, &c.

John beyng stablished in mynde with this so euident a signe receyued of the father of heauen, doubted not to pronounce Jesus to be the very sõne of God. The witnes that he gaue vnto Christ, was of great waight and auctoritie among the Jewes, but muche greater was the testimony of the father himselfe, whose voyce sounded doune from the heauens, saying. Thou art that my dearely beloued sonne, in whom my mynde delighteth. For a wyse chylde is the fathers ioye and comforte. That heauenly spirite of god is not idell, weake, faint, or feble, but of nature al fiery, and by and by worketh, & putteth forth his vertue, as sone as it is once entred into the soule of man. The spirite of man is slacke, and slowe, and thinketh vppon nothyng but that whiche is lowe, vyle, and worldly. But they that haue the spirite of the flesche mortified, and are led with the spirite of GOD, do forthwith go in hand with highe thinges, and of manly enterprise, that is to say, do fight against the vncleane spirite, their ghostly enemy the deuell, whom they are not afrayde euen to prouoke to battayle, as men puttyng theyr whole confidence in the ayde and succoure of the Heauenlye spirite, whiche is of muche more vertue and puissaunce, then all that withstand the Gospell.

And there came a voyce from heauen. &c.

The terte

And immediatly the spirit droue him into wildernes, and he was there in the wyldernes, fowertie dayes, and was tempted of Sathan and was with wild beastes. And the aungels ministered vnto hym. After that John was take, Jesus came into Galile. preachinge the Gospell of the kyngdome of God, and saying: the tyme is come, and the kingdome of God is at hande. Repent, and beleue the gospell.

Wher

Wherfore Jesus plainly expressyng in hym selfe, what he woulde haue vs to do, incontinent after we haue receyued baptisme, was brought by force of the holy ghoste, into wildernesse. There he made his abode for .xl. dayes, and as many nightes, still continuing in prayer, and fastyng, and in the meane season, he was tempted of the deuell, whom (after he had discōfited, and ouerthrowne hym) he deliuered vnto vs to ouercome: shewynge vs also the very waye, and meane, howe to get the victory. He is ouerthrowen by the spirite of Christe, by continuall prayer, and sobernesse of lyfe, and by the weapon of holy Scripture. The whyle that Christe contynued thus in wyldernesse, he lyued amonge saluage beastes, vtterlye abstaynyng from all comforte and solace, taken of the company of manne. There had bene no daunger for hym yf he had beue conuersaunte with the multitude of people, but he shewed hereby how expedient it is for a Christian souldiour, to eschewe the compaignye of the common sorte, vntyll he haue sufficyently tamed the flesshe, and ouercome the deuyll, and by contynuall recordyng of Goddes lawe, and deuoute prayers, made hym selfe stronge ynough in spirite. For many be in more safetie when they lyue amonge bestes as Christe dyd, then when they be conuersaunt with suche menne as are more noysome then any brute beastes. The Lorde and sauiour Jesus Christ kepte companye with beastes: but whyles he lacked the ministery of men, Aungels were alwayes present, and serued hym. They that vtterly despyse all the pastimes and pleasures of thys worlde, neuer wante Heauenly pleasures, and solaces. For vs and our profite, Christe was baptysed: For vs he prayed: for vs he was notably described by the testimony of the father, and the holy ghoste: for vs he wente into wyldernesse: for vs he fasted: for vs he was tempted: for vs he gatte the victorye ouer the deuill. Here consyder thou Christian souldiar, the very true and righte order of thy perfection. The fyrste instruction and teachyng by mouthe of Christes religion, causeth hatred of the former lyfe, and hope of clensyng or remission of synnes. With these capytaynes thou runnest to Jordayne: and there thorowghe faythe in Christe, washest away the filthynesse of all thy sinnes. And anon after at thine owne prayer, and at the petition and prayer of the churche, thou hast a newe spirite geuen the from Heauen, and by it arte admitted to be of the number of the childzen of God, & emplanted into the body of Jesu Christ, as a member of hym, who is the very heade of the churche. In the meane whyle it behoueth not the souldyour of Christe, to be careles. Thou hast promysed thy seruyce to Christ thyne Emperoure. Thou hast renounced the deuell. Thou haste receyued the holye ghoste as it were gyfte money, a bond, and an earnest penye of thy salarye. Thou muste enforce thy selfe with thy vtter endeuoure to get victory. But that neuer chaunceth to the negligente and recheles person. Thou muste take to the armoure and weapon, leaste thyne ennemye whiche euery where lyeth in wayte for the, come vpon the vnwares, and when thou arte vnarmed. Thou shalte incontinent be assaulted with the worlde, the deuell, and the flesshe. Thou muste alwayes fyght, to thentente thou mayest alwayes gette victory. For this battayle shall not ende. before thou make an ende of thy lyfe. But yet the oftener thou chaunce

to banquiſhe thine ennemye, the weaker ſhall he departe from battayle, and thou the ſtronger.

When thou haſt here behaued thy ſelfe valiauntlye, and played the man a whyle, then at the length addreſſe thy ſelfe to the miniſtracion of the goſpell, ſpecially yf thou feele that the ſpirite of God driue the there vnto. The Lorde Jeſus was mete to preache the goſpel (then whiche myniſterye, there is none of greater perfection) euen when he was a verye lytle chylde: But he ordayned a patarne or an example in him ſelfe, for vs to counterfayte and folowe: wherby we are taughte, that we ought not by and by after our profeſſion, rachely to haſten our ſelfes to this ſo highe and holy a miniſtracion. The lawe of Moyſes had her tyme. There was alſo a tyme when it behoued that lyke as the lyght of the euangelyke veritie, beganne by lyttell and littell to ſhine further vnto the world, euen ſo ſhould the ſhadowes of the olde lawe vaniſhe awaye: & the fleſh geue place vnto the ſpirite, puttyng furth his vertue. Lyke as in tranſformacions and naturall chaungynges of thynges, there is a certayne meane, whiche hath ſome affynitie with bothe the extremes, to thentente that thynges of muche contrarietie maye eaſely be tranſformed, and tourned one into an other: Euen ſo John came as a meane betwene the carnall lawe of Moyſes, and the ſpirituall lawe of the goſpell, to thys ende, that menne myghte the ſoner be tranſformed, and brought from the fleſhe or litterall ſence of the lawe, to the ſpirite, and true meaning of the ſame. For ayre is not ſodainly, & immediatly made of earth, but in this tranſformacion water is ỹ meane betwene both, which at the length by little & litle is fined into ayre, a more pure element. Wherfore as long as the preaching of John (who partly vpheld the olde lawe, for as muche as it alſo ſumwhat helpeth to bring a man to Chriſt) flouriſhed, oure ſauiour Jeſus leaſte he ſhould haue ſeemed to any, eyther to contende with John, or els to diſanull the lawe, which he came to make perfytte, neuer preached openly, ne declared his diuine power, but with a fewe myracles, nor gathered together any diſciples, but rather behaued hym ſelfe as the diſcyple of John: teaching vs hereby, that nomanne can well exercyſe the office of a mayſter, vnleſſe him ſelfe haue bene before an obedient diſciple. But after that John was caſte into priſon for his playne and franke ſpeakyng, then did Chriſt as it were ſuccede hym, and come in his place. It is mete that the carnall be fyrſte, & that latermore, whiche is ſpirituall and goſtely. That whiche is vnperfite gooeth before, and the perfite commeth after. Grace foloweth the propertie of nature. Corne is fyrſte graſſe before it haue eares, and ſtrong age foloweth after infancie. The ceremonies of the law, notwithſtanding they haue ſumwhat ſhadowed and fygured Chriſt, yet nowe at the length drawe they to their end, and the light of the goſpell ſhineth abrode, whoſe onely auctour is Jeſus Chriſt. He wente firſt to preache in Galile. For it lyked hym that this newe light ſhould beginne to ſhyne out of that part of Jewry, whiche was counted vileſt of all other. Proude Jeruſalem deſerued not to haue this preeminence, whiche, albeit ſhe were in verye dede as blind as a betel, yet thought her ſelfe to haue a perfite good ſighte, and for that cauſe was more vncurable.

But

But in these thinges whiche came not to passe by hasard of Fortune, there lyeth hyd a certain secret signification of thinges to be done. For what betokeneth it, that John is closed and shut vp in prysone? Forsoth that the law of Moyses shall at the appearyng of the moste cleare lyghte of the Gospel, be made darke, and vtterly lose her lyghte. What signifyeth it that he is bounde? Truely that the carnall parte of the lawe shalbe bounde, and freedome louſed and set at large, thorough the grace of the gospel. What meaneth it that Johns head is stryken of? Certes that nowe is present the true heade of the whole congregacion, whiche shalbe assembled of al nacions of the whole worlde. What is this that Jesus preacheth the kingdome of god in Galile? Undoubtedly he maketh a fore signe that the grace of the gospel shall forsake the wicked Jewes, and go from them to the Gentiles, because the Jewes embraced styll that olde heade whiche was chopped of by the gospel, and contemned Christ the very head of the whole lawe. For this woorde (Galile) in the Syrian tongue, signifyeth a flyttyng or chaungyng of habitacion. Before tyme grace laye hydde, and ceremonies were in hyghest estimacion. Nowe are they gone, and Jesus commeth a brode, the effectuall auctour and preacher of the grace of the gospell. Therfore accordyng to the misticall sence hereof, who so wyll heare Christ preache, must flytte away from their olde vsages, and naughty lustes, to the intent they may be receyuable of this newe and heauenly doctryne. Let the Jewe caste away the perswasion and sure beleefe he hath conceyued of his owne holynes: the Phariſey, the pryde he taketh by trustyng to his woorkes: the Bishoppes, the glory of theyr temple, and sacrifices: the Philosophers, the vayne aydes of mannes wisedome. Let Kynges and tyrauntes cast awaye that mooste foolyshe trust, whiche they repose in their ryches, Let all nacions laye aparte all vngodly customes, all filthie lustes, and hearken vnto this newe Preacher Jesus, who teacheth not worldlye, but heauenly thynges. He speaketh indifferently to all menne. Let all men therefore heare hym alike.

Here is it very expediente to consider howe our sauioure Christ begynneth to set furthe his doctryne. Worldly Philosophers do fyrste teache theyr audience, not those thynges whiche are mooste fruitfull and profitable, but suche thynges as maye cause them to be hadde in admiracion for theyr singuler wisdome, minding nothing so muche, as to get them selues a name by dissenting in opinion, from other famous teachers. But the lord Jesus would neyther disanul thauctorite of the olde lawe, (for he doeth truely interpret ỹ same, which was before misse vnderstād: rather makyng it perfit, thē destroying it) neither dispraued he Johns doctrine, although it wer vnperfit, but began his preaching wt the self same beginning, whiche John had vsed before. A mā would haue said he had bene the very scholer & disciple of John, who was in dede the maister, & auctor of all. Now what preacheth he? what is ỹ cry ỹ the word, & sonne of ỹ euerlasting father maketh? The world had far swarued frō the right vsage of the law of nature, whiche God hath graue and planted in al mens hertes. The wisdō that the philosophers taught, increased ỹ foly of the world. The religiō which the gentils vsed before time, was most wicked, & detestable. The lawe of Moses caused muche hipocrisy with her shadowes, her sacrifices, & her feares.

The lawe signified or meant by her figures, and the Prophetes tolde before by theyr prophecies, howe one shoulde cum, who should offer vnto all nacions perfite saluacion. But because this promise was so long differred, the worlde beyng as it were deafe, gaue no eare therevnto at all. Yet ỳ lord of his gracious goodnesse, forgate not to performe thesame. Nowe is the time already fulfilled ỳ he prefixed or foreapointed vnto this busines. You nede not frō henceforth to await for the fulfilling of any other figures, or any mo darke sayinges of the lawe. You nede not to loke after newe prophetes. Loe, the kyngdome of God is nowe present. In steade of shadowes, veritie shall shine abrode. In steade of the flesshe, the spirite shal succede and cum in place. In steade of corporal ceremonies, true godlynes shall raigne. In stead of the deuils kyngdom, Gods kyngdom shal be enlarged. There is no cause why you should lynger or stay: why any man shoulde loke backe vnto the aydes of his owne rightuousenesse. Perhaps as Moyses lawe taketh rightuousenesse, sum are righteouse in the sighte of the worlde: but as the newe lawe requireth the same, al men are sinners, and vnrightuous. Yet for all that there is no cause why you should dispayre. Knowe your disease, and then receyue remedy, that is, onely be you repentaunte for youre former life, and stedfastly beleue the ghospell. Nowe is there broughte vnto you a message right ioyfull, and muche to be desyred, I meane free remission of all your trespasses. You haue no nede of burnte offerynges. Onely knowledge your vnrightuousenesse, and repose your assyaunce in the rightuousnes of almighty God, who doubtlesse wil performe what he promiseth by his ghospell. For that man shall sufficiently deserue to enioy the promise therof, who so beleueth the promiser.

The texte. As he walked by the Sea of Galile, he sawe Symon and Andrew his brother, castyng nettes into the Sea, for they wer fishers. And Jesus sayd vnto them: Folowe me, and I will make you to become fyshers of men. And streight waye they forsoke theyr nettes and folowed hym. And when he had gone a lytle further thence, he sawe James ỳ sōne of Zebede, and John his brother, whiche also were in the shyppe mendyng their nettes, and he anon called them, and they left their father Zebede there in the shyppe, with the hyred seruauntes, and folowed hym.

After the Lorde Jesus had with suche woordes moued and styred vp the myndes of the Jewes to receyue the newe Philosophy, and doctrine of the gospell, he lyke wyse began after the ensample of John to gather certayn disciples, but fewe in number, and suche as were vnlettered persones, and of lowe degre, to the entente that when he had through their ministery conuerted all the whole worlde, it should plainely appeare how this kyngdome was the very kyngdome of God, and not a worldly kyngdom. Therfore as he trauayled on a day by the lake or sea of Galile, he espyed Symon, and Andrewe his brother, labouring together, and about to caste their nettes into the water: For they were fysshers men, and by this occupacion gatte their liuing. The baseness of their craft, made for the aduauncing of goddes glory. The concorde of the two brethren, signified the consent and agrement of the churche. The crafte of fishyng, bare the figure of the ministracion of the gospell, whiche by vertue of goddes word, plucketh vp into the lyght of veritie, and loue of heauenly thynges, suche as are drowned in the darkenesse of ignorauncе, and the fowle stynkynge puddell of worldely cares. And thus first of all fyshed he for these two fyshers. Come ye (ỳ he) and folowe me, for I wyll make you begynne from this daye forward, to fyshe after menne. Assone as the Lorde Jesus had spoken the worde, the two brethren leauyng theyr nettes euen as they wer, folowed him wythoute any taryng. For Jesus voyce hath in it a certayne heauenly charme or inchauntment. And goyng thence a litle forwarde, he sawe other two, that is to wete, James the sonne of zebede, & John his brother, who wer also trimmyng and mendyng their nettes in the ship, and makyng theym selues ready to go a fishyng. And these two notwithstandyng theyr myndes wer bent another waye, he sodaynly spake vnto, callyng & commaundyng theym to folowe him. Nowe that thou mayest knowe yong men of an euangelyke kaythe, they made no taryng, but leauing theyr father zebede with his hyred seruauntes in the shippe, strayghtwayes folowed theyr caller. Thus beganne Christ to gather the chiefe prelates, and ministers of his Churche, cleane refusyng the priestes, and Pharisies of Jerusalem, with all their pompe and pride.

¶ And they came into Capernaum, and streyghtwaye on the Sabboth dayes, he entred into the Synagoge, and taught, and they wer astonyed at his learnyng. For he taught them as one that had authoritie, and not as the Scribe. The texte.

And beyng accompanyed with suche a felowshyp, he came vnto Capernaum. This Capernaum was a citye muche flourishyng in substaunce, but no lesse proude, vngodly, and vicious, than it was welthy. Here by and by he beganne to playe the parte of an Euangelist, or preacher of the gospell. For vpon the sabboth day, he entred into the Sinagoge, and taught the Jewes openly, not the vayne fables of the Pharisies, but declared vnto theim the verye true meaning of the lawe, whiche was in dede spirituall, and not carnall. Anon the people perceyued him to be a newe teacher, and his doctrine also to be of a newe sorte. They sawe he was a manne of lowe degree, and that suche as companted him wer but few in numbre, verye rascals, & men of no reputacion: yet wondered they greatly at hys woordes, for that they breathed a certayne godly vertue. For he did not after the maner of the Scribes, teache triflyng constitucions of men, or olde wyues tales of genealogies, and pedegrewes, but his woordes wer pithy and of authoritie, and the wonderfull greate miracles he wrought, caused those verities that he spake to be beleued. What thyng soeuer is humayne and worldly, the same is of litle price and estimacion, when Goddes vertue beginneth once to put furth her power.

¶ And there was in theyr synagoge, a man vexed with an vncleane spirite, and he cried, saying: Alas what haue we to do with the thou Jesus of Nazareth? Arte thou come to destroye vs? I knowe the what thou arte, euen that holy one of God. And Jesus rebuked him saying: holde thy peace, and come oute of the manne. And whan the vncleane spirite had torne hym, and cried with a loude voyce, he came out of hym, and they were al amased, insomuche that they demaunded one of another among thē selfes, saying: What thing is this? What newe doctrine is this? For with authoritie commaunded he the foule spirites, and they obeyed him. And immediatly, his fame spred abrode through oute all the region borderyng on Galile. The texte.

And loe, by and by there was occasion ministred for hym to worke a myracle. For in that assemblye, was there a certayne felowe whyche was vexed with an vncleane spirite. This wicked spirite coulde not abyde the heauenly spirite speakyng in Christ. For he beganne to clatter agaynste hys heauenly doctryne, crying aloude, and saying: O Jesu of Nazareth, what hast thou to doo with vs? Arte thou come to destroye vs before the tyme? I right well knowe who thou arte. Certes the selfe same holy one, whiche the prophete Daniel promised long sythens, whome God hath singulerly sanctifyed aboue all other. The Lorde Jesus, eyther because the tyme was not yet come that he shoulde openly confesse who he was, or els because he was not pleased with hys confession, beyng vndoutedlye true, but yet made through constraynt of feare, and of a wicked spirite (who sith he is of him selfe a lyar, and dilighteth to deceyue mã, was not to be heard in the presence of the people when he spake the trueth, lest any man woulde haue taken occasion thereby to beleue him afterwardes when he lyed,) the Lorde Jesus, I saye, rebuked him, and sayd: Holde thy peace, and departe out of the man, and so shalt thou better declare who I am. And furthwith at the lordes commaundemẽt, the vncleane spirite forsoke the man. But at his departure he tare him, and cryed out with a loude voyce, so that it euidently appeared therby, howe he fled away not willyngly, but by force and constraynt of Gods power. And here was shewed the figure of a man possessed with the spirite of the deuill. Is not he vexed wyth worst, and cruellest of all the deuils, whiche is wholly possessed with ambicion, couetousnes, rancour, malice, hatred, pleasure of the body, and suche other like deuilishe lustes, & appetites? Suche as are vexed wyth these spirites, can in no wyse abyde to heare the gospell preached, but yel and crye out against it, as the deuil did, saying: what hast thou to do with vs Jesus? Arte thou come to destroye vs? For so manye as the spirit of thys worlde possesseth, thynke theym selues vtterly forlorne, whensoeuer they are constrayned to forsake those thinges wherin they haue sette theyr false felicitie. Wherefore theyr myndes are sore troubled, and as you woulde say, tugged and haled into sondrye pieces, whilest on the one syde feare of eternall dampnacyon moueth theym to vertue and goodnes, on the other syde the venimouse swetenes of suche vices as they haue of long tyme accustomed vnto, holdeth theym fast and withdraweth theym frõ theyr godlye purpose. But yet no manner of deuil taketh so fast holde, but he wyll at the cõmaundemente of Jesu, flye awaye. It is a muche greater myracle to make of an ambicious man, a temperate, of a fierce felowe, a pacient, of the lecherous persone, a chast liuer, of the extorcioner or one that liueth by polling and pylyng, a liberall manne, then to delyuer a mans body from a wicked spirite. But yet menne wonder more at thys, then at the other, not because it is more wonderfull and meruaylous in deede, but for that it is seene wyth bodely yes. Therfore, when he had thus chaled awaye the vncleane spirit by commaundement onely, then the Jewes greatly wondred at it, insomuche ỹ they demaunded one of a nother, saying: What new thyng is this? we haue not reade that euer the Prophetes dyd the lyke, castyng oute deuils by bare word of mouth onely. Or what new kynd of doctryn is this, that hath so great vertue & power folowing it? He preacheth the kyngdome of god, & putteth furth Gods power, in that he treadeth vnder foote, & subdueth the power of the deuil. Neyther is it by sorcery or inchauntmẽt, or by makyng of long prayers vnto god, nor yet by any other laborious meane ỹ he thus putteth to flight the wicked fendes: But he commaundeth theym

with worde onely as theyr lorde & conquerour, and they incontinent whether they wil or no, obey him. Of this wonderfull fact, a great fame of Jesu was spred abrode throughout all the countrey of Galile. And because it shoulde appeare ỳ in him is the wel spryng of godly power, whiche can neuer be cõsumed, one miracle did straight wayes succede and folowe another.

The texte. ¶ And furthwith when they wer come oute of the Synagoge, they entred into the house of Symon, and Andrewe, with James and John. But Symons mother in lawe laye sicke of a feuer, and anon they tell him of her, and he came and toke her by the hande, and lift her vp, and immediatly the feuer forsoke her, & she ministred vnto them. And at euen when the Sunne was doune, they brought vnto him all that were diseased, and them that wer vexed with diuils, and all the cytie was gathered together at the doore, and he healed many that were sicke of diuerse diseases, and cast oute many deuils, and suffred not the diuils to speake, because they knewe him.

For anone as they were departed oute of the synagoge, they came into the house of Symon and Andrewe, whither also James and John folowed. Nowe Symons mother in lawe, as it then fortuned, laye sicke & was sore vexed with an ague. Assone as Jesus was by them aduertised thereof, he went to the bedsyde, and toke the woman by the hand, and lifted her vp, and furthwith the feuer forsoke her, and euen as she was sodaynly, so was she perfectly made whole. For she was sodaynly made as lustie & strong, as she was before, insomuche that she dyd her accustomed office in the house, ministryng vnto Jesu, and his disciples.

He lyeth sicke of a perilous disease, whose mynd burneth with the loue of carnall pleasures: who by reason of superfluitie and excesse, leadeth an ydle and a sluggishe life. It is a woman that lyeth sicke. And at the beginning the fyrst woman deceyued with the pleasant alurement of an apple, began to be sicke of this ague. Our flesche that alwayes lusteth agaynst ỳ spirit is our Eue. But happy are they whome Jesus wyth the touche of his moost holye spirite, lifteth vp to the loue of heauenly thinges, that he whiche before tyme serued ydlenes, riotous liuyng, and vncleannes, may sodaynlye recouer his olde strength, and lustynes, and beyng made a newe man, hereafter become the seruaunte of clennes, chastitie, and sobernes. For these are the meates, whiche Christe is refreshed, and delyghted wythall. Now ymagyne, that the house of Simon, signifyeth the churche of Christ, in the whiche it is not conueniente that there be anye feble and weake in spirite, but suche as are full of euangelike strength, and lustynes: And yet many tymes Peters mother in lawe, that is to saye, the synagoge, lyethe sicke in the same. For he is a membre of the synagoge, vnto whose corrupte tasting, the vnsauerye and werishe letter yet sauoreth: who taketh well the water of Pharisaicall vnderstandyng, and canne in no wyse taste the wyne of the spirite, and true meanyng of the gospell. They that were in the house with the Lorde Jesu, desyred him to lift vp the woman that laye sicke in her bedde. In semblable wise let vs al who are membres of the churche desyre his mercyfull goodnes wyth moost humble prayers, that he wyll vouchesafe to put out his holye right hande, and therewith to lifte vp also those timerous persons, whiche cleauyng onely to the letter of scripture, and wholy geuen to the superstitious obseruacyon of ceremonyes, doue of a certayne vnrighte iudgemente, greatlye desyre those thynges that are hurtful and noysome: and contrarylye, hate and abhorre suche thynges as are onely to be desyred: to lift them vp, I saye to the fredome of the gos-pell, whiche serueth not for this purpose that we shoulde with more libertie commytte sinne at pleasure, but to the intent we should gladly, and with right Good will, doo the workes of Euangelike or christian charitie, and cherishe Jesus in hys membres. The Lorde is alwayes ready to heale the soule, yf he be desired, and called vpon. He loueth those that call vpon him, tal they neuer so importunatly, and out of season.

It was nowe late in the euening, and the sunne was set, so that it myght be thought a greate point of importunitie, to cal vpon the physicion at that tyme. But the greate desyre of health had the vpper hande of shame. They brought vnto him a very greate numbre of suche as wer diseased with all kyndes of infirmities, and among them also, some whiche were vexed with vncleane spirites. The whole cytie of Capernaum came thicke and threfold, to the gate of the house to see this sight. Jesus without excuse healed very many of them of sundrye diseases, and cast out many deuils. He was a quicke and a ready physicion, who with worde cured diseases. Moreouer he putte to silence the deuils, who cryed with a loude voyce that he was Christ, vtterly despisyng the testimonye of his enemyes, and of theim with whome he woulde that his shoulde in no wyse haue to do. He suffered the childzen of the Hebrwes, and fyshers to descry him: But he admitted no record of the deuils, though it were true. The noughtynes of the person that telleth the truth, doth hurte the same. And he doeth more harme w̄ his lyes, whiche hathe gotten him selfe credence afore by some true tale telling. This was then done according to the history. But to open the secrete sence & meanyng hereof. We se verye manye euen nowe a dayes, that come flockyng vnto Symon Peters house: whiche as I sayed before, bare the fygure of the Churche. For the citie of Capernaum representeth the whole worlde: the settyng of the sunne, fygureth the death of Christe. The gate of the house, signifieth baptisme, whiche is beset with repentaunce of the former lyfe, and trust to obtayne soule healthy of Jesus. The sicke people sit about the gates, that is to say, the Publicans & sinners desyre to be receyued into the felowship of the churche. They shoulde not deserue to be healed except they surely beleued that Jesus both could and would geue them helth. The churche of Christ contayned in it but a very smal nūbre, so long as he ꝑ lanterne & light of the worlde, lyued in yearth. But after his death a greate multitude of people began thither to resort, out of al ꝑ coūtreys of ꝑ world.

The texte. ¶ And in the mornyng very early, Jesus (when he was rysen vp) departed, & wente out into a solitary place, & there prayed: Symon, and they that were with hym folowed after him, and when they hadde found him, they sayed vnto him: all men seke for the. And he sayd vnto them: Let vs go into the nexte tounes, that I may preach there also. For therfore I am come. And so he preached in theyr synagoges, & in al Galile, & cast ꝑ deuils out.

These thinges so done: when the Lorde Jesus who came not for this onely purpose to cure corporall diseases, whiche he sendeth many tymes to his to the intent they may be whole in soule: when, I saye, he sawe the multitude greatly desyre to be healed of theyr bodely diseases, and not with like affection couet to heare his heauenlye doctrine, wherewith the maladies and diseases of the soule are cured, the nexte day, as though he had bene desirous to take some ease and rest, he deceyued them, for he roose very earlye in the mornyng, and went from Capernaum into a solitary place, where he made his prayers to the father, geuyng him thankes for the benefytes whyche he hadde decreed to geue vnto mankynde by him. And here are

sundrye ensamples prepared for our instruction. Fyrst he teacheth vs that we must assone as we haue done our neyghbour good, departe awaye: lest we seme to loke after any mede or reward, of those that we haue done good vnto. Secondarily we are taught many tymes to leaue of the teachyng of holsome doctrine for a season, to styrre vp a delyre in vs to aduaūce ỹ same. Finallye we learne also ỹ we ought to refreshe & quicken the spirit, by often going aside into solitary places: I meane not suche goynges apart, as are for pleasure & passtime, but for prayer, & heauenly contẽplacion: because we may retourne frō thence more willing in spirit, & better disposed to helpe the weake. Euery man which hath chaūged place, is not gone into wildernes, but he that hath cleane seuered his mynde frō worldly cares, & wholy bent himself to the studie, and contẽplacion of heauenly thinges. ¶ When Simon Peter, and the reste of the disciples vnderstode that Jesus was priuilye departed, they folowed after till they had found where he was. For it is not beseming that the true disciples of Jesu be any time away from their maister, whom they ought in al thinges to folow. In the meane seasō, when ỹ people, which flocked early in the morning to the gate of the house, had also learned how Jesus was gone awaye, they lykewyse folowed hym into the wildernesse. Many there be that folow Jesus, but none fynde him out saue alonly his disciples: who after they haue once found him, do shew him vnto other. Wherfore they told the lorde, how there was a great multitude of the citizens of Capernaum come thyther to seke him. The lorde then answered agayne saying. It is sufficient at this presente, to haue layde, these foundacions among the Capernaites. Nowe it is tyme for me to go in like maner, & visit the litle tounes, & villages here about, that I maye likewise there preache ỹ kingdōe of god. For I came not to preache to one citie alone, but to declare saluacion to al men. For this cause the Lord traueled through the tounes, and villages of al Galile, preachyng in theyr Synagoges, curyng diseases, and casting out deuils, because the ignorant people should by reasō of his mighty deedes & miracles, geue firme credēce vnto his doctrin.

And he sayde vnto them, let vs go. &c.

¶ And there came a leper to him, beseching him, and kneling doune, and saying vnto him: If thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane. And Jesus had compassion on him, and put furth his hand, touched him, and sayth vnto him: I will, be thou cleane. And assone as he had spoken, immediatly the leprosye departed from him, and he sent hym awaye furthwith, and sayth vnto him: se thou saye nothyng to any man, but get the hence, shewe thy self to the priest, and offer for thy clensyng, those thynges whiche Moses cōmaunded, for a witnes vnto them. But he (assone as he was departed) began to tell manye thinges, and to publishe the saying, in so muche that Jesus coulde nomore openlye entre into the cyte, But was without in desert places, and they came to hym from euery quarter.

The texte.

It chaunced on a time when Jesus had taught the people in a certain mountayne many godly lessons, concernyng the perfectiō of the euangelike or christian profession, that there met him, as he came doune againe, a certain mā infected with leprosy, a disease vncurable, and abhorred of al men: in whom was shewed to the corporall eyes, a figure of those thynges whyche he wrought by inuisible operatiō in the soules of the hearers. The leper hated his filthy disease, & had a maruelous great confidence in Jesu. Here thou seest a figure of a sinner, whiche returning from vicious liuyng, & entending to amend, is at the next dore to saluacion. The same leper feared not ỹ people although he knew right wel ỹ they abhorred his company, but onely regarded the goodnes of Jesu. Wherfore he ranne vnto him, & fell downe at his knees,

his knees. What woulde the proude Pharisey here do? He would cry: hence with this ougly & abhominable creature, least he infect euen our very yes. He would call for water to washe away his noysome, & contagious breath. This would the Pharisey do, more vncleane in soule, thē any leper in body. But what doth the most meke and gentil Lorde, whiche onely was cleane frō al spot of sinne? He cōmaūdeth him not to be had out of his sight, nor to be remoued away frō his knees. It was not vnknowen vnto him what he desyred: but his wil was ỹ the notable fayth of this mā, shoulde be an ensāple to al men. Al suche as be lecherous persons, couetous, full of hatred and enuy, or attached w̄ any other filthy lustes & appetites of the body, are foule arayed with this horrible & detestable leprosy. And such as are herewith infected, let thē heare, & marke the wordes of this leper, to thintent they maye folowe him. If thou wilt, sayth he, thou canste make me cleane. He knowledgeth his disease, & doubteth not of the power, & goodnes of god. He wholy referreth the iudgement to the Lorde, to iudge of him whether he be worthy to receiue so great a benefite at his handes, or no: ready to geue thākes yf he obtayne his desyre: & not to murmur, and grude agaynst him, yf he obtayn it not. For he would say thus: He is able to put away leprosy, who not onely cureth all kyndes of diseases, but also casteth out deuils: and he wyll do it, that so willingly helpeth all that are in distresse and misery, whersoeuer he cummeth. But so greate is myne vnworthynes, that I alone deserue not that, which al other obtayn of his most merciful goodnes. This so perfite a belefe, ioyned with excedyng humblenes of mynde, and modestye, procured him mercy of Iesu. For our sauioure shewing outwardly, euen wyth hys countenaunce, a certayne affecte of pitye and compassyon, thereby to teache what affeccion of mynde oughte to be in vs towarde synners, held oute his hande, and therewith touched the leaper, and by vertue of woordes that himself prescribed, made him cleane. The leper sayd: If thou wilte thou canst make me cleane. Iesus answered: I wil, be thou cleane. True fayth maketh not manye woordes: neyther grudgeth the charitye of the Gospell to do a good dede. And Christe had scarcelye spoken these woordes (be cleane) but the dysease was quite gone from the man, so that no token thereof remayned. The lawe of Moyses forbendeth to touche a leaper, the spirituall meanyng whereof, contayneth holsome doctryne. We muste abstayne from the companye of vncleane persons and synners, least we bee infected by the contagiousenes of their vyces. But the Lorde Iesus is aboue the lawe: neyther can he be defyled with touchinge, who purifyeth whatsoeuer he toucheth. He touched the leaper with his hande, and furthwith he healed his hole bodye. Let vs therfore pray that he maye in semblable wyse touche our soules with his holy word, & therwith purify our inward vnclēnes. O thou that vsest to haūt the cōpany of harlots, thou that arte an adulterer, or polluted with like diseases, runne in like maner vnto Iesus (for he cūmeth doune frō the heigth of his maiestie, & meteth the) & knowing thine own filthines, fal doune at his knees, prostrate thy selfe, and lye flatte vpō the ground: Cry & cal vpon him, but cry with most stedfast belefe of harte & mind: Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane. And anon thou shalte heare these woordes agayne of thy mercyfull sauioure, I wil, be thou cleane. After these thynges wer done in maner before rehearsed, the Lord suffered not the

not the man to folow him, but caused him to depart, cõmaũding him straitly to disclose nothyng of this mattier to any creature lyuyng, but rather (sayd he) get the hence, and shewe thy selfe to the priest, by whose iudgemẽt accordyng to ỹ ceremonies of the law, thou wast iudged to be a leaper. And if he geue sentence that thou art clensed in deede of thy leprosy, then offer ỹ Moses hath cõmaũded to be offered, of those that should fortune to be deliuered therof. Thus shalt thou wt more credẽce publish gods benefit towardes the, then if thou strayght wayes tell euery body that thou art made cleane. For by this meanes it shal appeare, euẽ vnto ỹ Pharisees thẽselfes, whiche depraue my benefyttes, that thou wast a very leper, and hast been clensed without eyther helpe of the Phisicians, orels of Moyses lawe, by bare woord of mouthe, and touche onely: and so shall they knowe howe there is one prefẽt that farre passeth their priestes: who can easily cure leprosy, though it be detestable and abhorred, where as they haue muche ado truely to discerne the same. This felowe departed, in stede of a leper cleane in bodye, and wente to the priest, and was seene and iudged to be cleansed of all leprosie. And anon after, he conceled not this deede, but publyshed it euerywhere, reportynge bothe this, and many other thynges of Jesu. Sum wyl here aske: Why did this man as he was commaũded in the one thyng, and in the other nothing regarde the Lordes commaundement? Truely for that the one serued to cõfyrme the certaintie of the myracle, because the Priest not knowynge as yet who had healed the manne, should pronounce his healthe restored by Jesu, to be a perfite health, who els peraduenture would haue depraued Christes benefite, yf the auctour therof hadde been knowen, before he had geuen his verdite.

But after the miracle was once confirmed by his sentence, thẽ made it muche for gods glory to haue it published abrode. Wherfore thẽ cõmaũded Jesu ỹ thing to be kept secrete, whiche in dede his will was should be blased abrode and vttred. Forsoth to monish vs that we ought to seke no glorye and praise of man for the benefites which it pleaseth god to wurk by vs, because the goodlyer prayse euer foloweth them whiche refuse the same. It proceedeth of an hyghe courage so to do a good turne, that thou wouldest haue no thankes therfore yelden the of hym, whom thou hast doen good and pleasure vnto, beyng onely contented with this, that it lay in thy lotte to healpe thine euen christen in his necessitie. But he ỹ is holpen by suche benefite, as he hath receyued at thy handes, ought with so muche the more diligence to publishe and set oute thy well doyng euery where to thy prayse and cõmendacion. Christe was in no daunger to offende in vayngloryе: and therfore this ensample was ordeyned for our instruccion, whiche are continually in very greate ieopardye to fall therein. Neyther dyd this manne contemne Christes cõmaundementes: but the great gladnes that he was in by reason of the restitucion of his healthe, & a certayn feruent loue whiche he was kindled with towardes Christ the auctour therof, would not suffer him to keepe silence any longer. Verily it chaunceth for the moste part that we are beste beleued, when we tel those thynges whiche we had rather in very dede kepe secrete, then disclose, if the matter it selfe enforced not vs to vtter that whiche lyeth hid in our stomackes. Nowe what came of it that this man dyd thus blase abrode this myracle? Truely by reason thereof, euery man conceyued suche an opinion of the Lord Jesu, ỹ he could not now for the great throng and preasse of people that thyther resorted, openly enter into the citie, as he was wount to doe: but was constrayned to auoyd the good tounes, & make his abode in the wyldernesse. Suche as goe about to get a name, and gaynes by iugglyng castes, and woorkyng of Magicall miracles, desire to bee in those cities, where as moste haunt and resort of people is. But our sauiour Jesus, in that he ofttymes shunneth muche assembly of people, plainly teacheth vs what we ought to doe. He that is able to woorke the miracles of the Ghospel, dooeth not so muche desire the great multitude, as the feruẽt mynde and affeccion of beholders. In great cities many resorted vnto hym for this purpose onely, to delite their iyes with newe and straunge sightes.

No man followeth Jesus into the wyldernesse, vnlesse he longe after hym with a certain vehement desire and affeccion. He that forgoeth al pleasures of good tounes, and followeth Christe through rough and cumberous places, followeth hym to his great commoditie. For he that loueth hym vnfainedly, doth in all thinges folowe hym whom he loueth: thorough reproche, hungre, despoylyng of substaunce, banyshemente, imprisonment, tourmentes and death. And suche folowers of Christ, wer figured by those that came flockyng out of all countreyes, and partes of Galile, vnto Jesu: who kepte hymself close, in desert and solitary places.

The. ii. Chapter.

BVt whyther soeuer a manne flyeth, vertue hath euer her fame and glorye folowyng her, euen as the shadowe followeth the bodie. For he that is vnfaynedly good, can neuer be but one maner of man, and lyke hymselfe. And as there is alwaies light, whyther soeuer the body of ỹ sũne remoueth: euen so to what place soeuer true godlinesse remoueth, there is alwais great resort of people. Now wildernesse was no longer wildernesse, after the Lord Jesus the true light of this world, was gon thither. And yet the person in whom is the power to woorke the miracles of the Ghospell, ceasseth not (as muche as in hym lyeth) to auoyde suche places where as muche people is assẽbled to behold hym, for that he knoweth certainly what a perelous vice vainglory is: Neuertheless the feruent desire he hath to helpe and do all men good, doeth ofttymes cause hym, though it be against his nature, to haue recourse thyther againe. And by this meanes cummeth it to passe, that whyles the good man is compelled to remoue from place to place, the mo receiueth benefite at his handes.

The text. ¶ After a fewe dayes also he entered into Capernaum agayne, and it was noysed that he was in the house, and anon many were gathered together: in so muche that now there was no roume to receyue them, no, not so muche as about the doore. He preached the word vnto them. And there came certaine vnto hym bringyng one sicke of the Palsye, whiche was borne of fower men. And when they could not cum nye vnto hym for preasse, they vncouered the roofe of the house that he was in. And when they had broken vp the roofe, they dyd (with cordes) let downe the bed, wherin the sicke of the Palsey lay. Whē Jesus sawe ſus ſawe theyr fayth, he ſayde vnto the ſicke of the Palſey: ſonne, thy ſynnes be forgeuen the.

Wherfore Jeſus geuyng vs enſample bothe to flye bayneglorye, and alſo continually to do good vnto our euen chriſten, within fewe dayes after retourned agayne to Capernaum, from whence he ſemed to be driuen away before, by reaſon of the great importunitie of the people, whiche euen in the nyghte tyme, laye aboute the gates of the houſe wherein he ſo tourned. For as he made Bethleem muche renoumed by his byrthe, and Nazareth verye famous by his education, and the countreye of Egypte happye becauſe he fled thyther for his preſeruacion and ſafegarde, ſo did he as it were adopte: and chooſe Capernaum to be his countreye, bothe by his ofte tariyng there, and alſo by ſhewynge of many fayre myracles in theſame. He came agayne hyther in maner by ſtealth, and fyrſte kept hymſelf ſecrete in a houſe, before it was knowen in the citie that he was cum. But as the Sunne cannot be hid, ſo the Lorde Jeſus cannot be kept cloſe and ſecrete. The rumour whiche (as it is commonly ſeene,) roſe of a fewe perſons, had nowe blowen abrode throughout the whole Citie, that Jeſus was in the houſe. And foorthwith thither flocked ſuche a multitude of people, that all that houſe was fylled, and not onely that, but alſo the porche, and al the places about the doore, were not ſuffycient to receyue them. It is a bleſſed houſe whither Jeſus is cum to dwell, and neuer departeth thence agayne. That howſe is the Churche. For Capernaum beareth the fygure of the wholle worlde, whereſoeuer the Gentyles inhabite. Certes at Jeruſalem the Jewes caſte Jeſus oute of the Temple, and among the Gentyles, the kyngdome of heauen ſuffereth violence, and the multitude of all ſortes of people entereth into it, after a certayne forceyble faſhion. The Chriſtian Nouices ſitte aboute the gates, greatlye deſiryng to be admitted into the Lordes houſe, muche hungryng and thirſtyng after the righteouſneſſe of the kyngdome of heauen. And verily Jeſus excludeth no manne from this houſe, neyther poore, nor riche, wholle, nor ſycke, ſo that he haue a vehement deſire to heare hym.

He preached & woorde vnto them. &c.

Wherfore the Lorde teachynge vs that we oughte alwayes chiefly to care for our ſoule health, and afterwarde for our bodyes, fyrſte of all miniſtred vnto theym the doctrine of the Ghoſpell, wherewith the diſeaſes and maladies of the ſowle, are cured. For this cauſe ſuche as are diſpoſed to giue almes to the poore, dooe verye well, yf they geue theym fyrſt a briefe exhortacion, that maye make them the better in mynde and ſoule, and then departe with their charitie. For the common ſorte of people bee of ſuche a diſordered iudgement, that they are more deſirous of thoſe thinges whiche are expedyente for the bodye, then of thoſe that pertain to their ſowle health. The Lorde euidentelye declared vnto vs by his enſaumple, that our chyefe care oughte to be for that parte, whiche is the chyefeſte parte or portion of manne, in that he fyrſte taughte, and then by and by healed ſuche as were diſeaſed.

And there cãe certayne vnto hym. &c.

Nowe whyles Jeſus was teachyng, and buſie about curing the diſeaſes of their ſoules, there came vnto hym certayne menne, bringyng with theym one that was ſicke of a Palſey, whoſe ſenowes were ſo reſolued in all partes of his bodye, throughe the violence of the diſeaſe, that he coulde not ſtyrre out of his bed, but was fayne to be caryed thyther, vpon fower mennes ſhoulders,

Here

Here hast thou plainly set out, the very ymage and figure of a mynde, which is by worldly lustes and desires, made so womanlyke, and dissolute, that it canne in no wyse lyfte vp it self, to doo any thyng that is good and godlye, but lyeth styll in the bedde of lowe and filthy cares, and neuer remembreth any thyng that is highe or celestiall. Now when they saw how they coulde not for preasse of people that sate so thicke about the gate and porche, bryng this sycke man to the syghte of Jesus, they lyfted hym vp vpon the howse, and after they had remoued the slates, and made a waye in, they lette hym downe bed and all, with a longe corde, and layed hym at the feete of Jesu, nothyng doubtyng but that he of his great mercye and goodnesse, woulde helpe the selie wretche, assone as he once caste those his pitifull eyes vppon him, and behelde how he laye in his bed lyke a quicke karkas, impotente, & benummed in all his lymmes. Jesus sawe this miserable person, euen before he was broughte vnto his presence, and knewe rycht well the greate faith of those that brought him. He coulde if it had lyked him, without leauing or breakyng his tale, haue signified his pleasure vnto them, by whom he had luste, in this wyse: Let the sicke of the palsie arise, and beyng sodainly healed, cary home his bed again. But his will was to shewe all men there present, that piteous sight: and also to declare of what great strēgth and efficacie true belefe vpon hym is, with almighty God the father. The disease was vncurable, and of long continuaunce: the cummyng to Christ very cūberous. And yet the gracious goodnesse of the Lord, ioyned with like power put them in a sure hope to obtain their request. Wherfore after he saw their notable faithe, the more he perceiued the man to be diseased in soule then in bodie, the more pitie and compassion he toke on hym. Euery man thoughte him in a miserable case that thus lacked the vse of al his mēbres: but more miserable was his soule, beyng in subiection and bondage of sinne. They loked after nothyng els but that the poore wretche should be restored to perfite health of body, whiche was a thyng farre aboue mans power. But Jesus beyng highly pleased with so notable a faithe, and therefore willing to make hym all, and in euery part whole, tourned vnto him, and said: Sōne, thy sinnes are forgeuen.

¶ But there were certayne of the Scribes sitting there, and thynkynge in theyr hertes: Why doth he speake these blasphemies? Who can forgeue synnes, but God onelye? And immediatlye when Jesus perceyued in his spirite, that they so thought wythin them selues, he sayth vnto them: why thynke ye suche thynges in youre hertes? whether is it easyer to say to the sicke of ꝑ palsey, thy synnes be forgeuen the, or to say, arise take vp thy bed and walke. But that ye may knowe that the sonne of man hathe power in earth to forgeue synnes, he spake vnto the sicke of the palsey: I saye vnto the aryse, and take vp thy bed, and get the hence vnto thyne owne house. And immediately he arose, toke vp the bed, and went forth before them all, insomuche that they were all amased, & glorifyed God, saying: we neuer sawe it on this fashion.

There wer present in that assembly, certain Scribes, who for the knowe-ledge they had in the scriptures, wer neuer the godlier, and better in theyr liuyng, but rather more enclined to surmise matters against hym. They had learned of the bokes of the prophetes, & Moyses, ꝑ it perteineth to God alone to pardō sinnes. For the prieste dyd not release sinne, but made intercession vnto god for other mens offēces, & that not wout sacrifice. Because ꝑ Scribes knewe this right well, they had suche secrete thoughtes & imaginatiōs w̄ themselfes: What new saying is this that he speaketh, whiche neyther

Moyses

Moses, nor Aaron, nor any of the aunciente Prophetes, durste presume to speake. For he sayeth: thy synnes are released. Truely he is a blasphemous person againste God, that thus taketh vpon hym goddes power. The lawe commaundeth sum offences to be punyshed with death. And other sum there are, for the whiche satisfaccion is made with burnte offerynges, and diuers other kyndes of sacrifices, by the mediacion or intercession of the priest: But he passyng nothyng vpon suche rites and ceremonies, dooeth at once forgeue all synnes, with bare word of mouth. This thyng that he taketh vpon hym, and promyseth, pertayneth not to man. It lyeth in Goddes power alone to perfourme it. Surely they were offended with the imbecillitie and weakenesse of his manhoode that they sawe, and therfore coulde suppose nothyng of hym, aboue the state and condicion of manne. Neyther had the vulgar people any greatter opinion of hym, whiche yet by reason of their simplicitie, were not so muche enclyned to pyeke quarels, as the other were. The spirite of this worlde put those thoughtes in their myndes, who whyles they stacke harde to the lytterall sence of Moyses lawe, were farre from the spirite, and true meanyng thereof, and wer so muche the more vnapte to be taught thesame, because they thought themselfes very well skylled in the Scriptures: in so muche that thesame thyng hath here also place, and is verified, whiche we see chaunce amonge paynters, and singyng mē, who are wont to take lesse for teachyng of one that is altogether rude, and ignorannte in their arte or science, then for hym who hath been euel enstructed of an other mayster in thesame: and the reason is, because in teachyng of the ignorannte, there is but one labour to be taken: whereas yf a manne take vpon hym to enstructe the other, as it is the fyrste, so is it the more paynfull labour to teache hym to forget, what he hath learned before, then to teache hym. And these vngodly thoughtes, they of a certayne worldly policie, kepte in their stomackes, for feare of the people, in whose presence they muche aduaunted and magnifyed themselfes for theyr greate knowledge and vnderstandyng. The Lorde Jesus who rather desyered to declare his diuine power by dedes, then to vttre thesame by woordes, bicause he would plainly shewe the Scribes howe there is nothyng so closely hidde in mennes brestes, be they neuer so suttle and craftie, that his holye spirite (whiche searcheth, and throughly seeth all thynges) knoweth not, tourned hym vnto them, and as though they had spoken out those thynges, whiche they inwardly thought in their myndes, sayed in this wise: Why haue you suche slaunderous imaginacions in your hertes? why doe you rather iudge me by this weake and feble bodye of myne, then by my deedes?

And immedietly when Jesus perceiued in his spirite.

Why thynke you such thinges in your hertes, &c.

Why dooe you not gather of these my workes whiche you see with your iyes, and cannot denye, that those thynges are of trueth, whiche canne in no wyse be seene with your corporal iyes? You are offended with me because I sayde: Thy synnes are forgeuen: and deeme it to be a vayne saiyng, and of none effecte, because you see not the efficacie therof, whiche putteth foorth it self in the soule of manne. But you that haue bodilye iyes whole and faultelesse, haue spirituall iyes faultie and blemished.

What yf I speake lyke woordes vnto the other, and make the efficacie thereof appeare vnto your iyes? Is it not then reason that you beleue the thyng whiche you see not, beeyng therevnto enduced by the thynge you you see & There is nothyng that man can easelyer doe, then speake: and contrarilye, there is nothyng so harde, as to perfourme what is spoken. God alone can as easily dooe the one as the other. And though hytherto he neuer gaue this power to man, yet it is not oute of his power to geue it to whom it pleaseth hym. And long sithens he promysed by the Prophetes, that he woulde sende his Messias, who should cure the diseases of the people of Israell, and abolishe and cleane take awaye synnes. Therfore regard you not this symple bodye of myne, lyke in all poyntes to yours: neyther beholde ye my garmente, not decked and trymmed with Phylacteries, and embroudered hemmes: nor yet my speache nothyng differyng from other mennes. Let the thyng selfe be the grounde and foundacion of your iudgement. It is no maysterye for a manne to say vnto a synner: Thy synnes are pardoned. And it is lyke easye to say vnto ỹ sicke of the Palsey: Arise, take thy bedde, and walke. You haue heard me speake the one saying, and fynde fault therewith. Now heare ye the other, whiche ye cannot lykewyse fynde faulte withal, when you see euidently with your eyes, how the thyng ensueth immediatly of my wordes. And this will I dooe, not to boast and brag vpon my power, but to the entent you may perceiue that God hath geuen power vnto the sonne of manne, who appeareth vnto you an vnderlynge & a weake person, to release synnes with worde, (whiche power your prynces neuer had) & that not in Iewry alonelye, but also in all regions and cõtreyes of the world, in suche wyse, that what soeuer he releaseth in earthe, is released in heauen, & whatsoeuer he leuseth not in earth, the same remayneth still bounde & vnleused in heauen. You haue no cause to picke quarels, & surmyse matiers agaynste me: but to reioyce and be glad for your singuler welth and cõmodities, if god of his infinite mercy haue encreased his bõteous goodnes towardes you. If you saye that God cannot thus doe, then do you derogate or diminishe his Maiestie. If you say he wyl not, you offende his goodnesse. If you say he dooeth not, albeit he hath once promysed so to do, then do you make hym a lyar. Finally yf you be voyde of beleke in suche thynges as are spirituall and pertain vnto the soule, where as ye cannot thwart and cauyll in the thynges you see dooen before your eyes, then do you plainly declare your obstinate malice.

But that ye maye knowe that the sõne of man. &c.

When Iesus had spoken these wordes, and they diligently marked what he would dooe, he tourned hym to the sicke of the Palsey, and sayde: I saye vnto the, arise, take vp thy bed, and goe hence into thy house. And he had scarcelye spoken these wordes, but an effectuall vertue therof, manifestly ensued. For the sicke manne began not by litle and litle, and at the length with muche a dooe to moue hymselfe: But assone as Iesus had spoken the word, he raysed hymselfe, and stoode vp as lustie and couragious, as though he had neuer felte any Palsey at all. Then lifted he vp his bedde, and layed it on his shoulders, & so went out through the prease of people, shewyng thẽ al a new sight, that neuer had been sene before that day, in as much as he who was a litle before bedred, and caried lyke a dead karkas, on fower mennes shoulders, was nowe cranke, and lustie: yea and able ynough without any helpe, to carrye so great a burden. They made him roume to go out, who woulde geue hym none to cum in. And bothe these thynges wer right expedient to be doen. Fyrste that the people should not let hym haue entraũce,

He spake vnto the sicke of the Palsey. &c

because to make the greatnesse of his faythe manifest to them all: then that roume should be made him to go out through the middest of the preasse, because euery body might see this wonderfull sight and miracle. The scribes sawe these thinges, and were not onely neuer the better therfore, but also more enuious, and maliciously set agaynst Jesu. The residewe, so many as were present, being greatly amased with this straunge miracle, glorified god, who had geuē suche power to man, with bare worde of mouth both to forgiue sines, & also to heale an vncurable disease, truly confessing that among all the marueylous deades, whiche were eyther reported to be done of ỹ holy men that were before theyr daies, or els of suche as liued in theyr tyme, there was none comparable vnto this. Now if we stand styl many tymes when we see thinges wrought by grauers & paynters, & diligently behold and bewe euery poynt of the workemanshippe, alwayes espying some newe thing, that we sawe not before: me thinketh it right expedient that we staye & tarrie here a while, to behold this notable sight, & wō godly curiositie, to consider euery thing: because what so euer the Lorde dyd in earthe, he dyd it for this purpose, that we studying the mysteries therof, should pieke out for our instruction, what so euer cōduceth to vertuouse & godly liuing. And this shall we doe wō muche more profite, if we first consider what was outwardlye shewed vnto the corporall yes: then what was signified by this figure to be inwardly wrought in mens sowles. Let vs therfore fyrst of all ponder the violence & greatnesse of this dysease, which the lord Jesus cured with worde. For the palsey is nothing els but a noysome humour, ỹ taketh & astoyneth the sinowes of the body, whiche are the instrumentes of mouing, so that he that is sicke of this disease, hath members not to vse, but to payne him wō greuous burthē, & doth almost appeare to be a lyue carkas lyuing only to his payn, & tourmēt. And for ỹ most parte, this disease either riddeth a man sodaynly out of the worlde, or els if it chaunce not so to doe, then after long cōtinewaunce, it maketh an end of him, wō a more cruell and paynful death: & is one of those diseases, that the phisicians recken vncurable. & for that cause wyl not by their good wil, medle with all, or els if they assaye to ouercome it, then at the length, after they haue a greate while striuen therewith in vayne, they as the weaker parte, geue it ouer, and forsake theyr cure. specially if the sayd disease haue once taken not one, or two partes, but the whole bodye. Now how vncurable this mans disease was, it plainly appeared in that he kepte his bed cōtinually, & was borne like a dead carkas, on fower mens shoulders. Furthermore this kynd of disease, many tymes maketh a mā speachlesse, & also febleth & dulleth ỹ quicknesse of ỹ wyt. And so did it fare (as it semeth) wō this pacient, who albeit ỹ he was in this yuell takyng, yet neuer desired he the lorde to helpe him. Who is so hard harted, whome so pitiefull a sight would not moue to compassion? who woulde not thinke suche a one to be in better case dead, then after this manoure alyue? But now, christian man, beholde a lytle while wō thy spiritual yes, & cōsidre how muche worse is the palsey of that mannes sowle, whose powers are altogether entangled wō the most trifling cares of transitory thinges, & worldly vanities, in so muche that whē he should doe any charitable deed or worke of mercye, then is he altogether benūmed & taken with a palsey, so that he hath neither hādes to releue the pore at theyr nede, nor feete to goe to Jesus,

In so muche ỹ they were al amased, &c.

hor tongue to desire his sauiour to helpe him: but as one cleane deade to Iustice, is carried about hither and thither, whither so euer it pleaseth the sensuall lustes & appetites of his bodye, whiche be as it were hys porters, to carry him. What shall ỹ sely soule doe, whiche because it is altogether dissolute, & weakened by superfluitie, by carnal pleasure, by inordinate desire of vaine glorye, & worldlye riches, hath no strength at al to lift vp it selfe frō ỹ filthy cares of this world, to ỹ loue of heauenly thinges? It is altogether fastened to the naughtie bed of carnal lustes, and therin lieth, & resteth. And being in this case, it farre passeth mās power to help it. Only Iesus is able with his almyghty cōmaundement, to put awaye al ỹ violēce of this disease. Wherfore we ought to resorte vnto this physician, vnto whome no disease is vncurable, but not without a greate faith, whiche may dos so muche wt̄ him ỹ this pacīēt was holpē euen for the belefe of other mē. They prayed not wt̄ woordes, but yet were they earnest suters in deed. Whē fayth hartely desireth any thing of Christ, her request is very affectual, & no meruel sith that euen we mortall men, fele great carefulnesse in our mindes (such are ỹ natural affectiōs of man) when we see one ỹ hangeth vpon vs, wt̄ al his hart & mynd, & hath put his sure cōfidence & trust in vs. God requireth of sinners, neither burnt sacrifices, nor offered giftes. Onely acknowleage thy sickenes & trust in thy physician: & yet no man can make the able thus to doe, but god alone. For after that he of his inestimable goodnesse, hath once decreed to heale the sowle taken with ỹ palsey, he first of all putteth into it, a certayne wonderfull heauynesse, and yrkesomnesse of ones selfe, in so muche that the sinner hateth him selfe, & is werye of his former lyfe. Nowe he seeth in what ignorauunce and darkenesse he hath bene of long season, what greuous offences he was wonte to cōmitte, and abhorreth him selfe, & woulde without doubte, be in vtter despayre of saluacion, vnlesse he that put in the vynegre of sorowe, dyd also giue him the oyle of good hope. The iustice of god, sore troubleth the sinnefull soule. It threatneth wt̄ vēgeaunce, & punishmēt due vnto the sinnes: It threatneth wt̄ hell and damnacion. But on ỹ otherside ỹ remembraunce of the goodnesse & great mercye of god, calleth backe ỹ siner from desperacyon, for that god seketh not the death of a sinner but willeth rather that he tourne and lyue. The lorde Iesus who restored the law of nature, and destroyed not Moyses lawe, but made it perfite, did also applye hym self to the common reason & iudgement of the vulgare people. As the pocion mynistred by a faythfull physician, sore vexeth the whole bodye, and bringeth it out of quyet, specially in a ieperdous disease, & the more it worketh, and troubleth the pacient, the more hope is there of healthe: euen so the nearer vnto desperacīō the penitent sinner is, ỹ nearer is he to his soule health, Iesu being his physician. Now marke me wel a shamefast vnshamfastnesse. For shame, as it is commonly sayd, is vnprofitable to the neady man. Shame putteth awaye shame, euen as one nayle dryueth out an other. It is an vnprofitable shame that causeth a man to hyde and kepe secrete his sickenesse. This shame is put awaye by the longe werynesse of the disease, and the greate hope ỹ a manne hathe, to recouer his healthe, and nowe is he not ashamed to confesse his sickenesse, because he is ashamed to be sicke. What man if he be greuously diseased in his bodye, hathe any regarde of shame at all? Doe not men in suche case discouer, euen the moste

preuie membres of theyr bodies, and suffer the physician to handle them: Lyke affection of mynde is in him, who hath begonne to knowlege the filthie disease of his soule. For what lewder pageaunte or prãke could there be playde, then to clime vp vpõ another mãnes house, to cast downe ꝑ tyles, to make an hole, & cõuey doune frõ aboue, a fowle sight that euery body abhorreth, & laye it before all theyr eyes? What would the proud pharysey haue sayde here? Certes he would haue cried: Oh vilanous dede: & ouer this haue rayled out of measure agaynst theyr lewdnesse, who had contrary to ꝑ cõmon lawe, made an hole, and forcibile entred into an other mãnes seuerall house, and with suche a deadly sight, both interrupted the holy preachyng of goddes worde, and also defiled the iyes of the audience. He would de haue commaunded the carkaslyke sickeman to be had awaye, and then haue al to washed him self w̃ water. But with those thinges, in asmuche as they were an euident proofe and argument of a notable fayth towardes him, the Lorde Jesus was highly delited, which they ꝑ crake vpon ꝑ right wisnesse of Moyses lawe, would haue bene offended w̃ all: in somuche that he, & ꝑ not loking to be desired, healed this miserable creature: & first of al he cured the diseases of his soule, whiche are sinnes, and thẽ forth with delyuerd his body of the palsey, because that as there are many vices, whiche after they haue taken theyr beginning of the bodye, doe frõ thence redound into the soule: so it chaunceth oftẽtymes that the body is infected with the disease, that is kyndred & ingendred in ꝑ sowle: as when lecherie whiche is engendred of the humours of the flesshe, defileth the sowle, and from thence returneth agayne her maladie and puell effect into the body, there causing eyther the palsey, or the falling puel: or els when ꝑ enuie, whiche taketh her beginning of a vicious soule, doth also wast ꝑ body, & bring it to a cõsumptiõ. He onely is able to cure both the partes of man, whiche made bothe. Here is it also to be cõsidred, how great was ꝑ largesse of Jesu in forgiuing of sinnes. For whẽ he saith: thy sinnes are remitted, he leuseth them all together. Neyther is there any mẽcion made of ꝑ merites past, nor any requiring of sacrifices, or satisfactiõ, but menciõ of faith only. It is ynough hũbly to haue come to the feet of Jesus. That mã hath made sufficiẽt sacrifice, who with perfecte fayth hath shewed him selfe vnto Jesu. thẽ which sacrifice, there is none more acceptable vnto him. The sicke of the palsey was wholly displeased w̃ him selfe, both for that he knewe his owne sinful liuing, & also because his body was oppressed w̃ so miserable a sicknesse. All his trust was in the myghty goodnes of Jesu, who made him all hole, because he wholly cõmitted hym self vnto this physician: he cõsidred not howe vncurable was his disease but only regarded how mighty, & good was that physician, vnto whõ he cõmitted him self. Now what hope of recouerie is there in those persons, that cherish, & make much of theyr disease, ꝑ flie out of ꝑ physicias sight, yea that hate, & abhorre him. If thou be ashamed to acknowledge thy sickenesse, to a man physiciã, or els if thou haue any mistrust in him, who peraduenture when he knoweth thy syckenes, will rather bit the in the teeth there with, thẽ cure the same, yet hide it not frõ Christe, who discloseth no mannes offences but healeth all men, & that freely: & thus do thou to thentent it maye lykewise chaunce vnto the, as it chaũced to ꝑ sicke of the palsey. What dyd he? He al thinges now tourned cleane cõtrary, lifted vp his bed on his shoulders, as one ruling his sensuall apetites & passiõs, whiche he serued before. For this is the very thing that is meãt by bearing of the crosse. This is it that is vnderstand, by crucifying the fleth wt her vices & cõcupicences. Now neadeth he no more power porters to carrye him. He walketh on his owne feete, whither so euer the spirite of Christe leadeth him, neither goeth he, but whither he is cõmaunded to goe. For what is it to walke, but by continuall encrease of vertue, still to goe forward, and euerye daye to war better & better: what is it to returne into the house fro whẽce he came, but to knowleage in what case he came out from thence, and by whose benefite, he returned thither agayne, soodaynly chaũged & altered both in body & soule. For it is the propertie of the pharisies, to dwel without in stretes, market places, and where as cõuenticles & vnlawfull assembles be. He dwelleth at home in his owne house, who so knoweth howe nought and vertueless he is of him selfe, and wholly ascribeth what vertue and goodnesse so euer he hath, to the free liberalitie of our sautour. Now will I dismisse the from any lengre beholdinge of this sight, after I haue rehersed vnto the by waye of epilogaciõ, the persones of this scene or pageaũte. The sicke of the palsey, & they ꝑ carrye him, be made shameless throughe theyr great kaythe, & obtayne theyr peticion. Iesus is so muche delited wt theyr kaythe, that euen of his owne accord, and not desired of thẽ, he doubleth his benefyte. The simple & vnlearned people, discerning nothing in him, whõ they beleued to be nought els but a man, only merueileth at the power of god. The scribes alone muttre softly with them selfes against Iesu. Let vs therefore erchewe the ensample of ꝑ sayde scribes, who whiles they studie to aduaunce theyr owne glorie, go aboute to dusk the glorie of Iesu. Let vs be of the simple sort of people, and with them glorifie God, not only if it please him at any tyme of his greate mercifull goodnesse to heale the infirmytye of our soules, but also when soeuer we se any other, through his sayde bounteous goodnes, forsake theyr olde vicious liuing, and come to amendemente.

The texte. And he wente againe vnto the sea, and all the people resorted vnto him, & he taught them. And as Iesus passed by, he sawe Leuy the sone of Alphey, sitting at the receipte of custome, and sayd vnto him: folowe me. And he arose & folowed him. And it came to passe that when Iesus sate at meate in his house, many publicanes and synners sate also together at meate with Iesus, and his disciples. For there were manye that folowed him. And when the Scribes and Pharises sawe him eate with publicanes & sinners, they sayd vnto his disciples. How happeueth it that he eateth and drinketh with publicanes and sinners. When Iesus heard de that, he said vnto them: they that be hole haue no nede of ꝑ phisician, but they that are sicke: I came not to call the righteouse, but sinners to repentaunce.

After this so notable a miracle was wrought at Capernaum, Iesu, to thentente he might doe good to moe, departed thence agayne, and wente to the sea. He did not conueye him selfe awaye, because he would not helpe mẽ & doe them good, but whiles he forsoke the vncurable scribes, he prouoked the godly by his departure, the more to desyre his presence. For there lykewise resorted a greate numbre of people vnto the sea, teachyng vs that we ought in lyke manoure to forsake al thinges, & folowe Iesus whither soeuer he goeth. For he is euery where a sautour, whether he be resident in cities, or trauayl throughe tounes, and villages, or continewe in the wyldernesse, or goe vp to mountaynes, or come downe into the playne, or els repayre to seas and waters. When he sawe therfore, that so greate a multy-

ming, he taught them on the shore. And as he there walked, he passed by a certayne custome house, where those are wonte to syt that demaunde cus-tome, and towle, of suche as sayle by: and espied in that house a certayne manne named Mathew, who was also called Leui, the sonne of Alphey, sitting at the receipt of custome, for he was a publicane or customer. And albeit this sorte of men was euery where muche hated of the people, yet specially among the Iewes, they were counted abhominable. For they vse to bye this office of ỹ prince, for an vnreasonable summe of money, & therfore to thentent theyr aduauntage & gayne maye be the more, for the most parte they take and extorte of all men, without pitie and conscience, and put maryners, and wayfaring menne to muche busynesse, vnto whome manye tymes damage, & displeasure ynough otherwise happeneth. There were verye manye among ỹ Iewes, who denied that the Iewes being the holye people of god ought to paye tribute vnto the Emperour, since he was an heathen prince & a worshipper of Idolles. And for this cause they greatly abhorred ỹ publicanes, who to haue the gaynes of ỹ money whiche they leuied ouer & aboue that was due, serued him in gathering of toll & custome. The lorde whiche had before imbrayded ỹ scribes wt theyr vnbeleefe, for that they murmured against his miracle, where as the simple people glorified & praysed god therfore, because he woulde now eftsones shewe that none be farther from true holynesse, then suche as thinke them selfes perfite holy men, called Mathew out of the custome house, & commaunded him to folowe hym. Mathew being sodainly chaunged, & made a new mā, forsoke his gayning And he arose & folowed him. ii.
state, & folowed poore Iesus, to thentent he might bee enriched wt the riches of the gospell. All men dyd not so greatly meruayle at this facte, & yet was it in dede more wonderfull then that, whiche they so muche merueyled at a litle before, when the sicke of the palsey was healed. For consider me well what a palsey he hathe whose mynde is fastened to couetousnesse. Neither is it vnknowen how intricate and busye, the accomptes of publicans be, and therfore ỹ he sodeinly chaunged went out of his custome house, forsakynge al that euer he had, and folowing Iesu: was more to be merueyled at, then the sicke of the palsey when he whipt out of his bed, and went home vnto his house. The pharisey heareth Iesus reasoning or disputing on many ma-tiers, & seeth him worke sundry miracles, & yet distrusteth, and murmureth against him. The publicane who neuer heard ne sawe suche thinges before, obeyed thonly word of Iesu. And behold an other occasion, whereby bothe the wickednesse of the pharisees, and also the bounteous goodnesse of Iesu And it came to passe that when Iesus maye ỹ better be set forth & knowē. For Mathew being now ỹ assured disciple of Iesu, to thentēt he might cōmend his maistre to moe, & bring such as were his late cōpanions, and felowes of the same state & conditiō ỹ he was, to the luker of the gospell, was not afearde to desire the lorde that he would voucheſafe to be his geast at home in his house. Iesus lightly cōdescended vnto his request, because that before, he so willingly obeyed, when he was called. Mathew supposing ỹ he had obtayned no small thinge, prepared a right gorgious & a royal feast, whiche should suffice a great many, that is to wete certayne disciples whome ỹ lorde had now gathered, & besides them diuerse other, which thē folowed Iesus, & went wt him as vnbidde geastes to this feast: & many publicanes, yea & sinners to, whome for olde familiaritie & acquayntaunce Mathew had bidden therunto, being nothinge ashamed what maner of compantons he once had, sith he was then departed from thē to an other felowship. For he trusted it would come to passe, that like as he was called of ỹ lorde, so should he throughe the lordes merciful vocacyō, haue many of thē scholefelowes w̄ him in learning the doctrine of the gospel (wherby is geuē aboundaunce of heauenly treasure) who were before his felowes in vicious liuing, & getting of slaunderous gaynes. He receyued this great confidence throughe the gracious goodnesse that he perceyued in Jesu towardes all men. Truly it was mete this shoulde be a greate feaste, whiche represented the churche that should be gathered together of the gentiles. For the feastes of the Jewes be smal, & receiuable but of fewe persons, because they onely folowe the flesshe or literall sence of the lawe, where as ỹ spirit & true meaning therof, dylateth it selfe in most ample wyse, & receyueth all sortes of people. All men loue libertie & haue neade of mercy: feawe haue rightousnesse, & yet did the pharisens chalenge the same, not withstanding they lacked it, & were in very dede vnryghtuous: who when they sawe Jesus feasting w̄ publicans & sinners (whom they as mē of great perfectiō & holinesse would not vouchsafe so muche as to speake vnto) went vnto hys disciples, being then but simple ignorant persons, & suche as they thought might easly be plucked frō theyr maister: & them did they hūt after & assaye to win with theyr venemous whispering. Why (q̄ they) doeth your maister, whome you (John forsaken) folowe as the more holy perfite man, eate and drinke w̄ sinners, since ỹ the cōmunio of table is ỹ greatest tokē of familiaritie that may be? Hath not he red this scripture folowing: w̄ the holye thou shalt be holy, & w̄ the froward thou shalt be froward? Dothe not he cōsidre howe ỹ by reason he is thus familiar, & kepeth cōpany with sinners, he doeth encorage thē to cōtinewe still in sinne, which els peraduēture, if men would auoide theyr cōpanye, would amend theyr lyues? When the disciples, who were as yet rawe in theyr profession, had no ready answere to make thē, but only w̄ a simple playne fayth hāged vppō theyr lord, then Jesus (vnto whō neyther the secrete wordes, nor yet the hid thoughtes of the pharyseis were vnknowen) made answere for them in this wyse: O you pharisens, why do you grudge & murmour agaynst me, for that I rather feaste with thē whō you take for wicked and abhominable persons, then with the priestes, scrybes, and pharisens? The physicians are praised who being them selfes in good health go yet vnto the sicke when they are sent for: And am I blamed for goynge vnto them who acknowleage the disease of theyr sowle, & desire a physician to cure them? Suche as are in good health do not quarell wyth the physician and saye: Why byddest thou suche, and such, and not vs. For they ỹ are whole haue no neade of a physicia. The facultie of physicke must alwayes be readye for those that be puell at ease. These folkes whiche acknowleage theyr disease, are right glad that the physician is come. For you sawe by that I did vnto the sicke of the palsye, how I haue power geuen me to take awaye sinne. You that thinke your selfes whole, and take vpon you to be ryghtwysmen, haue no cause to quarell with the physician if he come not vnto you. I was sent into the worlde, to take awaye the sinne of the worlde. Who so knowleageth his sickenesse, and desireth the physicy-

ans helpe, him will not I fayle at his neade. Nowe he that thynketh hym selfe fautles, yf he be in a right beleke, nedeth nothyng that I can do. But if he be deceiued in his opinion, or els know right well his inward infirmitie, and yet dissembleth the same, then is he past all hope of recouery. And for this cause the Physician should but lose his labour, if he wēt vnto him. For who can heale a man against his wil? Therfore the physiciā is vntustly reproued, if he folowe the rules of his facultie: but they are very vncurtuous, who whē thē selfes are in good helth, haue great disdayn and enuy that the Physiciā should be present with the sicke. And this my fact ought not to seme straunge and vnquod vnto you, whiche professe the knowledge of the lawe. For you reade therin as foloweth: I will mercy rather then sacrifice. God spake these wordes by his Prophet, signifying therby that the carnall iustice of the lawe, whiche standeth in abstaynyng from open offences and ỹ obseruacion of ceremonies, shoulde be set alyde & abolished. He that neither committeth murther, theft, nor aduoutry, he that resteth on the Sabboth day, fasteth vpō daies apointed, washeth, and maketh sacrifice, is rightuous after thestimacion of mā: But god requireth another maner of rightuousnes, whiche standeth in free beneficence or well doyng to oure neyghboure, in forgeuyng them that haue offended vs, in mekenesse and gentle demeanour. Nowe howe farre are they from this prayse, whiche do not onely thē selues not helpe theyr neybour in his necessitie, but also haue great despite, and bable against it, yf any man so do. God promised to send you suche a Messias, not as should excell the Pharyseis in sacrifices, phylacteries, fastinges, and lōg prayers, for thobseruacion wherof they magnify & set out thē selfes vnto the people, but suche a one as should be beneficial to al men, a lantern to thē that be out of the way, a helper to oppressed persons, a comforter to suche as are in aduersity, a Physician to al that are contrite in hart, and finally such a one as should ioyne vnto god, those that semed to be farre from god: and cōtrarywyse, declare that suche as appeared to be next god, and most holiest, were verie farre from true godlynesse. With these wordes the Lorde Jesus both stopped ỹ mouthes of the Phariseis, and also taught his disciples howe charitably they should demeane thēselfes toward sinners. For this cause we are muche bounde to ỹ wicked phariseis, who so ofte prouoke the lord to expoune the doctrine of ỹ gospel.

And the disciples of Johu and the Phariseis did fast: and they come and saye vnto him: why did the disciples of Johu & of the Phariseis fast: But thy disciples faste not. And Jesus said vnto them: can the childzen of the weddyng faste while the bridgrome is with them? As longe as they haue the bridegrome with them, they can not faste. But the dayes will come when the bridegrome shalbe taken awaye from them, and then shall they fast in those dayes.

Behold there went also vnto Jesu, certain of Johns disciples in company with the false accusing Phariseis. For they also were attached with a spice of humayne enuye, for that Jesus semed to deface the great estimacion of theyr maister John, notwithstandyng his lyfe and rule appeared to be strayter then Christes was, and that he had mo disciples thē thother. Wherfore they went vnto Jesu, and moued vnto hym this captious question. Why (sy they) do Johns disciples, and the Phariseis oft times fast, and thy disciples not faste at all?

Unto this question, because they assayled him, and not his disciples, ỹ lord made a gentler aunswere, then he dyd a litle before, when he defended his disciples: teachyng vs hereby, that Christian Charitie whiche vseth all mylde nesse in the euyls and displeasures done vnto her selfe priuately, is more diligent in defendyng other from the same. For the Christian Byshoppe must be paciente, and meeke, in suffering al iniuries done vnto his owne person: but yet ought he with diligent endeuour, to helpe his flocke, whensoeuer it is in ieopardie. Wherfore Iesus saied: You that haue diligently hearde John Baptist preache, ought to call to remembrance howe he preached that I was the bridegrome, and he the bridegromes frende. It is mete that all heuinesse be away when the bridegrome is presente. Moyses is a seruaunte, and no bridegrome, and therfore fastynges were conuenient for hym, because the same doe cause sadnesse, and abate mirthe. It is well done that they faste, whiche continewe in the Synagoge, beyng a seruaunte, and not a bryde. For suche haunt not the bridegromes chaũber. But the free borne childzen, who haunt the weddyng chamber, cannot faste as long as they haue the bridegrome himselfe present with them: bicause their myrthe is so great, that it wyl not suffer them to remember heauy thynges. He that for dread of punishmẽt doth his duety, can in no wise be meary. Nowe the childzen who haue receiued the spirite of libertie, perceiuyng that they are dearely beloued, and cared for of the brydegrome, be neuer carefull least they offend in those thynges whiche wer commaunded for a time, to men of a seruile nature: as for an ensample, in washynges, in thobseruaciõ of the Saboth, in choise of meates, in apparel, in holy dayes, in sacrifyces. They put their confydence in the myght and goodnes of the bridegrome, who is able without all these thynges, to giue them perfyte rightuousnesse. Spiritual beleefe taketh away fleshly carefulnes. Charitie that maketh al thynges pleasant, causeth gladnesse. The bridegrome hath his owne proper meate, from the whiche his companions cannot abstaine. The word of god, and the flesche of the bridegrome, is the meate and fode of the soule, and his bloud is the drinke of the same. Such as cleaue nigh vnto me, are euer desirous to eate their fyll of this meate: & they that haũt the bridegromes weddyng chamber, do alwayes couet to be dronken with this drinke. But lyke as corporall meate causeth not rightuousnesse, euen so fastyng maketh not a manne iuste: yea, it is oftentimes seene ỹ he which eateth his meate, is more rightuouse then the faster. Suche fastynges as are cõmaũded by the lawe, are full of heuinesse, & therfore displeasaunte to almighty God, who loueth a chereful giuer. He can in no wise be mery and chereful, that feareth and trẽbleth. But who so knoweth that he is set at libertie in these thynges, eyther to do them, or not to do them, and yet moued by charytie fasteth, the same vndoubtedly fasteth with great myrth & gladnes: not bycause his fasting is so prescribed by the law, but for that charitie moueth him so to do. When my disciples are once come to that strength of mynd, that I nowe go about by my teachyng and preachyng to bring them vnto, then shall charitie cause them to do more of their owne fre will, then now doth the prescripcion either of ỹ law or els of John get of you by cõpulsiõ. But as yet they are not come to this strẽgth and perfecciõ. They are yet tender, & weake: for the presẽce of my body letteth thẽ to attain therto. The day shall once come, when the corporal presence of the bridegrome

shalbe taken away from them and then beyng made stronger by receiuing the holy ghost from heauen, they shal not onely fast, and that of their owne accorde, but also gladly and with right good wyl doe thinges, in the atchiuyng wherof, more strengthe and constaunt courage of minde shal be shewed, then in fastyng. But forasmuche as this doctrine is spirituall, it can not be receyued of them, who all their life long haue enured thē selfes vñ pharisaicall ceremonies. And for this cause I pyked out simple, and ignorāt yong men to be my disciples. For I should but lose my labour if I did cōmit spiritual & heauenly doctrine vnto their mindes, that are so superstitious in kepyng of carnall ceremonies. Olde thinges best agreeth with old, & new thynges with newe, the whiche if a man myngle together, he doeth not onely labour in vayne, but also māketh those persons worse, whom he goeth about to reformme. For it is better for them stil to cōtinue in their olde superstitiousnesse, then whyles a man doeth his endeuoure to bryng thē to the freedome of the spirite, to prouoke them (all feare of transgressiō layed aside) to committe sinne at libertie. For as it is more a doe to teache suche a one any craft or occupacion as hath conceiued a wrong opinion of himselfe, thinkyng that he hath good skyll therin, & hath none at all: then hi who is altogether ignorant in the same: euen so is it the hardest thing ỹ may be, to teach such persons the rightuousnes of the gospell, whiche for thobseruaciō of certain folish carnall ceremonies, beleue surely they haue attayned perfite rightuousenesse. And this doutlesse is the cause that I fynde fysher men, Publicans, sinners, vnthrift women, & Ethniques, more apt to learn this spirituall Philosophy, then the Scribes, Pharisees, and Preistes, who suppose that perfit godlynes standeth in thobseruacion and keppnge of mannes ceremonies. Jhon as a meane betwene the olde law & ỹ newe, went about to mēgle together two sundry doctrynes. For he durste not committe this liuely Philosophy, pure and vnmengled as it was, vnto them that were weake of mynde. Nowe all is weake that is humayne & carnal. And contrarily, that is ful of life, vertue, and strength, what so euer is godly, spirituall, and heauenly. Wherfore vnto my disciples (whom I chose rude and ignorant, to thentent I myght the soner enstruct them in this strong and pithfull Philosophy) I prescribe none of these thinges following: Eate these meates, forbeare these, now rest, now labor, vse such apparel, touche not this thing, handle not that. And the cause is for feare least they woulde alwaies continew weake, if they once learned of me their maister, to put any truste in suche corporall thinges. It is a thing very vnprofytable to ioyne thynges together, whiche disagree one with another.

The texte. No man also soweth a piece of newe cloth vnto an olde garement, els taketh he away the newe piece therof frō the olde, and so is the rent worse. And no man poureth newe wine into olde bottels, els the newe wine dothe burste the bottelles, & the wine runneth oute, and ỹ bottels are marred. But new wine must be put into new bottles.

For there is no mā so farre frō reasō, ỹ if he be disposed to mend an old garmēt wil sewe therūto a patche of new cloth. And why so? certes for ỹ he perceiueth if he should so do, he should both lose ỹ newe cloth, & also make the hole of ỹ old garmēt bigger thē it was before. For being offēded vñ the notable diuerlitie betwene the piece of cloth sewed on, and the ymended garment, he straightwayes plucketh of the piece ỹ he sewed to, and so ỹ hole of

The texte. ¶ And it chaunced again that he went thorow ỹ corne fieldes on the Sabboth dayes, and his diſciples began by the way to pluckе the eares of ỹ corne. And the Phariſeis ſayd vnto him: Behold, why do they on the Sabboth dayes that whiche is not lawfull? And he ſaid vnto them: haue ye neuer redde what Dauid dyd when he had nede, and was an hungred, both he, and they that were with hym, howe he went into the houſe of god in the dayes of Abiathar the hie prieſte, & dyd eat the ſhewe bread, whiche is not lawfull to eate, but for the prieſtes only, and gaue alſo to them whiche were with him? And he ſaid vnto them: the Sabboth was made for man, and not man for the Sabboth, therfore is the ſonne of man, Lord alſo of the Sabboth.

For as it chaunced on a certain ſeaſon that his diſciples trauayled thorough a corne field, and that vpon the Sabboth daye, on the whiche day it was a matter of conſcience among the Jewes to do any maner of worke, they wente before, and Jeſus their mayſter folowed. And anon prouoked by hunger, they began to pluckе the eares of the corne, and with the chafing of their handes to rubbe out the corne, and eate it. Nowe heare howe the olde bottels were offended with the new wyne of the libertie of the goſpell, callyng after the olde wine of keping the Sabboth, that had cleane
And the Phariſeis ſaid vnto him: Behold. &c. loſt his verdure. For the Phariſeis, who as men very rightuouſe in their own conceiptes folowed Jeſus, beholding what the diſcypples dyd, wrongfully blamed the Lorde in them. For like as the vertuouſenes of the ſcholers is a great commendacion to the maiſter, euen ſo their miſbehauiour, and lewd taches are reproched and layed vnto thoſe that enſtructed them. They told the Lorde and pointed vnto his diſciples, as though they had done a greuouſe offence, for that they brake the Sabboth daye, to thend that he ſhould cauſe them to leaue worke and by that meanes approue the Phariſaicall ſuperſtition: or els if he would not ſo do, thē might they take ſome occaſion to pieke a quarell, or ſurmiſe ſome matter againſt him. The Lorde ſo defended his diſciples, that he diſproued the learned in the lawe of Moyſes, by thauctoritie of the lawe, and of his gentleneſſe vouchſafed to teache them the true meanyng therof, whiche in dede deſerued ſharpely to be rebuked. With what face (ỹ he) doe ye accuſe my diſciples, for ỹ
And he ſayd vnto them: haue ye neuer redde. &c. thorough conſtraynte of hunger, they plucke a fewe eares of corne, beyng by chaunce in their waye, for their relefe and ſuſtenaunce: ſithe there is expreſſe mention in the very lawe it ſelfe, (whereof you profeſſe your ſelues to be teachers) howe Dauid when he was in like neceſſitie, dyd a thyng whiche ſoundeth muche more to the breache of the lawe then this. For beyng almoſt yng almoste famyshed, and in great daunger to perisshe for lacke of foode, he fledde for succoure vnto the house of God: and although he were a laye manne, was not afrayd to desire Abiathar the chiefe of the prieستes, to giue hym those moste holy loues called the shewe breade, the whiche it was not lefull for any man to eate of, but the prieستes onely, and that but duryng the litle while they were within the precinct of the Temple, occupied about makyng of sacrifice. Abiathar was not here ignorauut what the lawe hadde commaunded, and yet feared not he to deliuer vnto Dauid, and his traine, the sayed holy loues, to be eaten in the holye place. If you knowe not that this is scripture, or els yf you haue it not in memorye, howe then for shame dare you professe the knowledge of the law? If you knowe, and remember it, why do you in a like case quite Abiathar, and Dauid, yea and alowe theyr facte, and yet accuse my disciples as giltie of an heynouse trespasse? If the rigorousnesse of the law dyd then giue place vnto the necessitie of the neyghbour, when the lawe was of moste force and strengthe, howe muche more then standeth it nowe with reason that the ceremonies of the same lawe, geue place therunto? whensoeuer charitie moueth a man to helpe his euen Christen.

Moreouer it is likewise commaunded in the law, that euery man ought to loue his neyghbour with like affection as he loueth himselfe. Nowe since this is the mooste principall and greattest of all the commaundementes in the whole lawe, why doe you then of an vnright iudgement breake that whiche is chiefest, and alwayes continueth, for thobseruacion of those thynges whiche are of lesse value, and shall not endure for euer? The time once hathe been when the Sabboth was not holy day. And the tyme shall come when to all true and Godly menne, euery day shalbe like holy. But the time neuer was, nor neuer shalbe, when it hath not or shal not be an holy dede for man to succoure his neyghbour at his nede. The lawe forbiddeth murther. Truely he murthereth who so when it lyeth in his power to saue a man, dothe not succour him at all. And this lawe is permanent, and shall continue for euermore. The same lawe forbiddeth also to woorke vpon the Sabboth daye. Nowe what a wronge shapen holynesse is this, if a manne whiles he feareth to breake the Sabboth, suffer his brother to perysshe, when he will not sticke to plucke out his asse fallen by chaūce into a dyche vpon the same day, withoute any feare, or scruple of conscience to breake the seuenth, or Sabboth daye?

When Iesus had with these, and suche like manifeste reasons, declared howe awkewardly deuoute and holy they were, he added this generall sentence. The Sabboth day (q he) was instituted for mennes cause, and not men made for the Saboth day. The sonne of man came not to destroy me, but to saue them. And for that cause hathe he power, yea, cleane to take awaye the Sabboth, so ofte as mans health so requireth. And that whiche I haue spokē of the Sabboth, is to be thought and demed of all like constitucions. They were all instituted for a season, to this ende, that the sturdy and disobedient people should by little and little accustome them selfes to obey goddes commaundementes, to thentent that they might by corporall figures, be broughte, and as it were ledde by the hande, to the vnderstandyng of spirituall thynges.

And he sayd vnto thē: the Sabboth, &c.

He breaketh the Sabboth day godlily, who nothyng troubled with euyll luſtes, breaketh it onely for the good zeale he hath to helpe his euen Chriſten. Faſtyng is a godly thing, but the ſame is made vngodly, and deteſtable, if it being onely inſtituted for mās ſoule helth, be abuſed to the deſtruction bothe of body and ſoule. Agayn a vowe is a holy thyng, but the ſame is made vnholy, if a man by reaſon of a ſuperſticious mind he hath to perfourme it, be withdrawen from the perfourmance of ſuche thynges, as neuer appertain to true godlineſſe. He doth wel, and like a good holy manne, who ſo maketh his oblacion at the aulter. But againe that is an vnholy gift whiche a man offereth, before his neybour be made at one. So is it alſo wel done to paſſe little vpon the colour, and faſhion of apparel, ſo oft as it behoueth a man ſo to do, becauſe man was not made for the garmentes ſake, but the garment firſt inuented for the vſe, and cōmoditie of man. In like maner meate is ordained for mans cauſe, and not man made for meates ſake. Wherfore it is lefull to eate al kyndes of meate when mans neceſſitie ſo requireth. For all theſe corporall thinges, wherin you put perfit rightuouſnes as your temple, ſacrifices, meate, clothyng, holy dayes, faſtynges, vowes, and offered giftes, are vnholily obſerued, yf for the obſeruacion therof, the health of your euē chriſten be in any wiſe hurt or appayred. And agayn they are well and holily kepte, yf charitie towardes your neyghbour ſo requiring you nothyng regarde what ſo euer is carnal, but truely perfourme in your hertes, that whiche ſuche corporall thinges be figures and ſignification of. Of ſuche maner of cōſtitucions Moyſes was the miniſter, and not the auctour: the ſeruaunte, & not the maiſter. Suche as with a ſeruile mynde cleue ſtill vnto him, do very ſuperſticiouſly keepe thoſe thynges, that belongeth vnto the fleſh But they that ſticke vnto the ſonne of man (who is Lorde ouer the whole lawe, and teacheth howe all thinges ſpiritually ought to be obſerued whiche wer figured by thoſe corporall ſhadowes and figures) are free, and cleane diſcharged in conſcience, from any longer obſeruyng of ſuche Jewiſhe ceremonies.

The thirde chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he entred againe into the Synagoge, and there was a man there, whiche had a withered hand. And they watched him, whether he would heale him on ỹ ſabboth day, that they might accuſe hi. And he ſaid vnto the man which had ỹ withered hāde. Aryſe, & ſtand in the middes. And he ſaith vnto thē: whether is it lawfull to do good on the Sabboth dayes, or to do euill: to ſaue life, or to kill? But they helde their peace. And when he had loked rouñd about on them with anger, mourning on the blindneſſe of their hertes, he ſaieth to the man: ſtretche forth thy hand, and he ſtretched it out. And his hand was reſtored euen as whole as the other.

With ſuche woordes the Lord Jeſus as he walked on the way in the felde, bothe diſproued the falſe reprofe of the Phariſeis, and alſo defended his innocente Diſcyples. But to thentente we ſhoulde plainlye learne that none are more geuen to picke quarelles, then ſuche as haue conceiued a wrong opinō of their owne holyneſſe, after Jeſus was entred into the Synagog, there to teache the people accordyng vnto his accuſtoaccustomed maner, occasion was ofttymes ministred, bothe to him to do a good, and a charitable deede, and also to the Phariseys to surmise some matter agaynste hym. For there was one there present among the people, who had (whiche was a pytifull sighte to beholde) a withered and a lame hand, and therfore carryed aboute with him, a dead membre that did him no stede: and so muche the more miserable was he, because he was wonte with his hand labor to fynde bothe him selfe & also all his poore household.

But oh malicious and wicked Phariseys, quicke sighted to deprave, and fynde faute with Christes benefites, but blynd to understande the heauenly doctryne. By those thynges that they saw with theyr corporall yes they knewe that he was a naturall manne, and yet by his deedes and myracles that he wroughte, they perceiued not his diuine power. They sawe howe the selye felowe was in a miserable case, and knewe righte well that Jesus was mercyfull, and straightewayes gessed what woulde come of it. And nowe are they aboute to seke a quarell, not agaynste the disciples, as they did before for pluckynge the eares of corne, but agaynste the Mayster him selfe, who defended them. They marke whether he beyng of nature redy to helpe all that are in dystres and misery, dare in the presence and sighte of the synagoge, heale a man vpon the sabboth daye, because that if he so do, they may accuse him of breakynge the sabboth, forasmuche as they shal haue the people to beare wytnesse with them what is done. And they watched hym whether he.&c.

That pitifull creature desyred not Jesus to healpe him, but yet to say the truthe, it was a kynde of desyre for him to come into the sighte of merciful Jesu. The Lorde, because he wolde haue them al to take good heede vnto the myracle that he entended to worke, called forth the man with the lame hande, and sayde: arise, and stande in the myddes of the people. And with that he arose, and conceyued good hope that he shoulde be made whole. Then Jesus turned him to the Phariseys, whose secrete thoughtes he was priuey vnto, and sayde vnto them. What is youre opinion whiche take vpon you to knowe the lawe: Howe, and with what thinges is the sabboth day broken? With doynge of good deeds, or of euill? by preseruyng of a mans lyfe, or destroying the same? They knewe right well for what purpose he moued this capcious question. If they had answered that it had bene better for the reuerence and solemnitie of the sabboth, to suffer theyr neyghbour to perishe, then without scruple of conscience to helpe him in perill and necessitie, the people coulde not haue suffred so vnreasonable an answere, cleane repugnaunt to the lawe of nature. Againe if they had sayd he might lawfully haue done it, then had they broughte them selfes in case that they coulde not haue charged him with any false surmise as theyr intente and purpose was to do. Therfore they thoughte good to holde theyr peace, and say neuer a worde. And yet whiles they so did, they playnely declared vnto the people, theyr malicious wylynes, for that beyng prouoked by this question to amendemente of life, they of an obstinate mynde were styll desyrous to picke quarels.

Nowe to the intente that this question shoulde the eallyer be assoyled and answered to, he putte furthe another lyke question, askynge whither there were any among them that kepte the sabboth day so hygh and holy, that if a shepe of his chaunced to fall into a diche on that daye, woulde suffre it to perishe, and in no wyse be so hardye as to drawe it out.

There was none so blynd in that assembly, but he knewe right well howe muche the health of man ought to be regarded, before the helth and preseruacion of a shepe. Truely he kylleth, who so may saue that thyng whiche he suffreth to perishe.

Wherfore after the Lord had loked for an answere, and perceiued how all the Phariseis lyke confederates, not because they were ignorannt of the truth, but of an obstinate malice helde theyr peace: he loked rounde aboute, and beheldē them, shewyng outwardly with his countenaunce how wroth and sory he was, for theyr vncurable wickednes, who when they toke vpon them to be guydes of the blynd, had them selues heartes so blinded vō worldly lustes, that they wyllyngly refused to see the most radiant, and cleare light of veritie. For there is no blyndnes more vncurable, then when a manne is bothe wittyngly, and wyllyngly blynde. They sawe that the dumme beast might lawfully be drawen out of the hoole, lest it should perishe, without any violacion or breache of the sabboth, and would in no wise see, that it was lyke lawfull to prouide for mans health vpon the same day.

Therfore, the mooste gracious Lord to teache vs that we ought not to withdrawe our selues from healpyng of our neighbour, for the vncurable frowardnes of the euill, the Phariseys contemned) turned him to the man with the withered hand, and in the audience of the people, who were desirous to see the ende of this matter, sayd vnto him: Stretche out thy hand. That voyce was scarcely heard: But he stretched it out sodaynly chaunged, and scruyng him as well to do euery thing withall, as the other whiche was neuer lame. Whom would not those reasons haue conuerted, and brought from his errour? whom wold not so euident a myracle haue moued to glorify God? But the Phariseis infected with the leuen of enuye, were therby prouoked to imagyne more mischiefe.

Certes, these are those same corrupt, and alwayes vnright iudgementes of the Phariseys. They passe more vpon a dumme beaste, then vpon a manne: more vpon the apparell, then the body: more vpon meate, then life: more vpon the body, then the soule: more vpon worldly thynges, then heauenly thynges: more vpon the flesche, then the spirit: more vpon menne then God: So true is it that there is no greater mischiefe in the world, then is peruerse and aukewarde holynes. Among men it is counted to come of a wonderfull vertue, with worde only to restore a mans lame hand, and make it whole agayne. But it is a muche greater vertue, and benefite, to restore the dead, and lame powers of the soule. What a pytifull lame hand hath he? howe dead? howe voyde of all pytie and compassion? who when he seeth his neyghbour in necessitie, dothe not geue him his almes? when he seeth him erre and stray out of the right way, doth not teache and refourme him? when he seeth him oppressed with iniuries, doth not helpe him: when he seeth him ydle, doth not styre him to good workes?

Suche handes had the Phariseys, who would rather enuye the Lord, then be restored by him, vnto the health of theyr soules. Suche feble, and weake persons hath the synagoge. But the churche of Christ receiueth neyther deaf, dumme, blynd, feble, halte, nor lame. Who so is diseased, and vexed with any euils, let him come into the sight of Jesu, and he shalbe cured. He wyll inspire vs with his holy spirite, and that which was before lame and without life, shall then be made quicke, and alyue agayne. They that with true fayth, wholy cõmit them selues vnto the Lorde, do returne home, cured of theyr diseases. Contrary wyse, suche as trust to theyr owne righteousnes, are made worse by other mens benefites & good dedes. They that are puffed vp with a Pharisaicall spirite, wylleth well to none, but to them selues. Agayne suche as haue receyued the spirite of Jesu, go aboute nothing els but to do good to all men.

The text. ¶ And the Pharisees departed, and strayght way gathered a councell (with ths that belonged to Herode) agaynst him, that they might destroye him. But Jesus auoyded with his disciples to the sea. And a greate multitude folowed him frõ Galile, and frõ Jury and from Jerusalem, and Idumea, and from beyond Iordane, & they that dwelled aboute Tyre and Sydon, a greate multitude of men, whiche (when they had heard what thinges he did) came vnto him.

For assone as the Pharisays were departed out of the temple, allbeit in the presence of the people, they durst not speake one worde against Jesu, yet nowe after they had sente for suche as belonged to Herode, to the intente theyr conspiracy should be the stronger (for none knewe better the feate how to worke mischief then the herodians) they all layde theyr heades together, and secretly debated the matter betwene them selues, how they might destroye Jesus, whom as they sawe ferre to excell them in mightye dedes, so they perceiued that it was not possible for them to disproue him with wordes. The Pharisays, and suche as were of Herodes retinue, were not louers and frendes together, and yet for to destroye the author of helthe, they agreed in one. O mischieuous concorde. O blyndnes, muche in deede to be lamented. What shall the priuey traynes of worldly deceite preuayle against him, vnto whome nothynge is vnknowen. The Lord teachynge vs by his ensample, that we oughte many tymes to gyue place for a season to the vncurable obstinacye of the euill, leste throughe farther prouocation they become more mischieuous, conueyed him selfe thence, and wente aside agayne vnto the sea. The goynge aside of Jesu, is no hinderaunce to the gospell, but an encreasynge, and furtheraunce of the same. For yf so be that the Pharisays had not driuen hym away, he woulde not haue come to the multitude of the gentyles. Therfore after that Jesus had forsaken the enuious and narrowe synagoge, and was gone vnto the sea, there came vnto him out of euery quarter a greate numbre of people, not only out of Galile but also out of Jewry, yea, and from Jerusalem selfe, from Idumea, and all the countryes lyyng beyonde Iordane, and moreouer from suche places as bordered on the cyties of Tyre and Sydon. For here was made a fore shewe of the churche, that shoulde be gathered together of the Gentyles, because the synagoge did throughe her vnbeliefe, repell the Gospell.

Out of all these places there came a greate multitude of people, whiche moued by the bruite that was spred abrode of the merueylous doctrine, and mighty dedes of Jesu, drewe them selues together, and assembled at the sea syde. The Lorde, who is bothe bounteous, and riche towardes all men, secluded no man, neyther from his doctrine, nor fro receiuynge the benefite of health. The people were eagre and so hasty, by reason of the great desyre they had to be cured of theyr sickenesses: that one of them thruste another out of place, and by force preased in where Jesus was, to the intente they might at the least wayes but touche him, because that by the onely touching of his garmente, diseases were also cured and put awaye. There was no difference neither betwene disease, nor person, with this myghtie and liberal phisician. For whosoeuer they were that were troubled with any maner of euils, or infirmities, were furthwith deliuered therof, if it chaūsed them to go to Jesu. And ỹ selfe same thig we se spiritually done, euen i these daies.

Howe manye be there out of all the nacions of the whole worlde, and what detestable vices are they geuen vnto, whiche flie vnto him for succour, and by touche of fayth, are healed. Furthermore the vncleane spirites after they had sene Jesus, could not abide his puissaunt vertue, but fell downe at his knees, and cried out, saying: Thou arte euen that selfe same sonne of God, whiche was promysed to come. Jesus, who in no wyse would suffer ỹ wicked spirites to disclose him, strayghtly commaunded them to kepe sylence, and in no case to discry him before the tyme to cum.

His wyl was to be knowen vnto the world, by humble and poore persons, vnto whom he sayd: He that heareth you, heareth me. He wylleth vs to geue no credence at all to wicked spirites, no not so muche as then, when they speake the truth. For this busines was not done at all auentures, but God by his high wysedome, ordered euery thing with certayne degrees, and procedynges, for our saluacion.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus cōmaunded his disciples that a shippe should wayte on him, because of the people, lest they shoulde throng him. For he had healed manye: in so muche that they preased vpon him for to touche him, as many as had plages: And when ỹ vncleane spirites sawe him, they fel doune before him, and cried, saying: thou arte the sonne of God. And he strayghtly charged them that they should not make him knowen.

Wherfore when Jesus was thrust with the prease of people, anone he commaunded his disciples to prepare him a ship, because he would not be disquieted with the disordred, and clamorous multytude, whiche rather desred bodely health, then the health of theyr soules, and thronged him rather then touched him. Suche as confessyng theyr dysease, go to Jesu with a sincere fayth, do touch him, and are made whole. Agayne they whiche troubled as yet with worldly lustes and desyres, cum rushing in with noyse and hurly burly, do greue, and greatly disquiet him. Therfore the disciples who were wont to be familyarly conuersaunt with the Lorde, prepared him a shippe of a more pure congregaciō. Jesus is better pleased with a fewe cleane, and quiet persons, then with a greate many that are troublesome and vnquiet. But yet he so gatte him away, that he neuertheles taught the multitude out of the shippe.

When thou seest Jesus teaching out of the shippe, vnderstand hereby a bishop, preaching to a multitude of all sortes, whiche cōtaineth christian nouices, & suche as haue not as yet the spirite cast out by baptisme, bothe of the Jewes & Gētyles. Happy and blessed are they that do spiritually touche Christ. None toucheth him so, but those whome he fyrst toucheth. For whō so euer he toucheth, the same are healed of all theyr sinnes: and nowe being of vnquiet persons, made quiet, they shalbe receiued into the shippe of the Churche, there to haue the continuall fruicion of his companye, & alwayes to syt at his table. The shippe wherin Jesus preacheth, is very narrowe, & roumles to vnclene and synfull persons, and contrarily mooste wyde and large, vnto suche as are in cleane life and purged of theyr synnes. The Lord refused the publycacion of deuils, and auoyded the synfull and vnquiet multitude of people. And yet these thinges euidently shewed that the kyngdome of God was come, into the whiche both worthy persons and vnworthy, wente aboute violently to entre. Therfore he prepared him selfe certayn capitaynes, whiche should ayde him in clayming this heauenly kyngdome so many in numbre, as should be sufficient to teach so manye nations, as anon after shoulde cum full and whole out of all partes of the world, to professe the Philosophy and doctrine of the gospell. So haue the princes of this world bene wonte to chose them certayne heade rulers and capitaines, to clayme, wynne, enlarge, gouerne and defend theyr empyres & kingdões by. It is requisite that the sayd rulers be right trusty, wyse, politique, and diligent and in especially that they knowe the king theyr masters wyll and pleasure.

¶ And he wente vp into a mountayne, & called vnto him whome he would, and they came vnto him. And he ordayned the twelue, that they should be with him, and that he might send thẽ furth to preache, and that they might haue power to heale sickenesses, & to cast out deuils. And he gaue vnto Simon to name Peter. And he called James the sonne of Zebede, & John James his brother, & gaue them to name Bonarges, which is to saye: the sonnes of thunder. And Andrewe, and Philip, and Barthelmew, & Mathew and Thomas, and James the sonne of Alphe, and Thaddeus, and Symon of Canaan, and Judas Iscarioth which e also betrayed him. The texte.

Therefore Jesus (who had ofttymes before, because to allure many vnto his doctrine, humbled him selfe, euen to the baseness of the commune people, shewing therby that the teachers of the gospell ought to do the lyke) Jesus I say, now callyng furth to the highnes of euangelike perfectyon, went vp into a mountaine, and called vnto him, not euery rascal of the multitude, but suche as it pleased him, and those that he had specyally chosen and sorted out before for this office and ministery. For he called not men of greate substance, head rulers, and greate estates: not preistes, Phariseys, or Scribes: but poore men, vnlearned persons, and suche as were of lowe degree. For these were mete to folowe him, and go vppe to the mountayne, from whence whatsoeuer this presente world hath in it worthy admiracion, is condempned: from whence as out of a nigh place, the voyce of the father of heauen, is heard: and to be shorte, from whence the glory of immortalytye, & euerlasting life, is beholden. They that were called, obeyed, and came to Jesus beyng on high. No man can mount vp to this hyll, except Jesus call him. For him selfe is the mountayne, vnto whome no man cummeth, vnles he drawe him. This that kyng of kynges, and Lord of rulers did chose out twelue heade officers and deputies, the whiche as loyall and faythful garders of his personage should neuer departe from his person, to the intente, that when the affayres of the gospell so required, he might send them out as legates for the bodye, to preache suche thinges, as they had lerned of him theyr kyng, and publysshe abrode theyr princes cõmaundemente throughout the whole worlde. Now for as muche as they were vile fyshers, vnlerned persons, poore men, and suche as in outward apparaunce, shewed no poynte of kynglynes, notwithstandyng they promysed the kyngdome of God our sauiour, lest theyr auctorytie should haue bene nothing regarded, gaue them a power, that no princes of this worlde can geue theyr ambassadours, ỹ whiche power was, ỹ they shoulde in ỹ name of Jesu, heale al maner of diseases, & also put to flight vnclene spirites. The fyrst of these legates or messengers was Simon, whose name he chaunged, and called him Cephas, that is as muche to say, as Petrus, or a stoone, to the intent that we shoulde learne by the name selfe, how the chiefe groundwarke and foundacion of the doctrine of the gospell, is an vnmouable stedfastnes of fayth. The second was James the sonne of zebede, with his brother John. To these he gaue also newe names, and they both were called Boanarges, whiche is as much to saye in the Syrian tongue, as ꝑ sones of thundre: so that theyr name was a very prophecy, to declare that they shuld in tyme to cum, send out of that euangelicke hyll into all the worlde, the thunder of the preaching the gospel, whiche shoulde moue and styrre vp all mens myndes to the desyre of heauenly thinges. For like as thunder soundeth frō an high: so the preacher of the gospell soundeth, and preacheth nothing that is lowe and carnal, but all that he speketh, is high and heauenly. Be you penitent, the kyngdome of heauen is at hande. This saying is a thunder clap. For assone as this worde is spoken, euery man feareth the daunger of lyghtening: but there foloweth a shower, and that is: Beleue ye the gospel, and you shalbe safe. The fourth legate or messenger was Andrewe, brother vnto Peter, the fifth Philip, ꝑ sixte Barthelmew, the seuēth Mathew, the eyght Thomas surnamed Didymus, the nynth James the sonne of Alphe, the tenth Thaddeus, the eleuenth Symon of Canaan, the twelfth Judas Iscarioth, the whiche betrayed the Lord. But by these fewe basely borne, vnlearned, and weake persons, it pleased the Lorde to renewe the whole worlde, lest that mannes wysedome or power, should chalenge any prayse in this heauenly bulines.

And he gaue vnto Symon to name Peter, &c.

And he called James the sonne of Zebede.

And Andrew and Philip. &c.

The texte.

¶ And they came into the house, and the people assembled thither agayne, so that they had no leasure, so much as to eate bread: & when they that belonged vnto him hearde of it, they went out to laye handes vpon him, for they sayd: he is mad. And the Scribes whiche came downe from Jerusalem sayed, he hath Belzebub, and by the chiefe deuyl casteth out deuils, and he called them vnto him, and sayd vnto them in parables.

These thinges thus done in the mountayne, to monyshe vs that in chosing the ministres of the gospell we ought in no wyse to be moued and led with lowe and priuate affections. Jesus came doune with his electe heade officers, and they all together came into a house, as nowe the familyar frendes, and of houshold with God. This example was shewed to teache vs, howe the teachers of Gods worde, should not grutche to descend from their highnes or perfection, and abase them selues euen to the lowlines of the weake, therby to wynne very many to theyr Lorde. Let vs also folowe Jesus into the house, for this intent, that we maye perfectely knowe what they ought to hope after, and whereunto to prepare theyr myndes, who take vpon them sincerely to preache the heauenly gospell. The multitude went not vp to the mountayne. For that thing pertayneth to them onely, whom the lorde hath chosen out for that purpose. But assone as Christ and his disciples were cum doune lower, all the whole rablemente of people resorted vnto him agayne, so importunatly cryng and callyng vpon him, partly for to heare his doctrine, and partly to be deliuered of theyr diseases, that the Apostles had no leasure so muche as to eate theyr meate.

And the people assembled together agayne, &c.

The

There can be no plesaunter sighte vnto the techers of the gospel, thē when the people being desirous to learne, do disquyet the priestes: then when a great multitude of christen nouices sytteth roūde aboute the churche doze: then when ther is not roume ynoughe in the Churches to receyue all maner of folkes, that resorteth vnto the bishops sermon.

After that all these dedes were throughe the great bruite therof, brought to his kynsfolkes and cosens eares, who knew ryght well thinfyrmitie of his flesshe, whereas foz grosseneſſe of vnderstādyng they could not suppose any thyng of his godly myght and power: after. I say they hearde tel how he wandred vp and downe with a sozte of rascal slouens, and vyle felowes folowing hym at the heles, and hearde saye also howe he caused much people to folowe hym, taughte newe learnynges, and suche as had not bene hearde befoze, put awaye diseases, and caste oute diuels, they ascribed al to furie and madnesse: because beyng offended with the weakenesse of his bodie, they coulde in no wyse referre these thynges vnto his godly power.

And when they that belōged vnto hi, &c

They knewe his father and mother, they knewe hys house, and all his famulie: they knewe that in all other thynges he differed nothyng from other, and perceyued also howe all that was repozted of hym, farre exceded the compasse of mannes power. Wherfoze forasmuche as they were hys kynsfolkes, they thought it accordynge to mannes lawe, to be theyr parte and duetie to bynde hym with cheynes, as one distraughte of his wyttes, and possessed with some euyll spirite. Foz they saide: he is become furyous oz mad. Truly they whiche contemnynge all erthly thynges, yea and lyfe it selfe, embrace with all theyr hartes the heuenly Philosophie and doctrine, do appeare to be beside them selues to those persons, vnto whome nothing sauoureth but that which is earthlie, and transitorie. He that spendeth his liuelode to helpe the poore at theyr nede, semeth mad vnto hym who hathe reposed the ayde of this presente lyfe in worldly riches. He that wyllingly foz the gospels sake vpon hope to be rewarded with euerlastynge blissefulnesse, bringeth hymselfe to banishment, pouertie, empryſoumēt, tormentes, and death, is starke mad in his opinio, who beleueth not that theris a more blissefull life after this present lyfe, ordayned foz those whiche are good lyuers, and vertuous persons. He that setteth naught by honours giuen of princes, & the people, to thende he may purchase hymselfe glozy with god in heauen, semeth out of his witte vnto suche as be mad in verye dede, whiles that by brybes gryping, by craft and deceyte, by hoke, oz by croke, by ryght oz by wrōg, they desyre lozdshyp, soueraigne rule, and dignities: the whiche anon after, they muste nedes forgoo. And the Lozde suffered his kynsfolke to haue this wycked opinion of hym, leaſte that his disciples shoulde be offended yf it chaunced them at any tyme afterwarde to heare lyke wozdes of theyrs. Howbeit the wickednes of the Phariseis was more manyfest, who were thē selues witnesses of these so great miracles that he wrought. Foz his kynsfolkes erred rather of a certayne grosseneſſe of vnderstāding, naturally gyuen vnto the common sozte, then of any obstinate malice, and wickednesse. But the Phariseis which came from Ierusalem (who because of the knowleage they had in the prophetes, oughte to haue knowen by such dedes & miracles as they sawe hym worke, that the thyng was alreadie cum and present, which was promysed of the same prophetes: & also foz

For they saide: he is mad. &c.

And the Scribes which cā downe from Ierusalem. &c the soueraignitie of their religion, by reason wherof they highlie estemed them selues, ought to haue honoured goddes power, which all men proued helpynge & hollsome) the pharisies, I saye, blasphemouslye spake agaynste Jesus sayinge: These dedes that he doth, be farre aboue mannes power: howbeit he dothe them not by the vertue and power of god, but hathe some mightie and notable diuell, by whose ayde he worketh the same. For he hathe vndoubtedly the spirite of Beelzebub, the mayster dyuell of all, and throughe his helpe, putteth other diuels to flyght which are not so strong and myghty. This shameleſſe and blynde blasphempe, because it was not only spoken agaynste Jesus (whome they reckened to be nothyng els but a man) but agaynste god hymselfe, whose glory they enuying at, ascribed the miracles that were wrought by his diuine power, vnto the vncleane spirite the diuell, the Lorde earnestly reproueth: and vsed also certayne parables, to thentent that all men shoulde clearly perceyue the matier.

And he called the vnto him &c.

The texte. How can Sathan dryue out Sathan? And yf a Realme be deuyded agaynste it selfe, that Realme can not endure. And yf a house be deuided agaynst it selfe, that house can not contynue. And yf Sathan make insurrection agaynste hymselfe, and be deuyded he can not continue, but hath an ende. No man can enter into a strong mannes house and take awaye his goodes, excepte he fyrste bynde the strong manne, and then spoyle his house. Verely I say vnto you, all sinnes shall be forgeuen vnto mens children, and blasphemies, wherwith soeuer they haue blasphemed, But he that speketh blasphemy againste the holy ghoste, hath neuer forgeuenesse, but is in danger of eternall damnacion. For they sayd: he hathe an vncleane spirite.

Sith that the whole kyngdome of diuels, sayth he, is agaynst the kyngdome of god, howe maye it then be that Sathan casteth oute Sathan? excepte peraduenture the fendes make battayle, and go together by the eares amonge them selues: as thoughe it were lyke to be true, that they whiche serue one prynce in his warres, do violentlye put one another oute of his holde or fortresse.

And yf a realme be deuided against it self. &c.

If that amonge mortall men, that Realme whiche is deuided throughe sedicio, and inwarde discorde, very shortly commeth to ruyne, because lyke as vnitie and concorde is the chife keper and patronesse of a Realme, euen so discorde bryngethe any thynge to destruction be it neuer so strong, and well fortified: Howe then shall the kyngdome of Beelzebub endure, yf one dyuell caste oute an other? What speake I of a Realme? Wheras sedition raygneth, there euery thyng is so vnstable, that not so muche as a priuate house canne longe prosper and continew, yf thinhabitauntes therof be at square, and one of them hate an other. Wherfore yf I caste oute diuels by the helpe of Beelzebub (as you falsly reporte, & laye vnto my charge) then is it a sure proofe that his kyngdome shall shortely come to ruyne, and desolation: And the kyngdome of diuelles once destroyed, what thē remayneth but that it becomme goddes kyngdome? But yf I (which thyng is mooste true) doe chase awaye diuelles, enemyes to God, and mankynde, by goddes vertue and power, then is it euidente that the kyngdom of God is present, whose power the fiendes are compelled maugre of theyr heades, to gyue place vnto. For they gyue not place wyllyngly, or because they haue couenaunted so to do.

And yf Sathan make insurrection against Sathā. &c.

There

There canne be no leage or couenaunte betwene god and the deuels. They warre contynually together, and can in no wyse be reconsiled, as it fareth when there chaunceth battayle betwyxt twoo very doutye, and courageous Capytaynes, whiche be mortall enemyes, and at vtter defyance one with another. Neyther of them suffereth hymselfe to be taken of the other, vnlesse it be by strength, and when he is ouerthrowen in battayle. For what courageous and bolde Capitayne wyll suffer his enemie to enter forcibly into his house, beyng ryght strong, and well fortified, vnlesse his said enemie wyn the same by violente assaulte, and then caste hym, nowe ouercome and vanquished, into prison. By this meanes shal he ryffle his house, and carye awaye with hym the spoyle and praye. If ye see the diuels crye oute, and make a great noyse when they are caste oute and expelled, yf you see also many forsake theyr synnes wherwith they serued the diuell, & come to the fredome of innocencie, and good lyuynge, why do you then take all the glory from God the conqueroure, and gyue it vnto Beelzebub who is conquered and ouercome? Doeth Beelzebub the enemye of mankynde chaunge his olde cõditions, and now prouide for the health, and preseruacion of manne? Is not this a manifeste blasphemie againste God? Be you righte well assured of this: there is no kynde of blasphemye, but it maye be pardoned of God, bicause that in all other blasphemies eyther ignorauncs or elles the weakenesse and frayltie of mannes nature, leaueth a place for the obtaynynge of forgyuenesse. But he that blasphemously hathe spoken agaynste the holye ghoste, shall neuer obtayne pardon. That manne speaketh blasphemye agaynste the holy ghoste, who beynge hardened and obstynate through malice, ascribeth those workes vnto the spirite of Beelzebub, whiche he seeth playnely cannot otherwyse be done, then by the spirite of God. Erroure and ignorauncs are pardonable. But how is it possible that a purposed malice agaynste the goodnesse of almyghty God, prouokyng vs to saluacion, shall get any pardon at all? The weakenesse of mannes bodie shall excuse suche blasphemie as is commytted agaynst the sonne of man. But to ascribe goddes power (the whiche playnly appeareth in those dedes, to the helth and saluation of mankynde,) vnto Beelzebub the enemy of God, is a kynde of blasphemie, for the whiche no amendes or satisfaction can be made.

No man can enter into a strong mans house. &c.

Verely I saie vnto you, all sinnes shalbe forgeuen. &c.

These wordes spake Jesus vnto them, defendynge the fathers glorie, and nothinge in the meane whyle passinge vppon his owne. He meante that theyr offence mighte be better excused and borne with all, whiche had an euell opinion of hym, as his kynnesfolkes and cosens had, who sayde: He is become furious, and prepared cheynes to bynde hym withal: then the wickednesse of the Phariseis, who of a certayne vncurable malice ascribed those woorkes vnto the spirite of Beelzebub, which they coulde in no wyse fynde faulte with, nor saye but they were worthye to procede of god. They yet perceiued not the diuine nature that was in Christ. For he woulde not as yet haue it vttered and knowen.

Certes God hath ofte tymes by vertue of his holye spirite, and the ministerye of good liuers, wroughte miracles, wyllyng therfore to be glorified among men.

Nowe

Now yf any man not by reason of ignoraũce, but of very malice, do ascribe suche miracles vnto the spirite of Beelzebub, then is his peruerse, and malictous noughtynesse past all hope of amendement. Wherfore they myghte haue bene excused yf they had sayde that Christe had bene nothyng els but a mã: or that he had bene no king, nor Messias. But in that they depraued and spake yll of his workes, they offended God and his holye spirite, in asmuch as the spirite of God can worke by whome soeuer it lusteth. Nowe when they sawe so many miracles merueylously wrought: when they sawe the people glorifie God: when they sawe so manye holpen of theyr infyrmyties, so manye delyuered of vncleane spirites, so many turne from vicious lyuyng to a godly desyre, to lyue wel and vertuously after the gospell, and that by the preachyng of Christ, yet they obstinatly sayde he hath a dyuel and not the spirite of god.

For they sayd: he hath an vncleane spirite.

The texte. ¶ There came also his mother, and his brethren, and stode without, and sente vnto hym to call hym oute, and the people sate aboute him, and sayde vnto hym: behold thy mother, and thy brethren seke for the without. And he answered them saying: who is my mother, and my brethren? whē he had loked round about on his disciples, which sate in compasse about hym, he sayd: behold my mother & my brethrē. For whosoeuer dothe the wil of God, the same is my brother, and my syster, and mother.

After the Lorde Jesus had with these, and many other wordes defended the glorie of the heauenly father agaynst the wicked blasphemie of the Pharisees, and imbrayded the Jewes with their obstinate, and incorrigible vnbelieke, which they perseuered in, notwithstandyng that thorow fayth alonely all synnes are leused and forgeuen: in the meane tyme ther befell occasion for hym also to declare that in the hyghe ministracion of the gospel, there ought no regarde at all to be had to humayne affections, the whiche in other mattiers to be muche moued by, is counted a thing prayse worthy, and ryght commendable. For there came vnto hym his kynsfolkes in companie with his mother, who because there was no waye for them to entre in for preasse of people, stode withoute: and theyr voyce passyng from man to man, came vnto them that sate about Jesus, who shewed him how his mother, and brethren were come, and desired to speake with him. There were some, euen among his nere kynsmen, whiche had an euell opinion of hym, yea and manie of them supposed he had bene out of his witte. Yet they thought by reason of kynred, they myght lawfully at any tyme when they woulde, call hym oute to speake with them.

And he answered them saying. &c.

The Lorde, to teache vs that the businesse of the ghospell, whiche was done by the spirite of the father, for mannes saluacion, and goddes glorie, ought not to be left of for anye affeccions humayne, aunswered as though he had bene angrye, and in a greate fume, saying: who is my mother, and who are my brethren, and kynsfolkes? In thys businesse whiche I haue nowe in hande, I knowleage no fleshly kynred. The gospell hath a spirituall kynred of it owne, the whiche ioyneth with strayghter bondes mennes myndes together, then doth the other their bodies. And when he had loked rounde aboute on his disciples, who sate in compasse next hym, as he was teachyng, he sayde: Behold these are my brethren, and my mother. As the gospell maketh a newe byrth, so doeth it also a newe kynred. For who so beleueth the gospel, and therin obeyeth the wyll of my heauenly father, although he be not only fardest from me, as touchyng kynred of stocke or familie, but also the straungest alyaunt that is to all oure nacion, the same is my brother, the same is my syster, the same is my mother. For this kynred is not estemed after the degrees of bloude, but by degrees of the spirite. I acknowlcage none to be of my kynred, except he be borne afreshe of the heauenly father throughe fayth, and then as a very naturall sonne, doe obey his father whē he calleth him to euerlastyng thynges. As euery man will in most perfect wise perfourme this, so shal I take him for my nearest kinsmā.

The.iiii. Chapiter.

And he began agayne to teache by the sea syde. And there gathered together vnto him, muche people: so greatly, that he entred into a shyp, and sate in the sea, and al the people was by the sea syde, on the shore. The texte.

THerfore Jesus forsoke the house which bare the figure of the Synagoge, wherin he was blaspheined of the Phariseis, and interrupted thoroughe thimportunacie of his kinsfolkes: and eftsones wēt vnto the water, as one that despyzed the large roume of the Gentiles. He is oftymes expelled of the Jewes: he maketh ofttymes a forespygne that the gospell shalbe translated from the Jewes vnto the Gentiles. For as long as he was in the house, that is to say, in Jewrye, very few dyd stycke vnto him, none but those onely, whom he calleth his brethren, his systers and his mothers. Many muttred agaynst hym, many rayled vpon hym, very manye laye in wayte for hym, and his nearest kynsfolkes of all, interrupted hym in his teachyng. Jesus loueth no suche houses. He loueth a multitude, not that standeth in theyr owne conceyte, as the Phariseis did, not that vseth to backbite, and make yll reporte of their neyghbour, as did his kynsfolkes (who beyng grosse of capacitie throughe fleshlye wisdome, interpreted his heauenly wysdome to be nothyng els but fury & madnesse) not that moued by worldly affections doe cause a man to leaue of any godly enterprise or busynesse, as his mother, and kynsfolkes dyd. He loueth a multitude whiche is desirous to heare the gospell, and worde of god, and wholy hangeth vpon the belief therof.

Wherfore when the lord Jesu was come vnto the sea, and there taught as he did before, thither assembled agayne a great nūbre of people, insomuche that he was constrayned through the noyse and hurly burlye they made, thrustyng one another out of place, to take a boate: out of the whiche, as it had bene out of a pulpet he taught thē sytting thicke together on the shore, as yf it had bene in a roūd stage or place ordayned for men to beholde sightes and shewes in. Learne here thou that art a preacher and teacher of the gospel, what is meant by this figure. Auoyde thou so the rablement of clamorous, & vnquyet people, that yet thou cease not to do thy duety in preachyng & teachyng of gods word. When there is any ieopardy least thou be thrust downe, & ouerwhelmed wt the trouble of worldly busynesse, so y thou canst not nowe teache, get the into the shyp of the gospell, whiche knoweth And there gathered together.

no manour of earthly ruffelyng, and oute of that pulpyt, thou shalte quyetly teache the weake, and rude multitude. Go not farre from the shore: be nyghe vnto the same, alwayes attemperyng thy selfe asmuche as thou canst, vnto the capacitie of the people. For they are not as yet able to folow the. Fyrst of all thou must attempre thy doctryne, accordyng as their rude & ignorannt myndes can awaye withall tyll suche tyme that they haue well profited therin. For whome dyd Jesus teache out of the boate, but a rude and an vnlearned multitude of all sortes of people.

The texte. ¶ And he taught them many thynges by parables, and sayd vnto them in hys doctrine: Herken to, behold there went out a sowier to sowe. And it fortuned as he sowed, that some fell by the waye syde, and the fowles of the ayer came, and deuoured it vp. Some fell on stony grounde, where it had not muche earth, and immediatly sprang vp because it had not depth of earth: but assone as the Sunne was vp, it caught heate, and because it had not rootyng, it wydred away. And some fell among thornes, and the thornes grew vp, and choked it, and it gaue no fruite. And some fel vpon good ground, and did yelde frute that sprang vp, and grew, and brought forth, some thyrty fold, and some sixty folde, and some an hundred folde. And he sayde vnto them: he that hath eares to heare, let hym heare.

He put forth vnto them parables, that is to saye, similitudes of thynges moste knowen to all men. For this is the playnest manour of teaching and moste conuenable for the rude, insomuche that it appeareth at the fyrst sight to the wise of this worlde, a chyldysh thyng, and to be laughed at. But yet thys manour of teaching, pleased the euerlastyng wysdome. The Philosophiers made all thynges darke vnto theyr heareres, with argumentes fourmed by greate arte and soteltie. The Rhethoricians enforced menes myndes, with a meruelous plentifulnesse of eloquente speache. The Pharisseis gathered together certayne hyd misteries, farre exceedyng the capacitie of the vulgar people. But the Lorde chose vnto hym thys kynde of doctryne as playnest, and farre from all manour of playerlyke ostentacion, to thentent that all the glorie gotten by renewing of the worlde through the gospell, shoulde wholyly appertayne and be ascrybed to the might and power of god.

Wherfore he moued them by manye parables to receyue with sincere belefe, & cleane myndes, the doctrine of the gospel: from whence the begynnyng of our saluacion procedeth. And because it behoued to haue this thing fast setled and prynted in all theyr myndes, before he began to teache them, he commaunded them diligently to attende and heare what he woulde saye. Harken (q he) yf any haue eares to harken withall. It is a fable, and not a parable, except a man geue eare thereunto. Neyther hath euery man eares to heare the parables of the gospel, which are subtelly playne, wysely folish, and darkly manifest. For they hyde heauenly wysdome, vnderneth a vyle and folyshe couerynge. Neyther thought Jesu it sufficient yf they gaue diligent eare: he woulde also they shoulde behold and see with theyr yes those thynges that he purposed to saye. Blessed are they that haue both pourged eares, and cleare yes, when Jesus speaketh. Beholde, sayeth he, there went out into the feilde a certayne sowier to sowe his sede, the whiche he had berye pure, and good. And whiles that desirous of plentifull encrease, he cast it euery where, it chaunced that some of it fell by the hye waye syde, whiche ioyned vnto the field. And that sede, because it remayned styl aboue ground, by reason the waye was harde and seere, the foules that thyther came anon

after picked vp, and deuoured. Agayne an other porcion therof, fell vpon a ſtonye grounde, whiche becauſe there laye manye ſtones vnderneath, coue-red with a litle molde or duſte, ſprang vp to tymelye. For the warmenesſe of the weather, brought it out of the grounde. And anon as the heate of the Sunne wared once feruent, the corne that thus ſprang vp before due ſea-ſon, was hurte, and partched therwith. And becauſe it could not for ſtones take rootynge, but lacked rootes to drawe moyſture out of ỹ deapthe of the earthe, therwith to nouriſhe, & defende it againſte the heate of the ſunne, it wyddered awaye before it came to earing. Agayne an other porcion of this ſede fell vpon a grounde, the whiche in dede was ranke and fertyle, but yet ouergrowen with thornes, and breers. Now when theſe thornes were once growen very thicke in height and breadthe, it came to paſſe that the ponge corne whiche ſprang therof, was ſmothered before it appeared in light, not for want of moyſture, but for lacke of ayer. And for this cauſe neyther had the ſowier any profite hereof at al. But yet for all this, the labour of ỹ ſame ſowier was not vtterly fruſtrate, and in vayne. For there was ſumme of the ſede that lighte vpon a good grounde, and therof ſprang graſſe, the whiche grewe, and wared, vntyll it came to it ful ripeneſſe. And of this ſede there was not one vnfruitfull grayne, notwithſtandyng that all yelded not like encreaſe: For there were manye eares whiche of one grayne, yelded thirtie, ſumme other three ſkore, and a greate ſorte an hundred.

And ſome fell among thorn-nes.

And when he was alone, they that were about hym with the twelue, aſked him of the parable, and he ſaid vnto them: to you it is geuen to knowe the myſteries of ỹ king dome of God. But vnto them that are without, all thinges happen by parables, that when they ſee, they may ſee, and not diſcerne; and when they heare, they may heare, and not vnderſtãde, leaſte at any tyme they ſhould tourne, and their ſynnes ſhould be forgeuen them. And he ſaide vnto them: knowe ye not this parable? And how then wil ye knowe all other parables. The text.

When the lorde had ſpoken theſe wordes, then to thentent they ſhould not be forgotten, but that euery man ſhoulde ſearche out with him ſelfe the meaninge of the parable, he ſaide moreouer: He that hath eares to heare, let him heare: declaring vndoubtedly hereby, ỹ they all heard not that thing whiche they heard. Now when not thoſe twelue ſpecially choſen diſciples thẽ ſelfes vnderſtode wel (by reaſon they were as yet rawe and ignorant) what this ſimilitude meante: yet durſt they not openly aſke him any que-ſtion. But after they had once gotten him alone, then were they bolde to deſire him that he would vouchſafe to expoũde them the myſterie, and ſe-crete meanyng therof. Then Jeſus puttinge vs in remembraunce how all thinges are not to be diſcloſed to all perſons, but that the doctrine of the goſpell ought to be diſpenſed according as tyme ſerueth, and the capaci-tie of the hearers can away with all, ſaide vnto his diſciples: The princes of this worlde make fewe priuie vnto their ſecretes, none but ſuche as are pyked fellowes, and tryed perſones, whome they maye ſafely make of their counſaill. If they haue any ſecrete thing, that kepe they from the know-leage of the comminaltie. It is geuen vnto you (whome I ſorted and piked out from among the cõmune people) to knowe the myſterie or priuitie of the kingdome of heauen, becauſe you are familiarly conuerſaunt with me. But vnto ỹ commune ſorte, and ſuche as are not familiar compaignie-rs of my courte, whether I do, or ſpeke any thyng, al is in parables. For they neither haue mete eares, nor mete eyes. What they heare, they beleue not: what they see they depraue, & fynde faute with. And so is verified in them that the prophete saide before shoulde come to passe, that whē they see best, yet see they not, and when they heare best, yet they heare not: because they vnderstande not. Truly he vnderstandeth not, who so beleueth not. Now sinnes are not released, but to suche as beleue that sinnes are freely released by vertue of the gospell. Therfore through theyr vnbeleefe, it commeth to passe that they are not tourned to god, because they tourne them selfes awaye from god, nor are deliuered from theyr sinnes, because they refuse the medicine wherewith all sinnes are healed. By these wordes Iesus signified those persons, whom a litle before he vnderstode by the ground that for sundrye causes is baraine and vnfruitfull. And to make his disciples more apte to receyue his doctrine, he chydeth them a litle for theyr dulnesse. Doe you not yet, saith he, gesse what is meante by this parable, sith the sence therof is easie to be coniectured? And how then wil you boulte out the true meaninge of all the rest, since that I neither speake, nor do any thing that hath not in it a signification of somme secrete matter? I wil expoūd vnto you this parable to thentent that you maye likewise accustome your selfes to searche out the secrete meaning that lyeth hyd in other.

To you is it giuẽ to knowe the myſteries of, &c.

But vnto thẽ that are without all thinges, &c.

And he said vnto them: knowe ye not this, &c.

The sowier soweth the worde, and they whereof some be rehersed to be by the way side, are those where the worde is sowen: and when they heare, Sathan cummeth immediatly, and taketh away the worde that was sowen in theyr hartes, and likewise the other that receyue sede into the stony ground are they, whiche when they heare ꝑ worde, at once receyue it with gladnesse, yet haue no roote in them selues, and so endure but a tyme. Anon when trouble, and persecution aryseth for the wordes sake, they falle immediatly. & yere be other also that receyue sede into thornes, & those are suche as heare the worde: and the cares of this worlde, and the deceiptfulnesse of riches, and the lustes of other thinges, entre in, and choke the worde: and it is made vnfruiteful. And other there be ꝑ haue receyued sede into a good ground, they are suche that heare the word, and receyue it, so that one corne doth bryng forth thirtie, some sixtie, some a hundreth.

The texte.

The fielde is the worlde, wherein are verye manye vnmete hearers of the doctrine of the gospell. The sowier is the sōne of man, who came downe from heauen into earth. The sede is the worde or doctrine of the gospell, by the whiche the will of god is declared vnto the world. His will is this, that all men distrusting theyr owne strength, do trust with all theyr harte and mynde the promises of the gospell: that is to saye, that through faythe all mennes sinnes are forgeuen: if after the truthe once knowen, they gyue them selfes to studie of true vertue, and godlynesse. Therfore by the sede which, as I said, fell by the hye waye side, they are vnderstand, and signified who slightly, and as men otherwise occupied, heare the gospell, like as they would heare any fable or phantasie of mannes inuēcion. And among all, none heareth goddes word with lesse profit, then they do. For anone as they haue heard it, cummeth Satan, and putteth other thoughtes & ymaginacions in theyr myndes, and by that meanes plucketh out ꝑ sede before it haue gotten rote, and be fastened therein, so that they do not so muche as remembre what they haue heard.

And they whereof some be rehersed to be by the way side. &c.

Now the sede that is receyued into a stonye groūd, betokeneth those persones who gredely ynough heare the gospel, and gladly deuoure the same,

And likewise the other that receyue sede. &c.

perceyuing to be bothe true, and holsome: but because they leye it not vp in theyr hartes, by depe cogitacion, (for they are letted so to doe by other affectiõs, which wholy possessing theyr myndes, wyll in no wise giue place vnto the worde of God) they continue not in that they feruently and couragiously began: neither do they bryng forth any fruite of euangelike or christian godlynesse, but suche fruite alonely as lasteth but for a seasõ: and all is, because they haue no rootes. And so cõmeth it to passe, ỹ in prosperitie they beleue the gospell, & as grasse newly sprong vp, cause men to haue a good opinion of theim, ỹ they will proue well. But assone as any aduersitie or persecucion for profession of goddes worde dothe arise and assaulte thẽ, byanby they offẽded therewõ, do vtterly forsake theyr former purpose.

There be other also that &c.

The sede that fell vpon the thornie grounde, signifieth those that diligently heare, and beare in mynde the wordes of the gospel: But the loue of deceitfull riches and the inordinate desires of other thinges, whiche allure and tolle men vnto them, with a false appara unce of vertue, doe entre into theyr myndes, and there daily (as theyr propertie is) encreasinge, at the length ouergrowe the sede, so that it can neuer spring vp, and come to be corne. Finally the sede that light vpon a good groũd, betokeneth those that geue good eare vnto the doctrine of the gospel, & beleue all that they heare, and conuey it into the moste inwarde corners of theyr hartes, vntill that it spring vp, & bring forth the worthie fruites of the gospel, not euery where alike, but diuersely, according to the diuersitie of the soyle, and disposicion of the heauenly spirite: so that this mã bringeth forthe fruite meanely, that man more plentifully, an other greatest aboundaunce therof: like as if one grayne bring forth thirtie, an other three score, and the thirde an hundred. He that bringeth forth greate plentifulnesse of fruitehath cause to rendre thankes vnto god almightie: there is no cause why he should stande in his owne conceipt. He that bringeth forth meane store, hath no cause to repyne at him whiche is muche happier, and bringeth forth more abundance then he. For god who is boũde and debtour to no man, dothe of his most bounteous liberalitie, gyue euery mã his giftes, as it liketh him. What encrease so euer cummeth, the same is due vnto him that firste sowed the grounde, and by whome what fruite so euer is brought foorth, dayly encreaseth.

And other there be that haue receyued sede into a good groũd.

My desire is to haue all the corne grounde of the whole worlde sowen when the tyme shall cum, with this sede: and that this doctryne, whiche I nowe secretlye teache you a fewe persones, maye throughe your diligent ministeris be enlarged and spredde abrode, as much as may be, to thentent that you also maye shewe your selfes, like a good ground, if you distribute that you haue receaued of me, to as many as ye canne possible. For there is no fruite wherewith god is better pleased. Ye must therfore be well ware, that the seed sowen in your myndes, perishe not through forgetfulnesse, or negligence. Ye ought diligẽtly to laye it vp in memorie, that it maye spring vp in due season, and bring forth fruite moste plentifullye.

¶ And he said vnto them: is the candel lighted to be putte vnder a Buschel? or vnder the table? is it not lighted to be put on a candelsticke? for there is nothing so priuy that shall not be opened: neither hathe it bene so secrete, but that it shall come abrode. If any man haue eares to heare let him heare. And he said vnto them: take hede what ye heare. With what measure ye meate, with ỹ same shal other men measure vnto you agayne. And vnto you that heare, shall more be geuen. For vnto him that hath, shall it be geuen: and from him that hathe not, shall be taken away, euen that which he hath.

And because this monicion should the depeliar be printed in theyr mindes, he added a parable. Think you not, sayde he, that I will haue this thing which I doe now secretly committe vnto you, alwayes kept secrete. Dothe a manne light a candel because to hide the same when it is lighted, vnderneath a bushell, or vnder the tabull: or els dothe he rather light it to thentent it maye be set in a candelsticke, and geue light to all that be in the house? The gospel is ỹ sede, which is therefore cõmitted vnto you, because it maye bring forth fruite wt great encrease. I haue light the cãdel in you ỹ through your ministerie, it maye put away ỹ darkenesse of ỹ whole worlde. At this preſẽt I hyde many thinges frõ the multitude, because they are not as yet apt to receyue them: & though they were, ỹ tyme is not yet cum. But assone as the tyme shal once cum, there is nothing so hid amongst vs, that thẽ must not be discouered, nor any thing so secret, ỹ then must not be openly preached to al mẽ. For there must nothing feare you frõ spreading abrode, or preaching of the gospell: but all other thinges set apart, this thing only must you go about bothe daye and nyght. For wo be to that man, who hath not multiplied the good sede betaken vnto him: who hath hidden the light that was geuen him. Therefore if any of you haue eares to heare, let hym heare these wordes: and when he hath hearde them, let hym beare them wel in memorie. Agayne lest the wordes that he spake, shoulde be forgoten, he sayd moreouer: Marke well what thing you heare, and take hede that you heare not in vayne. For you heare not vayne fables and phantasies of mẽs inuencion, but heauẽly doctrine: which by your ministerie, must be spread abrode through out all the whole worlde. Preache you truly the doctrine which you haue receyued, and teach nothing that is disagreable therunto. It shall auayle you muche to heare these thinges, if you retayne thẽ wel in memorie, & diligẽtly distribute to other what you heare of me. Agayn you heare them to your great perill, if you strikẽ either wt feare humayne, or els delited with the cõmodities and pleasures of this present worlde, do suppresse and kepe in, that you haue receyued. Be not ye niggishe, and slouthful distributours of the doctrine that I giue you, but put it forth lauishly. For your liberalitie shall nothing diminishe, but rather encrease that, that you haue, and make it more. The treasure of golde and siluer is at the length wasted by liberalitie: but the more liberally you distribute this heauenly treasure, the greater shall the heape thereof be. Neither folowth it that like as he is the poorer that giueth awaye his goodes vnto ỹ needie, so in like manour is he the worse learned whiche distributeth the doctryne of the gospell to as manye as he can possible: but as he that carrieth light before manye, hath not therfore any whit the lesse light him selfe: euen so he that by preachinge the doctrine of the gospell, openeth a waye for al menne to cum to the knowleage of the truthe, doeth not only not loose that light whiche he alreadye hath, but also hath a greate deale more geuen him, to thentent he maye profite, and doe good vnto moo.

The treasure that you haue, is none of youres, but his who gaue it you to distribute. And if you distribute it to other with large measure, he that gaue you the stocke and principall parte, will also with like measure giue

For there is no thing so priuie. &c.

And he saide vnto them: take heede what ye heare &c.

And vnto you that hear shall more be geuen, &c.

you encreasse therof. God loueth to haue his gyftes prodigallye layed out: and here cleane contrarie to the manoure of worldlye riches, he waxeth richest, who so is lauishest in laying out.

For suche is the beneficiall goodnesse of God, that he whiche gaue vs muche before, doeth in moste ample wyse augmente his giftes, because he right well perceyueth that whatsoeuer was geuen, ꝑ same is distribute and bestowed to the great vtilitie of manye.

Therfore let hym whiche hath the gifte, bountuouslye distribute it, to thentent that he maye haue aboundaunce. No manne doeth well to geue goodes to hym that aboundeth with riches: but suche as be liberall in verye dede, are wonte to geue vnto the poore, and neadie. Here it is cleane contrarye. For vnto hym that hathe, and hathe not that thyng whiche he hath to his owne vse and commoditie alone, but liberallye departeth therewith to other, to hym, I saye, as to a trustie distributour, shall more be geuen: because he maye abounde, and haue muche plentye. He that hath not (suche a one is he that hydeth his treasure, and kepeth it to him selfe) the same shal not alonely be neuer a whyt the richer therfore, but also that thing whiche he thought he had for his owne vse, and no mans els, shall be quyte taken from him. Neyther let this make you euer the slacker or worse wylling to distrybute the gyftes of faythe, yf the people be vnkynde, and not answerable to your dyligent endeuour. Your wages shall be safe for you with God, who the more that euery one of you hath trauayled in setting forthe the gospell, the more bounteouslye will he rewarde hym, in the worlde to cumme. Albeit neyther shall you in the meane tyme be vtterlye defeated of your reward, whiche are daylye more and more enryched with the riches of the gospell.

For vnto him that hath &c.

And he saide: so is the kyngdome of God, euen as yf a man shoulde sowe sede in the grounde, and shoulde sleape, and rise vp nyght and daye, and the sede shoulde spring, and growe vp while he is not aware. For the earthe bringeth forth fruite of her selfe, firste the blade, then the eare, after that the fulle corne in the eare. But whē the frute is brought forth, anone he thrusteth in the sickle, because the harueste is cumme. The text.

Moreouer the Lorde added an other parable, whereby he taught his disciples that they should care for nothyng els, but onely goe aboute with all that they myght, to haue the gospell spred abrode and preached thorowe out all the whole worlde, tellyng theim that harueste tyme should once cum, when it should please the Lorde.

The kingdome of the gospell, sayth he, is after this manoure, as yf a manne should sowe his sede, and cast it vppon the grounde in the daye tyme. Anon after that the sede is putte into the earthe, he that sowed it, slepeth careles, and taketh his reste. And in ꝑ meane while that he is thus aslepe, the sede groweth neuer the lesse bothe nyght and daye, with secrete encreasynges without mans laboure, and nowe springeth the corne, and shooteth vp, hasting vndoubtedly of the owne accorde, and by a certayne prypate operacion of nature, to bring forth fruite.

Certes nature hath her degrees, the whiche she alwayes after the sede be once sowen, kepeth on course without the husbandmans laboure. For firste of al the sede, after it is putrified in the grounde, springeth vp into grasse. That is the firste hope of encrease. Then when the blade is shot vp, therunto groweth an eare, but suche a one as hathe as yet no corne in it. At the length the huskes of the eare are fylled full of wheate cornes. And these thinges are so secretly wrought by the procurement of nature, that a man can not perceiue when they growe, and yet sensibly perceiue that they haue growen and encreased.

But when the fruite is brought forthe. &c.

Therfore when the corne is ripe, he that sowed the sede, thrusteth in his sickell to reape that is cumme vppe, because he knoweth harueste tyme is alreadie cume. By this darke parable, the Lorde couertly taught his disciples the begynning, goinge forwarde, and consummacion or perfit ende of all the whole gospell: of the whiche three partes, him self woulde openly perfourme both the firste, and the last, with his visible bodie: and the other, that is to saye, the goyng forwarde, ordre with the inuisible grace of the holye ghost. For that same prince sowed abrode the sede of the gospell, thorowcout all Jewrye. Anon as he had so done, he slepte, firste dyinge, and then afterwarde rysinge agayne into euerlastinge quietnesse. And thus farre foorth springeth the sede of the gospell whiles he that first sowed it, is as it were a slepe: and secretly encreseth bothe daye and night, that is to saye, bothe in prosperitie, and in aduersitie, what occasion so euer be ministred eyther on theyr behalf that promote and auaunce it, or els of suche as resist the same.

For it can not be chosen but that seede must nedes cumme vp, whiche he sowed, whose will no man resisteth. Moreouer, where as there is nothing in this worlde vnknowen vnto him, yet in that he suffreth the worlde to make businesse againste the gospell, & his apostles to be persecuted, and slayne, he semeth vnto the faithlesse not to knowe what is here done, and to be in manoure a slepe, where as in verie dede, he doeth euen now by the inuisible power of his holie spirite, more effectually worke all thinges in all. He will not in visible forme retourne into the worlde, vntyll the tyme that (the gospell beynge fyrst so muche enlarged, and spread abrode, as he hath determined before, and only knoweth it shallbe) all men shall see him cum agayne vnder the self same forme and likenes, that he had when he ascended vp into heauen: to deuide the godly and good people from the wicked: and to laye vp the godly as good corne in the barne of euerlastinge quietnesse. Now see howe small beginninges the kyngdom of the gospell is sprong of, yt a manne esteme the thinge as it appereth vnto the world. This was, as a manne would saye, the grasse that sprang of the sede of the gospell, whiche the pharisees, scribes, priestes, elders, rulers, princes, kynges, and philosophiers dyd what they could to oppresse & kepe vnder that it should neuer cumme vppe. But whiles they stroue againste the streame, this sede began to be sowen in all partes of the worlde, and will not cease to growe before the worldes ende, vntill the corne be all ripe. Then ỹ sickel of iudgement that can not be auoyded, shall be thrust in, to thẽtent that when al are cut downe, it may delyuer the cockel vnto the fyre, and safely laye vp the pure wheate.

This

This parable, although it do specially pertaine vnto Jesu, the aucthour, promotour, and finisher of the kyngdome of the Gospell: yet doth it also touche bothe his Apostles, and their successours, whom he willeth wholly to bende them selfes hereunto, that Goddes worde may be sowen abrode, and preached as muche as may be. For this seede tyme lasteth euen tyll the worldes end: and they also as helpers of Jesu Christ, be sowiers, saue alonely that they sowe not their owne seede, but suche as Christe deliuered vnto them. And bycause that seede is celestial, it can in no wise be ouerlayed or oppressed. The Pharisees also, and Philosophyers had sede of their owne, but those sedes coulde by no meanes (no not when the world fauoured them) growe and prosper, where as the seede of the heauely doctrine, wareth euerye day more stronger then other, euen when the worlde with all the puissaunce and aydes that it hath, assaulteth it. Therfore the Apostles do likewise sowe after their fashion, and for that purpose they assente out, who by ofte flittyng from place to place, go aboute nothyng els, but to haue the Gospell as muche dilated and spredde abrode as is possyble to be. God geueth thencrease when they be asleape. That forsayd sede hathe in euery one, euen of the Christians, his grasse, his eare, and his haruest. In him that is a Christian nouice, the corne is yet vnperfite, and lacketh his naturall shape. In them that be lately borne again in Christe through baptisme, the seede is sprongen into grasse, which by the greenes of innocencie, putteth euery man in a ioyfull hope that it will proue well, and come to good. Nowe when they are growen vp hygher, by goyng forward in Christian vertue and Godlynesse, then be they eared.

And when eche of them is rype after his manour, then is he cut doune with the sickle. This sickle is deathe, after whiche the wheate neyther wareth more, ne lesse: neyther is made worse, nor better. The barne signifieth the life celestiall.

And he said: whereunto shal we lyken the kyngdome of God: or with what comparison shal we compare it? It is like a grayne of mustard seede, whiche whē it is sowen in the earth, is lesse than all seedes that be in the earthe. When it is sowen, it groweth vp, and is greater than al herbes, and beareth greater braunches, so that the fowles of the ayre may make their nestes vnder the shadow of it. And with many suche parables spake he the worde vnto thē, after as they myght heare it, but without parables spake he nothyng vnto them. But when they were alone, he exponnded all thynges to his disciples. And the same day, when euen was cūme, he said vnto them: let vs passe ouer vnto the other side. And they left the people, and toke him euen as he was in the ship: And there were also with hym other shippes. The texte.

Furthermore the Lorde Jesus shewed them by an other parable, a figure of the successe and prosperous going forward of the gospell, to thentent that they, who as then vnderstode not his sayinges, should afterward knowe by the end and proke of the matter that these thynges were not done at all auentures, nor by worldly policie, but by the prouidence of Goddes wysdome. And bicause he woulde make his hearers to take better hede vnto his woordes, he letyng as thoughe he hadde stande in doubte vnto what thyng he myghte beste compare the kyngdome of Heauen: sayed.

Unto what thyng shall we saye that the kyngdome of Heauen is lyke: or what comparison shal I vse, wherby I may expresse the nature and vertue thereof, vnto them that perceiue nothynge saue alonely what they see with theyr ipes: It is lyke (saieth he) a grayne, or corne of mustarde seede, whiche (when it is sowen) is lesse then all other seedes of hearbes, that are sowen in the earthe: in so much that yf a man marke the quantitie or forme therof, he loketh not that any great thing should cume of it. But as sone as the same is once sprong vp, and gotten out of the grounde, then draweth it to the nature of a tree, warpyng hard from the stemme or stalke, and spreadyng a brode his braunches beyonde the quantitie and measure of al other hearbes, in so muche that it geueth shadowe vnto the fowles, and also conuenient places for them to buylde, and make their nestes in. With these and many other like parables, the Lord Jesus shewed the rude and grosse people, a figure of the successe that the gospell shoulde haue, attempering his wordes vnto their capacities. He spake nothing vnto them at that time but in darke parables, because they were not as thē receyuable of plain cōmunicacion. For yf he had sayde, that he shoulde shortely haue bene slaine of the Iewes, but woulde anon after reliue, and spreade abrode his glory thorough out all the worlde, so that he, who then seemed lowest, and moost abiecte of all persons, shoulde be right well knowen to be the soueraigne gouernour of the whole worlde, and that no manne, were he neuer so hyghe in dignitie, shoulde fynde any quietnesse, or sure harborowe, vnlesse he fled for succoure vnderneth his bowghes or braunches: yf he had, I say, spoken thus plainely vnto them, not one of them all woulde haue abyden his wordes, nor geuen any credence therunto. And yet was it very expedient for them, as it were by a dreame, to remember these thynges: because afterwarde the thyng selfe shoulde teache them what was meāte by the same parables. He shewed them in secrete communicacion the secrete vnderstāding of euery parable that he spake vnto them. Thus was that day spent.

It is like a grain of mustard seede.

And with many such parables. &c.

When it was nowe almooste nyghte, he commaunded his disciples to rowe hym ouer to the other syde of the water. Bicause faythe towardes Christe, and by Christ to Godward, is the originall cause of the encrease of the gospel: the Lorde perceiuing that his disciples (who were as yet but rude, and weaklynges,) did geue no credēce vnto his doctrine, attempted many wayes to bring forth in them, and stablishe this fayth. When soeuer nyght, that is to say, the storme of worldly trouble, or aduersities cummeth vpon vs, then haue we chiefly nede of a strong and stedfast faithe towardes Christ. Therfore the disciples obeyed his commaundemente, and so after that the people, (who coulde not folow hym) were sent awaye, they accompanyed with certayne other boates, began to rowe hym ouer to the farther syde, in the same shippe that he then taught and preached in. The Apostles carry ouer Jesus, when so euer they go from place to place, to sette forth & preache the gospell. He knewe right well that against suche as so do, and be ministers of Goddes word, there should in time to cumme be muche sore busynesse and trouble stirred vp, by them that loue better the vanities of this worlde, then those thynges that appertain to euerlastyng saluacion.

But when they were alone, he expoūded. &c.

The texte. ¶ And there arose a great storme of wynde, and the waues dashed into the shyp, so that it was now full, and he was in the sterne aslepe on a pillowe, and they awaked hym, and sayd vnto him: master, carest thou not that we perish? and he rose vp, and rebuked the wind, and said vnto the sea: peace, be still: and the wind ceassed, and there folowed a great calme. And he said vnto them: why are ye so fearefull? how happeneth it that it that ye dáne no farry: and they feared exceadyngly, and said one to another, who is this? For both the wynde, and sea obey him.

Wherfore to harden, and strengthen his disciples against such persecutours, and to teache them also, that no power, be it neuer so cruell and terrible, oughte to be feared of those that with full harte and mynde put their affyaunce in the Lorde Jesu, he suffered them to be in daungier, euen to desperation. For after they had sayled farre frō the shore, there sodainly arose a great stormе of wyndes, whiche set the water in suche a rage, that the waues enforced by the violence of the tempeste, dashed into the shyppe, so that they were then in great daungier, least the shippe already filled with the great sourges of the sea, woulde haue soncken. In the meane whyle Jesus layed his head vpon a pillowe, and slept in the shyp. This was no fayned slepe: he slepte in very dede, beyng werped with trauayle, and watchynges, as one that had a very naturall body of man, subiecte to all suche passions as oures are subiect vnto. But he was not ignorauntewhat would betyde. He wyste well there would a tempest aryse. He knewe that the Apostles would be sore afraied, and waken hym out of his slepe. He could not more effectuallye teache them, that nothyng is to be dread of those that stedfastly beleue in him. The disciples therfore pynched hym as he slepte, and when they had awakened hym, sayd: Maister slepest thou so soundely whyle we perysshe: and thynkest thou that it maketh no matter to the, yf we be drouned: It was an argument of faythe, that when they were in daunger of deathe, they fledde vnto Jesu for succour: But of an vnperfyt faythe, for as muche as they beleued ỹ they were not in sufficient safegarde, as longe as the Lorde was aslepe. When Jesus was wakened, bicause he woulde by dede declare that he was the Lorde of all the elementes, he rebuked the windes, & commaunded them thē to cease. Then he said vnto the sea: peace, be stil. These two elementes whiche are obedient to no mortall man, knew the voyce of their maker. And by and by the wynd alayed: the waues, and sourges of ỹ water left their ragyng, & fell downe, & there folowed a great calme. Then the Lord tourned hym vnto his disciples, and rebuked them for their vnbelefe. Why (q he) are ye so afrayed: haue you not yet, after ỹ you haue seene me worke so many miracles, confydence in me: Nowe when the disciples, & the other that were with him in the shippe, saw this straūge wonder, how the sea beyng a dumme, & an vnruly element, and the wynde likewyse a violent element, forthwith as he had rebuked them, ceased from further ragyng, and were still: perceyuyng that it was a thyng passyng the state, and condicion of manne, sayd one of them to an other. Who is this whose commaundementes not onely diseases, and the dyuels, but also the dumme elementes obey vnto?

Master carest thou not that we perisshe.

And he rose vp & rebuked the wind. &c.

And he said vnto them why are ye so fearefull.

He that was sonne of man (as touchyng the natural appetites of man) had not in this world where to rest his head. For euen dying on the crosse when he had nothyng to lay his head on, he caste it doune. and so yelded vp the ghost: But here in the shyppe he dyd not onely take his reste, but also laied a pilow vnderneth his head, & slept theron: & anon a storme arose, bicause we should know what great daūger hangeth ouer ỹ church, so oft as Christ sleapeth in vs. He sleapeth verily, when the shepherdes & pastours of Christes flocke delited with the cōmodities, and pleasures of this world, are in a sound slepe,

ſound ſlepe, ſo that yf a man pynche them, or cry vpon them neuer ſo much, yet can they not be wakened. Howe faſt a ſlepe are thoſe Byſhops, who beyng altogether geuen vnto ſenſualitte, dronken with an vnlefull deſyre to rule, and playe the Lordes, and wholly ſet to heape vp money, neyther take any care for the flocke to them committed, nor haue any remembraūce of their owne ſowle health, nor yet are moued any whit at al with the common perill, to awake out of their ſlepe, and thinke thus with them ſelfe: What do I madde man that I am? The Lordes flocke is committed vnto me to be fed: and ſhortly muſt I cūme to the iudging ſeate of the euerlaſtyng iudge, who ſhed his precious bloude for theſe ſhepe, whiche he put me in truſte withal. What anſwere ſhall I than make hym? I ſhould with enſample of good lyuyng haue caryed light before them to euerlaſtyng ſaluacion: and by my naughty ſinnefull lyfe, I haue bene their guyde to hel, and dampnacion. I ſhoulde haue fedde them with the doctrine of the Goſpell, and dyd not feede them a whit, but plucked of their wolle by the rotes: but ſpoyled them of that they had, but ſlewe them. In ſtede of a father, I behaued my ſelf lyke a tiraunt, for a Byſhop, I was a Wolfe, and a robber. And in the meane whyle the tempeſt diſordereth all thynges, and maketh a great confuſion. Jeſus, who is the true heardman of the churches and congregacions, ſlepeth, diſſemblyng the matter, & ſuffering the ſtorme to aryſe: but he ſlepeth ſo, that he ſtraight wayes awaketh at the crye, and calling of his. The ſhyppe that Chriſt (as pertainyng to the body) is caried in, is one: but ſhe hath mo accompanyng her. There is one catholike or vniuerſal churche, and again there be many churches. Chriſt is lykewiſe in them all: And as many as do cleaue vnto the ſame head, be one congregacion. No ſhip is drowned ỹ foloweth Chriſt: Be they neuer ſo muche toſſed with the waues of the water, neuer ſo muche in ieopardie of drowning, yet haue they at the lengthe good arriuall, and cūme ſafe vnto the hauen.

But all this while, the tempeſt and nyghte do plainly teache vs that we can haue no maner of ayde and ſuccour of our owne ſtrength, and that al hope of ſaluacion is in Chriſt onely, if a man with full hart and mind put his truſt in hym. The deuel cauſeth oftymes ſuche tempeſtes priuately to aryſe in euery mans ſoule. For after that the night doth once darken our mindes with errours: after the light of faith doth faile, and the ſtrength of the aungelike ſpirite, be (as ye would ſaye) a ſlepe, and layed to reſt in vs, then do the windes of naughty luſtes ariſe, and greatly diſturbe the calme of the minde. The ſoule ſelfe is nowe in great hazard: there is no helpe, neyther in rowing, nor in sayles. There is no remedy, but it muſt nedes periſh and go to wrecke, if Chriſt be not wakened out of his ſlepe by feruent and importune prayers. If he heare not ſtraightwaies when he is called on, yet ceaſe thou not, but pricke, and pinche him til he be awake. By him onely ỹ calme and quietnes of the mind, ſhall incontinent be reſtored.

¶ And they came ouer to the other lide of the lea, into the countrey of the Gadarenites: and when he was cume out of the lhyppe, immediatly there met him out of the graues, a man polleled of an vncleane lpirite, whiche had his abidyng among the graues, and no man could bind hym: no, not with chaynes, bicaule that when he was often bounde with fetters, and cheynes, he plucked the cheynes a lunder, and brake the fetters in pieces, neyther could any man tame him. And alwayes nyght and day he was in the mountaynes, and in the graues, cryng, and beatyng himlelf with ltoues. But when he had lyyed Jelus a farre of, he ranne and wurlhipped hym, and cryed with a loude voyce, and layd: what haue I to do with the Jelus thou lonne of the moll hyghelt God? I require the in the name of God, that thou tourmente me not. For he laid vnto him: come out of the man thou foule lpirite And he alked hym, what is thy name? And he anlwered, and laid vnto hym: my name is Legion, for we are many. And he prayed him inltantly that he would not lend them away out of the countrey. The texte.

So this tempell hath taught vs that al trouble and buline lle what lo euer the world would ltirre vp againlt the golpell, ought by the aide of Chriit to be luffered with conltant courage of mynde: and that luche trouble lhould at one time or an other, be turned into greatelt tranquillity and quietnes: So lollowed there incontinent a figure, wherby was lignifyed ỳ there lhould be in lume partes of the world lo vplandilhe and cruell people, that they would at the fyrlt brunte by reaion of their naturall crueltie, refuse and abhorre the doctrine of the golpell: and yet lhould it cume to palle in proceile of time, ỳ they alio lhould waxe gentle, and louingly receiue the lwete yoke of the lord after they once knewe it. Wherfore allone as this ltorme was alayed, whiche figured the ltorme of perlecution, that princes lhould ltirre vp ragyng againlt the golpell, Jelus, and luche as accompanyed hym, arriued on the other lide of the water. That countrey was called the countrey of the Geralites, of a famous towne of Arabie, named Gerala, ioynyng vnto mount Galaad, in the tribe of Manalle, not farre fro the lake, or lea of Tiberias. For nowe the Lord Jelus maketh a forelhewe of the brutilhe, and cruell barbarouline lle of certain nations, of whom it may be doubted, whether they delerue to haue the name of mẽne, or no: yet is there none lo fierle and laluage crueltie that we ought to delpaire of.

Wherfore after that Jelus was cummen out of the lhyppe, and entred into this countrey, byanby, he lawe a light, whiche plainly declared the maners, and naturall diliolicion of that nacion. For when he was heard cũmyng, there ltarte out a certain lelowe, vexed with a lpirite of palling vnclenneile, & crueltie. This wretched creature woulde not come where as any reiort of people was, but liued ltill in lolitary places, lurkyng, and hidyng hymlelfe in dead mens tumbes that were by the highe way lyde. Neyther was there any that allayed any more to bynde hym, becaule he had bene often tymes bounde before, and alwaies plucked the cheines alunder, and brake the fetters in pieces. And when he was cum one of the lhip, &c.

Neither was there any violence that coulde lo reclaime hym, but that he beyng And no man coulde bynde him. &c.

beyng in case not able to rule him self, would gad abrode at libertie, whither soeuer the wicked fiẽd inforced him to go. For this cause he was vnbound, & wandered vp & doune both night & day among dead mens tumbes, and in wylde mountaynes, cryng and beatyng him selfe with stones. Nowe if any reken this to be (as it is in very deede) a miserable, and a terrible sight, let him consydre with him selfe, howe muche more miserable a sight in the yes of almighty God, is he that hath nothyng els of a man, but ỹ name onely: He, I say, that is marde and cast away through riotous liuyng, woode vpon harlottes, mad vpon the dise, and beside him selfe by reason of dronkennes, a braulet, a robber or praye taker, a breaker of the peace, a violẽt felow, suche a one as can neyther be restrained by Gods law, ne mans: neyther let, and bridled from his sensuall wilfulnes by any shame, reuerence, or feare: bold to do what him lyketh: who for sinall wages is hired to go to what warfare soeuer it be, to sle and murder such as he knoweth not, and neuer did him harme, to burn villages & good tounes, to rifle churches, and fynally to destroy all that euer holy is, or not holy. Put here vnto periuries, blasphemyes, and incest, with the whiche vices such lewd ruffians as are of this sort, be well acquainted. Put hereto treasons and poysonynges, with the practise of art Magike or sorcery, and thẽ shalt thou euidently perceyue howe muche lesse was the fury of the man thus vexed with the deuill, then of this wretched and vnthrifty captike.

But when he had spied Iesu a farre of, he ranne, &c.

But what? Ought we to dispayre of suche a one? No truely, if it may chaunce him at any time to see Jesu. He is lene by faith. For when the same wretched felowe at the noyse that the straungers made, was come out of his denne, violently to assault thẽ accordyng vnto his accustomed maner, anon as he had a farre of espyed Jesu, he drawen with an heauenly power, and sodaynly chaunged, ranne vnto him, and worshipped him. And strayghtwayes the fiende beganne to cry with a loude voyce by the mans mouth, and say: What hast thou to do with me Jesu the sõne of the highest God? I require the by the name of God, that thou turment me not. For Jesus voyce was vnto that deuill, a tourment, because he sayde: Thou foule spirit depart out of the man. So great was the malice of the deuill, that it was the greatest tourmente to hym that myghte be, if he nowe could no lenger be suffered to vexe and tourment the sely wretche. He felt Jesus voyce effectuall, and almyghty, the whyche he was constrayned to obey vnto, whether he would or no.

For he saide vnto him: come out of ỹ man

Nowe I reporte me to you, whether there be not lyke affection of mynde in suche as be extremely malicyous persons, who haue a great delyghte to doe other menne harme, yea, thoughe it be to their owne displeasure. And yf they be restrayned from theyr wilfull desire, so that they can not be suffered to do what myschiefe they woulde, then are they sore vexed in mynde.

And he asked him: what is thy name.

Jesus demaunded of the fowle spirite what was his name. The spirite made aunswere: my name is Legion, because we be many. Thou knowest (good reader) that this woorde Legion, is a woorde or terme of warre, whiche implyeth a foule rablement of ruffians confedered together, to destrope men. But no power of a multitude preuaileth agaynst the might of Jesus. He as easely putteth a Legion to flight, as one man.

And he prayed hi instaunctly.

Thẽ that capitayn deuell who spake for all the reste, greatly besought Jesus, whom sus, who he acknowledged to be his conquerour, that the wold not cleane exile hym out of that countrey. O peruerse malice of the deuel. He desyreth no forgeuenes, nor any other benefite, wherby he may be in better case. He counteth it a pleasure and benefite, if he may be suffered there to continew, where as most occasion is for hym to do harme: Euen as though a sorte of snaphaunses set all on mischefe, enforced by a greater power of the prince, and commaunded to breake garison, or forsake their holde and fortresse, would make this petition: We desire no wages, but onely that your grace will suffer vs to raunge abrode in the countrey, and robbe and reaue at oure owne peryll.

¶ But there was ther nigh vnto the mountaynes, a great heard of swyne feading, & al the deuils besought hym, saying: send vs into the herd of swyne, that we may entre in to thē. And anone Iesus gaue them leaue, and the vncleane spirites went out, & entred into the swyne. And the herde was caried hedling into the sea. They were almost two thousand, and were drouned in the sea. And the swyneherdes fled: and tolde it in the cytie, and in the feldes. And they wēt out for to see what had happened, & came to Iesus, and saw him that was vexed with the fiende, and had the Legiō, sit both clothed and in his right mind, and they were afrayd: and they that sawe it, tolde them howe it had happened to him that was possessed with the deuill, and also of the swyne. And they began to pray him that he would depart out of theyr coast. The text.

When that vnto this request and petition of the deuell, Iesus made no answere, there was not farre of a great heard of swine, nighe vnto the mountayn feadyng in the fieldes. Thou knowest here good reader, the beast that was abhorred of all the right Iewes, and wherwith the Gentils a people geuen to Idolatry, were chiefely delyted. Therfore the deuels desyred that they might be suffered at the least wise to enter into the swyne: And yf we may not (say they) destroy the man whom thou deliuerest from vs, yet geue vs leaue sumwhat to weake oure malice by destroying of the vncleane beastes. That Iesus graunted them without any stickyng, who cared not for the safegard and preseruacion of swine, but of men: teachyng vs hereby that for to saue, euen but one man, we ought not to passe vpon the losse of other worldly thynges, be it neuer so great. The Legion of ỹ vncleane spyrites forsoke the man, who remayned to be purified with ỹ spirit of Christ, and went into the heard of swyne, whiche were forthwith caryed headlong with great violēce, doune the steepe hyll into the lake or sea, and there drowned. The swyne were almost two thousand in number. Let mē beware that they be not founde like vnto swyne. For into suche sowles the dyuels are eyght glad to enter. And the vncleane spirites went out and entred into the swyne.

Nowe the swyneheardes after they had seene this wonderfull facte, dyd not helpe their swyne, but fledde away for feare into the next citie, and into the countrey there about, and shewed euery body what they had sene. That good sheapard helpeth his flocke beyng in ieopardye. But when the pastours or shepeherdes are them selues as bad as theyr naughty flocke that is past all grace and goodnes, then both the flocke goeth to wrecke and vtterly perisheth, & the shepherdes do nothyng els but flye awaye for feare. Assone as this thyng was noysed abrode, the people cam running thicke and thrfold out of the toune and countrey, desyrous to see with theyr yes, what they had heard before with theyr eares. For all semed vnto them incredible that the swyneherdes had tolde them. Wherfore they came them And they went out for to see.

selues vnto Jesu, & sawe ỹ mā whome they all knewe, before vexed wᵗ a spirite of excedyng cruelnes, & wont by reason of his great fury and madnes, to brast al his chaynes, and fetters in pieces, to rente and teare a lōge his clothes, to beate him selfe with stones, violently to assaulte those that passed by, & to make all the places there about to ryng with hys furious cryeng and roryng: sawe him, I say, then set quietly at Jesus feete bothe clothed, and in his right mynde. Nowe they whiche were present, and sawe what was done, recoūted to suche as came thyther, the whole history of all that befel, euen from the beginning, bothe howe the legion of deuils was cast out of the man, and also how the hogges were drouned in the water.

And they that sawe it tolde them, &c.

Wherfore when they (the matter now diligently examined and tryed out) were throughly persuaded that al was of truth whiche had bene tolde the of the swyneherdes, then were they afrayed, and beganne to desyre Jesu to departe out of theyr quarters. This wicked, and grosse nacion, knewe not Jesu throughly. They perceyued his power, but they marked not hys goodnes manifestly declared in ỹ he restored this mā to his right mynde: and they were a great deale more moued in theyr myndes for the losse of theyr swyne, then glad of the mans health & recouery. They feared theyr Oxen, theyr Asses, and theyr hogges, and toke great care for the bely, and none at all for the soule. And yet for al that, it is a certayne begynnyng of saluacion, sumwhat to stand in drede of Gods power.

And they began to pray hym.

The text. And when he was come into the shyp, he that had the deuil, prayed him that he might be with him, howbeit Jesꝰ would not suffre him, but sayd vnto him: go to thyne owne house, and to thy frendes, & shew them how great thinges the Lord hath done for the, and howe he hath compassion on the. And he departed, & beganne to publishe in the .x. cyties, howe great thynges Jesus had done for him, and all men did maruayle.

The Lorde, teachyng vs by dede, that the roses of Gods word and the gospel ought not in any wyse to be cast vnto hogges, reculed vnto the water syde and tooke shippe. In the meane whyle the felowe whiche was deliuered from the deuill, perceyuyng the authour of hys health to departe, beganne to desyre him that he might be one of his trayne, The Lordes pleasure was that he should rather be a publisher of his mercye, & goodnes, then one that should accompany him in his iourneys, because it was expedient for the soule health of many ỹ he should so be. Get the hence rather, (sayd he) vnto thy house, and to thy kynsfolkes, and acquaintaunce, and shewe them howe muche God hath done for the, and howe he tooke cōpassion vpon the when all menne pitied the, but yet demed the past all remedye. That countrey contayned in it ten cyties, and therefore was called in the Greke language, Decapolis. The man obeying the commaundemēt of Jesu, departed, and tolde in all those cyties both what case he was once in, and in what case he was now made agayne, throughe the benifite of Jesus. Euerye man beleued that his wordes wer true, by reason very many of the same countrey knew him before, and also because he shewed by his outward behauioure, that he was by the power of Jesu, perfitely restored vnto his right mynde. He was not ashamed to speake of his olde calamities, whiles he went about to set furth Gods glory.

payze not: onely runne vnto Jesus. Considze not the multitude and greuousnes of thyne offences: only regard that Jesus is he that came to saue all men, and is able to do all thynges with a becke. When the Legion of deuils hath forsaken the, when thou arte restored to thy right mynde agayne, then blase, especially among thy frendes, and acquayntaunce, the great mercy of GOD towardes the. Be not ashamed to confesse thy former lyfe. For this also shall make greatly for the aduaunceynge and settyng furthe of the mercye of Jesu, if it be knowen to as manye as may be possible, howe abhominably thou liuedest before. Knowledge and confesse what thou hast bene: And where as thou art nowe sodaynly chaunged, and become another man, ascribe it not vnto thyne owne deserupnges, but vnto the free mercye of God: who taketh mercye and compassion vpon whome soeuer it pleaseth him, for asmuche as he is debtour and bound to no man.

¶ And when Jesus was come ouer agayne by shippe vnto the other syde, muche people gathered vnto him, and he was nigh vnto the sea: and behold there came one of the rulers of the Synagoge, whose name was Jairus: & when he sawe him, he fel doune at his fete, and besought him greatly, saying: my daughter lieth at poynct of death. I pray the come and lay thy hãd on her, that she may be safe, and liue. And he went with him, and muche people folowed him, and thronged him. The texte.

When this sede (as a man may call it) was sowen among ꝑ Gerasites, the Lord Jesus passed eftsones the water. That he so oftentymes chaungeth place, maketh for the aduaunceyng of the gospell: and the varietie of miracles monisheth vs how the teacher of the gospell ought busyly to do his deuour whensoeuer occasion serueth, to bring whom soeuer he can to saluacion. Nowe when he was brought ouer to the other side, thither resorted afresshe, a great multitude of people. For like as the lodestoone draweth vnto it yron, euen so doth beneficẽce and wel doing allure all men vnto her. Whiles the Lorde was by the water syde, there came vnto him one of the rulers of the Synagoge, called Jairus. This Jairus moued by the fame of Jesu, came thither with the rest of the multitude. For there was a thing whiche greued his heart very sore, wherin he muche desyred the presẽce of Jesu. Therfore when he saw that Jesu was brought agayne vnto the shore, and set a land, he was ryght ioyous, and (as they are euer lowly and crouchyng whiche greatly desyre any thinge) although he were a ruler of the Synagoge, that is, a primate among stately felowes, yet fell he doune at the fete of Jesu, & besought him, saying: Lorde, my daughter a mayden of twelue yere olde, in whom I reposed the chiefest solace of myne olde age, is in as great perill of life as may be, and lieth now at the mercy of God: come, and lay thy hand vpon her, that thorough thy touchyng she may be safe, and liue. Jesus perceiuyng well by his wordes howe weake his fayth was as yet, in asmuche as he made mencion of the extreme ieoperdye that she was in, as though he had not bene able to reliue her, if she hadde beene deade in dede: and in that he requyred his presence, and also the touchyng of his hande, as thoughe he could not beyng absent, yea, and with a becke make whole whomsoeuer him list: Jesus, I say, promised him to come, and so folowed him goyng homewarde a good pase: geuyng therby an ensample howe redy the pastour of Christes flocke ought to be in procuryng soule health to all men, bothe

to Grekes, and to barbarous nacions to them whiche are deſcended of noble parentage, and of baſe lynage, to riche, & to pooze, to lerned and to vnlearned. And as he went, there was occaſion geuen him, wherby to reſourme the vnperfite fayth of the ſayd ruler of the ſynagoge, & that by the enſample of a woman, whiche the leſſe that ſhe knew Chriſt by the lawe, the moze was ſhe to be bozne with all, and excuſed foz her vnbelief. There folowed Jeſus as he went to the ruler of the ſynagoges houſe, a marueylous great multitude of people, partly becauſe it was not poſſible to diſſeuer them from him, and partly to behold the miracle whiche ſhould be wzought. The nobilitie of the ſuyter made them moze deſyzous to behold. Wherfoze as eche of them pzeaſed to be nexte Jeſu, ſo was he payned with the thzongyng of the people.

The texte. ¶ And there was a certayne woman whiche had bene diſeaſed of an yſſue of bloud. xii. yeres, and had ſuffered many thinges of many phyſicians, and had ſpēt al that she had, and felt none amendment at all, but rather was woꝛſe and woꝛſe. When ſhe had heard of Jeſus, ſhe came in the pzeaſe behynde him, and touched his garment. For ſhe ſayd: if I may but touche his clothes, I ſhalbe whole. And ſtraygtway the foũtayne of her bloud was dzyed vp, & ſhe felt in her body that ſhe was healed of that plage.

In this pzeaſe was there a woman that had a filthy, a ſhamefull, and alſo an vncurable diſeaſe, and had bene ſicke therof, the ſpace of .xii. yere (foz it was the bluddy flyx) whiche was in ſo muche the woꝛſe takyng, becauſe whiles ſhe put great hope of recouery in Phyſicians, that made her many fayze pzomiſes: and whiles diſapoynted of one, ſhe went vnto another foz boote that putte her in moze aſſurance of health, and from him agayne to another, beyng continually fed with good hope, and comfoztable woꝛdes, ſhe ſpent all that euer ſhe had vpon them: and yet foz all this ſo litle was ſhe holpen by Phiſike, that ſhe was in muche woꝛſe caſe then ſhe ſhould haue bene if it had not chaunced her to medle vꝫ the Phiſicians at all, who whyles they made many large pzomiſes, and payned the pooze wzetche with their ſeruiceable diligence, bothe encreaſed her olde griefe, and alſo added therunto a newe, that is to ſay, vnto her bluddy flyxe, pouertie. Suche vndoubtedly are the commune ſoꝛt of thoſe that pzofeſſe humayne medicine. But it is oftymes ſeene that health is gotten by vter diſpayzyng of health. After ſhe began once to diſtruſt the Phiſicians, and they perceiuyng that ſhe had nothyng left to geue them, had nowe at the length geuen ſentence ꝑ there was no hope of her recouery: than began ſhe to be nerer vnto health, then ſhe was befoze. Foz God healpeth none moze willyngly then ſuche a one as is cleane deſtitute and foꝛſaken of all woꝛldly ſuccours. This woman heard but tell of Jeſu, and furthwith ſhe conceyued a wonderfull great confidence of him, and pzeaſed in among the thickeſt of the multitude. The baſhefulnes of womanhode, and the fylthynes of her diſeaſe, would not ſuffre her to do as the ruler of the ſynagoge did, but ſhe came behynd Jeſu, and at the lengthe when ſhe had with muche a do wound her ſelf out of the pzeaſe of people, whiche thruſt, and thzonged one another, then touched ſhe his garment. Foz ſhe had ſuche confidence in him, that ſhe ſayd ſecretely to her ſelfe in this wyſe:
If I may touche but the only hemme of his garment, I ſhalbe deliuered of my diſeaſe. When all the Phyſicians whiche toke muche money to put her

her to payne, had geuen her ouer, she happened to mete with an other Physician, who sodaynly restored her to perfite health, and that for naught. She was not deceiued in her trust. For assone as she touched the Lordes garment, the yssue of bloude was staunched, the humour being sodaynly corrected, whiche was wont to yssue, and well out, as it had bene out of a quicke spryng. Moreouer she felt nowe agayne the selfe same strength and lustines in al her body, that she was wont to haue before, or euer she began to be sicke of this disease.

Let suche as be effeminate persons, and made womanlike through excesse, and worldlye delicacies or pleasures, haue recourse no whither els for succour, saue vnto Jesu. If they trust to Philosophiers, lawyers, arte Magike, or Pharisaicall ceremonyes, then shall they: after bothe tyme and wyt consumed herein, do nothyng els but encrease theyr disease, and wynne pouertie: except paraduentute suche pouertie beleese greuous vnto them by reason that age is now spent, and wytte cleane decayed, and gone. The woman highly reioyced when she had, as it wer, stollen this benefite of Christ, whom she thought might (as a man) be deceyued, & kepte from the knowledge of the thing that was done: or els yf he coulde not so be, then trusted she verely ỹ he woulde of his goodnes, pardon the shamefastnes of womanhood.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus immediatly felyng in himselfe that vertue proceded from him, turned him about in the preasse, and sayd: who touched my clothes? And his disciples sayd vnto him: thou seest the people thrust the, and askest thou, who did touche me? And he loked round about for to see her, that had done this thing, but the woman fearing, and trembling (knowyng what was done within her) came, and fell doune before him, & tolde him all the truth, and he sayd vnto her: doughter thy fayth hath saued the, go in peace, and be whole of thy plage.

The Lorde hauing more regard to Gods glory, & the health of a greate many, than to the shamefastnes of one woman, knowyng rightwell that he was touched, and that the woman had receyued the benefite of health therby, turned him to the multitude preasyng behynd him, & sayed: Who touched my clothes? The disciples thinkyng nothyng vpon this ỹ befell, answered the Lord agayne and sayd: Thou seest a greate preasse of people thrustyng and throngyng the on euery side, and yet askest thou who toucheth the? They that reade the gospell do touche Christe. Suche as do cõsecrate or receyue his holy body, do the same: but all are not healed whiche do touche him. The woman alone that touched him with a strong fayth was healed. Jesus required no other rewarde for his benefite, but onelye a confession of the disease, & a knowledge of Gods mercye. Therfore when the woman constrayned by shamefastnes, helde her peace, trustynge that she might styll haue bene vndiscryed he looked rounde aboute on the people, as thoughe he hadde bene desirous to knowe her that had touched him. This lokyng about of Jesus, was a gesture of hym that courteously requyred a confession of the benefite receyued. He woulde not vtter her by name, lest he shoulde haue semed to haue hit her in the teeth, wyth the good turne he dyd her. The woman of a womanly shamefastnesse, and not of anye vnthankefulnesse, helde her peace. Then was there a pricke or prouocacion geuen, to make her to put away that vnprofitable shamefastnes, and to wryng out of her an holsome confession. For what is not the loke of Jesu able to do? In this wyse he beheld Peter, & furthwith he came vnto him selfe agayn. The woman knowyng in what case she came vnto Jesu, and what great benefite she had receyued of him durst not dissemble the matter, but all womanly bashefulnes layd apart, came fearing, and trembling before him. For she stoode in great dread, lest he would haue rebuked her for her leudnes. Then fell she doune at his knees, and in the audience of them all, shewed the whole matter as it was in euery point without ony dissimulacion or colouryng: howe long the disease had hanged vpon her, howe Physicke had bene practised in vayne, howe she touched his garment priuily, and what a great trust she had conceiued of him. The Lord Jesus loueth suche a confession as causeth the synner to knowe him selfe, and to geue all the glory vnto God for the restitucion of his health, and fynally that maketh him to prouoke many moe to like fayth: puttyng vs in remembraunce, that of him onely cummeth fre health and saluacion, and that it maketh no matter how many, and how abominable mans enormities be, but how muche confidence one hath, eyther in the power, or els in the goodnes of almighty God. If the disease of thy mynd be secrete and vnknowen, yet confesse it vnto Jesu who neyther vttereth it agayne, nor imbraydeth the therwith, but maketh the whole. If thou haue openly offended, then make thou open confession, that like as thou hast entised many by thy naughty ensample, to vice and sinfull liuyng, so contrary wyse beynge turned from synne, thou mayst prouoke many to amende theyr liues. That shamefastnes is vtterly to be putte away, whiche bothe enuieth God his glory, and our neyghbour his soule health. Assuredly thou shalt be well apayed that thou art rid therof, when thou once feleste thy selfe moze quiet in conscience thzough thy confession, then thou wast before, as though thou haddest heard the selfe same wordes of ỹ Lord Jesu that the woman hearde. What heardest she? Daughter, the fayth thou haddest in me, hath restored the vnto health, whiche physicke was not able to geue the. Depart with a ioyfull, and a quiet minde. I wyll that thou enioye this my benefite continually. O thou ruler of the Synagoge, seest thou not? Heareste thou not these wordes? For al this was done to enstruct the, and suche as thou art. The woman was sicke of an vncurable disease, she waxed dayly worse and worse, and yet for the notable fayth she had in Jesu, she was healed by the onely touchyng of his garment. And thou calleste, as one would say, the Physicia home to thy house: thou commaundest him to lay his hand vpon the patient, and requireste haste.

And the disciples sayed vnto hym thou seest. &c.

But the woman fearyng and trēblyng.

¶ Whyle he yet spake, there came frō the ruler of ỹ Synagoges house certaine whiche sayd: thy doughter is dead: why diseasest thou the master any further? And assone as Jesus heard the worde that was spoken, he sayd vnto the ruler of the Synagoge: Be not afrayde, onely beleue. And he suffered no man to folowe him saue Peter, & James, and John the brother of James, and he came vnto the house of the ruler of the Synagoge, and sawe the wanderyng, and them that wept, and wayled greatly, and went in, and sayd vnto them, why make ye this a do, and wepe? The damosel is not dead, but slepeth: and they laughed him to scorne. But he put them al out, and taketh the father and the mother of the damosell, and them that were with him, and entreth in where the damosell lay, and taketh the damosell by the hand, and sayth vnto her. Tabita cumi, which is (if one do enterpret it) damosell, I say vnto the: arise and straightway the damosell arose, and walked. For she was of the age of twelue yeres. And they were astonyed out of measure, and he charged them straightly that no man should knowe of it, and commaunded to geue her meate.

Whiles Jesus was aunswerynge the woman, there came messengers from the ruler of the Synagoges house, whiche sayde vnto hym: Thy doughter is deade. Why doest thou put the mayster to further paynes in vayne? These wordes spoken, the ruler of the Synagoge who had before a doubtfull hope mengled with muche feare, beyng nowe as a man in despayre, durst make no farther suite vnto the lord. The messangers put him in despayre, saying: She is deade. So many are wont to speake by those persons which haue fallen to the commyttyng of some haynous enormitie: as for an ensample, of aduoutrye, incest, theefte, or manslaughter, saying: he is at a poynt: he is past all goodnesse. Surely Jesus suffreth none to fall into desperation, but suche a one as refuseth to beleue in hym. It is the propertie of Jewes to despayre. The good Christian who knoweth the goodnesse of the Lorde to be egall with his power, neuer despayreth. Christ therfore holpe and lyfted vp the fayntyng hope of the ruler of the Synagoge, with swete and cõfortable wordes, saying: be not afrayed although it be so that thy doughter be deade in dede. Onely haue beleefe. It skylleth not in howe euell case she be, but how strong, and stedfaste is thy fayth. Whẽ he had thus spokẽ, he came vnto the ruler of the Synagoges house, and entred in, but keapyng all the rablement of people without dores, suffryng not so muche as his disciples, to go in with him saue alonely Simõ Peter, James, and John, who was James his brother. These folowyng hym, he entred in to the ruler of the Synagoges house: there founde he all thynges ryght gorgiously, and with great pompe, prepared for the burpall of the mayden, and besyde this many of her kynsmen, and kynswomen lamentably bewaylyng her ouertymely death. For the common sorte are wounte to take the death of yong folkes muche greuouslyer then of olde, where as in dede nothyng is more to be desyred of God, then in that age to dye, when it is moste pleasure to lyue: or euer the soule be blemished with the manyfolde cuels of this present lyfe. For it litle forceth how long a man liue, but howe well, and vertuously.

Jesus therfore teachyng vs that we ought not to bewayle the deade with vaine funeral songes, sauled the mourners to cease their noyse. Why, saith he, make you suche a clamoure and noyse in the house with youre wepyng, and waylynge? The mayde is not deade, but aslepe. Truly vnto hym she dyd but slepe, who coulde muche easlyer waken, and relyue her with a word of his mouth, then one of vs can wake an other oute of his slepe. And slepe is in euery poynt a resemblaunce and meditacion of death. For it bringeth to rest the powers of the soule, and taketh awaye sence, so that if it were cõtynuall: it were very death in dede. But such as stode by when she died, not percepuyng what Jesus meante by these wordes, laughed hym to skorne: because he beleued she was yet alyue, sithe it euidentlye appeared that she was dead. Jesus droue al these folkes out a doores, which fylled the house full of noyse and dynne with theyr vayne wepyng and waylyng, and dyd not only nothyng at al profite the dead bodie therwith, but also encreased the wofulnesse of her parentes, and laughed hym the authour of health, to skorne. There nedeth not the presence of such people, where the soule beyng deade throughe sinne, is to be called agayne to the lyfe of innocencie and vertuous lyuyng.

This

This thing did Jesus then in a nother mannes seuerall house. What would he now doe, yf he sawe the great pompe that some vse in funerals euen to very madnesse? There are certayne persons hiered to sayne mourning and weping, to crie oute, to teare the heare that many tymes is none of theyrs, to knocke themselues on the breste, to scratche theyr faces, to caste out wordes that no franticke manne would speake the like, full of distrust & vnbeleefe. They set mylke by the dead karkes, therwith to allure the soule, straying and wandringe abrode, into the bodye agayne. They ofte tymes cry: and call vpon the dead body by name: Philip came agayne: Come agayne to vs good Philip. They chyde & braule with hym saying: Why hast thou forsaken thy frendes? Why wouldest thou kyll vs with mourning? Thou lackeddest nothing to liue all at pleasure, neyther riches, nobilitie, honorable aduauncementes, beautie, nor age. O thou cruel felow O wretches that we be. &c. Nowe put me here vnto the trumpetters that sounde vnto the deafe, the syngyng men that synge vayne funerall songes vnto the deade bodie, whiche heareth them not: and doe not therby take awaye the sorowe of the lyuyng, but encreasse it. Furthermore put hereto the long rowes of torche bearers, and the ray of those that are clad al in black, and mournyng apparel: Yea, ther be sume also which cause horses trapped in blacke to be brought into this pompous shewe, to cary the dead mannes flagge & coote armoure, & with theyr downe lokyng. (for theyr neckes are fast bounde vnto theyr legges) to make as thoughe they sought for theyre maister that is descended and gone downe to hell. What shall I rehearse the greate feast, & solemne bankettes that they are wonte to make: the magnifike, and costlie buildinges of tombes, as though there wer litle pompe, and superfluite vsed in life, excepte dead folkes dyd also declare themselues to be attached with these vices. Now sithens euen tho that are of the wisest sorte of the heathen, suppose these to be mad & fond customes: howe muche more then ought they not to be had in vse among christian men, which doe al slepe rather then dye, & shall awake agayne the laste daye at the sowning of the Aungels trumpet. Therfore, to retourne to the order, and processe of christorye, when Jesu had all these folkes oute a doores, he toke the parentes of the mayden, and went into the secrete chambre wheras the coarse laye.

And taketh ꝑ father & mother of the damsell.

For his pleasure was that they should be witnesses of the miracle whiche he entended to worke. Here ꝑ Lord toke the mayden by the hand, & as thoughe he woulde haue wakened her out of her slepe, sayde vnto her: Tabithacumi, the whiche in the Syrian language is as muche to saye, as: howe mayden, arise. Suche as are in a depe or sounde slepe cannot many tymes be wakened, althoughe a man call them ofte tymes with a loude voyce, and pynche them neuer so muche: and when they be called vp, yet doe they not by and by awake, but being a good while halfe aslepe or drousy, gape, stretche theyr armes, nod with theyr heades, that manye tymes the chynne strykeeth the breste: and if a manne call not styll vpon them, they fall aslepe againe. Thys deade mayden rose furthwith, and walked at the voyce of Jesu, beyng not only relieued, but also verye merye, and iocunde. For the soule which through thenforcement of the disease had forsaken the bodye, knewe the voyce of hys maker, & without delaye returned agayne into the house that it went out of.

The

The more sorowfull that her death was by reason of her yonge age, (for she was but twelue yeare olde) the greater was the myrthe and ioye which they made for her reliuyng. Her father and mother were greatlye amased with this straunge, and wonderful sight. Iesus who neyther required rewarde or mede of them, nor yet thankes for hys labour, onely commaunded them to geue her meate, bycause it myght therby more certaynely appeare howe she was restored to life. For eatyng is not onely a sure token of life, but also of welfare, and good health. He lykewyse charged them that they shoulde not blase this thinge abrode whiche was priuely done, and in the presence of a fewe persons, eyther because he would haue it rather published by suche as he put out a doores, then by the ruler of the synagoge (who should haue bene more enuied, but lesse beleued if he had bene the publysher hereof) eyther because in that he commaunded them to kepe the thyng secrete, whiche he knewe right well they would not doe, hys wyll was to teache vs howe that in all the good dedes we dooe we ought vtterlye to exchewe all vayneglorye, and worldly prayse. If a man wade deper herein, and serche what secret learning lyeth hid in this miracle, (for euen the very doinges of Iesu be parables) it shall appeare that this dead mayden of twelue yeare olde, and scarcelye yet marryable, signifieth a man, whiche by frayltie of nature hathe fyrst fallen to the committyng of some priuie crime or synne, and therfore, because he is not yet past regarde of honestie, nor by long custome rooted in synne, maye with the medicine of shame, easlye be holpen, and cured thereof. Whē any suche offēdeth, it becommeth the Curates and pastours to folowe the gentle demeanour of Iesu, who without makyng any great adoe, raysed the mayden at home in the presence of a fewe witnesses. It shall be sufficient to rebuke suche as haue thus offended & done amisse, secretly: least theyr fault beyng once disclosed, they eyther set al shame aparte, or els pyne awaye through ouermuche sorowe and heauynesse.

And they were astonied out of measure. &c.

The fyrst offence yf it happē through frayltie & weakenesse, is very sone amended. It is muche harder to cure hym whose wickednesse is once come to the knowleage of the people: and hardest of all to heale suche a one as is hardened & rooted in synne by longe custome of synnyng. And therfore he rayseth the maydē by vertue of his bare word in her fathers seueral house, suffryng fewe to be present therat. But he maketh more a doe when the yōg syrryngalt, which was borne out vpō mennes shoulders to be buried, is restored to lyfe againe. His mother and all the people that go with her, make great mone and lamentacion. The yong man is had out to buryng, and fyrst his mother heareth Christ saye: wepe not. Then Christe toucheth the coffyn, and causeth the porters to staye. Anon he calleth the dead man with a loud voyce, saying: Howe, I say to the, arise. Thē fyrst he rayseth himself, & sitteth in the coffyn: afterward he begynneth to speake: at the length he whyppeth out of the coffyn, and is delyuered vnto hys mother.

But Christ commaundeth Lazarus graue to be shewed hym as though he knew not where it were: he wepeth once, or twyse. He is troubled, and groneth in spirite. He commaūdeth the graue stone to be remoued, and calleth oute Lazarus with a loude voyce. The deade man commeth oute, but bounde: At the length he is vnbounde, and falleth to his meate.

It was

It was no more maiſtrie for Chriſt to rayſe vp the karkas which had laine fower dayes dead, then the bodie newly deade, who at the day of dome wyll by the voyce of thaungel, rayſe and call to lyfe agayne, all mennes bodies that haue bene buryed in ſo manye thouſand yeares before: But by thys fygure his wyll was to ſhewe vs howe muche a doe it is for them to turne from ſinfull lyuyng, who of long tyme haue ben accuſtomed to vyces, not to the end that we ſhould deſpayre of ſuch perſons, but becauſe we ſhould endeuoure to amende our lyues in ſeaſon, and more earneſtlye go about to bryngе all that are in ſuche cale to amendment. Moreouer I thynke it alſo here worthye to be noted, that where as Jeſus woulde haue hys benefite publyſhed of the Geraſite poſſeſſed of the dyuell, yet commaunded he the ruler of the Synagoge to kepe ſilence. For the enuious Synagoge went aboute by all meanes, to ouerwhelme and oppreſſe the glory of the Lorde Jeſu, the whiche Synagoge dyd alſo afterwarde beate the Apoſtles, & charged them that they ſhould not be ſo hardy as once to ſpeake of his name. But theyr enuie preuayled nothyng at al. The more they went about to oppreſſe his holſome name, the more was it preached among the Gentiles. The prieſtes holden theyr peace: The Phariſeis crye oute, and ſpeake agaynſt hym: The Scribes rayle vpõ hym: Herode laugheth him to ſcorne: but wurſhyppers of Idolles, theues, extorcioners, and ſuche as are attached with the vices of inceſte and aduoutry, ſodaynelye delyuered by the grace of the goſpell from theyr olde ſynnes, as from moſte fell and cruell dyuels, do magnifie and prayſe hym.

The. vi. Chapter.

The texte. And he departed thence, and came into his owne countrey, and his diſciples followed hym: and when the Saboth daye was come, he began to teache in the ſynagoge. And many that heard hym were aſtonied, and ſayd: From whence hath he theſe thinges? And what wiſdome is this that is geuē vnto hym, & ſuche vertues as are wrought by his handes? Is not this the Carpenter, Maries ſonne, & brother of James, & Joſes, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his ſiſters here with vs? And they were offended with hym. Jeſus ſayd vnto them: a Prophet is not deſpyſed but in his owne countrey, and among his owne kynne, and in his owne houſhold. And he coulde there ſhewe no myracle, but layde his handes vpon a fewe ſicke folke, and healed them, and marueyled becauſe of theyr vnbeliefe.

Hat occaſion ſoeuer Chriſt haue to go any whither, he is alwayes after one faſhion, and like himſelfe: that is he euer bryngeth health, to teache his diſciples that accõpanye him, howe we chriſtians ought neuer to ceaſe to do the buſyneſſe of the goſpell, but ſtill to go about whenſoeuer occacion ſerueth therunto, to make of euel men good, and of good better, whether it happē vs to continew & leade our liues at home in our owne howſes, or els in forreyne & ſtraunge countreyes: in publyke place, or in priuate. Moreouer he ẏ is vnfaynedly indewed with ſuche vertue and goodneſſe as belongeth to chriſtian profeſſion, whether it chaunce hym to be in ſhyp, or in wagan, or to haue familiar talke and communicacion, or els to be preſente at feaſt or at banket, yea, to make ſhorte tale, euen when he bourdeth to, or maketh any game or paſtyme, he ſo demeaneth himſelfe, that euer ſome departe awaye from him, muche amended in their maners and conuerſaciō, by reaſon of hys compaignie.

Therfore

Therefore Jesus, who attempted to go vnto the Geralites, forsoke the places nighe vnto the water side, and returned backe in to hys owne countrey, least he should haue semed readier to do straugers & forayners good, then hys owne countrey men. For Nazareth deserued to haue this honorable name to be called his countrey, because he was fostred & continued there a long seasō. ¶ There went vp him his disciples, the which thē folowed him euery where cōtinually. Nowe when the saboth was come, vpō ỹ which day ỹ Jewes were wont according to an aūcient & right laudable custome they had, to assemble together, not because they would passe the holye tyme, that is to saye, lose it with the beholdyng of folysche syghtes, tellyng of vayne & vnfruytfull tales, vsyng of vnholie pastyme, or syngyng of ydel balades & songes, but by holy communication eyther to learne goddes lawe them selues, or els to teache the same to other: Jesus entred into the Synagoge in lyke maner as other dyd to gyue an ensample to hys, whereby al men shoulde perceyue what a great shame and dishonestie it shoulde be for vs christian men, sithens the Jewes so earnestly laboured throughly to learne and knowe a carnal law, whiche neyther was perfite, ne shoulde continewe for euer, and was wrytten but of Moyses a mortall man, yf we would not with semblable or rather more diligence, studye to knowe the Philosophie & doctrine of the gospel, whiche the very sonne of god his owne selfe taught and set forth vnto the worlde. Wherfore when Jesus was teachyng in the temple, hys authoritie was the lesse estemed of many, because he was right well knowen vnto thē, as pertaynyng vnto the fleth. They knew his poore parentes, and the simple and homely house that he came oute of. But they neuer supposed any thing at al of his heauenly father, & euerlasting house, from whence he came downe for our cause. They knewe his fathers occupacion, wherwith Joseph mayntayned and founde his house, the which science hymselfe also practised in hys fyrste yeares. He was a carpentour, a cōuenient occupacion for hym, by whome the heauenlye father once made this whole worlde. By a carpentour mankynde was created and made, and by a carpentour mete it was ỹ man shoulde be repayred. Therfore when those that knew Jesus (who vntyll he was almoste thirtie yeares olde, lyued among his frendes, and neuer appeared to haue any knowleage in the Pharisees learnyng) heard hym teache with great authoritie, suche thynges as they neuer had heard before, of the excellently well learned Pharisees, they wondred greatly, saying one to another: how is this felowe so sodaynlie chaunged, & become another man: from whence hath he al these thinges: & what newe kynde of wysdome is this ỹ is geuen him: frō whence hath he this myghty & effectuall power to worke myracles, so greate as we neuer heard ỹ like to haue ben in any of ỹ prophetes: Sith he hath ben frō vs but a shorte whyle, how cōmeth it to passe ỹ he is come agayne sodaynly altred, & cleane chaūged: Is not this ỹ selfe same Jesus the carpentour, the sonne of Joseph the wryght, & Mary a poore symple woman: Dyd not we know him, & al his kinred, & progenie: Do not the nert of his kin, that is to say, his brethren & systers, dwell here amōg vs: And so they had halfe disdayne at Jesu, that he, who not long before was taken for an vnderlynge and a person of no reputacion, was now sodaynly exalted to highe estimacion, & authoritie. For they were offended with thimbecillitie, and weakenesse of his flesche wherof they had ouer muche knowleage.

And whē the sabboth dayes was come.

And many ỹ heard hym were astonied at.

When

Jesus sayde vnto them: a prophete is not despised. &c.

When the lorde Jesus perceyued this, he sayde vnto them: A prophete is no where more dispised then in his owne countrey among his alliaunce, kynnesmen, and kamyliares. Ghostly businesse yll agreeth with fleshlye affections, neyther is it in anye wyse besemyng ỹ a true prophete or preacher of the gospel, who teacheth vs to set nought by this worlde, who promyseth the ioyes of heauen, who teacheth that we muste be newelye borne throughe baptisme in Christ Jesu, who teacheth also that we ought to mortifie our membres whiche we haue vpon earth, to thentente we maye lyue gostlie in heauen: it is not besemyng, I saye, that suche a one here know either countrey, house, acquayntaunce, kynred, or frendes. Neyther is it any maruayle yf earthly citizins knowe not hym agayne, since he is now made denisen of an other countreye.

And he coulde there shew no miracle. &c.

Wherfore Jesus, thoughe he were almightye, and desyrous to saue as many as might be, yet coulde he not there among his countreymen worke many miracles, for ỹ he was letted so to do by the vnbelefe of his acquayntaunce & kynnesfolkes. For where as beyng among aliauntes, he had easelye cured very many of al kyndes of diseases, cast out dyuels, and healed leapers, here in his owne countrey, he onely healeth a few sicke folkes, and that with the laying of his handes vpon them.

The texte.

¶ And he went aboute by the townes that lye on euery syde, teaching: and he called the twelue, and began to sende them furth, two and two, and gaue them power agaynste vncleane spirites. And commaunded them that they shoulde take nothyng in their iourney, saue a rod onely, no scrippe, no bread, no money in their purse, but should be shoowed with sandales: And that they should not put on two coates.

For this cause he as one meruelyng at so great vnbelefe of his countreymen, departed frō thence, & trauayled throughout al the tounes & borowes ther about, sowing euery where as he went, ỹ sede of the gospel. Hereby were the disciples couertly monyshed, that in thinges concernyng the preaching & setting forth of the gospel, they shoulde in no wise truste vnto worldly affections (for the self same thing which thē chaunced vnto Jesu in his countrey, shoulde afterwardes betyde them in Jewrie) but go whersoeuer they sawe any hope, and lykelyhode of plentifull encrease. There the preachyng of the gospell byngeth forth fruyte moste abundauntly where soeuer the hearers are enclined to beleue. Suche enclinacion to beleue, is there neyther among kynred, Phariseis, nor kinges. Kynred disprayseth, the Phariseis haue disdayne and enuie, and kinges laughe to scorne the folyshnesse of the crosse. Nowe was it highe tyme that the Apostles whiche were by Christ appoynted to the ministracion of the ghospell, and had alreadye a good while folowed hym continually, shoulde as it were, make a flourishe before their office and ministerie, and geue their captayne a say of their diligence, and loyaltie. Wherfore he called vnto hym those twelue, whome as most worthy persons, he specially chose and piked out to take this charge vpon thē: & beyng assembled before him, he enstructed them al with one sermon or lesson, to thentent that they sent of one master, & hauyng lyke commaundementes gyuen them, should not in anie wyse disagree in theyr preaching one from another. And because they should the more profite & edifie, he sent them oute by two and two, putting vs in remēbraunce by this coupling of thē together, of brotherlye charitie: without which there cūmeth no profit of ỹ gospel. He limitted vnto euery couple, as it had bene to certayne deputies or lieuetenauntes, theyr prouince. For this was verye expedient to be done, for the enlarging of the kingdome of the gospell. He sent them out weaponlesse, lest that mans aydes should chalenge any thing in this heauenly busynesse.

Further lest theyr authoritie should haue bene litle estemed, for as muche as they were but fishers, vnderling simple folkes, and vnlettred, he gaue theim that power, which worldly princes are not able to geue to theyr ambassadours, and deputies. For he gaue theim power to delyuer men of diseases, and to cast out diuels. What like thing can the emperour geue? He can giue abundaūce of gold, and siluer, hoostes of men, battayle ares, & al manour of artylarie, and engynes belonging to warre, whereof he hath great store and plentie. But there is no heade officer, or deputie of his, who hath so great vertue, that he can by calling vpō themperours name, heale so muche as mennes yes when they be bleared. And he gaue this power vnto his disciples vnder condicion that they shoulde therewith, freely and without reward taking, helpe all those that neaded the same.

Now to thentent they should be the better prepared to take in hand, and execute that office, whiche requireth suche a mynistre as is quicke & spedie, and not a luskysh loyterer or sluggerde, he charged theim to carrie no manour of baggage, vitayle, or weapon with theim in this tourneye, saue a rodde onlye: not a scrippe to put theyr vytayles in, not so muche as bread which maye be carried about without a scrippe, nor girdels ladē with money, neyther weare any bootes vpon theyr legges, but only be shod with sandels, to kepe the soles of theyr fete, that neyther the stones should hurt, nor thornes pricke theym: and finally to content them selfes euery mā with one garment. The entent of Jesu who gaue these enstructions was nothig els, but after a grosse manour, to inculke and beate into the heades of his disciples (who were as yet rawe and ignorāunt) how suche a one as taketh on him the ministration of the gospell, ought to be disburdened, & free from all care of corporall thinges, lest any sodayne chaunce befall, ȳ maye hinder the encrease and proceding of heauenly doctrine. As this businesse was farre diuerse from worldlye affaires: euen so was this kind of ambassade or legation newe, and suche a one as had not bene vsed before. They receyued a fourme of doctryne, lest they should presume to teache any thyng which theyr mayster had not taught them before. And this thing helde they commune with the legacions of man, where it is deathe to passe the limytes of the commaundementes, or commission. They are sent all of one lord with like power, lest any disdayne or priuie malice should arise among theym. They are sent by two and two together, because they should remembre brotherly charitie, and one brother ayde an other. They are sent to sundry places and countreys, to thende that moo should take profite of the gospell. They haue power geuen them to heale diseases, but in ȳ name of Jesu: because that like as they receyued another mānes learning to dispence and teache faithfullie, and not theyr owne, so should they know that it was goddes power, and not theyrs, wherewith they cured diseases.

And cōmaunded them that they should take nothing in. &c.

He forbad theim to carrie about either scrippe, bread, money, or two cotes, because they should with full affiaunce, hang vpon the promise of theyr maister, and haue sure confidence to be safe from all the force and violence of theyr enemyes throughe his helpe: and perfitlye knowe that by his prouidence, they shoulde waute nothyng perteyning to the temporall necessitie of the bodie. For where as nothyng is able to suffice sensualitie and pleasure, so the leest thing that maye be, sufficeth the necessitie of nature. Neyther dyd the Lord speake these wordes meaning therby as thoughe it should neuer be lefull for those that be ministers and preachers of the gospell to carie about with them any necessarie litle fardell, or money, since the Apostles & bishops are not in our tyme afrayed so to do (Yea paraduēture it is more praise worthie yf a mā would on his owne propre cost & charge, teache the gospell) but by suche manour of figuratiue speakinges called of the Grekes hyperbole, his entent was to plucke out of his dysciples myndes (who were as yet grosse and rude) al carefulnesse for those thinges that are wont to be an hinderaunce or let vnto the mynd, when it goeth about any heauēly enterprise: els wist he wel that they would not forget to speake as foloweth: Thou sendest vs out to countreis that we knowe not, and makest vs, who are naked and weaponlesse, to be many wayes in ieoperdie of our liues. But who shall feede vs if hongre come vpon vs: who shal defend vs if any violence be vsed against vs: who shal cloothe vs if it chaūce to be colde weather: Thou wilt haue vs to teach freely. Thou wilt we cure menne for naught. But he that liueth in a straunge countrey needeth manye thinges.

This pensiue and filthie carefulnesse, because for the most part, it springeth of distruste, he earnestlye went about to wede out of theyr myndes, as a thing not besemyng the greatnesse and weyghte of suche a busynesse as they were deputed vnto. Furthermore the figuratiue manour of speaking that he vseth, serueth herevnto, ỹ suche thinges as he teacheth theim maye the depelier be fastened in theyr rude and ignoraunt myndes. For the teacher of the gospell should nothing offend if he ware shoes, or had two cotes, being amongest the barbarous people called Gete, or els if he did take vitayle, and a good summe of money with him, being in gate to the sandes of Afrike, or to summe nation where as there is no gentile entertaynment, and receyuing of straungers. But what thing so euer hyndreth the procedyng of the gospell, the same is vtterlye to be renounced. Nowe consydre me, with how great a burthen they goe charged to the minystracion of the gospell, who carrie about with theim princely riches, dignities, promocions, worldly pleasures, and a greedie desire to be auenged if any thing happen to theyr greue, and displeasure. This fardell that Christe speaketh of here, is rather in the mynde, then in carrying about of scrippes, and superfluous clothing. Who so will not cast away all these fardels (I meane of mynd) the same is not meete to be the messenger, and ambassadoure of Iesu Christ. Likewise there is a figuratiue speaking in the thinges which he licenceth them to vse. For he geueth theim leaue to vse eche one a wand, and a payre of sandals. The lightest manour of shooe that is, is ỹ sandall, and it so saueth the feete from taking any harme, that it letteth not a man to make quicke spede in his iourney. Therfore it is but one thyng that he monisheth, which permitteth theim to vse sandals, and forbiddeth to weare shooes. For he forbyddeth nothing els, but slacknesse in doyng of theyr dutie, and exhorteth theim to vse spedinesse therin.

Agayne

Againe it is but one thing that he warneth theim of, which geueth theim leaue to carie a wãde, and taketh awaye from theim the vse of staues. For a wand soloureth and stayeth the walking manne, and nothing hyndreth him in his iourneye, but rather causeth him to make quicker spede. Nowe the staffe as it burtheneth a manne to beare it: so is it wont to be carried againste violence. Therfore he that permitteth them to vse no other weapon but a wande only, and forbiddeth theim to carrie a staffe, willeth vndoubtedlye that the preacher of the gospell be by no other ayde safelye kepted against thassaultes of yuell men, then by thonlye helpe of Christe. A wande is mete for a wayfaring man, and a staffe for a fighter. Moreouer he that hath the handeling of the gospell, must alwayes goe forward to thinges of higher perfection, and be fardest from desire of reuẽgement.

The texte. And he said vnto them: whereſoeuer ye entre into an houſe, there abyde ſtyll tyll ye depart thence. And whoſoeuer ſhal not receyue you, nor heare you, when ye depart thence ſhake of the duſt, that is vnder your feete, for a wytnes vnto them. Verely I ſay vnto you: it ſhall be eaſier for Sodom and Gomor in the day of iudgement, then for that citie. And they went out and preached that men ſhould repent, and they caſt out many deuils, and annoynted many that were ſicke with oyle, and healed them.

After that Chriſte hadde plucked this carefulneſſe out of the myndes of his Apoſtles, then went he about to ſhewe theim a waye, howe it ſhould cumme to paſſe that they ſhould neuer nede to be carefull for ſuche thinges. Take ye no thought, ſaith he, neither for harboroughe, ne ſuſtenaunce: but after ye once be entred into village, or citie, whereſoeuer it be your chaũce to be receiued, be the houſe neuer ſo poore and homely, there abyde you till ſuche time as you thinke it meete for you to depart cumme whither els, moued throughe deſire to ſet forth and aduaunce the gospell. And being but fewe in numbre, and contented with a litle, you ſhall not be chargeable geaſtes to anye man. It is in manoure impoſſible that there be anywhere any good towne or citie ſo farre paſt all grace and goodneſſe, wherin there can not one manne be found who will be glad to receiue ſuche geſtes as ye are, ſince there are manye whiche will not ſticke to wage a phyſician with a large ſalarie, and ſend for him a great waye.

And who ſo euer ſhall not receyue you, nor heare you. &c.

Yf you chaunce to cumme to anye ſo vnkynd a citie, or houſe, that the inhabitauntes therof will not receiue you, notwithſtanding you bring them of your owne accorde an heauenly gifte or preſent, wherewith bothe bodies and ſowles are healed, yet ceaſe you not for a fewe hard harted perſones to doe the buſineſſe you haue taken in hand: but yet depart you oute of that citie for a ſeaſon, to other cities: & or ere you goe awaye, embrayde ſuche perſones as would not receiue you, with theyr great folie, and madneſſe. Gette you oute into the ſtreetes, and ſhake of the duſt ſticking on your feete, that they maye call to remembraunce howe there came cumme vnto theim, who freely offred theim health and ſauetie, and brought theim the ioyfulleſt meſſage that could be: and may further perceiue that like as ſo excellent a good thing can not by any manoure of reward be worthily recompenſed, euen ſo ſuche precious wate and matchaundiſe ought not to be thruſte to any whiche lotheth the ſame, and is not willing to receyue it: and this do you to thentent they maye blame them ſelfes for theyr owne dãnacions becauſe they would rather periſhe, when they might haue bene saued: and also knowe perfitely how you sought for nothing els among theim, but only the health and saluacion of your neyghbours, in so muche that you would not endamage them as muche as with the losse of a litle quantitie of dust. It becummeth well ynoughe my ambassadours to vse suche manour of proud demeanure againste frowarde, and disdaynfull persons. At your departure speake vnto theim this one thing folowing, although they be not willyng to heare it: knowe you that whether you receyue vs, or receyue vs not, the kingdom of God is cumme. If you receyue vs, it is cum to your great wealth and commoditie. But yf you receyue vs not, yet shall the same cumme to your great euyll, and confusion. When Christes messegers were furnished with these necessaries for their iourney, they toke theyr leaue of theyr mayster, and as it was geuen theim in commaundement, they moued and exhorted all menne to be repentaunte for theyr former lyfe, shewing them how the kingdome of God was alreadye present, whiche throughe fayth of the gospel, would bring vnto all men perfite righteousnesse. For the chiefe & principall part of preaching of the gospel is for a manne to geue faythe vnto the doctrine that he heareth, and to beleue the promyses. When the lorde Jesus had with these, and manye other like lessons, diligently enstructed his dyscyples, then the same twelue headmen of the kingdom of heauen toke theyr iourney, and the matter wēt forward, and had goodsuccesse.

And they wēt out, & preached that mē should repent, &c.

They preached vnto all menne that they should be penitent for theyr former sinnes, and that no man should trust vnto his owne dedes and merites, but onely haue sure belefe in the promises of the gospell. And they found summe that lystened and gaue diligent eare vnto theyr preachyng. There lacked not here a readie power to worke miracles, which made their wordes to be beleued, thoughe theim selues were neuer so simple persones, and vnknowen.

And anoynted many, &c.

They anoynted the sicke people with oyle, and the same were healed. They commaunded the hurtfull spyrites to goe out in the name of Jesu, and they went oute. That oyle was not a medicyne (for who healeth all manour of diseases with one medicyne) but a sacrament. The skynne was outwardly anoynted with visible oyle, and the bodie was made hole. But theyr sowles whiche anon after should be delyuered from the dyseases of vice and synne, were to be anoynted with the oyle of grace inuisible, by our anoynted Jesus Christ. Wherfore it was not by vertue of suche prayers, and enchauntmentes as wytches or magicians vse that they cast oute dyuels, but by wordes pythye and effectuall through an euangelike faythe. This was vndoubtedly the verye power of the kingdom of heauē. What was more abiecte, vile, and lesse regarded then the Apostles were? But the lesse that theyr power was, the more manyfestlye dyd it appear that all that euer was done, came to passe by the might and power of God. They neyther had riches, learning, office, garde to defend theim, nobilitie, fame nor authoritie. To be shorte, they had nothyng els but a playne and a simple faythe in Jesu, whome they as yet knewe not perfitlye.

The texte. And kyng Herode heard him (for his name was spread abrode) and he saide: Johu Baptist is risen agayne from the dead, and therfore myracles are wrought by hym: other sayde it is Helias, some sayd it is a prophet, as one of the prophetes. But when when Herode heard of him, he laide; it is John, whome I beheaded, he is risen from death agayne. For Herode him selfe had sent furth meune of warre, and layde hades vpon John, and bounde him, and cast him into prylon for Herodias sake, his brother Philippes wife (because he had maried her.) For John sayd vnto Herode: It is not lawfull for the to haue thy brothers wife. Herodias laide wayte for him, and would haue killed hym, but she could not. For Herode feared John, knowing that he was a iust man, and an holye: and gaue him reuerence. And when he heard him, he did many thinges: and heard him gladly.

By theie thinges, Jesu waxed euerye daye more famous then other, so that his name was nowe knowen euen vnto kyng Herode. For it is very late ere kynges knowe Jesu, whome it behoueth firste and chiefliest to knowe him: neither are there any that knowe him worse, and lesse for theyr sowle healthe, then they doe. After that Jesu had wrought so manye, & so euident miracles that no man could cauill, and saye they were fayned thinges: and the same myracles had done so manye menne good, that no man coulde sclaunderoullye repoyt and saye they were done by the power and operacion of euell spirites: And after diuerse menne had dyuersely spoken theyr myndes, and conceytes what they thought of him, at the length Herode shewed also his opinion. John, saith he, is risen from deathe: and therfore nowe hath he power to worke miracles.

Agayne, other there were who taking coniecture of the prophecie of Malachy, saide how Jesu was Helye, whiche is promised in scripture to comme agayne before the great, and terrible daye of the Lorde. There were other summe, whiche denied him to be Helye, who was of greatest authoritie among the Iewes, auouchyng him to be one of the meane sorte of prophetes relyued, and risen agayne. When Herode had heard all theyr opinions, yet stacke he styll vnto his owne, and sayd: Yea, this is the selfe same John whose heade I cauſed to be striken of. He is aliue agayne, and beyng now made a sainct, worketh suche thinges as passeth mannes power. There was none of all those whiche beleued not that the bodies shall reliue. And yet are there manye at this daye who beleue not that Chryste rose agayne from deathe to lyfe. And to thentent thou mayst here perceiue how vnright are the iudgementes of the wicked, they beleued that John, who neuer had any name for worckyng of miracles, was aliue agayne: and moste stylly denyed the resurrection of Jesu, whose godlye power was so manye wayes declared. Consydre also the fondnesse of wicked kynges Herode affirmeth John to be alyue agayne, and confesseth he hath now greater power then he had, when he was first aliue: and yet for all that, he in a manour maketh his vaunt howe he cauſed him to be put to death, ready to slee him afreshe if it laye in his power.

Other saide, he is Helias. &c.

Here is it expedient to heare what occasion Herode had to commytte so haynous a dede. For at the prouocatiō of an vnchaste woman, he cōmaunded John to be taken, and layde in prons, not for anye offence commytted on his behalfe: but to gratifie Herodias the daughter of kyng Areta, the whiche Herodias, notwithstanding she was maried before vnto Philippe one of the fower rulers of the countreis of Iturea & Trachonitis, the king her father, by reason of certain debate that befell bytwirt them, toke awaye from his sone in lawe Philippe (by whōe she had as the a daughter) & maried her to this Herod brother vnto the said Philippe, but yet his enemye

For Herod him selfe had sent forth mē of warre, &c.

For Johan sayde vnto Herode: It is not lawfull. &c.

Johan, to thentent he myght the better resemble Helye, who verye frankely rebuked Achab and Jezabela, could not abyde this vnchast and filthy matrimonie, but sayde vnto kyng Herode: It is not lawfull for the to kepe still in house with thy brothers wife, since he is not barayne, and is yet alyue.

Herodias sayde wayte for him. &c.

Herodias, who was then diuorced from her former husband, fearyng lest she should by Johns procurement be likewise dyuorced from this, wet aboute to entrappe him, and sought occasion to make him awaye, but all that euer she went about, came to none effecte. For albeit Herode loued not Johan hartelie, yet dyd he feare him. True vertue is of suche force, that kinges, and mightie princes feare it. Herode knewe right well he was a iuste manne, and an holye lyuer, and therfore had hym in awe and reuerence, and followed his counsayll in manye thinges, and gladly heard him speake. These thinges letted the wicked woman to destroye him accordyng as she purposed to do. She entended mischief, but occasion would not serue therunto, whiche is the thing, that onelye lacketh vnto yuell folkes to doe harme.

And when a conuenient daye was comme, that Herode on his birthe daye made a supper to the lordes, high capitaynes, and chiefe estates of Galile, & whē the daughter of the same Herodias came in, and daunced, and pleased Herode, and them that sate at borde also, the kyng sayd vnto the damsell: Aske of me what thou wilte, and I will geue it the, and he sware vnto her: What so euer thou shalt aske of me I will geue it the, euen to the one halfe of my kyngdome. And she went forthe, and sayd vnto her mother, what shal I aske: she said. Johan Baptistes head. And she came in streight waye with haste vnto the kyng, and asked, saying: I will that thou geue me by and by in a charger, the head of Johan Baptist, and the kyng was sory: howbeit for his othe sake, and for theyr sakes whiche sate at supper also, he would not cast her of. And immediatly the kyng sent the hangman, and commaunded his heade to be brought in, and he went and beheaded him in the prison, and brought his head in a charger, and gaue it to the damsell, and the damsell gaue it to her mother. And when his disciples heard of it, they came and toke vp his bodie, and layed it in a graue.

Now was Herodes byrth daye come, a tyme verie propise, and mete to worke this vngracious dede in. It was besemyng that the natiue daye of a wicked kyng, should be polluted with the death of a man of most holye lyuing, and godly conuersation: & that the myddes of the excessiue bankettinge, and courtly delicacies, should be distayned with the cruell murtheryng of an innocent, and gyltlesse person.

Wherfore when that in the honoure of his byrth daye, he made a souper of gorgious, and excessiue furnyture, to the pryuces, capitaynes, and great estates of Galile, because there shoulde be the moo present to beare witnesse of his crueltie, there came into the place where they feasted, a yong damsell, daughter vnto Herodias and Philippe, to make the geastes myrth and pastyme with her vncomlie, and wanton dauncyng. And the more vngoodlye she daunced, the more she delited the geastes, and the kyng specially, who was now twise madde, because besides that he was in amours with the vnchaste woman Herodias, he was also distempred, and set in a fury with wyne.

The kyng sayde vnto ꝑ damsell: Aske of me. &c.

Wherfore he sayde vnto the damsell right magnyficentlye as became a kyng: Aske of me what so euer thou wilte, thou shalte haue no denyall therof. And to make her the bolder to desire what she woulde, he

bounde hys dronken promyse with an othe. What so euer (sayeth he) thou shalt desyre of me, though it be thone halfe of my realme, I will geue it the.
Oh fonde and folysshe saying, worthy to come out of so folysshe, and dró-ken a kinges mouthe. But the yonge damsell as she began to playe thys parte, at the prouocacion and settyng on of her mother (whiche diligentlye awayted the daye, place, and howre, and trymmed her daughter of purpose to daunce) so durste she not by and by tell the kyng what she woulde demaunde, but departed out of the feastyng chaumber, and asked her mother counsaill, saying: The kyng my father in lawe hathe bounde it with an othe, that he will geue me what so euer I wyll desire of hym. What shall I therfore aske? Here was vndoubtedlye a iuste occasion to doubte, and take good deliberacion, least so greate an opportunitie should haue bene loste. But the vnchast woman her mother, vnto whome nothyng was so deare, as the deathe of the most holy and innocent man, withoute further deliberacion takyng, answered: Desire of hym Johns Baptistes heade. Oh wicked daughter, soone taught, and ready to obey for a mischycfe. She returned strayghtwayes into the kynges priuie chaumber (for her mother priuily aduertysed her to make haste, and speake with Herode before that greate heate of hys Tyrannely courage were cooled agayne.) And then went she vnto the kinges presence, and desyred a rewarde for her wanton & lasciuious dauncyng, saying: I desyre but one meffe alonely. I will thou geue me without farther delaye, Johns Baptistes heade in a charger.

And she went forth and said vnto her mother. &c.

And she came in straite waie with haste. &c.

Here marke me well the auke warde conference of the wycked kyng. Where as there is nothyng that suche kinges are oftener wont to do, then to breke all bondes of leages, couenauntes, and religion: Yet here he thynketh hym selfe bounde in conscience (which was a thyng against al conscience) to perfourme hys moost foolysshe othe, especially syth it was made in the audyence of so many witnesses. Wherfore leaste menne woulde haue thoughte hym a manne of no credence, yf he had refused to perfourme what he promysed by an othe to doe, swearyng perchaunce eyther by hys diademe, the spyrite whiche had the gouernaunce of hys body, or the heade of the damsell that daunced before hym: or els least he shoulde haue seemed vncourteous, and voyde of all good maners, yf he had eyther let the mayde departe from hym all heauye and sadde, or with some cloude of heauinesse abated the myrth and solace of the gestes, whom she had pleased with her pastime (O worshipfull fayth, and conscience. O good maner and curtesie worthye to be put in chronicles) least I say, these thinges should haue chaunced, the hangman was forthewith sente oute, and the holye heade of the moofte innocente person broughte vnto the kyng, as it had bene a messe of meate in a charger. The king toke it vnto the damsel, and she to her mother, vnto whō it was a derer present, then thone half of Herodes kingdō. With this deadly syght this folish doting & mad king did gratify the vnchast woman, & celebrate or worship his natiue day. The king caused him to be slain, the hāgman brought ỹ head to the king, the dāsel obtained it, and in conclusion the same deadly reward was geuē to her mother, ỹ worker, & wel of al this mischief. Oh worthy geastes al this whyle, & mete for such a feast maker. There was none of thē al so frēdly to ỹ king, ỹ would go about to let hi to do this mischeuous dede. And shall we hereafter maruail if kinges otherwhiles be not afeard to commit outragious enormities, yf they be of disposicion lyke vnto Herode, that is to say, enflamed with vnchast loue, and geuen to riot & sensualitie, and ouer this haue suche daily companions: as be eyther fearful persons, or els fauourers of their cruelte.

And immediatly the king sent the hangman. &c.

And gaue it to ỹ dāsel. &c.

And whē his disciples herd of it, &c.

When the bruite of this haynouse dede was come to the eares of Johns disciples, they toke away the carkas, and buryed it honourably. Howbeit in these thynges lyeth hid some mystery and secret meanyng. John although he bare the figure of the lawe, and signifyed the same, yet in as muche as he was a forecurrour of the Gospell, he was rewarded with the rewarde therof, that is, with a glorious deathe, but yet farre diuerse from the deathe of Christ. For Johns heade was priuily striken of after he had layne a whyle faste gyued in prison. Christ was openly lyfted vp vpon the crosse. The darkenes of the prison agreeth well with the shadowes and figures of the lawe. It was mete they shoulde geue place vnto the lyght of the gospell, whiche beganne to appeare, and shyne abrode. It was conuenient that carnall ceremonies shoulde be diminished, to the entent that spirituall freedome shoulde be encreased. And it was likewise nedefull that al which proceded of feare, shoulde be bounde, because the faythe and charitie of the gospel, shoulde the farther be spredde abrode and extended. Finally it was mete that mannes head should be striken of, least the churche should acknowledge any other head saue alonely Jesus. And so the lawe beyng in a maner slayne, and honourably buryed, gaue place vnto the Lorde Jesu, when he began to preache his spirituall philosophye and doctrine. For in that we do beleue the gospell we are muche bounden vnto the olde Testament, whiche so many yeares agoe drewe out Jesus Christe vnto vs, with shadowes, and figures, and promysed and described hym with the prophecies, and darke sayinges of the Prophetes.

The text. ¶And the Apostles gathered them selues to gether vnto Jesus, and told hym al thinges bothe what they had done, and what they had taught And he sayd vnto them: come ye alone out of the waye into the wyldernesse, and rest a whyle. For there were many comming and going, and they had no leasure, so muche as to eate. And he went by ship out of the way into a desert place, and the people spyed them when they departed, and many knewe hym, and ranne a foote thither oute of all cities, and came thither before them, and came to gether vnto him. And Jesus wente out, and sawe muche people, and had compassion on them, because they were like sheepe, not hauing a shepherd, and he began to teache them many thinges.

Whyles these thinges were done, the Apostles after they had finished their message, drewe them selfes together, and returned to Jesus the head of the whole businesse. Al thynges procede from him, and to hym al thinges muste be referred. From hym, after they had receyued their commissiō, they departed all of one mynde and accorde, to thentent that whatsoeuer it should fortune them to doe, they shoulde likewise do it in his name: and to hym they retourned with semblable concord of myndes, desirous to haue al that they had done, by him approued. And so at their retourning they recounted vnto hym the whole history and processe of their legation, seuerally rehearsyng euery thyng that they hadde taught and done wt greate ioye & gladnes, and shewing also howe the matter had successe euen as themselfes desyred.

And he sayed vnto them: come ye alone out of ye way.

The Lorde after he had alowed their syncere faithe, but yet restrayned them them from glorying or reioycing in their actes, toke them awaye with hym into a solitary place, whiche was the wildernesse of the towne of Bethsaida, to thentente that after their greate trauaile and labour, they shoulde there reste a whyle, and sumwhat refreshe them selfes. This goyng a parte into wyldernes was not for recreacion and pastyme, but bycause they shoulde quicken and renewe the strength of the spirite by secrete contemplacion and prayer, that they myghte be the more able to sustayne suche trauayles and paynes as they should sone after be put vnto a freshe. For the teacher of the gospell must very little care for the body. Moreouer for as muche as he that exerciseth the office of an apostle or preacher of goddes worde, is compelled to haue to do both with weake & strong, with learned and vnlearned with good and bade, it can not be chosen but he must other whiles be greatly wasted from that perfite quietnesse, and tranquillitie of mynde. And whensoeuer it so chaunceth, then must he sever his mynde from worldly matters, and wholly geue hymselfe to secrete and most deuout prayers, and to purest contemplacion of heauenly thynges, that beyng made stronger in spirite therby, he maye soone after retourne from thys his Godly meditacion, to the helpe & comfort of his euen Christen. For vnto the place where as at that season they found the lorde Jesu, there resorted an vnnumerable multitude of people, so that it semed as it had bene an ebbing and flowyng of cummers & goers, the which woulde suffer the Apostles, beyng then weary by reason of their tourney, to take no reste: no not so much as to eate their meate. Wherfore after the people were sent away, they toke shippe, & sayled to the side nyghe to Bethsaida, and from thence went with the Lorde into a solytary place. But neyther chaunced it them here longe to kepe them selfes close and secrete. For the light of theuangelike veritie can in no wyse be hydde.

For there were many cummers and goers.

And he went by shippe out of the way.

Thys going a parte did nothyng els but make the people more gredy to folowe them. Some there were who diligently marked whether they went, that is, howe they toke their gate to the wyldernesse markyng on the citie of Bethsaida: and byanby as it was noysed abrode that Christe woulde make hys abode there, a great multitude of al sortes of people resorted thither on afoote out of al ỹ tounes there aboutes, who made so good spede in theyr tourney, that many of them came thyther soner a foote, then Christ and his disciples, whiche had the vauntage of the water. A manne would haue sayde that the tyme had bene already presente, when the people woulde goe about forcibly to enter into the kyngdome of heauen.

And Jesu went out and sawe muche people.

When Jesu perceyued howe an vnnumerable multitude of people was assembled together, whiche had with very muche payne and difficultie trauayled thyther a foote, so true is it that he gate him not out of the way, nor cõmaunded them to departe for their importunacie, that he came out of the secrete place, where he was, in maniere to meete them, goyng aboute to teache his disciples by sũdry wayes & meanes, howe they should at all times be willyng & ready to set forth the Gospel. And so when the moost gracious Lord Jesus came forth, & sawe a very greate, but a confuse rablement of al sortes of people (for there wer men, wemen, & childzen) he was moued with compassion, and shewed with yes, countenaunce, & as we commonly say, euen with euen with the very forehead, an vnfayned sorowe of mynde, fashionyng thaffection that ought to be in hym, who is a teacher of the Gospell. The people thirsted after holsome doctryne. And that was plainlye declared bothe by the quicke spede they made, and also by the paynes they toke in their iourney. Loue made them swifte of foote: But they were as it had bene a sorte of shepe wandryng hyther and thither for lacke of a good shepheard. For the Priestes, Pharisees, and Scribes, nothyng regardyng their flocke, feede their owne belyes. Therfore Jesus takyng compassion on these simple, and disordered people, began to exercise thoffice of a faithfull shepheard. Fyrste of all he refreshed their myndes with great aboundaunce of the meate of holye doctrine, and then immediately healed the sicke folkes, whom they brought with them.

The text: ¶ And when the day was nowe farre spente, hys disciples came vnto him, sayeng: this is a desert place, and nowe the tyme is farre passed, let them departe, that they maye goe into the countreye rounde aboute, and into the townes, and bye them breade, for they haue nothyng to eate: he answered, and sayd vnto them: geue ye them to eate. And they sayd vnto hym: shall we goe bye two hundred peny worth of breade, & geue them to eate? He sayed vnto them: howe many loaues haue ye? go and loke. And when they had serched, they sayd: fiue, and two fyshes. And he commaunded them to make them all sitte doune by companies vpon the grene grasse. And they sate doune here a rowe, and there a rowe, by hundredes, and by fiftyes. And when he had taken the fiue loaues, and the two fishes, and loked vp to heauen, he blessed, and brake the loaues, and gaue them to his disciples, to set before them: and the two fyshes deuided he among them all. And they all did eate, and were satisfyed, and they toke vp twelue basketes full therof, and of the fyshes. And they that dyd eate, were aboute fyue thousand men.

After that muche tyme was spente herein, and nowe the thyng it selfe gaue a watcheworde that the multitude had likewise nede to be fedde with corporall foode, the disciples folowyng the mercy and pitifulnesse of their Maister, aduertysed hym therof, saying: Lorde thou seest how a very great nũber of people is come thus farre without any vitayles and purueyance. And this is a desert place, and meale tyme is past. They desirous to heare thy doctrine, forget themselues, and can in no wise be seuered from the. Wherfore let them depart, to thentent they may repayre into the countrey, and villages nexte here about, to bye them eates to eate. Then Jesus teachyng his disciples howe a multitude shoulde be fedde, made answere: yea do ye rather who shalbe shepheardes in tyme to come, nowe accustome your selfes to play the shepheardes: geue them of your owne vitayles to eate. The disciples not yet perceyuyng for what purpose he spake these wordes, answered agayne accordyng vnto their rude capacities, sayeng: Thou cõmaundest vs to do a thing vnpossible. For thou knowest ryght well, how slenderlye we be prouyded of vitailes necessary for our iourney. Shall we goe, and bye two hundred peny worth of breade for this multitude, the whiche wyll not be ynoughe to suffice them, in so muche that euery manne shall scarcely haue a lyttle morsell to sauoure his mouthe? Then Jesus preparyng their myndes by little and little vnto the myracle, sayde: Howe many loaues haue you in store? and bicause they had not their answere ready: Go ye (sayed he) and loke howe well ye be prouided of vytayles. They loked, and shewed hym that there were fiue loaues, and two fyshes. It was not vnknowen vnto the Lord what they had: but his will was to haue

He answered & sayde vnto them: geue ye.

And they sayd vnto hi: shall we goe, &c.

He sayde vnto the, how many loues, &c.

haue the Apostles perfectly to knowe, howe small stooze of vitayles there was, to thentente they myght the moze acknowleage Goddes power in the miracle.

And because they myght the better discerne what a greate multitude and compaignye there was, he commaunded them to bydde all the people to sitte doune vpon the grene grasse, so deuyded into compaignies, that in euery compaignie shoulde sitte an hundzed persons, oz els fiftie together. And he commaunded the to make them al sit doune.

The Apostles dyd as the Lozde bad them, and lykewyse the people were obedyent vnto the Apostles: so greate was the confidence they had in their guyde, and shepeheard Jesu. Then toke he the fiue loaues, and two fysshes, and lifting vp his yes, accozdyng vnto his accustomed manour, to heauen, gaue thankes vnto the father, thozough whose beneficiall goodnesse the businesse of the Gospell dyd so well goe fozward. That done he brake the loues, and gaue them vnto hys disciples, that they shoulde sette them befoze the multitude. In lyke maner deuided he the fishes into sundzye pozcions, and gaue them vnto hys sayd disciples, to be likewyse dystrybuted among all the people. All were refreshed, and dyd eate theyz fyll: none of them all lacked, in so muche that after the feaste was done, the Apostles by the Lozdes commaundement, gathered to gether the reuersion, and therewith fylled twelue baskettes. Furthermoze the number of the people (whiche myghte easely be knowen, by reason they were thus deuyded into compaignies, and satte in rowes) was fyue thousande men, besides childzen and wemen. And they all did eate, and were satisfied. And they that did eate, &c.

By thys myracle Jesus bothe pzescrybed vnto hys dyscyples a fourme oz rule howe to feede a multitude with the foode of the Gospell, and also pulled oute of their myndes all pensyue carefulnesse to pzouide foz cozpozal sustenaunce. Therfoze whosoeuer thou be that arte a Bishop, Curate, oz pastour of Chzistes flocke, thynke not thus with thy selfe: I am a Doctoure of diuinitie: I am an excellent cunnyng expounder of holye scripture. I haue great stoze of learning wherwith to enstruct the people, and may take inough out of my riche stozehouse stuffed with cunning, to feede them with all, be they neuer so hungry. Yea rather loke, and acknowledge howe small stoze of vitayles thou hast at home, foz the whiche, what so euer it be, thou arte a debtoure vnto the Lozde. But bzyng suche stoze as thou haste vnto the handes of Jesu. Desire hym to vouchesafe to handell, and breake it.

That done, what he hathe delyuered thee, the same dooe thou, euen as he toke it the, minister vnto the people as the Lozdes meate, and not thyne: and minister it not mistrusting, not puttyng difference betwyxt this meat and that, not trustyng to thyne owne strength: and so in conclusion shal it be a very euangelike banket, & the mindes of the faithful shalbe moze refreshed, & filled wt this holsome foode, thus ministred by a simple person, then if ỹ superstictouse Phariseye, the arrogant Philosophier, oz eloquent Rhethozician, would foz the aduaunceyng and setting foz the of thẽ selfes make vnto the people an artificial ozacion oz sermon, whiche they had diligently studied, & long time pzouided foz afozehand. Now foz as much as befoze he cõmaunded his disciples to come vnto the ministery of the gospel, without any prouision of corporall foode, here hath he declared by very dede, howe those shall wante nothyng, who whyles their myndes be wholly set vpon the kyngdome of God, and the righteousnes therof, do not passe vpon these temporall thynges, for the whiche the common sorte of people taketh great thought and care, yf so be there lacke not in them a sincere, and true faith in the Lorde Jesu.

The text. ¶ And strayghtway he caused his disciples to go into the shyp, and to go ouer the Sea before vnto Bethsaida, while he sent away the people. And as sone as he had sent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray. And when euen was come, the shippe was in the middest of the Sea, and he alone on the land, and he sawe them troubled in rowing, for the wind was contrary vnto thē. And about the fourth watche of ꝑ night, he came vnto thē walking vpon the Sea, & would haue passed by them. But when they sawe him walkyng vpon the Sea, they supposed it had bene a spirite, and cried out, for they al sawe him, and were afraide. And anon he talked with them, and sayd vnto thē: be of good cheare, it is I: be not afrayed. And he wente vp vnto them into the shippe, and the winde ceassed, and they were sore amased in them selues beyond measure, and maruayled, for they remembred not the loaues because their hartes wer blinded.

It was but a small benefite that he filled their hungry belyes, in respect of those benefites whiche they dayly receyued of his most bounteous goodnesse. It procedeth of a greater liberalitie to fede the minde or soule, then the bellie. And yet for all this the grosse common sorte of people are wonte (suche is their vnright, and aukeward iudgement) to set most store of al by that whiche is of least price and value.

Therfore Jesus knowyng it would come to passe that they would now after their bellyes were fylled, imagine howe to make hym a kyng, compelled hys disciples (for it was muche ado to sunder them from so louely, and amyable a Lorde) to take shyp, and goe ouer the water before hym vnto Bethsaida, whyles he in the meane whyle sente away the people, who beyng dismissed, he conueyed himselfe priuily to a mountain, there to pray alone, and make petition vnto the father that lyke as the affayres of the gospell had begun well, and prosperously, so myght they with lyke successe go forwarde.

And whē euē was come, the shippe was in the.xc.

In the meane tyme the nyght approched, and the disciples sayled in the myddes of the sea without their maister: and as they were sayling, there arose a tempest. Howe can it be chosen but there must nedes be night, where that Sunne and light of the worlde Jesu, is not present? How can it be chosen but that shyppe must nedes be in ieopardie, wherin Christ lacketh? How can it be chosen but the Apostles must nedes be troubled, when that comforter of all men, Jesus is away? howe can it be chosen but contrary wyndes must nedes staye and hynder the successe of mans diligence, yf Jesus helpe not forwarde? He is many times away: but yet doeth he not forsake such as be his vnto the end. He semeth sometimes to forsake them for a seaAnd he alone on the land. son, bicause to exercise thē in aduersities, and to learne them to haue sure beleke and confydence in hym. For nowe was he come doune from the mountaine: nowe stode he on the sea banke, but alone without any company. The disciples sawe hym not: neuertheless he sawe them. Wherfore we muste not despayre, what trouble or distresse so euer we be in: but in oure hartes conceyue thys stedfast beleke, that the Lorde (although he no where appeare, and shewe hym selfe visiblye) will not fayle to helpe hys when tyme requireth. Nowe standeth he on the shore, and seeth what labour and payne they take in rowing. For the wynd was agaynst them. When therefore they had thus striuen a prety whyle with the waues and boustreous wyndes of this world, and were at the next doore to desperacion, about the fourth watche of ỳ night, that is, a litle before the daunyng of the day, Iesus came vnto them, not in a shippe, but quietly walkyng on the water (for the element knewe it maker) and made semblaunte as though he would haue passed by them. For so dothe he otherwhiles suffre his to continue in aduersitie and tribulacion, as thoughe he passed not vpon them at all, where as in dede, he neuer stynteth to care for them.

And about the fourth watche.

But whan they sawe him walkyng vpon the see.

The Apostles after they had spyed him in the darke walking vpon the water, forgettyng so many miracles as they had sene him worke before, and beleuing it to be vnpossible for the liquid element to beare the massy body of a man, supposed he had bene summe spirite or ghost, which had decepued theyr eyesight with a vayne and phantasticall illusion. Wherefore they were sore afrayde, and for feare cryed out. For they all sawe the very shape and likenes of Iesu, and yet beleued not it was he. The Lorde is euer terrible vnto those that beleue he is an auenger, and know him not to be a sauiour. Neyther is it possible for him to be knowen in the great darkenes of this world, vnlesse he bryng him selfe into oure knowledge. Wherefore he suffered not his disciples to be any leger dismayd with feare, strayght wayes spake vnto them with the voyce whiche they knewe right well: and sayd: Be of good chere, it is I, feare ye not. And then came he vnto them into the shippe, and furthwith the tempest ceased.

And anone he talked to them and sayd vnto them.

Nowe after theyr feare was past & gone, then began they to maruayle howe a mans body might walke vpon the water. They were so dull, so rude, and forgetfull, that they remẽbred not so muche as the miracle which they sawe him worke a litle before, when he filled so manye thousand folkes belyes, with fiue loaues, and two fishes. And theyr heartes were so blynded, that they thought it a thyng muche to be wondred at, to see Iesus walke vpon the water: where as in dede it was a muche more wonderfull facte, to suffice so muche people with so lytle meate. The Lord suffred this brutishe dullnesse, to continue in his dysciples, to the entẽt they also should enure them selues to beare with the dulnes, and simplicitie of weaklynges tyll they were cum to more perfectyon.

And they were sore mased.

¶ And when they were ouer the water, they came into the lande of Genazareth, & drewe vp into the hauen. And assone as they were cum out of the shippe, strayght way they knewe him, and ranne furth throughout all the region round about, and began to cary about in beddes, those that were sicke, when they heard that he was ther, and whither soeuer he entred into townes, cyties, or villages, they layd the sicke folkes in the streates, and prayed him that they might touche and it were but the hemme of his vesture: and as many as touched him, were safe.

The texte.

In the daunyng of the daye, they came vnto the shore, and arriued at the hauen where they appoynted to arriue, in the land called Genazareth Iesus was scarcely entred the land, but thither were cumme diuers of the inhabitauntes that knewe him. For nowe was the sunne disclosed, and the night gone, whiche had darkened the myndes of the disciples: and many there were who marked him, whither soeuer he went. Beside this he was nowe knowen vnto verye many, euen by the physnamy: but a great many moe knewe him by the fame of his doctryne, and miracles.

And ran furth through out all the region. &c.

Nowe those that sawe him, and knewe who he was, byanby, as though they had come as spyes, departed away from him, and went through all the regyon, and shewed howe Jesus was landed. Assone as this rumour was once noysed abrode, very many began to carry about sicke folkes in beddes. And whither soeuer Jesus went, whether it were to the countrey, tounes, or cyties, there was euer present a great noumbre of importune and vnquiet people, more carefull to be deliuered of theyr bodily diseases, then to be cured of the diseases and maladies of theyr soules: whiche layde out in the stretes pitifull sightes of sicke folkes, diseased with diuerse sicknesses: and besought Jesus as he passed by, that they myght touche euen but the hemme of his garment. For there was suche a busynes, and hurly burly among them, that hard and scarce any one could be suffred so to do. It came not of any daungerousnes, or difficultie on his behalfe, that they could not touche him, who grutched not to touche, and handle the Leper: but ỹ ensample of theyr fayth highly pleased him, ỹ which his plesure was to haue set fourth & cõmended to al men, & good cause why it should so be.

And began to carry about in beddes. &c.

As many as touched him were healed, what diseases soeuer they were payned withall. They with perfite belief touched the hemme of his garment, whiche afterward those persons chaunced to haue, who crucified him, and put him to death: and by touchyng therof, were rid of theyr corporall diseases. Howe muche more then ought all men to endeuour them selues to touche Jesus him selfe with harte and mynde, to the intent they may be healed of the infyrmities of theyr soules. Touchyng auayleth nothyng without fayth. The cruell Jewes that bufketed him, that bound him, that scourged him, that nayled him on the crosse, touched his bare body: but that they so touched him did nothyng profite any of them at all. Thou readest the gospell, and in so doyng thou touchest Jesu: but thou readest it to this ende to disproue it, or els thou readest it negligently, and takest no heede thereunto, and therfore thou touchest Jesus in vayne. Reade it with a pure and a syncere fayth, and then shalt thou anone be healed. But thou must sue vnto Jesus by prayer and petition, that thou mayest touche him. That man is neuer the better for touchyng him, whome he hath not fore touched. If thou be not able to attayne that secrete wysdome, whiche S. Paule speaketh of among suche as are perfite, then the hẽme of his garment touched, so that thy fayth be perfite withall, shall restore the to health. The hemmes of the Phariseys garmentes, be they neuer so brode, are not of power and vertue to do the like. There is nothing so lowe in the lord Jesu, that through fayth geueth not healthe.

The. vii. Chapter.

THus went the gospell forward among the symple, and lyghtly beleuyng people. But it had not lyke successe amog the Scribes, and Pharyseyes, who thought in theyr owne conceyptes, ẏ they had in theyr keapyng the castle of all pure religion, and true doctrine: and scantly estemed the vnlearned, and ignorannt sorte of the common people, for men. For of the prystes there is scarcely anywhere any mencion made, but when Jesus should be put to death. Therfore lyke as in Comedies or playes there are diuerse sceanes, and pageauntes, to the intent that by the compatyng together of sondry persons and matters, euery thyng maye the playnlyer appeare: so in this euangelike busynes, the Lorde Jesus so ordred all thinges that were done from tyme to tyme, that it shoulde playnly appeare to all men, after they sawe howe ready the symple people, and Gentyles were to beleue, howe vncurable was theyr froward obstinacy, who of congruence, ought to haue reformed other, if they had bene hard of belief. To the vnlearned and common sorte it was sufficient for the recouerynge of theyr health, that they touched but the hem of Christes garment. But the Pharyseys were neuer the better, neyther for that they vnderstode the prophecies and foresayinges of the Prophetes, neyther because they had so oft tymes heard Jesu preache vnto them the heauenly doctryne: nor for so many myracles, as they had sene him worke before.

¶ And the Pharyseys came together vnto him, and diuers of the Scrybes, whiche came from Jerusalem. And whē they sawe certayne of his disciples eate bread with commō (that is to say with vnwashen handes) they complayned. For the Pharyseys, and all the Jewes, except they washe theyr hādes ofte, eat not: obseruyng the tradicions of the elders. And when they cūme from the market, except they washe, they eate not. And many other thynges there be, which they haue taken vpon them to obserue, as the washyng of cuppes, and cruses, and brasen vessels, and of the tables. The text.

Nowe after all this was done, thither came certayne of the Pharyseis and Scribes in company together, forsoth a worshypfull sorte of gentylmen, and worthy to be had in great reuerence: and the more a great deale because they came from Jerusalem, where they bare men in hand that the well of godlynes and holy doctryne was: where as in dede there was the very well spryng, and head of all ambicion, all hypocrysy, and al vngodlynes. These felowes, because they thought them selues righteous men, and well learned, came not hither to learne any thyng of Christ, neyther to be healed, but to picke quarels.

And loe, by anby was there a ready occasion for the so to do. This occasion (beyng muche desyrous therof) they toke of the superstitious obseruacion of ceremonies, wherof sysen almost all quarelinges, & wrongful accusacions among christian men. The Jewes call that common whiche is vnclean and vnholy, abhorryng all impuritie, and endeuorynge in no wise to seme to haue any where any maner of vncleane or fylthy thyng. And this cleanesse they measured, not by puritie of mynde (the whiche is the onely, and true puritie before GOD) but by corporall ceremonyes.

And of these ceremonyes a fewe were commaunded by Moyses lawe, not to this ende that they should be earnestly obserued for euer, but partly to the entent the ignoraunt, and disobedient people should by this meanes accustome them selues to obey Gods commaundementes, and partly because they should by suche maner (as a man would say) of shadowes, and rudimentes, be by lytle and lytle enstructed to those thynges, that belong vnto true godlynes, whiche is in the soule of man. Nowe summe of the not contented with the ceremonies commaunded by the lawe, added therunto constitucions of theyr owne makyng, out of numbre, whiche the Phariseys more rigorously compelled the people to kepe, then suche thinges as were commaunded by God, alwayes, and euerywhere to be obserued. And for suche folishe trifles, they chalenged the prayse of holynes, and brought the people in a fond belief, that they were made holy therby, and finally (the whiche was a muche wickeder dede) they went about to forge a matter of vngodlynes, or heresy against their neyghbour, for the breache of suche ceremonies, thobseruacion wherof conduced nothing at all vnto true godlynes. For when they sawe certayne of his disciples eate meat with vnwashed handes, that is, as they vse to speake, with commune, and vncleane handes, they rebuked them as wicked persons, and theyr maister to, who had naughtely instructed them. They condempned not this facte because it was eyther of it owne proper nature vicious, or els forbidden by almighty God, but because it disagreed with theyr vse and custome. Assuredly the worst rule that can be to iudge by, is to disalow any thing, because thou vsest not to do the same. For it chaunseth many tymes that the folichest thinges of all, growe to a commune custome, which ought not in any wyse to be made the rule of godlynes, in asmuche as puritie is to be estemed, not by custome, but by those thinges whiche are true, and commaunded by GOD. But the Scribes, Phariseys, yea, and almost all the whole packe of the Iewes, most folichely iudgeing puritie of mynd to stand in corporall thynges, did contrary to this, superstitiously obserue the maner taught them, not of God, but of theyr forefathers, and elders, in suche wyse, that if they had bene in daunger to sterue for hunger, they woulde haue eaten no meate, vnlesse they had fyrst washed theyr handes. And yf they be compelled to take theyr repaste ofte tymes a daye, then washe they ofte tymes, and therfore suppose that they cumme cleane vnto the table. Further, if they returne home from the market, then do they (as thoughe they had gathered some filthe by touchyng of the people) washe theyr whole bodyes afreshe before they eate any meate: where as all this whyle hauing theyr soules most polluted with hatred, enuy, ambycyon, couetousnes, hypocrisy, and many other detestable vyces, they neuer haue any mynde of washyng at all.

And when they sawe certayne of his disciples.

For the Phariseys and all the Iewes except they, &c.

And when they come from the market, &c.

These, and suche other like tradicions, were taught them of theyr forefathers, besydes the constitucions of the law, whereas the lawe expresly forfendeth that any thyng be eyther added, or taken awaye from Gods commaundementes. Neyther thought they it sufficient oft tymes to washe theyr bodyes, therby to appere the cleaner: They washed also theyr cruces, theyr brasen vessels, and theyr tables.

Then

¶Then asked him the Pharisees and Scribes: why walke not thy disciples accordyng to the custome ordayned by the elders, but eate bread with vnwasshē hādes? He answered, and said vnto them: wel prophecied Esay of you hypocrites, as it is writte: This people honoreth me with theyr lyppes, but theyr heart is farre frō me. How beit, in vayne do they serue me, teachyng the doctrynes, and cōmaundementes of mē: for ye lay the commaundement of God apart, and obserue the constitutiōs of men, as the washyng of cruses and of cuppes, and many other suche like thinges ye do. The text.

Nowe cou'd they no lenger kepe in this foule scabbe of false reprouing: yet quarelled not they with the disciples, but assayled the mayster him self, as though he had committed some haynous enormitie.

Why, say they, do not thy disciples who folow the, and hang vpon thine instruction and teachyng, kepe the custome begon of oure elders: but eate theyr meate vñ vnwashen & vncleane handes? Iesꝰ intēdyng to teache vs ꝑ there is no more noysome or mischeuous kinde of quarellyng, then when a man vnder pretence of godlynes, syndeth faute with the well doynges of his neyghbour, sharpely reproueth theyr malice, and coloured righteousnes. By your dedes, sayth he, you playnly declare, that the Prophet Esay prophicied of you hypocrites full well, and worthely, whiche make an outwarde shewe of holynes, where as inwardly ye are replenished with all synne and wickednes. In this Prophet, God complayneth in this wyse: This people honoureth me with theyr lippes, but their heart is farre from me. And as them selues do liue, so do they instruct other. I passe nothyng vpon this cleanes of theyr bodyes, and houshold stuffe: but require of them inward puritie and cleanes of soule. They serue me in vayne with this coloured kinde of godlynes, auauntyng & magnifiyng it, as thoughe it were a thyng of great worthynes, and wherin perfite godlynes did stād, teachyng mans traditions, whiche make no man commēdable, and prayse worthy before God: and of a superstitious mynde they haue to obserue the same traditions, nothing passyng vpon Gods commaundementes. Loke howe muche difference there is betwene God and man, so muche difference ought there to be betwene mens constitucions, and Gods commaundemētes. God is a spirit, and that whiche is spirituall and gostly continueth for euer, and ought neuer to be neglected. Agayne, what thing soeuer is corporall, the same lasteth but for a season. If it be lawfull to passe litle vpon the ceremonyes whiche god him selfe hath commaunded to be kept, whensoeuer charitie towardes thy neyghbour exhorteth so to do: Howe muche lesse then is it meete to breake the commaundementes of God, for kepyng of mans traditions? It is a wrong shapen godlynes, & an vnholy holynes, to be superstitious in keping of suche ceremonyes as your forefathers instituted and taught you of theyr owne mynde, and in the meane whyle litle to regard those thynges whiche God him selfe hath cōmaunded you to obserue. You thinke it to be one of the chiefest pointes of godlynes to washe your handes, your cuppes, your cruces, and to obserue many other lyke thinges, the whiche your doynges, by reason they haue a certayne counterfayte apparaūce or visure of holynes, do hyghly set you furth & make you seeme prayse worthy vnto the world: & this prayse so gotten by couloured holynes, you set more by then by Gods authoritie. For you loue your selues: and neyther seke Goddes glorye, nor the soule health of the people, whose guydes, and teachers you professe your selfes to be. He answered and sayd vnto them, well prophecied. &c. To the washyng of cruses.

The text. And he sayd vnto them: well, ye cast aside the cõmaundement of God, to mayntayn your owne constitutions. For Moses sayd: Honoure thy father and thy mother, and whoso curseth father or mother, let him dye the death. But ye say, a man shal say to father or mother, Corban: which is, what gift soeuer cummeth from me, shall be for thy profite. And so ye suffre him nomore to do ought for his father or his mother, and make the worde of God of none effect through your owne constitution, which ye haue ordayned, and many suche thinges do ye.

Therfore it is no maruayle if ye disanull, and cleane take awaye that God hath cõmaunded to be obserued of all men for euer, to thentent that mans tradicions, whiche procure you great gaynes and authoritie, may styll continue. Doth not all the world see that you thus do? Did not God geue this lawe by Moyses? Honour thy father, and mother: And he that curseth his father or mother, shall dye the death. This God commaundeth not in one place, but doth oft tymes repete it, and put euery manne in remembraunce thereof, because that children should to theyr power, helpe theyr parentes when they be olde, and impotent, or fallen into pouertie, or otherwyse so oft as they are oppressed with any maner of necessitie, and by this meanes pay them home againe, the benefite of theyr nourishyng. The same thing the lawe of nature commaundeth, whiche is likewyse emplanted in many brute beastes, as in Storkes. But you hauing an eye to your owne peculiar vauntage, do with your fayned doctryne, make Gods commaundement of none effecte: and require that this lawe (whiche God would so fayne haue euery body to kepe) should geue place vnto your sayd coloured doctryne. God him selfe cryeth: honour thy father and thy mother: and ye are bold to say the cõtrary: Honour not thy father, and thy mother. You cry not so with wordes, but ye do it in very deede. So muche the more detestable is your wickednes, because you cloke the same with an ymage or colour of godlynes. For to the intent your treasurye (wherewith all your excesse and pride is mayntayned) may be fylled, you craftely allure whomsoeuer you can, to bryng very many gyftes vnto the temple, by defeatyng euen of theyr owne parẽtes, whomme they should accordyng to Gods commaundemẽt succour at theyr neede: persuading them that by this meanes the cõmaundement is fulfilled, as though the thyng whiche is dedicated vnto the temple, were geuen to God, and that God were the very natural father of all menne. Wherfore vnto him who hath cast any money into the treasury, you say, that he now nedeth not to geue any thyng to the relief of his poore parentes, because the cõmaundement is otherwyse fulfilled: and in the meane while you so feare the parẽtes with vayne superstiction, that they dare not requyre of theyr chyldren any thing whiche semeth once dedicated vnto GOD, lest in so doyng they should bryng them selues in daunger to be accused of sacrilege. Doubtles God hath no nede of your money, neyther is the same employed to his glory, but turned to your owne priuate cõmoditie: and though it were bestowed vpon the building of the temple, yet with God there is no temple so holy that for the mayntenaunce thereof, he would haue the children forsake theyr parentes at theyr nede. Do not you, when that by suche fayned doctrines, ye bothe so deceyue the children, that they refuse to helpe theyr parentes, and also so feare the parentes that they dare not touch any thing once consecrated vnto the temple: doe not you I saye, whiles you thus stablyshe blyche and vpholde your owne commaundementes, dysanul and put oute of place goddes cõmaundementes? This thyng haue I brought you forth for an ensample, which ye cannot denye. But you offend not herein alonely. For in many other thynges you doe the lyke, as in that you now doe. Goddes commaundement is: thou shalt loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe. And you for triflyng washinges, taught you of men, go aboute to surmyse matters both against me, and my disciples, nothyng regardyng goddes commaundement in thys behalfe.

¶ And when he had called al the people vnto him, he sayde vnto them: Herken vnto me euery one of you, and vnderstande: there is nothing without a man that can defile him when it entreth into hym: but the thynges whiche proceede out of a man, those are they that defyle the man. If any man haue eares to heare, let hym heare. And when he came into the house awaye from the people, his disciples asked of him of the similitude. And he sayd vnto them are ye also so greatly without vnderstandinge? Doe ye not perceyue that what soeuer thyng from without entreth into a man, it can not defyle him, because it entreth not into his hart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purgyng out all meates? The texte.

After the Phariseis were with these wordes vnto them priuatly spoken, rather put to silence then cured of theyr maliciousenesse, he eftsones called all the people vnto hym. For his pleasure was to haue them al monished of the premisses, least they should at anye tyme afterward, haue bene by Pharisaicall traditions, withdrawen from the puritie of the gospell. Heare you all (sayethe he) and vnderstande my wordes. You sawe howe I was accused of heresie or vngodlynesse, for that some of my disciples dyd eate breade with vnwashen handes, as who saye, he that so eateth, were by suche meate polluted and made vncleane before God. The cleannes, and vncleanesse of man standeth not in outwarde, but in inwarde thynges. Neyther can the soule of manne be defyled with corporall thynges. Herken vnto me euery one.

Therfore nothyng that is without manne, and entreth into the bodie, can make hym vncleane before god. But suche thinges as be within man, and commeth out of hym, declareth hym to be vncleane. By this darke sayyng, the Lorde Jesus gaue the people occasion diligentely to ensearche what was the meanyng of his wordes, and to make them more diligent, he sayde moreouer: who so hath eares to heare, let hym heare: meanyng that the foresayde songe was songen in vaine to the defe Phariseis. But after the multitude was sent awaye, & he gone into a house, then the disciples desyred hym aparte, to expounde them the parable of the difference betwene the thinges entryng in and comming oute of man. Jesus here folowyng thensample of a faythfull, and dyligent scholemaister, after he had gyuen them a litle check, and by that meanes made them to take better hede vnto his wordes then did he teache them the misterye, and secret meaning therof. What, sayth he, are you also, whome I haue specially chosen oute to teache other, so voyde of vnderstandyng? Truly ye your selues ought to haue gessed what was meant by this parable, by so manye as I expounded to you heretofore. Perceyue you not that mannes cleannesse, and vncleanesse can neuer be knowen by those externall thynges whiche entre in to hym? For whatsouer entreth in by the mouthe is not conueyed into the harte, but into the stomacke, and anone after into the belye: from thence, yf ther be anye thyng that is vncleane and filthy, it is auoyded out into the priuie: so that If any man haue eares to heare, let him heare.

And he sayde vnto thẽ: are ye also.

Do you not perceyue that whatsoeuer to the

to the eater euery meate is cleane, because nature purgeth what soeuer is here vncleane, and fylthy.

The texte. ¶ And he sayde: that whiche commeth out of a man, defyleth the man. For from within euen from the hart of men, proceade euell thoughtes, aduoutry, fornicacio, murther, theefte, couetousnesse, fraude, deceypte, vncleanesse, a wicked eye, blasphempes, pryde, foolishnesse: all these euel thinges cum from within, and defyle a man.

But those thynges that come oute from the most inward partes of man, be tho that both make, & declare hym, to be vncleane. The seate of the soule or mynde, is in the harte: and in the soule is true cleannesse and vncleanes. For this cause he is not forth with cleane who so hathe washed his handes, but who so hath a washen, and a cleane harte. Therfore al that cōmeth frō thence doeth verely declare manne to be cleane, or vncleane. For out of the most secretes corners of ỹ hart do yssue euel thoughtes, aduouttie, fornication, manslaughter, theefte, couetousnesse, gyle, falsehode, vnchast lyuing, a naughty, and an enuious eye, raylyng wordes, pryde, and folisheneſſe. The meate whiche is eaten with vnwashen handes, bringeth in none of all these enormities, but they spryng euen of the man hymselfe, that is to saye, of the harte: and when they once come oute, then do they playnlye declare hym to be vncleane in dede, whose harte is defyled with so many fylthy vyces. If they be kepte in, and hyd, yet is the man neuer theleſſe vncleane in the sight and eyes of almyghty God, who throughlye seeth the entrayles and bowels of the hart. But yf they fortune to come out eyther by wordes, or dedes, then do they not onely testifie that the persones from whom they procede, are vncleane, but also many times defyle other mo, whiles that by the eyes, and eares, they entre and crepe into the mindes of the heaters, and seers. Wherfore let your chief care be, to kepe youre hart cleane, and then shal it not skyl, whether you eate your meate with washen handes, or vnwashen.

The texte. ¶ And from thence he rose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entred into an house, and would that no man shoulde haue knowen. But he could not be hyd. For a certayne woman (whose doughter had a foule spirete) assone as she heard of him, came and fel at his feete. The womā was a Greke, out of the nacion of Syrophenicia. And she besoughte hym that he wouldе caste oute the deuell from her doughter. But Jesus sayd vnto her: Let the childrē fyrst be fed. For it is not mete to take the childrens bread, and to cast it vnto whelpes. She answered, and sayde vnto hym: euen so lord, neuertheleſſe the whelpes also eate vnder the table of the childrens cromes. And he sayde vnto her: for this saying go thy waye, the deuell is gone out of thy doughter. And when she was cū home to her house, she found that the deuell was departed, and her doughter lying on the bed.

After these thynges were thus done, Jesus sygnyfyeng euen by the verye chaungyng of place, how wery he was of the Jewyshe honouryng & seruyce, which was almoste altogether estemed by thobseruacion of folyshe corporall ceremonies, & coarcted with the very narowe lymytes of Jewrie: sygnyfying also howe muche he desyred to be at large among the Gentiles (where he shoulde be honoured in spirite, & truth) gat hymselfe thēce, & went into the borders of Tyre, and Sydon, but as a priuie geste because of the enuious Jewes, who by reason they counted the Tirians, and Sidonians dogges & abhominable people, would not haue suffred hym to haue translated and had awaye the doctrine of the gospell vnto them.
Wherfore beyng there, he vsed not to be conuersaunt in open & commō pla ces,

ces, as he was wont to be among the Jewes, but went into a house, as though he had bene desirous to kepe him selfe secrete, and vnknowen. Albeit he coulde in no wise so doe. So greatly had the fame of hys wordes, & dedes spred abrode, & stretched forth it selfe, euen beyond the boundes and limites of Jewrie, as though it had then deuised to ouerrunne the whole worlde. In this wise is the glorye, and prayse gotten by leadyng a godlye lyfe after the gospell, best of all spred abrode, when that of it owne accorde it followeth him, who exchaweth and shunneth the same.

For a certaine woman.

For a certayne woman of Canaan, as this rumour was bruted, & noysed abrode of Jesu, came oute of the coastes of her countreye, and anō conceyuing a great confydence of hym, hasted her to the place where he was: and beyng with muche adoe let into the house, fell downe at hys feete. Thys woman was not of the Jewish, but of the heathen religion: not a Jewesse borne, but a Syrophenisse. Here thou seeste a figure of the churche whiche anon after should be assembled and gathered together of the gentiles. The Jewes droue Jesus oute of theyr countrey: but thys Syrophenisse forsoke her countreye, and went to meete hym. It is but lost labour to come to Jesu, vnlesse thou haue first forsaken thyne olde vices beyng now familiar, and of houshold with the. Thou muste flytte out of thyne owne house, to thentent thou mayst come vnto the house where Jesus abydeth.

And she besought hym that he would cast out.

This woman had a daughter at home vexed with an yuel spirite, by the whiche daughter are vnderstande the people geuen to idolatrye. Wherfore she desired Jesu that he woulde vouchesafe to delyuer her from the spirite. Howe much perfiter was the faythe of this heathen woman, then of the ruler of the synagoge: Jesus because he woulde make the faythe of thys woman more apparaunte to all men, shaped her an answere as though he had bene of a Jewyshe mynde, saying: suffre the children first to be fylled. It is not besemyng that I take the breade of the children, and caste it to dogges. For the Jewes do glorie, and make their vaunte that they alone be the children of god, and esteme the gentiles, who are of a contrary religion to theyrs, for dogges. He calleth the vertue of the gospell breade, which by the heauenly doctrine, and pure faythe, healeth all dyseases, and expelleth all kynde of diuels out of mennes sowles. The woman nothyng offended with thys rebuke, tourned his wordes into an argument to obtayne her peticiō, the which he spake (as it semed) because to shake her of that she should make no further supte and request vnto hym herein. Thou sayest very wel, sayeth the Lorde. We heathen people haue not disdayne at the Jewes, that they (as children) do honourably syt at the table of theyr exceding riche father, and eate theyr fill of the holy loaues. But yet dogges are permitted to eate the crūmes whiche fall downe vnder feete from the childrens table.

But Jesus sayd vnto her: the children.

She answered, and saide.

Jesus, as though he had bene ouercome with so great faythe, pacience, humblenesse of mynde, and constancye of the woman, answered, and saide: By reason of thys answere thou obteynest that perforce, whiche it was not yet tyme for me to gyue the. Get the home, thy daughter is now delyuered of the spirite.

And he sayde vnto her: for this saying.

The woman gaue credence vnto hys wordes, and so departed thence with great ioye & gladnesse, & proued al thynges true, that Jesu tolde her. For she founde her doughter at rest in her bed, nowe cleane delyuered from any further vexacion of the fiende.

any

Assuredly the fayth of the mother, enforced Jesu to heale the doughter. Assone as the euel spirite is once put to flyght, then foloweth there incontinent quiet of minde & cõscience. For ỹ euer foloweth innocency & cleane life. So at this day the congregacion of godly folkes, resorteth vnto Jesus, & maketh intercession for such as are no lesse vexed with Idolatrie, Ambicion, wrath, couetousnesse, and a furious desire to make warre, then yf they were vnder the thraldome of some foule spirite. The Jewes thought it not besemyng that they whiche a lytle before were enforced to do all mischief at the will and pleasure of dꝰuels, should sodaynly through the grace of the gospel, be receyued to the dignitie, and felowshyp of the childzen of God: & the cause why, was by reason they perceyued not how this highe preeminence ought not to be estemed by consanguinitie or kinred, but by feruentnesse, and constancye of fayth, towardes the Lorde Jesu. Christ was promised vnto the chyldrē of Israel, & to ỹ posteritie or successours of Abraham: But they are the posteritie of Abraham, which folow the fayth of Abraham. They are the childzen of Israell, whiche require not heauen gates to be opened vnto them for their merites sake, but go about violently to entre in by force of an Euangelyke fayth. For Israel is asmuche to say in the Hebrue tongue, as a man strong or valiaunt against god. For when the Gentiles (who before tyme were blemysched with al kyndes of vyces, and had no good dedes at al, wherby they might make any iust tytle or clayme vnto the kyngdome of heauen) were by the iustice of God cleane excluded and shut out: then brake they in by the wyndow of mercy, & made them selues a way in by constaunt faythe, as it had ben with some toole or weapon, violently breakyng vp the walles of the same kingdome. The time was not yet come that they should be openly called to the felowship of the kyngdoms of heauen: but yet the Lorde maketh many sore signes of their vocacion, as one desirous to preuent the thyng, whiche he chiefly desyreth.

The texte. And he departed agayn from the coastes of Tyre and Sydon, and came vnto the sea of Galile, thorow the myddes of ỹ coastes of the ten cities. And they brought vnto hym, one that was deafe and had an impedimēt in his speache And they prayed hym to put his hande vpon him And when he had taken hym aside from the people, he put his fyngers into his eares, and did spyt, and touched his tongue, and loked vp to heauen, & sighed and sayd vnto hym Ephata, that is to say, be opened. And streyghtwaye his eares were opened, and the stryng of hys tongue was loused, and he spake playne. And he commaunded ths that they should tel no man. But the more he forbad them, so muche the more a great deale, they publyshed, sayng: He hath done all thynges wel: he hathe made bothe the deafe to heare, and the dumme to speake.

After this fede was priuely, and as a man would saye, by stealth, fowen amonges the Tyrians, Sydonians, and Cananites, the Lord reculed, and went agayn vnto the lake of Galile: leauyng Sydon, and passyng along by the countrey of Decapolie or ten cities, where as before he healed a man vexed with a spirite. And when he was hyther cõmen they brought hym a pitifull sight, that is to wete, a man both deafe, and dūme. For he must nedes be dūme, who so is of nature deafe. But more miserable is his deafnesse, whiche lacketh meete eares to heare the worde of god. He is worse dūme, who hath no tongue to confesse his own fylthie liuyng, & gods mercy. By the hearyng of fayth, beginneth our saluacion: and by confession of mouthe of mouthe, is the perfection of soule health. The Jewes albeit they daylye heard Jesus speakyng, yet they hearyng heard him not, because folowing the exemsample of a serpent called an Aspike, which stoppeth her eares against the voyce of the wyse inchaunter, they would gyue no credence vnto suche thynges as they heard. And therfore had they a tongue to backbyte, and make yll reporte: but none at all to professe the hollsome fayth of Christe. But what shall this sely poore wretche do, who hath neyther tongue to desyre the Lorde to gyue hym health, nor eares to heare that voyce of Jesus, whiche repleth to lyfe euen the dead? Other that had bothe tongue, and eares holpe hym. They brought hym vnto Jesus: they besought him of hys gracious goodnes, to vouchesafe to lay his hande vpon hym. So pleaseth it the moost mercifull lorde to helpe synners, euen at the contemplacion of other mennes fayth. The christian nouice is brought vnto Jesu. He hath made an end both of yll doyng, and naughty speakyng: but yet hath he not learned to doe well: Yet hath he not learned to confesse the goodnesse of the gospell. For howe can he so doe, vnlesse Jesus laye his hande vpon hym? Menne doe but labour in vayne, yf Jesu put not to his secrete power and vertue. The Lorde coulde euen with the bare worde of his mouthe, haue easely healed this deafe and dumme felowe: but this fourme of healyng was set out for our enstruction. For lyke as the wordes of Jesus are moste commonly parables or mysteries: euen so be manye tymes his doynges to. He toke him by the hand & led him aside from the multitude of people. Safe is he whome soeuer Jesus hath taken, and seuered from the ruffelyng of this troublous, and vnquyet worlde. Then put he his fingers into his eares, and touched his tongue with his spettell. Nowe is health very nere when Jesus by vertue of his spirite (whiche is the fynger of God) vouchesafeth to touche ỹ eares of our minde: when the spettell of heauenly wysedome (which is himselfe) cummyng oute of the mouthe of the hyghest father, dayneth to touche the tongue of our soule, to thentente that all godly thinges may relysse and sauour vnto vs. For without this humour, ther is no taste: and yf mannes spettell be sautye, then maketh it a wronge iudgement in tastyng. This spettel doth not onely leuse the tongue, but also open the yes of the blynd borne person, as oftē as it is mingled with earth, and the yes therewithall anoynted: whereas the spettell of the Philosophers, and the Pharisets doeth rather put out the yes all together. As Christ dyd, so in manour doe the teachers of the gospel. They take menne and leade them awaye from the multitude, when they call them backe from the brode waye (by the which verye manye walke vnto dampnacion) to the felowshyp of the litle flocke of true Christians. They put their fingers into theyr eares, when perswadyng them to put no trust in thinges transitory, then styre and exhorte them to embrace the heauenly doctrine. They laye spettel vpon the tongues, whē they exhorte men to professe the Euangelike and Christian fayth.

And they prayed him to put hys handes vpō him.

And whan he had take him aside, &c.

They laye on their handes, when they gyue the holy ghoste to them that be baptysed: by whome theyr synnes are taken awaye, and innocencye is conferred. But the teacher doeth all this in vayne outwardlye, excepte Christ worke within and send downe his godly vertue from heauen.

Jesus wyllyng to shewe vs as it were a certayne fygure hereof, when he had taken had taken the man, and fyrst put his fyngers into his eares, and then spyt vpon his tongue, he lyfted vp his yes to heauen, and syghed. This syghynge came not of anye mistrust to cure the man, but was a passion or poynt of hym that greuously bewayled mannes calamitye. For what thyng is more miserable and wretched then they, whose inwarde eares are so occupied and encumbred with worldly lustes, that they cannot heare the worde of god: Whose tonge is so entangled, and infected with naughtie affections, that they sauour not of heauenly thynges, but are altogether dūme to cōfesse theyr own synfulnesse, & dūme to set out the mercie of god: Therfore the syghynge of Jesu putteth vs in remembraunce in what case we were: but his lokyng vp into heauen, taketh awaye desperacion, shewyng vs frō whence cummeth our ready succour, and also whom we ought to reken our selues bounden vnto, that we, which had before open eares to heare detractions, ribaudry, fond tales, Pharisaical doctrine, opinios of Philosophers and the suggestions of the dyuel, haue nowe the same opened, to heare the heauenlye doctrine of the gospel: and that we, whiche had before our tōgue so infected wt the spettell of the flesh, that we lothed the dilicate foode of the heauenly Philosophie: so tyed with the diuels bondes that we coulde neyther knowleage our offences, nor sette oute goddes glorye, doe nowe confesse howe nothyng is due vnto vs for our desertes, but onely hell: and how it commeth wholelye of the bounteous goodnes of God, that we be chosen both to the name, & also to thinheritaunce of the chyldren of god. Wherfore let the priest in lyke manour rather mourne then rage agaynst other mennes synnes: rather sorowe, then be angrye. Neyther let him chalenge vnto hymselfe the power to geue absolucion: but loke vp to heauen confessyng, and testifyng therby that all that euer is done, through sacramental rites, and ceremonies, is done by goddes power alone, and not by mannes.

And said vnto him Ephata.

Jesus sayed vnto the man: Ephata, whiche worde signifieth in the Hebrue tongue, be opened: And by and by of his worde ther ensued a vertue. For anon his eares were opened, and the bande of his tongue was leused, and he spake redely. They had open eares, who after the lorde sayed vnto them (come after me) forsoke all that euer they had, and folowed him. They had a ready tongue, whiche after they had receyued the holy goste, spake wt sondry lāguages the wondres of god, and aunswered the rulers charging thē that they shoulde not from thencefoth be so hardye, as to preache the name of Jesu, on this wise: whether we ought rather to obey god then mē, iudge you. These thinges were done a syde from ỳ people. For we must not make a wycked multitude witnessebearers of our fyrst profession of the gospell, least they haue in derision, that they as yet beleue not.

And he commaunded thē ỳ they should tel no man,

Therfore Jesus charged them they shoulde tell no bodye hereof, not for that he would not haue his miracle dysclosed and knowen, but because the thyng self doth better declare the power of god, then any publication, or setyng forth of man. They all knewe this deafe and dumme person. Now he heard, and had his tongue at will. And so dyd he blase, euen when he spake neuer a worde of the matter, the great benefite receyued of Jesu. Further, Jesus was in this worlde conuersaunte, vnder the shape and lykenesse of man, because he woulde enstructe menne, and teache them what they should they should doe. What thing so euer a manne dothe that is excellent, and prayse worthy, let him couet to haue no wordes made therof, to thentent that mānes glorye maye be vttrely suppressed, and only goddes glorie aduaunced. It is ieoperdie t o magnyfie and extoll man: but the power, and goodnesse of God, is euermore most worthyly praysed. Albeit neyther is the glory and prayse of man (if any be due vnto him) cleane suppressed: yea oftetymes the more it is auoyded, the more it followeth. But a christian teacher must be of this mynde, to desire, as muche as in him lieth, to be knowē to god alone: and in so doyng, he is the more worthy to be praysed to euerye bodye. For who so desyreth glorie and praise among men, the same in that he is so desirous therof, deserueth to haue none at all. Wherfore in that Iesu forbad them whiche brought the dumme manne vnto him, to tell any body what was done, he therby more prouoked them to publishe, and telle it abrode to all menne: And so muche the more had they his greatenesse, and excellencye in admiracion, because that he, who bothe was able to doe, and wrought in deede suche feates among them, dyd not only not requyre of them any meede or rewarde for his labour, but also woulde not so muche as take the fruitiō of that glorie & praise, whith he most worthily deserued, for so notable a miracle. But as it is the propertie of him who is beneficiall in dede, to require no praise for his benefite: so is it agayne the parte of a thankefull persone, so much the more earnestly to rēder his harttie thankes, because the authoure of the benefite loketh for none at al. But þ more he forbade them. &c.

Therfore those felowes reported euery where of Iesu, saying: He hath done all thinges well, and hath restored to the deafe theyr hearyng, and to the dumme, theyr tongue, and speache. This prayse is agreable to none, but to God alone. No earthly manne doeth all thynges aright. All the miracles that Iesu wrought, wer vndoubtedly our benefites: whiche miracles if a man way and ponder after the outward apparaunce of corporal thinges, in dede there were many of them, that farre passed this, wherwith he made the deafe to heare, & the dumme to speake. But accordyng to the spirytuall meanynge hereof: the summe of a christen mans felicitie standeth in this poynt, that with his eares he may heare the wordes of the gospell, and then with his tongue, vttre, and speake what he hath learned, and geuen credēce vnto. He hath done al thinges. &c.

If. The

The paraphrase of Eralmus vpon The.viii. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ In those dayes when there was a very great company, and had nothing to eate, Jesus called his disciples to him, and said vnto them: I haue compassion on the people because they haue now bene with me three dayes, and haue nothing to eate, & if I sende them awaye fasting to theyr owne houses, they shall faynt by the waye. For diuers of them came frō farre. And his disciples answered him: wher should a mā haue bread here in the wyldernesse to satisfie these? And he answered thē: How many loaues haue ye? They saide, seuen. And he commaunded the people to sitte downe on the ground: And he tooke the seuen loaues. And when he had geuen thankes, he brake them, & gaue to his disciples to set before them. And they did sette them before ỹ people. And they had a fewe smal fishes: and when he had blessed, he commaunded them also to be sette before them. And they did eate, and were sufficed, and they take vp the broken meate that was left, seuen baskettes ful. And they that did eate, were aboute fower thousand. And he sent them awaye.

THe Lorde Jesus exhorteth his disciples by diuerse ensamples, to continuall beneficence and well doing, the chiefest parte wherof, is to feede the ignorannte people with the doctryne of the gospell. Therfore he repeteth thēsample of feading, because the thyng so oftymes prynted in theyr myndes, should in no case out of memorie. For it fortuned on a certayne season, that a great multitude of people, camme vnto him to wyldernesse, bringing with them manye sicke folkes, payned with diuerse dyseases. The most gracious lord cured all theyr corporall sicknesses, and fed theyr sowles wt the heauenlye doctrine. And by reason he was so readie to doe good, he so wan the hartes of the multitude, that they coulde by no meanes, be seuered frō him. And whiles theyr myndes were wholely fixed vpon the kingdom of God, they remēbred not to make prouisiō for vitayles, in so muche that when theyr bodies were healed, and theyr sowles fed, they were in great daunger to sterue for hongre.

Jesus calleth his disciples to him, & sayd vnto them.

Assuredly hongre is a sore thing, especially when it chaunceth among a multitude. Jesus minding to teache the apostles by dede selfe, that suche shall want nothing, as cleaue vnto him by syncere faith, said vnto them: I haue compassiō vpon this multitude. For loe, they haue bene with me now this three dayes, and haue nothyng to eate. If I send them awaye fasting as they be, it is ieoperdie lest they faynt, and tyat by the waye, before they gette home. For summe of theim came a great waye hence. By these wordes Jesus prouoked his disciples to attend vnto ỹ miracle, whiche he purposed to worke. Howbeit they beyng as yet rude, & ignorannt, had cleane forgotten how that before he had fedde a great numbre of people with fiue loaues, and two fishes: and therfore answered in this wyse: Where should a man haue bread here in wyldernesse to satisfye so great a multitude, & so hongry withall by reason of two dayes fasting, althoughe there lacked not money inough to byc it? Here thou hearest an answer of forgetfulnesse, and distrust.

And his disciples answered.et.

And he answered them: how many loaues haue ye?

Jesus asked theim agayne: howe manye loaues haue you? They loked vpon theyr vytayles, and answered: seuen. Doubtlesse this was the true euangelike bread, not of barly, but of wheat, like as were the loues before mēcioned, wherwith the chyldren are fed: which is not cast to dogges. Barlie hath in it his proper floure, but couered wt a rough huske, or coueringe.

The

The fiue bokes of Moyses called ỹ Pentateuche, haue also in them a spirituall vnderstanding, but the same is wrapped, and couered with darke figures. The numbre of the loaues was multiplyed, but the couering was taken away, in token ỹ grace was encreased, and ceremonies dymynished.

Now whereas the disciples thought that thise breades would not haue bene sufficient for so great a multitude of people, Jesus, that notwithstanding, commaunded them all to syt downe vpon the ground. And he commaunded the people to syt doune. &c.

It is a blessed feaste where the hongry multitude sitteth downe, at Jesus commaundement. That is done, whensoeuer the people desirous to heare goddes worde, cum to the temple, there to heare Jesu, speakyng by the mouthe of a good preacher. For manye do cumme with no more deuocion to the sermon, then the commune sorte be wont to goe vnto the stage, there to beholde a play or enterlude, of sum vngoostly matter. He that wyll haue his bely fylled with the loaues of Jesu, must sitte downe, and that vpon the grounde. He muste come hither with quiet affections. They deserue not to be fed with this meate, which lye all at pleasure in the beddes of the pharyseis, and philosophiers doctrine. O thou that arte but earthe, and ashes, why arte thou proud: why art thou puffed vp with vayne glorie, by reason of thy vayne phylosophie: why puttest thou confidence in these thinges, wherin is no saftie: know thy selfe: Humble, and cast downe thy selfe vnto the grounde from whence thou camste. Let all fleshelye lustes be settled, and quiet in the: and then shalt thou be fylled with Christes meate. All this that I speake of was done. The whole multitude sate doune vpon the ground. Beholde now, and marke me well what Jesus doeth. He toke the seuen loaues, and to shewe that all commeth of god, whatsoeuer conduceth vnto mannes saluation, he lifted vp his yes to heauen (for there dwelleth the father, of whome he commaunded this bread dayly to be craued) and gaue him thākes: not takyng vpō hym as of him selfe, thautorite of ỹ ministerie, lest pure mā should take ought vpō him. For he might iustly haue taken vpon him this authorite, as equall with the father (albeit concerning also his diuine nature whatsoeuer he is, or hath, he is debtour for the same, vnto the father) but thensample that he shewed, was more expedient for our enstruction. After he had geuen thankes, he brake the loaues, and being broken, deliuered them vnto his disciples: that euē as they receyued them, so shoulde they sette them before the people. Mannes wordes are not pythye and effectuall, except they be handled before, with Christes handes. Thou hast eloquence: Thou hast knowleage in phylosophie: Thou hast a good witte: thou hast knowleage in holie scripture, in the lawes cyuell, and canon: whatsoeuer thou hast, firste deliuer it vnto Christes handes: let him blesse, and halow it: let him breake it: and then do thou ministre the same vnto the people: not as thyne owne, but as receiued, and delyuered the of him. For there are some, whiche breake the bread of holye scripture, not as they ought to doe, writhing and wresting it to the lustes of man, and not to the wyll, and pleasure of Jesu. And he toke the seuen loaues. &c.

For Jesus doethe so breake it, that the hongrye multitude maye be fylled, and not that the ambicion, and couetousnesse of prynces maye be therwith bolstred, and mayntayned. Whoso teacheth the gospell for gayne, or for to get glorie, and prayse of mā, or els for any other worldlie affections, the same receyueth not loaues broken of Christe. Therefore in preaching the worde of God, and Christes gospell let vs folowe his disciples. As Christ commaunded them so did they set the loaues, readie broken to their handes, before the multitude.

And they had a fewe small fishes. 15

Here some man will saye: what is there no meate? Is it only a bread feast? There must not be muche added vnto the loaues of the gospel. Ther is nothing of more vertue and efficacie: nothing more swete and pleasaunte in tasting the they are: And yet throughe ỹ bountious liberalitie of ỹ feastmaker, there are added vnto ỹ same a fewe small fishes. Peraduenture ỹ apostles will put hereto certayne epistles, howbeit theyr putting to will not be much, & but a very small matter or trifle, in respect of ỹ euangelike prouision. This addition was permitted for ỹ lothsomenesse of certeyne persones: but we muste require it no more. We ought to content our selfes with the meate already prepared, lest if any would stil put to of his owne prouision what soeuer him lusteth, it should then become the feaste of men, and not of Jesu Christ. For Jesus did likewise halow these litle fishes, albeit they were but fewe, and small, and commaunded them to be sette downe before the people, whiche thing if he had not done, they should not haue bene set before them at al. Do not here complayne of the frugalitie, and slender prouision of meate: els if thou wilt permitte the knackes and iunckettes of the rhethoricians, the rotaill dishes of the philosophiers, and the vnsauerie potage of the pharisees to be serued in, then shall it be ieoperdie, lest the bread of the gospell saues not vnto the mouthe that is infected and brought out of tast with so manye sortes of diuerse meates.

And they dyd eate and were fulfilled. 16

Now that we maye departe with ful bellies from this euangelike feast, let the teachers doe as the apostles did, and likewise the people, as did ỹ multitude. What dyd the apostles? Is they receyued this meate of the lorde, so dyd they set it downe before the people, without any doubting or reasoning. The multitude was also quiet, and receiued it without murmuryng and grudging against theyr ministers, and toke well awoorth what soeuer was geuen them. And so in conclusion, besides that euery one of the had ynoughe, there were also seuen baskettes fylled with the meate that remayned when euery man had eaten his fill. Moreouer the people (whiche a man may more meruayle at) that were satisfied and filled herewith, drue almost to the numbre of fower thousand persons. Certes this was the largesse of goddes worde and the gospel. Whensoeuer ther commeth a proud teacher fournished with no small prouision and forniture, aswell of liberall sciences, as of other good learning, lawes, and constitutions, so that he hath in all thinges exceding great skill and knowleage, crying ofte that he shal not haue tyme ynoughe to prosecute his matier, ỹ his audience is not receyuable of so highe misteries, that he is drowned with copie of matier, and standeth in doubte where he maye best begynne: Do not we see it cumme to passe that his audience departeth awaye hongry: muche lesse then remayneth there ought, when the feaste is ended. But of this frugall, and sparing feast of Jesu, there are left seuen baskettes full of broken meate, vnspent. The aboundaunce and plentye of the euangelike feast standeth not in the multitude of sciences, as it were in sundrie kyndes of meates so many in nũbre, ỹ the sight of thẽ wyl take away a mãs appetite, Fyue thousand that did eate, &c.

and prouoke him to lothsomnesse: nor in sauces made of the menglyng together of all manour of humayne & secular learninges, but in ỹ vertue of ỹ word deliuered vs of god, & truly ministred wout anye fraud, or coume.

When Jesus had thus fed the people, then he set them awaye. This is also summe what, happily to departe from the feast or banket of Jesu. So are they sent awaye, who render him hartie thankes: whoe laye vp his benefites in theyr sowles, and there digeste the meate which they haue receyued: who after they be cumme home (their bodies being now, as it wer, wel fed) do by good workes doing, practise such thinges as they haue learned. And he sent them awaye. &c.

The texte. And he entred into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parties of Dalmanutha. And the pharisees cam furth, and began to dispute with him, seking of him a signe from heauē, tempting him. And whē he had sighed in his spirite: he saith: why doeth this generatiō seke a signe. Verely I saye vnto you, there shall no signe be geuē vnto this generacion. And he lefte them, and went into the shippe agayn, and departed ouer the water.

These thinges so done, Jesus forthwith departed thence, and hasted an other waye. The heerdman must neuer be conuersaunt with his flocke, but when it is to be holpen. He hath healed the secke, taught the people, and fed those that were in ieoperdie to perishe for hongre. After all these benefites still to tarrie with them, semeth to be a poynte of suche a one as loketh for summe thankes or gramercies. The necessitie of the multitude, whether it be bodilye, or ghostly, is by al manour of meanes to be holpen: but the nature of the people is suche, that for the leaste good tournes of all, they are wont to geue moste hartye thankes. It is the smallest benefite that canne be, to feade and nourishe the bodie: it is a greater, to heale it, and the greatest of all to heale and feade the sowle, with holye doctryne. None of them made him a king for the doctrine he preached, and the diseases he cured: But for meat, they gaue him a kyngdome. And lest they would now haue done the like agayne, he departed streyghtwayes from them, and taking with him his disciples (whome he choase bycause they should alwayes accompaigny hym) toke shippe, and so came vnto the coastes and borders of Dalmanutha or Magedan.

And that the vnbeleefe of the pharisei̇s maye the oftener appeare, they came likewise hither out of theyr coūtrey, not to be healed, but to pike quarelles. For they had enuie at his miracles, & enuied also the people whiche were holpen with so manye of his benefites. And the pharisees came fourth. &c.

For this cause they began to reason the matter with him, as though the miracles which he shewed, had not bene wrought by ỹ heauenly power, because they were (as they sayde) but baase, and after a common cast. Wherfore in case he would haue them, being menne farre aboue the commune sorte, and as you would saye, heauēlike fellowes, to beleue in him, they required him to shewe somme signe from heauē, as Moyses obteyned manna from thence: and Helye brought to passe by his prayers, that fyre sodaynly descēded from the same place, and consumed bothe the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and to be short, al the water that was in the trenches or cesterns by the altre. And began to dispute with hym seking a signe. &c.

The lorde knowing right well that whatsoeuer he hadde donne, they woulde haue hadde a quarell to hym therfore, for if there hadde And when he had sighed in his spirite, he saith. &c.

bene any wonderfull signe or token shewed them from aboue where as the princes of darcknesse do raigne, they might with muche more apparaunce of truthe, haue ascryued it vnto Beelzebub, then those thinges which they sawe with theyr yes, heard with theyr eares, and handled with theyr handes, chiefly because it is a commune practise among the expert in arte magike, to cause sodayne showers, and dashes of rayne, thunder, lightening, hayle, and tempest: the lorde, I saye, perceyuing this, sighed in his spirite, shewing therby howe wofull he was for theyr so obstinate vnbeliefe. And as though he had bene in a fume, and chafed with angre, spake vnto him selfe on this wise: What a frowarde nation is this, whiche after so manye miracles seene, yet neuertheless requireth a signe, as though she had neuer seene none before? Then he tourned him to the pharisees, & sayde: Of this on thinge I assure you: there shall no signe be nowe geuen vnto this nation, the whiche only to tempe me, she requireth from heauen. But she shall haue a signe geuē her that she loketh not for, from beneath. And it shall be the signe of Jonas. For this Jonas after he was swalowed vp the space of three dayes, and beleued to haue bene dead, was delyuered agayne oute of the whales bely, when no man thought it euen so the sonne of manne after he hath bene hid about three dayes space in the belly of the earthe, shall rise vp alyue agayn, contrarie to all your expectation and wening.

Merely I say vnto you. &c.

When the pharisees vnderstode not these wordes, Jesus departed from theim as from desperate persones and returned vnto the ship, and so passed ouer the water: Thus the lorde Jesus desirous of mans healthe, oftetymes chaungeth place, not seking for sacrifices, wherof he had long a goe his fill, but true faithe. This scarcely found he in the world, but yet euerywhere rather then amōg theyr prieshes, scribes, pharisees, and head menne of the people. So yll doeth the saythe of the gospell agree with theim, that haue the world at wyll.

And he left them and went into the shyppe.

The texte. ¶ And they had forgotten to take bread with them, neyther had they in the shippe with them more then one loafe. And he charged them, saying: take hede, beware of the leuen of the pharisees, and of the leuen of Herode, and they reasoned among themselues, saying: We haue no bread: and Jesus knewe it, and saith vnto them: why take ye thought because ye haue no bread? perceyue ye not yet neyther vnderstād? haue ye your hertes yet blinded? haue ye yes and see not? And haue ye eares and heare not? Do ye not also remember when I brake fyue loaues, among fyue thousād men? How many basshettes full of broken meate toke ye vp? They sayd vnto him, twelue. Whē I brake seuen among fower thousand, how many basshettes of the leauing of the broken meat toke ye vp? They said, seuen. And he said vnto them: howe happeneth it that ye do not vnderstande?

Here, as they sayled, the disciples called not to remembraūce how they had forgotten to prouide them selues of breade. For they had but one loafe with them in the shippe. Jesus perceiuing howe they were careles by reason of forgetfulnesse, and not for the faith they had in him, gaue them warning therof, and by that meanes caused them to be carefull afreshe. Albeit this their carefulnes came not so much of distrust, as it did of an humayne negligence, and forgetfulnesse.

For hauinge theyr myndes wholy fixed vpon the wordes, and dedes of Jesu they had no remembraunce of bread: and it was expedient for vs that they so oftetymes forgat howe a great numbre of people was sufficed with fyue loaues, to thentent it should the depelier be fastened in our

mynde̅s howe those personnes shall wante nothynge, who with pure harte and mynde, continuallye cleaue vnto Christe. That shippe is suffycyently prouided for, that hathe in it that one loafe, whiche is Christe Jesus. Wherfore his pleasure was to sturre vp this carefulnes in the̅, bycause he woulde heale them therof. And for this purpose, he gaue theym a charge, saying: Loke diligently that you beware of the leuen of the Pharisei̅s, and of Herode. This word leuen (whiche they hearde, but wist not what he meant therby) caused them now when it was to late, to be careful, and take thought a freshe, howe they should make prouision for vitayles. Therfore they began to whisper, and saye softely: we haue no bread. For one thyng brought an other into memorye. After they hearde hym once make mencyon of leuen, straightwayes it came to their remembra̅ce that they had forgotten to bye the̅selues bread. Of this matter they talked softely one to another, as though they had made a faute through forgetfulnes, because thei dought no bread. Howbeit this forgetfulnes pleaseth Jesu very wel, whensoeuer through ỹ great delyre we haue of heauẽly thiges, we forget corporal & worldly matters. They feared lest they shoulde haue ben checked for their negligẽce: but they wer rebuked for their vaine & superfluous carpe & care. Wherfore, sayeth the lord, do you thus reaso̅ the matter among your selfes, beyng careful bycause you haue no breade? Haue you as yet after I haue enstructed you with so many precepte̅s, taught you with so many ensamples, and so oft warned you, no perceuera̅ce and vnderstanding at al? Are your hartes yet blynded? and be you in case, that you haue iyes and see not? eares, and heare not? Do you not at the least wise remember the thing whiche was twyse done, of late before your iyes? You sawe not long agoe howe fiue loaues broken with my handes, and dealte of you, suffyced fyue thousand people, in suche wise that euery bodye had hys fyll. And howe many basshettes full of broken meate dyd you then take vp? They sayd, twelue. Afterwarde, whan seuen loaues likewyse suffyced fower thousande persons, howe manye basshettes fylled you with the reuersion, and meate that was leaft? They answered, seuen. Then sayd Jesu: howe then chaunceth it ỹ sith you haue ben so oft, & many wayes taught, you do not perceiue how this care for your foode & liuyng is superfluous: & that the monicion which I gaue you of the auoyding the Pharisei̅s & Herodes leuen, perteyneth nothing at al to bread, but to theschewyng of their doctrine, least you be likewise deceiued as they deceiue many a one. A very smal piece of leuen maketh al ỹ dowe sower, or sauery. If ỹ leue̅ be naught, the̅ is all the dowe mard. They make a shew & sẽblãt of godlines, notwithstãding they be very farre fro̅ true godlines: & they disse̅t in opinions amo̅g the̅selfes, whereas both of the̅ do shãefully erre, & be out of ỹ way. For the Herodiãs do many times erre, by reason they be ignorannt in holy scripture, beleuing not that the bodyes shall rise againe: & all is because they beleue nothing, but what they see w̃ their iyes: The Pharisei̅s, although they haue ỹ scriptures at their fingers end, yet blinded w̃ euil lustes & delyres, do withstãd true godlines. You muste be chiefly ware of their doctrine, leaste both your selfes be infected therwith, & also other mo hereafter, by the contagiousnesse of your infection. But embrace you the breade made sauerye with the leuen of the Gospell, that you may likewyse distribute this pure breade to other.

And he charged them saying: take heede

And they reasoned among them selfes, saying:

And saith vnto them: why take ye thought.

Haue ye iyes and see not?

When I brake fiue̅ among.

And he sayed vnto them.

The texte.

¶ And he came to Bethsaida, and they brought a blind man vnto him, and desyred hym to touche him, and he caught the blind manne by the hand, and led him out of the toune, and when he had spitte in his yes, and put his handes vpon him, he asked him yf he sawe ought. And he loked vp, and sayd: I see the men. For I perceiue thē walke as they were trees. After that, he put his hādes again vpon his yes, & made him see, and he was restored, and saw euery man clearely. And he sent him home to his house, saying: neyther go into the toune, nor tell it to any other.

In the meane while they arryued, and came to Bethsaida, and behold howe euery where is ready matter and occasion ministred to shewe mercy. Here in a certayne strete, they brought hym a blynde man, and desired him to touche hym. This blynd body desyred nothing himselfe, but intercession was made for hym, by other men. No man desireth health of the Lorde Iesu, but suche a one as he toucheth. For the first touch bringeth a man to the knowledge of himselfe. This man was not poreblynd, or a litell appayred, and decayed in sight, but as bysome as was possyble to be. They that be so blynd, haue nede to be ledde to Iesu by other men, whiche by prayer maye procure them theffectuall touche of his holy hande. Iesus, who could with a becke haue healed what blynd manne soeuer hym luste, restored hym not byanby to his sight, because he woulde vnder a figure, shewe his disciples how muche a do it is, ere suche persons can be brought to the knowledge of the truthe, as of long tyme haue continued in their errours. Suche a blyndnesse was the blindnes of the Paynims, and Gentiles, who so manye hundred yeares, embraced the worshippyng of Idols, in steade of great godlines. Suche a one also was the blindes of the Iewes, whiche coulde not be made to forsake the superstition receiued of their elders, whereunto they had so many yeares accustomed.

He caught ye blind man by the hand.

Therfore whē the Bishop and preacher of Gods word, shal chaūce to mete with suche a blind man, what must he do? marke what Iesus did. Firste he toke the blind man by the hand. O blessed guide: but whyther dyd he leade hym? he lead him out of the toune, That manne setteth before his yes the worst ensample or patarne that can be, whoso folowth the trace and steppes of the multitude. They fauour them selfes to theyr own peril, that say thus: I do not this thing alone. Euery man doeth so, as well as I. I had leauer play the vnwise man with the multitude, then be wyse with a fewe. Such as are blind, are diuerse waies in ieopardy, so long as they be amōg company. They are laughed to scorne: they are runne vpon: they runne, & strike against other: they are thrust out of place, and haue many a fall. Therfore first of all the blind man must be lead out of the place, where as much cōpany & resort of people is. He walketh now safely that hath such a guide.

Whē he had spit i his yes

What did the Lorde moreouer? he spit in his yes, & then put to his hādes, & touched them. Neyther wer his yes yet opened: so great was his blindnesse.

And he loked vp & sayed: I se men:

Then Iesus asked him whether he sawe ought. As he had spoken the worde, the blind man lifted vp his yes, conceiuyng as it were sum litle hope to be restored to his sight, and sayd: I see mē walking like trees. They that haue not yet perfitely receyued the lyght of the Gospel, whatsoeuer they see in this worlde, seemeth muche greater then it is in dede. They see a ryche man, he semeth a plane tree. They see an heade officer or a prince: they thinke they see an Apple tree, or a Cypresse tree.

They see a stoicke philosophier, with a great beard, or a Pharisey trimmed with brode with brode hemes and phylacteries: they beleue he is a figge tree. Now yf their ies were cleused, and thinges would shewe and appeare vnto the in their proper likenes, and as they be in dede, then should they perceiue what maner of trifles and vanities suche thynges were, as semeth so great vnto him, whiche is halfe blynd. But the Lord who quencheth not the smokyng flare, nor forsaketh him that hath but halfe a syght, vntyll he see perfectly, dyd eftsones put his handes to the blynd mans ies, and forthwith he began to haue a clearer sight, and at the length attained suche perfitenesse therof, that he sawe al thinges clearely.

After that he putteth hãdes againe vpon his ies.

Blessed is he who hauyng the ies of his hart lightened by Christ, seeth euery thyng plainlye. Unto him those thinges seme leaste, whiche vnto the world appeare greatest. Unto him those thinges seeme fowle and filthye, that make the goodlyest shewe vnto the worlde. Unto him those thinges appeare greatest, which seeme vyle and nothyng worth vnto the same. Whosoeuer thou be that art a teacher of the gospel, despyse not the weakenes of them whiche are newe beginners in learnyng the philosophy and doctryne of the gospel. At the fyrst time it is inough for them to be brought out of ỹ towne, that is to say, to haue departed from their old sinnes. The must the doctrine of the gospel be straightwayes put forth, and preached vnto the, whereby their ies may be lightened: and first of al the rudimentes, & firste principles of ỹ euangelike perfection, are to be taught, vpon the profession wherof, such as entre into Christes religiõ, and be nouices of the same, may receaue the sacrament of baptisme. Anon after, ther must be taught them a more secrete and pithy doctryne, which shal make them to see, and perceiue euery thing clearely. These thinges shal the ministers of Jesu Christ do. But Jesus himself wil vouchsafe to touche the blinde mans ies, with an hyd and secrete vertue, that he may receyue his syght agayne.

After the Lord had done this good dede, he badde the man retourn home to his house, forbiddyng him to tell any body what was done. As ofte as he commaundeth any fact of his to be conceled, he teacheth the priestes therby howe they ought not to seke for any prayse and glorye among men, yf they haue done any thing wel and praise worthy in the ministration of the gospell. Agayne if at any tyme he commaunde his facte to be published and tolde abrode, it is a monicion for him ỹ is healed of his sinnes, both to knowledge his owne filthynes, & also to display & set out the goodnes of God, vnto whome onely he is a debtoure, for that he is chaunged, & made a newe man. Nowe to retourne into his owne house, is nothing els, but after the time he hath once receiued grace from heauen, not to forget what he was before, & to what inconuentence he shal fal agayne, if he be not preserued thorough the grace and beneficial goodnes of almighty god. If it chaunce him in his retournyng homewarde to come into any toune, that is to saye, among a sinful and a wicked multitude of people, which wil rather laughe Christes religion to scorne, then beleue in Christe, there ought he not vndiscretely to bable out the mysteries of our fyrst profession.

And he sent hi home to hys house.

Jesus said vnto him: go vnto thy house, and yf thou entre into any towne, tel no body. He healed one before, whiche was bothe deafe, and dumme. The same felowe hearde the worde of the Gospell, and spake readily. Nowe hath he healed a blind mã, who notwithstandyng his sight be good and perfit, and perfite, yet is he cõmaunded to kepe silence, among vngodly persons & sinners, forasmuche as when he is come home, the thyng it selfe shall open the miracle to suche as knewe hym blynde. For ther is a tyme when it behoueth a man to professe the mysteries of the gospell. Againe there is a tyme when it is better to concele the same.

The texte. And Jesus went out, and his disciples into townes that belong to the citie, called Cesarea Philippi. And by the way, he asked his disciples, saying vnto them: Whome do men say that I am? And they answered: some say thou art Johu Baptist, and some say Helias, againe some say that thou art one of the numbre of the Prophetes. And he sayd vnto them: But whom say ye that I am? Peter answereth and sayeth vnto hym. Thou art very Christ. And he charged them that they should tel no man of hym, And he began to teache them howe that the sone of man muste suffer manye thinges, and be reproued of the elders, and of the hye Priestes, and Scribes, and be killed, and after thre dayes, arise again. And he spake that saying openlye. And Peter toke hym a syde, and began to chide hym. But he tourned about, and loked on his disciples, and rebuked Peter, saying: Go after me Satan, for thou sauerest not thynges that be of God, but the thinges that be of men.

Nowe maketh he a triall howe much his disciples haue profited ghostly, prouyng whether such thinges be done in theim spirituallye, as in other haue bene wrought corporallye, and by darke figures. Ther fore he departed from Bethsaida, and went with his disciples to the litel townes belongyng to the citie of Cesarea, surnamed Philippi. As he wente by the waye, he asked them what the people supposed of hym. For nowe after so manye miracles wrought, euen the common sorte oughte to haue conceyued some meruaylous great opinion of him. Jesus was not ignorant what the common opinion was of him: but his intẽt and purpose was, to shewe vs whiche is the true euangelike fayth, that sauyth the faythfull: and howe much it differeth from the inconstant, and variable opinion of the cõmon people.

Whõ do men say that I am

Whom (saith he) do men say that I am? The disciples answered plainlye, as they had heard. Some men (ye they) suppose thou art John Baptist, who is reuiued agayne. Other some take the to be Helye the Thelbite, whose commyng was promysed by Malachy the Prophete. And agayne other there are, who thynke not that thou art Hely, but some other of ye olde Prophetes risen agayne from death to lyfe. These were the opinions of those men, who as then, had the greatest opinion of hym. For beyng themselfes but men, they coulde suppose nothyng of hym aboue the state and condicion of man. They supposed him to be a man of great excellencye, but as yet, they beleued not howe he was Messias, the very sonne of God, and sauiour of the worlde. Yet was this a rudiment, and first principle (suche as it was) of the euangelike and christen profession, the mistery whereof, was not as yet to be disclosed to the common sort. For it being once discouered, no man can be saued, saue he whiche beleueth that Jesu is the authour and original cause, of al healthe and saluation. The wel of ye euangelike saluation, is a sure beleke on Jesus Christe, the sone of God, inspired vs by the heauenly inspiracio. And to wryng this beleke out of the Apostles, he sayd: The common people, as I perceiue, are wauering in theyr faith, hauing no constant opinion of me, & yet haue they a greater opinion of me, then suche as sayed, I was nothyng els but a Carpenters sonne: then suche as sayd I was furious and madde, and sought me out, to thentẽt to haue bounden

me with cheynes: then suche as said, I had the spirite of Beelzebub. But what say you, who be of household, and of familiar acquaintãce with me, & haue bene alwayes witnesses of al that euer I haue done, and taught: whõ say you that I am? Then Peter the chiefe professoure of the gospell, made answere in all their names, and sayed: Thou arte that selfe same Messias long a go promised of the Prophetes, the sonne of the liuyng God, by whõ onely healthe and saluacion was promised vnto the worlde. When the lord had greatly allowed this open confession of his, as inspyred of God, & had geuen hervnto a worthy testimony of blissfulnesse, and pronounced it to be the foundacion of the churche, and euangelike citie, which no puissaunce of the deuell shoulde euer be able to shake: Then charged he theim straightly, that they shoulde in no wise discouer what they knewe, by thinspiracion of the father, before the time were come. It behoued that the people should awaite for Messias, and beleue that he should shortely come: Howbeit as yet, it was not expediẽt to be knowen, that Jesus was Messias. For thus was it necessary for our instrucciõ, that glory should spring of base and hũble estate. The disciples of an humain affectiõ abhorred the displeasurs of their master, muche desirous to haue him greatly estemed, & takẽ for a iolly felowe of euery body. But it pleased the euerlasting wisedom to obserue the other order. Therfore Jesus began to teache them what he shoulde suffer, before he woulde haue his greatnesse and excellencye knowen vnto the world. The sonne of man (sayd he) of whom you haue conceyued so high an opinion, muste suffer great reproche, manye paynes and tormentes, be condempned as a felon of the Scribes, priestes & head men of the people: and in conclusion, be putte to a shameful deathe, as an euill doer, insomuch that among worldly men, it is not possible for any man to be counted more vile, abiect, and desperate then he. But for all this there is no cause why ye shoulde despayre.

And he charged them that they.&c.

And began to teache theym how that the sõne of mã.&c

Kepe stedfastly in mind your confession, which ye haue made before me. After they haue persecuted me to death, I wyl rise and be alyue agayne, on the thyrd day. And where as he had nowe and then before, sumwhat darkly monyshed them to the premisses, at this present he spake his mind plainly, because it appered they would nowe awaye with suche communication, sithe they had geuen so noble a verdicte and sentence of their mayster.

But for all that they could not yet abyde to heare any menciõ of his death, although they shoulde thorough hope of his resurrection haue taken cõforte agayne. The loue wherwith they embraced Jesu, was great: but yet was the same a very worldelye loue, and an humayne affection. For as yet they had not receyued the holye Ghost, whiche should make perfyte in them, whatsoeuer was vnperfite. Wherefore when Peter hearde suche fell and cruell wordes, of condempning, tormentyng, and slaying, he was not afeard to take Jesus aside, as though he would secretely monysh him of some thing whiche shoulde be for his weale, and profite.

And Peter toke hi aside.

For sothe this is mans wisdom, which oftimes studieth to go before ỹ wisdõe of god. Yea he was bolde to rebuke his lord, as though he had not ben wel aduised for that he would dye, sith he might auoide deth. And albeit he beleued he would be alyue again on the third day, yet he thoughte it muche better for him not to dye at all, then after death to reliue. This leude tache of Peter, although it proceded of a certain harty loue towardes Jesus, yet did Christ openly, and sharply reproue, to thentent we shoulde learne in al thinges obediently to folowe the wil of god, and not with our fond iudgement, to go before his determinacions. It is not mans part to take Jesu aside, and rebuke him, for feare leaste he do, what he hath determined to doe. But we ought reuerently to beseche him, that he wil vouchsafe to take and leade vs, whither soeuer it please him. Therfore bicause he woulde cleane wede out of al their mindes, this naughty affection, he first tourned from Peter to his disciples, & then beholdyng them (whom he knewe righte well did not dissēt in opinion from their spokesman, though he bolder, and more presumptuous then the rest, was not afeard to speake his mind) he rebuked Peter again, of whō he was rebuked before, saying: Why letteſt thou me Satan? That word in the Syrian tōgue, signifieth an aduersary: as who say: Why doest thou that art but a disciple, assay to go before thy mayster? Thou that art a man, attempt to go before god? folow rather behind. This is not mās busines which is now in hand. Thine affection & loue is as yet a worldly affection: neither sauerest thou of those thinges which ar of god. If thou wilt be my disciple, it becommeth the to folow my death, and in no wise to hinder it. And not the alone (albeit chiefely the, and the other whom I haue specially chosen) but also all that will profesſe them selfes to be my disciples.

The texte. ¶ And when he had called the people vnto him, with his disciples also, he sayd vnto them whosoeuer will folowe me, let him forsake hymselfe, and take vp his crosse, and folowe me, for whosoeuer will saue his life, shall lose it. But whosoeuer shal lose his lyfe for my sake and the Gospels, the same shal saue it. For what shall it profite a man yf he winne all the worlde, and lose his owne soule? Or what shal a man gene to redeme his soule withall agayne? whosoeuer therfore shall be ashamed of me, and of my wordes, in this aduoutrous, and synfull generacion: of hym also shal the sonne of man be ashamed, when he commeth in the glory of his father, with the holy Angels.

When Jesus had thus spoken, he commaunded the whole multitude to be present with his disciples, leaste any should suppose that those wordes pertayned onely to those specially chosē persons. And whē they were nowe al together, Jesus spake vnto them with an audible voyce, on this wyse: Many there be whiche do folowe me rather with feete, then by imytacyon of life. Neither do al men come to me for one cause or purpose. For some are entyced hither by the noueltie and straūgenes of my miracles: some with ỹ desire of bodely health, & other some by a great desire to hear my doctryne. But whoso wil be a true folower of me, yf he intende to be associate wyth me in blisse and glory, let the same in the meane time dyspose hymselfe to be my felowe or partener, in suffering afflictions, and deathe. Let him vtterly renye himselfe, reseruing nothyng vnto himselfe in this worlde, but cleane renouncyng al thinges euen to contempt of lyfe: and finally let euery man take vp his crosse, and folowe me. Let not the disciple be ashamed to folow his teacher, nor the seruaunt to folowe his maister. Neyther let any intende to come to glory by any other way or meane then that, by ỹ whiche he shall se me go thither before him. Who so thinketh that he hath in himselfe wherby he is able to attain saluacion, shal perish. And contrarily, whoso destruStyng all styng all his owne aydes, wholly putteth himselfe to my mercy, shalbe saued. For it is not inough for my sake little to passe vpō landes, tenemētes, parentes, wife, and chyldren: but life it selfe (for the preseruacion whereof man forgoeth all that euer he hath) must likewyse be forsaken.

Who so euer will folow me

Be you of good comforte: that neuer perisheth whiche is geuen to me: no rather ye shall preserue that by losyng, whiche you shoulde otherwyse lose in dede by euill keping. Through fayth of the gospell, to all men is geuen life euerlasting. Therefore he that setteth more by this present lyfe, then by the grace of the Gospell, although he seme for a tyme to wynne the same, yet dothe he in very dede, lose it. For nomanne can here prolong his life beyonde the tyme appoynted. Albeit to say the truthe, neyther in the meane tyme, and before his death, liueth a man in dede, except he liue wel and vertuously. And after this life (whiche to al men is very shorte and transitory) he shalbe condempned to euerlasting death. Nowe, whoso for my sake, and for that he is a stedfast professour of the gospell, putteth his life in hasard of death, shall preserue it by me, which els should verely perysshe. Therfore, yf there be nothyng so dearely beloued of man in this worlde, but he wil be content to raunsome temporall life with the losse therof, debatyng the matter with him selfe in this wyse: What shall it auayle me to haue house, landes, goodes, precious stones, wyfe and chyldren preserued, if my selfe perisshe, and shall not enioy that I am owner of? Thoughe all these thynges be in safety, yet do they perisshe to me ward, if I fortune to dye. For what thyng can be so dearly beloued, and muche set by of man, that is not to be contempned for the preseruacion of lyfe?

For whosoeuer shall saue his life.

But who so euer shal lose his life.

What shal it profite a man if he winne al the world.

If one woulde offer another as great riches and treasure as euer had Midas and Cresus, the beautie of Absolone, the Monarchy and empyre of the whole worlde, and finally al sortes and kyndes of pleasures, & therwith say: Take these thynges, & dye: would not thother byanby refuse this offre made him with suche condicion, and answere agayne? I loue my lyfe alone, better then all these thynges. Sith, I saye, that euery man dothe wysely consyder these thynges with him selfe, so ofte as there is any imminent daūger of bodely lyfe, why do they not then more earnestly loke vpō, examine, and way the matter, whensoeuer it concerneth that lyfe inestimable? Nowe euerlasting life is profered vnto thy soule: and wylt thou not exchaunge therfore the shorte, and wretched lyfe of the body? especially sith that euery man shall another daye receyue his owne body agayne, restored to a more blessed life. All menne must not of necessitie dye for the profession of the gospell: but yet euery man ought to be ready in wyll and mynde so to do, to the intent, that if the case requyre, they may passe nothyng vpon corporall life, so that the lyfe of the soule maye be saued. Whensoeuer the storme of persecucion ariseth, then must this crosse be taken vp. Albeit neyther, euen when all thynges be quiet, and persecucion ceaseth, shall any man be without his crosse, vnles it be counted an easy thyng to renounce all naturall affections, with all worldly pleasures and intisementes, to cut of the inordinate lustes of the flesche, to bridle excesse, to represse sensualitie and pleasure of the bodye, to subdue hastines, and lette passe reuengement. For these thynges also must euery man do, that wyll be my disciple, euen at that tyme, when the worlde is most quiet, and without busynes.

But truth it is that the worlde ſhal with all maner of engynes riſe againſt thoſe whiche profeſſe my name, and threten them with reproche, baniſhement, impriſonment, tormentes, attayndour, and death. For this is a naughty nacyon, and ſhall euer haue in it moo reprouable, and naughty diſpoſed perſons, then good men: among whom it ſhalbe coũted the greateſt offence that may be, to profeſſe my name. And if any man, the worlde beyng thus ſet, and bent agaynſt me, wyl be aſhamed to confeſſe hym ſelfe to be my diſciple in this vngracious, and counterfeyte nacion, where after ſhort affliction foloweth euerlaſting blyſſulnes, him the ſonne of man wyl requite, and be likewyſe aſhamed to take him for his diſciple, when he ſhal eftſones cum, not lowe, and contemned as he is now, but wonderfull, and merueylous in the royaltie and glory of his father: not accompanied with a fewe poore diſciples, but enuironed with innumerable companies of holy Angels.

The ix. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he ſayd vnto them: verely I ſaye vnto you: there be ſome among them þ ſtand here, which ſhal not taſt of death, tyll they haue ſene þ kingdõ of God cum w̃ power.

THey ſhall not be partakers of þ glory, who will not nowe ſuffre þ infamy of my croſſe. The Jewes loked for a merueylous kyngdome of the children of Iſraell, whiche they ſuppoſed ſhould begyn, aſſone as Meſſias was cũ, & therfore they could not beleue þ Jeſus was Meſſias, becauſe he came ſo poorely, and like an outcaſt of þ worlde: & muche more were they offended with the mencion of his paſſion, and death. Thei vnderſtode not howe there were two cummynges of Meſſias, the fyrſt, whiche after the eſtimacion of the worlde, was lowe, and reprochefull, and another full of maieſtie, and glory, whiche ſhalbe in the ende of the worlde, to thentẽt he may ioyne vnto him his whole body, deliuered from al euils, in the glory of the father: and throwe downe Satan with al his membres, into the fyre of hell. He woulde that the day of this latter cummyng ſhould be vncertayne to all men: but yet would he haue euery man to be in a readines agaynſt the ſame. Therfore for aſmuche as there were ſome among the people which by inward ymaginacyon ſayd thus to them ſelues: when ſhall this tyme of glory cum whiche he promiſeth? And peraduenture many of them beleued not that it ſhould euer cum at al: Jeſus ſtabliſhed their wauerynge myndes with ſuche wordes as here enſue: Beyou ryght well aſſured of the thyng I told you, that the ſonne of manne (whome ye nowe ſee humble and lowe, and very ſhortly ſhall ſee more abiecte then all other) ſhall appeare in the fathers maieſtie, with all his holy angels, and choſen diſciples. Neyther is that tyme ſo farre of. For there be ſome here in this company, who or euer they dye, ſhall perceyue that the kyngdome of God is alredy cum with power.

And he ſayd vnto the, verely, I ſay. &c

Therfore let euery mã make him ſelfe redy, to thentent he may be found worthy to be of the ſame kyngdome. Theſe wordes that the Lorde ſpake, the Apoſtles them ſelues as then vnderſtode not, becauſe there was in them double vnderſtanding. For of his death, reſurrection, and aſcẽcyon, and after the sendyng doune of the holy ghost from heauen, then that vertue of the cozne of mustardsede, that is to say, of the Euangelike doctryne, began to put furth it selfe.

and

¶ And after sixe dayes, Jesus taketh Peter, and James, and John, & leadeth them vp into an hye mountayne out of the way alone, and he was transfigured before thē, and his raymēt did shine, and became very white, euen as snow, so white as no fuller can make vpon the yearth. And there appeared vnto thē Helias, with Moyses, & they talked with Jesus. And Peter answered, and sayd to Jesu: Maister, here is good beyng for vs. Let vs make also three tabernacles, one for the, and one for Moyses, & one for Helyas, for he wyst not what he sayd. For they were afrayde. And there was a cloud that shadowed thē, and a voyce came out of the cloud, saying: This is my beloued sonne, heare him. And sodaynly, when they had loked rounde about, they sawe no man more then Jesus onely with them. The texte.

Nowe because the disciples should put no doubtes, but he would once performe what he promised concerning the maiestie of his second commyng, his pleasure was to geue them some taste thereof, and that before their death, so farforth as mānes nature was able to receyue or away wal. Wherfore after sixe daies Jesus toke vnto him three of his twelue speciall chosen disciples, as the chiefe and worthyest persons: vnto whom his pleasure was to shewe this sight, because they would make no wordes thereof, tyll the tyme were come that they might lawfully disclose it. These wer Peter, James, and John. Them onely he toke awaye with him into a very high mountayne. For they must be farre from all carefulnes of lowe and yearthly thynges, whom Jesu vouchesafeth to shew suche a sight vnto. He dayneth euen in these dayes to geue by secrete inspiracion, vnto certayne electe persons enhaunced to the mountayne of pure contemplacion, some tast, and sight of the euerlasting blissefulnes.

The people whiche abyde beneth in the playne, knowe nothyng hereof, and if a manne tell them, they beleue not. When the Lorde, and his disciples were cum to the toppe of the mountayne, fyrst of all they fell to theyr prayers. For prayer is the thing whiche chiefly prepareth the yes of the heart, and maketh them mete to behold suche a sight.

And loe, as Jesus was in his prayers, the shape of his body was sodaynly chaunged. For his face, which before semed not to differe from the cōmon physnamy of other, shone as bright as the sunne. Then did his clothes glister w whitenes, surmountyng ꝑ whytnes of the snowe: suche as no fuller can by his craft, make the like vpon clothe. Neyther was Jesus sene thus alone, but with him Hely, and Moyses talkyng together. It was Moyses office to talke with God. And we rede howe Hely was taken vp and caried into heauen with a fiery chariot. Doubtles theyr communicacion with Jesu, signifyeth the agrement of the lawe and the Prophetes. For the lawe shadowed and shewe out Christ with mysticall figures: and the prophetes shewed before by theyr prophecies, howe Christ should cum suche a one, and like in all poyntes as Jesus camme: and yet the Jewes woulde not beleue. The matter wherevpon they talked, was his glorious death and departyng, whiche he should in shorte space after fulfyll at Jerusalem vpon the crosse, so that here the mencion of death dyd lykewyse assuage that excedyng great pleasure, whereof mans mynde was in no wyse receyuable. Peter being rauished with this vnspeakable sight, and therfore not wel able to rule his affectes, breake theyr communicacion

And he was transfigured

And there appeared vnto them Helias with Moyses.

And Peter answereth.

begonne of death, saying: Maister speake no more of Jerusalem: Here is good being for vs. Therfore let vs make.iii. tabernacles in this place, one for the, another for Moyses, and the thirde for Hely. These wordes of Peter, partly proceded of the feare of death, whiche was deepely suncken into his minde, and partly of ỹ great pleasure he had in beholding of this sight, wherwith he was as it were dronken. For like a man beside him selfe and rauished of his wittes, he wyst not what he sayde. So great was the feare wherewith these mortall menne, not yet recepuable of the diuine maiestie, were astonyed. Therfore because they should not be ouercomme with this passyng great brightnes, there arose a cloude whiche ouershadowed them, and tẽpred that vnsuffrable light, so as they might away with it. This taste of the diuine maiestie, was geuẽ to their corporall yes. Ther was also somewhat geuen vnto theyr eares. For there sounded out of the cloudes, the fathers voyce, beyng likewise full of maiestie, whiche sayd: This is my moost dearly beloued sonne: geue eare vnto him.

And there was a cloud that shadowed them.&c.

And a voyce came.&c.

Nowe, howe for very shame do the Jewes to this presẽt day, speake agaynst Christ, sith both Moyses, and Hely, whiche are of greatest authoritie among them, beare him wytnes: sith the father (whome they would be seme deuoutly to serue and worship) gaue by his voyce, the whole authoritie to his onely begotten sonne. The Apostles were delighted with this glory: but let him ỹ wyll cum thereunto, heare Jesu whan he exhorteth to the imitation of his crosse. O Peter do not thou from hencefoorth rebuke thy Lorde: do not thou go before Gods determination. Thou heardest the fathers voyce, whiche sayd: heare hym who is my dearly beloued sonne, as who saye: hitherto you haue heard Moyses, and the Prophetes prophecying of Christ, they haue nowe played theyr partes. He is alredie cum whome they promised. Hereafter geue no eare vnto suche as promise thinges to cum: but hear you him that is present, and speaketh my wyll and pleasure. No manne shall speake truer thynges. Whatsoeuer disagreeth with his wordes, that vtterly refuse you.

And sodaynly when they loked rounde about.&c.

Anon as this voyce of the father was heard, all thinges were sodenly chaunged agayne into another shape and likenes: for when they loked rounde about them like mẽ awakened out of theyr slepe, they sawe not one iote of al that euer they sawe before, saue alonely Jesus, whoe was present with them agayn, hauyng the selfe same shape that he was wont to haue. He shewed them his greatnes onely throughe a cloude, and they were not able to beholde it. What woulde they haue done, if he had shewed thẽ his very highnes and maiestie, euen as it is in dede? Therfore Jesus ekstones humbled him selfe to theyr lownes, and forsakyng the toppe of the mountayne, came downe to the rest of his disciples, and the multitude. Here remembre thou that art a preacher of the gospell, how muche more it becommeth the to humble and abase thy selfe to the capacitie of the weake, the whiche was once like weake as they be: and if thou haue any high or excellent qualitie in the, the same is Christes, and none of thyne.

The texte. ¶ And as they came doune from the hyl, he charged them that they shoulde tel no mã those thynges that they had sene, tyll the sonne of man were risen from death again. And they kept that saying with them, and demaũded one of another, what the risyng from death agayne, should meane. And they asked him saying: why thẽ say the Scribes that Helias must first cum? He answered, and sayd vnto thẽ. Helias verely whẽ he

he cõmeth fyrst, restoreth al thynges, And the son of man (as it is written of him) shal suffre many thynges, and be set at nought. But I say vnto you, that Helias is cum, & they haue done vnto him, whatsoeuer they would, as it was written of him.

As they were cumming doune from the hyll, or ere they camme to the multitude, the Lorde Jesus forbad those three to tell any bodye what they had sene, tyll after the tyme that the sonne of man were risen agayne from the dead. Other heretofore when they were likewyse commaunded to holde And they kept that saying with the their peace, did so muche the more blase abrode those thynges, whiche they wer charged not to disclose. But these .iii. because they heard the fathers voyce saying: heare him. &c. did as they were commaunded, kepe secrete what they had sene, insomuche that they disclosed it not to the residue of the Apostles before the time appoynted. They wyst not what the matter ment: but yet they supposed there was summe earnest cause, why Jesus woulde not haue it published vnto the people before his resurrection were knowen. For what other good shoulde they haue done by telling it abrode but made them selues a laughyng stocke vnto the faythles. Who woulde haue beleued it to haue bene matter in dede, ỹ Jesu had appeared in suche wyse, sith men should se him sone after put to so muche shame and villany, and in conclusion suffre death vpon the crosse. But the disciples (who durst not after they had once heard the fathers voice, distrust the wordes of Jesu) not vnderstandyng what he meante by these wordes ensuyng: When the sonne of manne shall rise from death. &c. fell to reasonyng the matter among them selues, and supposed verely that incontynent after his resurrection, the glory of that kyngdome should begynne, wherof they had now taken a say: howbeit there was a certayne scruple or doubt which made muche agaynst them, and that was, because his death was at hand, the whiche he had ofte tymes warned them of before, promisyng he would reliue on the thyrd day after the same. But they had learned of the prophecy of Malachy, how Hely should cum before the great day of the Lord. And demaunded one of another.
And because they could not assoyle this doubte among them selues, they moued the question to Jesus: Lorde say they, thou hast performed thy promise: We haue seene the bryghtnes of the kyngdome of God. Therfore we beleue that after thy resurrection, thou wilte cum in semblable likenes, and such a one as thou diddest whylere appeare vnto our sight. But what is the cause that the Scribes, takyng their authoritie of the prophecy of Malachy, do saye, that the same day shall not cum, vnlesse Hely the Thesbite cum before, to make the people in a readynes agaynst the commyng thereof, lest the Lorde smyte all men with curlyng. Certes Hely, whom we saw with the in the mountayne, is not yet cum. Neyther is there as yet any thyng done by him. Therefore, eyther the kyngdom of God shall not cum by and by after thy resurrection: or els there is another sence and meaning of the prophecy, then the Scribes do teache. Unto this question of the disciples, the Lorde Jesus made a doubtfull answere, for that they were not as yet receyuable of the whole mystery hereof. And they asked him saying.
He answered and said vnto them:
For abhorryng those thynges whiche pertayned a great deale more vnto their saluation, they dreamed onely vpon the glorye of that kyngdome, whereof they had taken a tast: perceyuing not how this is also ỹ kyngdō of God, whē ỹ holy ghost (ỹ gospel beig spread abrod & euery wher preached), subdueth all the puissaunce, both of this worlde, and also of oure ghostly enemy the deuell. That kingdome began to appeare, what tyme the lame walked, the blynd sawe, the dumme spake, the lepers were clensed, and the deuils cast out. Nowe whan this kingdome shoulde cum, whereof they had a litle before taken a tast, the Lorde woulde not haue them to knowe: yet to thentent they should more pacientlye take his death, whom they loued out of measure, he suffred them to dreame for a whyle, that the bryghtnes of the same kyngdome should shortly come, whereof there was a saye geuē in the mountayne. Therfore he tempreth his answere so discretely, that he approueth the prophecy, and yet doth not altogether condempne the interpretacion of the Scribes, but only reproueth theyr vngodly argumentacion, wherby they conclude that the kyngdome of God was not yet cum, because that same Hely, whiche was promised longe agoo of the Prophet Malachy, had not as then appeared in the worlde. For nowe the spirituall kyngdome of God (whiche thing the proud Scribes and Pharisays vnderstode not) began to cum. Now was Hely after the mystical vnderstandyng, alredy cum. Therfore Iesus sayde: bothe that whiche Malachy prophecied of Hely, and also that whiche the Prophetes spake before of the sonne of manne, shall cum doubtles. You reade of Hely howe he shall cum before the great, and dreadfull daye of the Lord, to turne the heartes of the fathers to theyr chyldren, and the heartes of the chyldren to theyr fathers, to the intent that the yonger sorte and posteritie, may perceyue howe that is already cum and performed, whiche theyr forefathers and elders awayted for. Therefore this Hely goyng before, restoreth all thinges, and amendeth whatsoeuer is not right, least the Lorde come to the great mischief and vengeaunce of all men, if he fynde them vnprepared. But like as the prophecy of Malachy speakyng of Hely the forecurrour is true: euen so are the prophecies of other Prophetes like true, whiche fore tell howe it shall cumme to passe, that the sonne of manne or euer he shewe his maiestie, shall suffre many thinges, shalbe set at naught, be mocked, and in conclucion put to death. Yea, to saye the truth, whatsoeuer was prophecied of Hely to cum, is already accomplyshed, and fulfylled: the whiche thing beyng as yet vnknowen vnto the Scribes & Pharisays, I disclose vnto you my deare kyndes. For Hely is all ready cum, whoe shewed howe the kyngdome of God was present, and moued all menne to be repentaunt for theyr former lyfe. And yet, this notwithstanding, they whiche boast and crake vpon the perfite knowledge of the prophecy, knewe him not: And they whiche loued better theyr owne kyngdome, then the kyngdome of God, delt by him, not as he deserued, but as them lyked. For he cam according to the prophecies of Esay, and Malachy, crieng in wildernesse howe the great and terrible daye of the Lorde was present, howe the axe was alredy put to the rote of the tre, and that euery man shoulde spedely endeuour him selfe to auoyde the vengeaunce of God cumming. But this Hely (whoe openly without regarde of person, rebuked euery mannes vices) they dispised, and put to death. Neyther wyll they more gently entreat Messias, then they haue done his forecurroure.

Hely verely when he cōmeth fyrst, restoreth &c.

And the sōne of man as it is written of hym.

But I saye vnto you that Helias is come.

Hereby Iesꝰ declared how John was Hely, not after ẏ body, but after ẏ similytude of spirite: who, whiles he neyther spared kinges, ne pharisees, was cast in to prison, & beheaded. As they did by ỹ forewalker, so wil they doe by his Lorde: The same thing will they likewise doe by those apostles, that shal folow him. For whosoeuer hath sincerely preached that goddes kingdome should cum, the same hath suffred many afflictions of the vngodly. And whoso syncerely preacheth that it is alreadye cum, must nedes suffre the like. With these wordes Jesus called backe his disciples frō ỹ dreame of glorye, to the remembraunce of the stormе that was to come, and hanged ouer theyr heades, that is to say, frō pleasaunte thynges to necessarie.

The texte. ¶ And when he came to his disciples, he sawe muche people aboute them, and the Scribes disputing with them. And straightway, al the people (when they beheld him) wer amased, and ranne to him, and saluted him. And he asked the Scribes, what dispute ye among them? And one of the company answered, and sayed: O master I haue brought vnto the my sonne, which hath a dumme spirit, and whensoeuer he taketh hym, he teareth him, and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teethe, & pyneth away: And I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out, and they coulde not.

In the meane while that they had thus commoned together, they were cum into the sight of the people, at what season a great multitude wer gathered about the disciples, whom Jesus left beneath in the playne. He sawe also the scribes reasoning the matier, I wot not where vpon, with his disciples. Nowe when the people had espied Jesus vnloked for on theyr behalfe, forasmuch as he had priuilye conueyed himselfe awaye with a fewe of his disciples, they were astonyed, and met hym cūmyng ful, and whole, and saluted him.

And he asked ỹ scribes.&c. Jesus was not ignorant what the scribes disputed on, but yet he asked what the matier was wherevpon they reasoned, to thentent that euery body might knowe what was done. And when both the disciples, and the scribes held their peace for very shame, the disciples for that they assayd to cast out a dyuell, and coulde not bryng it to passe, and the other because that in the presence of the dysciples they depraued the name of Jesu, as a thing vertuelesse, and of no efficacie: one of that multitude who ministred thoccasion of ỹ reasoning, shewed the whole matier euen as it was, vnto Jesu: Master, saith he, I brought hither my sonne vnto the, who is vexed wt a dūme spirit, of whom he is pitiefully tourmēted. For whensoeuer the spirit taketh him, he dasheth him agaynst the groūde, and then the child foameth at the mouth, gnasheth with his teethe, and cryeth oute, and all this whyle he pyneth and consumeth away, by reason he is thus vexed. Because thou wast not here, I desired thy disciples that they would chase away this spirite, and delyuer my sonne. They assayed to do it, and coulde not.

The texte. He answereth him, & sayth: O faithlesse nacion, how long shal I be with you? how long shal I suffre you? Bring him vnto me. And they brought him vnto him. And assoone as the spirite sawe him, he tare hym, & he fel downe on the ground walowing and foming. And he asketh his father, how long it is ago sins this happed him. And he said: of a childe, and oftetymes it hath caste him into the fire, and into the water, to destroy him. But if thou canst do any thing, haue mercy vpon vs, & helpe vs. Jesus saied vnto him: yf thou couldest beleue, al thynges are possible to him that beleueth. And straight waye the father of the childe cried with teares sayinge: Lorde I beleue, helpe thou my vnbelefe.

When the lord heard this, to shewe, that feblenesse of fayth was the heye cause why the ponge man was not delyuered of the spirite, he makyng as though he had bene wrothe and in a fume, sayed: Oh faythlesse nacion which yet canst not by so many miracles as I haue done, be brought to beleke. How long shall I tarye here in earth, striue with youre vnfaythfull obstaclenesse, howe long shall I beare with you, when will you come forwarde in those thynges that be of the spirite: when will you beleue those thynges that you see not, syth you beleue not the thinges which you see vp your corporall eyes, bryng him hyther to me. And they brought him vnto him. That sinne cleaueth faste, whereunto the sinner hath from the childehode accustomed. But after he was brought vnto Jesus he was worse vexed then he was before, by reason of the conflicte whiche arose betwene the spirite desirous to amende, and sensualitie tollyng and allurynge hym agayne, to his accustomed synfull lyuyng. For anon as the fiende saw Jesus, he feelyng a contrarye power to his, toke the yong manne, and sore vexed hym, insomuche that beyng dashed agaynste the grounde, and tolled to and fro, he fomed at the mouth. This was a pietifull syght to al the people. But it is a muche more pitifull syght, when the synner possessed with greuous sinnes, and of long continuaunce, is likewise vexed in soule. Howbeit there is no synne vncurable vnto Jesu.

And he asketh ꝑ father how long. &c.

The Lorde because the other should also knowe in howe euyll case he was, asked his father howe long it was, since his sonne fyrste began to be thus vexed: he aunswered agayn, of an infant. And the spirite doth not only, sayeth he, thus vexe hym as thou seest, but also casteth hym otttymes headlong into the fyre, & many times into ꝑ water, because to destroy hym. Here ꝑ hearest a very sore & cruel malady tourned into nature: & therfore the father feared least it had bene vncurable. For he sayed moreouer: But yf thou be able to doe any thyng, haue mercy on vs, and helpe vs. He dyd well to desire ꝑ mercy of Jesu, who could alleage no merites: howbeit thou hearest a wauering fayth, when he sayeth: But yf thou be able to doe any thyng. &c. That fayth Jesus refourmeth, saying: Doubte thou not what I am able to doe. For if thou couldest beleue, there is nothing but strong & stedfast fayth may obteyne it. Assone as Jesu had sayd so, ꝑ father had better hope and comfort the he had before, & declaring the greate desyre of his mynde with teares, and weepyng, sayed: I beleue lorde: and yf my beliefe be vnperfite, healpe thou my weakenesse.

But if thou canst do anye thing. &c.

Jesus sayde vnto him. &c.

The texte.

¶ When Jesus saw that the people came runnyng together vnto him, he rebuked the foule spirit, saying vnto hym: Thou dume, and deafe spirite, I charge the cum out of him, & entre nomore into him. And the spirite (whē he had cryed, and rent him sore) came out of hym, & he was as one that had bene dead, insomuch that many sayd, he is deade. But Jesus caught his hande, and lyft him vp, & he rose. And when he was cum into the house, his disciples asked him secretly: why coulde not we caste him out? And he sayd vnto them: this kynde can cum forth by nothyng, but by prayer, and fastyng.

In the meane season, the people came runnyng together on euery syde, to se this syght. When Jesus sawe they wer cum (for his wyll was to haue them all to be witnesses of the myracle) then put he furthe that almyghtye voyce, wherwith he calleth to lyfe agayne when it pleaseth hym, euen the dead. He threatened the foule spirite to handle hym accordyngly, vnlesse he woulde incontinent departe, saying: Thou deafe and dumme spirite, I charge the to get the out of the man, and that thou neuer from hencefoorth enter into hym agayne.

Jesus is in a fume with the spirite, because he maye shewe mercye vpon the man:

the man: geuing vs a lesson what we ought to doe in healyng of synners. A man must so rebuke vice, that he maye seme to loue the soule health of the person. And because we should knowe that man laboureth and speaketh in vayne, vnlesse Jesus speake with him by his secrete vertue and power, the disciples commaunded the spirite to go out, but all was in vayne, because Jesus was awaye. He is away so oft as our fayth is cold, and waueryng, by the which fayth, his wyl is that we obtayne all thynges. What was done at the emperious voyce of Jesu? By and by the spirite wente oute. But to thentent it should appeare that he went out agaynst his wil, he cryed, and vexed the sely wretche very sore at his departure. For nowe laye he vpon the grounde for deade, insomuche that many sayed he was deade in dede. Thou seest here a figure of a penitent person, and hym who turneth frō great, and accustomed synnes, to amendement. Nowe hath the hatred of synne, delyuered hym from synne: howbeit he is at the nexte doore to desperacion, who so both knowleageth his own filthinesse, and also hath goddes iustice, in remembraunce. But yet lyeth he happily deade that is dead to synne. For then remayneth there nothing elles, but that he begyn to lyue agayne to righteousenesse. And this benefyte geueth also our most bounteous sauiour Jesus, withoute whome there is no saftie. He caughte the felowe by the hande, and lifted hym vp as he laye in this traunce, and furthwith the same, whoe before seemed deade, recouered his former strengthe: and throughe the benefite of Christ, rose vp strong, and lustie. But vnlesse Jesu had nowe geuen him newe grace to leade a godly lyfe, it had bene to no purpose that he was delyuered from the dyuell at the contemplacion of his fathers fayth. Nowe heareth this deafe manne, whiche before had his eares stopped with worldlye lustes agaynst the doctrine and worde of the gospell. Nowe speaketh this dumme felowe, who before was tongue tyed and spacheleſſe, by reason of the passions, and wylfull pangues of the flesshe. Now is the same at reste and quyet, who before styred with the furious rages, sumtime of sensualitie, and pleasure of the body, sumtime of ambicion, and desyre of worldly aduauncement, other whiles of wrathe, nowe of enuye, nowe and then of couetousenesse, was as it had bene rauyshed and caryed by the constraynte of some vncleane and violent spirite. All these thynges sawe the Apostles, and sayed nere a word, for that they durst not interupt the lorde. The Scribes also held theyr peace, being now assured by the thing selfe how it was not by reason the name of Jesu was vneffectuall and vertuleſſe ỹ this felowe was no sooner ryd of the spirite, but for the weaknesse of fayth. And as it chaūced vnto this yong mā bodely, so chaunced it to ỹ Phariseis spiritually. Thei wer not healed of their sinnes because they beleued not ỹ word, by thonly vertue wherof, thei might haue ben healed. But whē Jesus was cū into ỹ house, ỹ disciples now beyng wᵗ hym alone, asked hym what was the cause why they could not cast out the dyuyll, sythe they had afore cast out so many in his name. For they wer disquieted in minde, with a certayne humayne carefulnesse, least they had vnware offended the Lorde, and by that meanes loste the power, whiche he once gaue them to worke myracles.

And the spirite when he had cried.

But Jesus caughte hys hande. &c.

Jesus, who is not wonte to take awaye agayne, what he hath once geuē, but to but to encrease the same (yet wyll not he haue his gyftes negligently kept, and after a recheleſſe ſorte: and now hath he ſufficiently declared, in the father of hym that was healed, how weakneſſe of fayth was the onely impedyment, why the dyuell went not forthe, the whiche fayth was not as yet ſo strong in the disciples, as it ought of congruence to haue bene) Jesus, I saye, aunſwered, that there was a certayne ſpeciall kynde of dyuels, whiche coulde not otherwyſe be expelled, then by prayer, and faſtyng. For these be the two engynes which are of mooſte force agaynſt wicked ſpirites. For by prayer, the ſtrength of fayth is renued, and quyckned, as it chaunced vnto the yonge mannes father, who sayed: Lorde helpe my vnbelefe: And by faſtyng, bycauſe it contayneth a certayne forbearyng of al carnal pleaſures,

And he sayed vnto them. &c. the rebellion of the fleſhe is ſubdued. He muſte haue a cleane ſpirite himſelf, whoſo goeth aboute to caſte out vncleane ſpirites of other. Jeſus and the thre disciples wer newly retourned from prayer. The reſt of them kept cõpaygnie with the multitude, and dyd neyther faſte, ne praye, and for that cauſe were not able ynough, to caſte out a dyuell which had ſo faſte holde, and was ſo familiar. The more the truſt of our ſelues encreaſeth in vs, the more the power to worke miracles decreaſeth: The more the power of the fleſhe is mortified in vs, the ſtrõger is the holy ghoſt by whoſe onely power foule ſpirites are expelled. We muſte therfore oftetymes praye that ỹ ſtrength of fayth may in vs be encreaſed: we muſt alſo mortifie our fleſh continually, to thentent that the ſpirite of Jeſu Chriſt may liue in vs. To be ſhorte, Chriſt doeth nowe prepare his diſciples agaynſt that houre when they ſhall be commaunded to watche, and praye, leaſt they fall into temptacion. But becauſe they toke a nappe after ſupper, the weake fleſhe had the vpper hande.

The texte. ¶ And they departed thence, and toke theyr iourney thorow Galile, and he would not that any man ſhould knowe it. For he taught his diſciples, and ſayed vnto them: ỹ ſonne of man ſhalbe deliuered into the handes of men, and they ſhal kyll hym, and after that he is kylled, he ſhal aryſe agayne the thyrde daye. But they wyſt not what he ſayd, & were afrayde to aſke hym. And he came to Capernaum. And whẽ he was cum into the houſe, he aſked them what was it that ye diſputed among youre ſelues by the waye: And they helde theyr peace. For by the waye they had reaſoned amonges them ſelues, who ſhould be the chiefeſt. And whẽ he was ſet downe, he called the twelue to hym, & ſayd vnto them: yf any man deſyre to be fyrſte, the ſame ſhalbe laſte of all, and ſeruaunt to al. And he toke a chylde, and ſet hym in the middes of them. And when he had taken hym in his armes, he ſayed vnto them: whoſoeuer receyueth anye ſuche childe in my name, receyueth me. And whoſoeuer receyueth me, receyueth not me but hym that ſent me.

These thinges done in maner before rehearſed, Jeſus beyng accompanied wt his diſciples begã to take his iourney to Jewryward, who pryuely, & as it wer by ſtealth, paſſed through the countreye of Galile, not becauſe he feared death (whiche in dede he moſte feruently deſyred) but leaſt he ſhould haue ſemed to prouoke the prieſtes, & Phariſeis to conſpyre hys death before the tyme appoynted.

For he taught his diſciples. &c. This outwarde appearaunce of feare ſhewed he becauſe he would cleane delyuer his diſciples from all feare, and alſo declare the weakeneſſe and frayltie of the nature which he had taken vpon hym. As he wente by the waye, he repeted vnto them the ſame thyng, which they had dyuerſe tymes hearde him ſpeake of before. For he ſayed as foloweth: That muſte

nedes cum to passe,whyche I haue so oft tymes told you:the sonne of man shalbe delyuered into the handes of menne to be taken,condempned, mocked, scourged,and slaine. You muste make your selues readye in mynde agaynst the cummyng of these thinges,whiche vndoubtedly be at hande. But it is vnpossible for any of you so to doe, vnlesse the same be free from al worldly affections, & be also stablysshed with the strength of the spirite. I know that the mingyng of death troubleth you very sore. But you must be of good comforte,and take mennes hartes vnto you. I wyll not long forsake you. For I wyll be alyue agayne on the thyrde daye. The disciples were so dull,and feble wytted,that they vnderstode not these wordes (notwithstanding they were playnly spoke) supposyng there had be sum darke mysterie in them,because it came to theyr remembraunce,how thei had ben sumtymes before deceyued with suche figuratiue manour of speakynges, as when they were commaunded to be ware of the Phariseis leuen. Neyther could they yet conceyue in mynde the mystery of the crosse,nor gesse for what purpose he would be slayne,yf he would soone after his death relyue agayne,syth that he who canne relyue when hym luste, can also yf it please hym,not dye at all. But thei wist not what he sayed.

Therfore albeit they were greatlye offended with these woordes, yet durste they not aske hym any question,feared wt thensample of Peter,who to his displeasure,questioned with the lord herein. For they heard Christ say vnto hym: Go after me Satan. They yet sauoured of the world: for goddes determinacion was to be reconciled to mankynde,pardoned of all his offences thorow fayth,by ỹ sacrifice of an vnspotted lambe. The disciples dreamed vpon a certayne worldly kyngdom,and therfore as they trauayled by the waye, they fell a reasoning among theim selues, who shoulde haue the preeminence,and vpper hande in the kyngdome of god, whiche they hoped should very shortly begyn. They sawe a lytle before, howe the three disciples were preferred afore the reste in goynge vp to the Mountayne: they sawe howe Peter had the preeminence when the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen were delyuered,and yet sum of theim were his auncientes, yea and besides that kynne vnto the Lorde. And were afrayd to aske hym.&c.

When they were come to Capernaum,the Lorde asked them aparte what was the matter whereupon they reasoned secretlye betwene theimselues,as they went by the waye. But they holdyng their peace, and ashamed to make him an aunswere (for they knew well that he beyng the authour of all modestie and hũblenesse of mynde,woulde disalowe this their ambicyousnesse): Jesus because he woulde cleane wede oute of theyr myndes, this moost dampnable and naughty affection, sate him downe as one that woulde teache sum earneste mattier with authoritie, and commaunded them all twelue to come vnto hym,and then sayed: If any of you desyre to be ỹ fyrst or chief man in the kyngdom of heauen, the same shal be laste, and seruaunte to al: so far wyde is it, that ỹ kyngdom of heauen ought to be estemed after this worldly kingdom. And anon,because he would the deper faston this doctrine in theyr myndes, he called vnto him a lytle child, & sette hym in the myddes of them. And when he had embraced him, signifying therby howe muche he defyed proude persons, and lauded suche as are humble and meke in spirite,then sayd he vnto them: Do you see this lytle And he came to Capernaum.&c.

babe: what is more abiect, and vile, after the estimacion of the worlde: yet they ꝑ are suche in humblenesse of minde, simplicitie, & godlyliuing, as this is in age, those do I set moost store by. For reason wil that I loue thē best, which be likest vnto my self. This prerogatiue is not estemed by riches, reuenues, power, statelynesse, & violence. For such as haue these thynges, as they moste resemble heathen prynces, euen so are they highlyest estemed of thesame. Lyke as earthly kinges beleue that they are eyther honoured, or dishonored in theyr great estates: so in this Euāgelike kyngdōe I thynke my selfe to be eyther honoured or dishonoured in suche lytle babes, whome the world setteth naught by, because of their innocencie, simplicitie, and hūblenesse of minde. If you know any to be more humble and low then I am, hym counte ye for the chiefe manne in the kyngdome of heauen. But yf ye fynde none, then take you me for the verye soueraygne: And as euery man moste resembleth me in contemnyng of those thynges, which great men sue for in prynces courtes, so iudge you him to be the moost soueraygne persō.

Whosoeuer receiueth any such chylde.

Therfore who so receiueth one of such litle babes, in my name, the same receiueth me. For it reioyseth me to be receyued in these: whome I loue as thē that are lyke me. Agayne, whoso receyueth me beyng lowest of al men, after ꝑ estimacion of ꝑ world, receyueth not me, but hym that sent me. For as the mayster is honoured or dishonoured, in the scholers: so is the father lykewyse dishonoured or honoured, in the sonne.

By these wordes, Iesu toke not awaye authoritie from suche as be prelates, and haue the charge or ouerlyghte of the Lordes flocke, but plucked out of the disciples myndes, all desyre of worldly auauncemente. For the lowenesse of this sorte of lytle ones, is not estemed after the quantitie and strength of the bodie, but after the humblenesse of suche a mynde, as claymeth nothyng in this worlde that is highe, nor trusteth anye whit to hys owne strength, but wyth syncere fayth hangeth vpon Christe.

The texte. ¶ Iohn aunswered hym, sayyng: Mayster, we sawe one cast out diuels in thy name and he followeth not vs, and we forbad hym because he followeth vs not. But Iesus sayed: forbyd hym not. For there is no man whiche (yf he doe a myracle in my name) can lyghtly speake euyl of me: for he that is not against vs, is on our part. Whosoeuer shall in my name geue you a cuppe of water to drynke, because ye belong to Christ, verely I say vnto you, he shal not leese his rewarde.

By occasion of these wordes, there arose an other doubt among the disciples, the which Iohn propouned in this wise: Mayster (q he) when thou sentest vs oute to preache the kyngdome of god, we sawe a certayne felowe caste out dyuels in thy name, and yet was the same neyther of the numbre of the twelue, nor of the seuentie, whome thou dyddest afterwarde chose, & send oute, nor none of all the disciples, which folow vs. Wherfore hym, as one of another secte, and none of thy felowshyp, we forbad: but whether we dyd well or no, we wot not. Iesus answered: Forbyd ye none suche as are in any wyse good to spreade abrode, and preache the gospell. For you must not be disdaynfull in receyuyng of those, whiche go aboute, by what endeuoure soeuer it be, to auaunce the worde of god. You must not cōsidre whether he folowe me as a disciple, but whether he preach my name. If he cast oute dyuels by calling vpon my name, he cannot lightely speake euell of me. And yf he so doe, then will the thing it selfe reproue him. For it shall be said vnto him: howe dareste thou for very shame backbyte that man, which thou hast proued mightie, and effectual in worcking of miracles? Therfore do ye not vpō light occasiō suppose him to worde for a naughtie purpose, who so doeth a godly dede. He that resisteth not the gospell, in this poynte furthereth it, because he aydeth not the, which take part agaynst the same. Whosoeuer is not agaynst you, maketh for you. This new doctryne must be set forth when soeuer occasion serueth: but with what sincerite of mind it be promoted, it is no mattier to you, so that the preacher doe by any manour of meanes further the busynesse whiche you goe about. For not only they shall be rewarded for furthering of the gospell whiche shall caste out diuels in my name, but they also who according to theyr abylytie, wyll put theyr helpyng handes neuer so litle to the aduaunceyng therof. For who so wyl geue you euen but a cuppe of cold water in my name, that is to say, in respect that ye are my disciples, and do my businesse, be you right well assured, the same shall not lacke his rewarde.

Whosoeuer shall in my name giue you a cuppe, &c.

¶ And whosoeuer shal offend one of these litle ones that beleue in me, it were better for him if a mylstone were hanged about his necke, and he were caste into the sea. Wherefore if thy hand hinder the, cut it of. It is better for the to entre into lyfe, maymed, then (hauing two handes) to go into helle, into fyre that neuer shal be quenched, where theyr wormе dyeth not, and the fyre goeth not out. And if thy foote be a hyndraunce to the, cutte it of. It is better for the to go halte in to lyfe, then (hauing two fete) to be cast into helle, into fire that neuer shal be quenched, where theyr wormе dieth not, and the fyre goeth not out. And yf thyne eye hinder the, plucke it out. It is better for the to go into the kingdom of God with one eye, then (hauing two eyes) to be caste into helle fyre, where their wormе dyeth not, and the fyre goeth not out.

The texte.

Agayne if any shal chaūce to let them, by whom the gospel is aduaunced (truly it is aduaunced not by those whome the world counteth great, but by litle ones, simple persōs, vnderlinges, & mē of no reputacion) if any, I say, offend any of these litle ones who haue reposed theyr affiaūce in me, so true is it that he shall not auoyd punishment, that he should be much easlier punished, if there wer a mylstone tyed vnto his necke, and he cast into the sea. The princes of this world cruelly punishe suche, as let thē yr deputies to put those thynges in execution, whiche they haue commaūded to be done. They hange them on a gebet, and also many tymes quarter them, or caste them downe headlyng from some high rocke, or els drowne them in the sea with a stone tyed vnto them, for continuyng vp agayne, so true is it that they wyl not haue theyr greatmenne offended, whome they vse as ministres of their tyrannie, that is to saye, to oppresse the people. But God wyll muche greuously punishe suche as wyll let his litle ones (whom he wolde to haue the handelyng of the affayres of the heauenly kyngdome for all mens saluation) that they can not put theyr kynges commaundementes in execution. For albeit they shall seeme for a tyme so to doe vnpunished: yette at the lengthe shall they not escape the punishment of helle. The tyrantes of this worlde couldenuent no kynde of deathe comparable to that punishement, wherby bothe body and soule shall seme to dye with continual tormentes, and yet neuer can dye. Therfore studye you not howe to be reuenged. Doe your businesse, and God shall punishe those that wyl let you.

Wherfore yf thy hād hinder the, &c.

Note if there arise any lette and impediment, not of any persecutoure, but of them behalfe, whithe appeare to be your frendes, there ought no thyng to be so deare vnto you, þ the loue therof maye cause you to leaue of the mynistracion of the gospell. Admitte it be thy right hande, that is to saye, thy father, or very neere frend, whome thou canst not spare: put case it be thy ryght eye, that is to wete, thy welbeloued wife, and swete children: Admitte it be thy foote, that is to saye, thy seruaunt, or factour, whose seruice thou canst not lacke for the ploypture of suche affaires, as thou hast to doe in this worlde: Cut of thy hand, plucke out thyne eye, chop of thy foote that hyndreth the to doe the busynesse of the gospell. If thou canste bryng with the to the euangelike saluation thy father, thy mother, thy brethren, and thy systers, doe it. But yf the tender affection thou bearest towardes them, withdrawe the from the mynistracion of the gospell: and agayne if it shoulde so cum to passe that whiles they refuse to be saued by the, thou shouldest also perishe, and be dampned with them, then cast awaye naturall affection, and let the charitie of the gospell ouercomme the charitie of manne: doe the same thing in perill of thy sowle, ẏ thou wouldest doe in the ieoperdye of thy bodie. If thou were at such an exigent, that thou shouldest eyther be slayne, or els thy life be saued with the losse of thy hande, thou wouldest not sticke in this case, to choppe of thy hand, and so with the losse of one membre, were it neuer so necessarye, to redeeme thy lyfe. It were a thing more to be wished to attayne saluation with thy parentes, & frendes by the gospel: but if that can not be brought to passe, then is it much better for the to forsake thy parentes (who doe not onely refuse to be saued themselfes, but also goe about to bryng the to lyke confusion) and so to entre into lyfe euerlasting, as a man would say, mayned then with thy sayd parentes, & frendes to be cast into hell, that is to saye, into fyre which can neuer be quenched. There the worme repentaunce that gnaweth the conscience of ẏ wretched creatures, dieth not. For they liue onely to theyr tourmente and payne. There the fyre wherwith the dampned sowles are tourmẽted, is neuer put out. There shall bothe thy parentes and thou repent, but to late, & in vayne: thou, for that thou folowedest theyr vnlawful affectiõs to thine owne dampnacion; and they because they would not be aduertised by the, when thou exhortedest them to saluation. Neyther shall theyr calamytie helpe ẏ, nor thy torment any thing release or diminisshe theyr payne. Moreouer, the dampnatiõ of the parent that would not be saued, shal not be layed vnto his charge who hastened to doe the busynesse of the gospell.

And if thy foote be an hinderaunce. &c.

Lykewise after this maner cut of thy foote, considering with thy selfe that it is better for the to cumme halt and lame to lyfe euerlastyng, then with whole feete to be throwen into hell, where neyther the fyre canne be quenched, nor the worme dyeth.

There is nothing deare to man then his eye, nothyng more pleasaunte, then wyfe and children.

But if thou be brought to this straye, that eyther thou must nedes for theyr pleasure forsake the gospell, and be dampned with them: or els forsake them, then whome (as touching worldly affection) there is nothyng more deare vnto the: in this case sticke not to plucke out thyne eye, and caste it awaye: reckening it to be muche better for the, to enter with one eye into the kyngdome of heauen, where there is lyfe eternal, then to haue both thyne eyes whole, and with them to be throwen into the fyre of hell. Lette not here the wepyng, and waylyng of thy wyfe, nor the swete wordes of thy children, thy chyldren,any whit moue the. They are fooles to wepe because they are forsaken.sith they myght haue followed the if they had would. All worldly affections must be set aside, when goddes commaundement compelleth it so to be. All losses of corporall thinges ought to be coũted for gaynes,when so euer euerlasting life is to be purchased. It is no delicate and pleasaunt thing to professe my name. Persecutions,and worldlye afflictions shal arise on euery syde,which may withdrawe you from your purpose.But such as take in hand the ministracion of the gospell, muste vanquisshe all these thinges.He that wil be a mete ministre or preacher of the euãgelike doctrine, must wholely yelde him selfe to the wyll of God, to thentent he maye in no wyse, neyther for feare of persecution, nor by reason he is corrupted with any enticementes of fleshely appetites, swarue frõ the pure veritie of gods worde,and the gospell.

The texte. Euery man shall be salted with fyre, and euery sacrifice shall be seasoned with salte.Salte is good,but if the salte be vnsauery,what shal ye season therwith? Haue salte in your selues,and haue peace among your selues,one with an other.

For as no sacrifice after the lawe of Moyses is lawfull,saue alonelye that whiche is salted eyther with fyre or salte,or els with both:euen so who so euer wyll professe the philosophie and doctryne of the gospell, muste nedes be pourged with fyre from all worldly affections, and be also poudred with salte,that he may in no wyse be corrupted with the infection or contagiousnesse of yuell menne. Worldly wysdõe is vertulesse, and vnsauoury, and neyther preserueth him that hath it from worldlye corruption, nor yet is of force to preserue other. Nowe must the teacher of the gospel, doe both: that is to saye,bothe fynde the meanes that he be without corruption hym selfe,and also take awaye the same from other. This cannot neither be done by the phylosophiers wisdome, nor by the pharisees doctryne, but only by the vertue of ỹ euãgelike philosophie:whiche with the tartnesse of truth byteth awaye,and consumeth what thyng so euer is in man in daũgre of corruption.The same thyng dothe also that fyre of the spirite of God, whiche likewise consumeth al carnall affections,and purgeth mennes sowles therof,yea,and in maner transformeth into God, what thing so euer it hathe once caught, in so muche that they whoe were before tyme entangled with the cares of worldlye vanities,are nowe(the same vtterlye contẽned)all together rauished wt the loue,and desyre of heauẽlie thynges.Who so is seasoned with this salte,canne by no manoure of enticementes be corrupted, and fall from the puritie of the spirite of the gospell. He that is pourged with this fyre,wyll dispyse whatsoeuer the persecutoure can threaten him withall.

Salte is good but if.&c. There is nothyng better then fyre yf a man vse it a right:nothyng more profitable then salte.But yf the fyre be colde,if the salt be made vnsauery, & vertulesse, what then remayneth to season the vnsauerie,& simple people with all? If they that professe the spirite of ỹ gospel,frayed with the threateninges of menne,doe forsake theyr professiõ,and for feare of displeasure, feede & vphold with theyr flattery,the follye of princes, whome theyr dutie had ben boldly to rebuke,what hope then remayneth? If suche as professe the salte of the gospell, doe not only not heale the corrupte affections of other vñ the tartenesse of truthe, but also fall them selfes, for theyr parentes and frendes pleasures, & because to obtayne earthlie vanities, frō the hope of the kingdome of heauen, and winne hell, expouning and wresting the doctryne of the gospell (whiche is the greatest offence of all) after thaffections, and lustes of man: What then is there left to season mannes folye vñ all-sithe that bothe they who ought to haue bene the seasoners are them selfes corrupted, and the thyng is also attaynted, whiche only was lefte in the world to bryng it at one tyme or an other to amendment.

Haue ye salt in your selfes.

Therfore to thentent you maye bothe ouercom cruell persecucions, and also contemne all worldly affections for the gospels sake: and to thentent also you maye bothe prouide for your owne sowle healthe, and bryng as many as may be to saluacion, lette eche of you haue in him the salte of the gospell. Lette there be peace, and mutuall amytie among you. Salte shall make you without corruption: and concord, strong and myghtye. Whereas variaunces do raygne, there is not the salt of the gospell. Where as the vice of ambicion is, there is neyther peace, nor salte. Therfore ỹ philosophers be at contencion and braule one with an other, because they haue not this salte. For this cause also the phariseis can not agree with the saduces, and ỹ Herodians, because they all corrupted with naughtie affections, lack the salte of the gospel.

Your doctryne shall season the folye of the worlde, if the people perceyue nothyng in your affections, that is corrupted & rotten eyther by desyre of glorie, loue of monei, gredinesse of reuengement, feare of death, desyre of lyfe, or, to be shorte, by any other worldlye affection: And if they also perceyue that lyke as your lyfe, & doctrine shal agree, so in semblable wise you wyll agree one with an other. Undoubtedly you shal agree, if you vttrely abandoning all ambicion (wherwith suche persones are attached as desire to rule and playe ỹ lordes in this world) do syncerely preache & teache other, ỹ heauenly doctrine which you haue receyued of me.

The. x. Chapter.

¶ And when he rose from thence, he went into the coastes of Jury, through the region, that is beyond Jordan: and the people resorted vnto hym a freshe, and as he was wont, he taught them agayn. And the pharisees came, and asked him: Is it lawfull for a man to putte away his wyfe? to proue hym. And he answered, and said vnto them: What did Moyses bid you do? they sayd. Moyses suffered to write a testimoniall of diuorcement, and to putte her awaye. And Jesus answered, and said vnto them: for the hardnesse of your harte, he wrote this precepte vnto you: but at the fyrste creation God made them, man and woman. Therfore shal a man leaue his father and mother, and abyde by his wyfe, and they twayne shall be one flesche. So then are they nowe not twayne, but one flesche. Therfore what God hathe coupled together, let not man seperate. And in the howse, his disciples asked hym agayne of the same matter. And he sayeth vnto them: whosoeuer putteth away his wyfe, and marieth an other, breaketh wedlock, to her ward. And if a woman forsake her housband, and be maried to an other, she committeth aduoutrye. The texte.

After the Lorde Jesus had with suche lessons sufficiently prepared ỹ myndes of his disciples against the stormе that was at hand, he departed oute of Galile, and went into that parte of Jewry whiche lyeth beyond Jordan, where as John fyrst taught. Now was Jesus so muche renoumed in all places, that he could nowhere be hid. Therfore anon as he was cũmen, the people came flocking hither in like manour as they were wont to doe in̄ other places. Neyther was he at any tyme wery of doing all men good, of curyng theyr bodies, of enstructing theyr sowles.

There lacked not here the pharisees, euerywhere one manour of menne, & like them selfes. The multitude sought for health, and were desirous to heare his doctryne: but ỹ other desired more to take him in a trip, then to be healed: to proue him, rather thē to learne. And whiles they so did, they colored theyr malicyousnesse with a visure of holynesse, & cloked their disceitfulnesse w̄ a pretensed desire to learne. Oh wisdō vnapte to receyue doctrine. They came to Jesus with bodie, whome they were farre from with mynde. They put forthe vnto him a captious questiō, saying: What is thyne opinion, our Mayster: Is it lefull for the husbande to forsake his wife? This captiouse question deuised they among them selfes, trusting thend woulde be, that answering therunto he should be driuen to graunt eyther one inconuenience, or an other. Before he had pronoūced those blessed, who gelded thē selfes for the kingdom of God. Therfore yf he being a fauourer of chastitie had now giuen sentence that it had bene lefull for a man to cast of his wife because to marye a newe, as the Jewes vsed cōmunely to doe: then shoulde he haue semed to haue taught contrarye doctrines. Agayne yf he had answered that it had bene in no wyse lefull so to doe, then woulde they haue layd agaynst him how he had made the law of none authoritie, which geueth the husbād libertie to put away ỹ wife: The lord because he would take these crafty felowes in their owne craftinesse (for thei prepared a snare for him out of the lawe) asked them agayne: What nede you to aske me this question, synce your selfes do professe the knowleage of the lawe.

And the pharisees came.

And asked him, &c.

And he answered and sayd, &c.

tiers? They answered: Moyses suffered the husband yᵗ there were any thing in the wyfe that offended him, by ꝛ by after a libell of diuorcement geuen vp, to put her awaye, and mary an other, if it pleased him so to doe. The pharisees did so interprete this sufferaunce of the lawe, as thoughe those men did very well, who for euery trifling cause, would be deuorced from their wiues, ꝛ marye agayne, not vnderstãding ỹ mind of ỹ law maker, which they might haue perceyued by ỹ begining of ỹ boke of Genesis.

And Jesꝰ answered and said vnto them. &c.

Jesus therfore sayd vnto them: In that Moyses gaue you this libertie to forsake your wyues, he fauoured not diuorcement, but suffred the husbandes to doe, what carnall desire, and sensualitie moued them vnto, and woulde rather permit the lesse yuell, then open a wicket to more greuouse enormities. He would rather suffre vnlawfull separation, then mãslaughter, poysoning, or detestable murthering of wyues. For he knewe the hardnesse of your hartes: vnto the whiche vice, this thing was geuen as a remeadie, lest greater mischief shoulde haue ensued. But in paradise before the nature of mã was fallen to this wickednesse, matrimont was not so instituted, ỹ diuorce shoulde be made at ỹ sensual wil and pleasure of ỹ husbãd: but for euer to cõtinewe bitwene man and wife, and neuer to be dissolued. For at ỹ first tyme god ioyned one to one, ỹ is to saye, man to womã: bitwene whome he would haue so great loue ꝛ charitie to be, ỹ no separation might chaunce. For this cause, saith he, a man shall leaue his father, ꝛ his mother ꝛ sticke vnto his wyfe, and they bothe shal become one flesh, so that being now cõioyned in bodie and soule, they are no lenger two persons, but one, to thẽtent ther maye be a mutual participacion of weale and woe, betwene them. These wordes playnly declare that god was not pleased with diuorce, els would he dysanull his first ordinaunce. But Moyses permitting diuorce besides the will of God, prouided for a season for the hardnesse of your hartes: supposing aduoutry to be a smaller offence then murtheryng of wiues. If this gentle permissiõ of Moyses do please you, knowe you also the cause compelling him to geue you this libertie. Therfore what god him selfe hath so conioyned at the begynning, that it should alwayes contynewe vndissolued, let not man parte a sunder. Put awaye the hardnesse of your harte, and then shall there be no nede of diuorce: then shall separation of manne, and wyfe, haue no place.

But at the first creation god made them. &c.

And in the house his disciples asked hym agayne. &c.

With suche a sobre, and a discrete answere Jesus defended goddes commaundement, and yet neyther condemned Moyses, nor minished the prayse of chastitie, nor finallye brought him selfe in daunger to be taken in the pharisies snare, but rather snarled them wᵗ theyr owne grynne, who came purposely to entrap him. But after he, and his apostles were cumme into the house, ꝛ they being wᵗ him alone had asked his opinion herein, then did he more plainly cõdempne diuorcement. Who so euer, saith he, putteth awaye his wife, and maryeth an other, committeth aduoutrye to herward. Agayne if the wyfe forsake the husband, and marye an other, she committeth aduoutry to her former husbandward. For it is not mete for christen men to be so hard harted, that they neyther can awaye with theyr wiues condicions, nor wyll by fayre meanes correct them when they doe amysse, but for euery trysling cause cõceiue displeasure against them, ꝛ ymagine theyr death, except they departe, ꝛ yet them awaye. This is a Jewishe mind, whiche my disciples

The Jew putteth away his wife for stenche of breth, for bleames of the eyes, or for any such like fautes, whereas among christē men, there is but one cause onely, whiche dissolueth wedlocke, and that is, the breache of the fayth, and promise of matrimony. For that wife whiche hath letten an other manne haue the vse of her body, is nowe no longer a wyfe, although she be not yet diuorced: and that husbande whiche hath letten an other woman haue the vse of his body, is nowe before any seperacion be made, nomore an husbande. As fire is not fyre vnlesse it be hotte, so wedlocke is not wedlocke it excepte that of two be made one. There cannot be one flesche made of three, or fower.

¶ And they brought chyldren vnto him, that he should touche them. And his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus sawe it, he was displeased, & sayd vnto thē: suffre the chyldren to cum vnto me, forbid them not, for of suche is the kyngdome of God. Verely I say vnto you, whosoeuer doeth not receyue the kyngdōe of god as a chylde, he shal not entre therin. And when he had taken them vp in his armes, he put his handes vpon them, and blessed them. When he had spoken these wordes, there were certayne persons come thyther, who had brought vnto him yong childrē, to thentēt he should lay his handes vpon them, and blesse them. They sawe howe diseases wer put away by vertue of his touching, and therfore beleued thei that ỹ same touching should also be good & holsome for suckyng chyldren agaynst many suche inconueniences as this weake and tender age is wonte to be indaungered with. The disciples supposyng it not to be sittyng that their Lorde, for somuche as he was occupyed about waightier affayres, shoulde be wered with suche trifling matters, kepte away the chyldren that they coulde not approche him, and further rebuked suche as brought them, as though they had disquieted him with their importunitie. Verily a little before he prayed lytle babes vnto theym. Therfore when he perceyued howe they would not suffer the chyldren to come vnto him, because it was out of their remembraūce what he had said before of suche little ones he put them vnto silēce, saying: Suffre ye the childrē to cum vnto me, and kepe them not away from my touchyng. For vnto suche belongeth the kyngdome of heauen. These haue in them an ensample of innocēcie and simplicitie, after the patarne wherof, proude malicious persones must be forged a newe, yf they desyre to be admitted into the kyngdom of heauen. Let no man thinke that these are to be set naught by, for theyr weakenes or simplicitie. This one thyng I assure you of: Unlesse a man be borne agayne, and al wilynesse, couetousnes, ambicion, hatred, wrath, desyre of reuengement, and enuy put away, becum suche a one in minde, as these are in age, he shall not be receyued into the kingdome of heauen. And to thentent he might the more commend vnto al men simple innocency, he toke eche of them in his armes, and layed his handes vpon them euerichone, and blessed them: teaching hereby howe Bishops ought not to disdayne the simple vnlearned people, nor any other be they neuer so very vnderlynges, or abiect persons after thestimacion of the world, but cherish thē in euery behalfe til they cum forward to a better state of perfeccīō. And aboue al thynges we ought to desire the Lord Jesus, that he wil vouchesafe to laye his holy handes vpon suche persons, and blesse them. He wil vndoubtedly geue vnto little ones wilinesse, wher-

The texte. ¶ And when he was gone forth into the waye, there came one runnyng and kneled to him: and asked him, good maister what shall I do, that I may enherite eternal life? Jesus said vnto him, why callest thou me good? There is no manne good but one whiche is God. Thou knowest the commaũdemẽtes: Breake not matrimony, kil not, Steale not. Beare no false witnes, defraude no man, honour thy father & mother. He answered and said vnto him, maister al these I haue obserued from my youth. Jesus beheld hym, and fauoured him, and said vnto him: one thing thou lackest. Go thy way sell that thou haste, and geue to the poze, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, and come, folow me, & take vp my crosse vpon thy shoulders. But he was discomforted because of that saying, and went away mourning. For he had great possessions.

Nowe when these thynges were done in the house, and he gone forthe into the waye, then came there vnto hym a certayne younge spryngalte, bycause that after childhode was commended, this age shoulde lykewyse be called from good beginnynges, to thynges of hyghar perfection. He fell doune at his feete, and sayed: Good mayster, what shall I doe to purchase me eternall lyfe? The askyng of this question, smelled sumwhat of that vice, wherwith al suche are attached, as stande in their own conceipt. But gentle teachers are wonte to wynke at this faute, yf it be meane and tollerable, for the great hope & likelyhode that is in this age to come forwarde. For he desyreth not somuche to be taughte of the Lorde, what he ought to do, as to be praysed for the thinges he hath already done. And he calleth hym good, whom he beleueth to be nought els but a mã, as who saye, that man had any good thing of hymself. Therfore Jesus, as though he wer offended with this arrogant name, saith vnto hym: why doest thou call me good? This name is farre aboue the state and condicion of man. For ther is none verily good saue god alone. For this cause as he is an arrogant person, who so taketh this name vpon hym: euen so he that geueth the same vnto man, geueth hym more then it becommeth him to do. With this proheme Jesus discouraged the yong mã, which in his owne conceipt thought himselfe not muche vnworthye to haue this goodly title, or name geuen hym: and forthwith asked him this question: knowest thou the commaundementes? Then to hym demaunding what they were, he answered, recityng these common commaundementes folowyng, for kepyng wherof the Jewes chalenged the praise of goodnes and iustice. Thou shalt not cõmit aduoutry: thou shalt not kyl: thou shalt not steale: thou shalt not beare false witnesse: thou shalt not begyle thy neyghbour: honour thy father and thy mother. Here this yong man hoppyng to haue bene greatlye commẽded, answered agayne with a glad & ioyful hart: Master, I haue euer kept al these, since I was a litle child. Jesus beholdyng his great towardnes (for he cloked not the matter: nor dyd not, as the Phariseis, of a naughty mind, or proude stomacke stand in his owne conceipt) Jesꝰ, I say, signifyed that he was delited, euen with thonely endeuour of this age. Therfore he made sẽblant ỹ this godly affectiõ of his, albeit it was vnperfit, dyd neuertheles highly please hi, who as it were, embraced ỹ great likelihode he espyed in hi to profit & come forward in the doctrine of the gospel (for as that age seldõ applyeth Godly liuyng, so is the study therof right cõmendable in ỹ same) teachyng vs hereby, howe we ought not in any wise ouersharply to rebuke yong folkes, in whõ we see any inclinaciõ to theuangelike and christẽ godlines: and lines: and by that meanes cause the to withdraw their yong & tender mindes frō the gospel, as sum ouer waywarde scholemaisters are wont to doe, whiche by reason of their crueltie & roughnes, be wont to teache good wittes to hate learnyng: But wt al gentilenes to set the forward, & bring the to better thinges, cōmēding their diligēce, but yet neuertheles shewig the wt al what they must endeuour theselfes to attain vnto. The Jesus tēpred the gladnes of this yōg man, who reioiced ouertimely, saying: That thou hast obserued these thinges, I cōmēd the. But perfite rightreousnes stādeth not, as thou supposest, herin. Thou lackest yet one thyng. Then to him meruelyng, & askyng what ỹ should be, the lord answered: retourne home, & make sale of al that euer thou hast, and deale the money which thou makest therof, amōg poore folkes. Thou shalt not lose such doles, but for earthly possessiōs, horde vp great treasure in heaue. And beyng lighted of thy burden, & free frō al encumbrances, come & folow me. For then wil I knowledge the to be a disciple of the gospel. The yong man wāted many thinges: but Jesus entended to shewe by touchyng of this one sore, howe farre he was as yet from the perfectiō of the gospel. After he had heard hym say so, he wente his way mournyng, because he was disapointed of the praise of rightuousnesse, whiche he well hoped he should haue had. For he was a man of great substance, & therfore it seined vnto him a very sore thing sodainly to forgo the same. Yet departed he not as one vtterly to be despayred of. For he was nether wroth, nor murmured against Christ, but went his waye wyth mournyng chere and silence. He was commended for his vertuous & godly endeuour: but that he mourneth commeth of mās frailtie and wekenes. For he vnderstode not Jesus wordes, the meanyng whereof was not that a man should so much forsake his goodes, as his affectiōs. Who so is redy & willig to leaue al ỹ he hath, if the case so require, hath forsaken all thinges.

But he was discomforted.

¶ And whē Jesus had loked rounde about, he said vnto his disciples: How vneasy shal they that haue money entre into ỹ kingdō of god? And ỹ disciples wer astonied at hys wordes. But Jesus answereth again, & saith vnto thē: childrē, howe hard is it for thē ỹ trust in money to enter into ỹ kingdō of god? It is easier for a Camel to go thorow the ye of an nedle, thē for the riche to entre into the kingdō of god. And thei wer astonyed out of measure, saying betwene them selfes: who then can be saued? Jesus loked vpon them, and sayed, with men it is vnpossible, but not with God. For wyth god all thinges are possible.

With this ensample, Jesus frayed his disciples from couetousnesse. Therfore when the yong man was gone away all sadde, and heauy, Jesus loked round about on his disciples (for al this was done for their instruction) and said: he is gone. Howe muche ado shall it be for them that haue aboundaunce of money, to enter into the kingdome of God? These wordes greatlye amased the disciples, who supposed that vnnethe any one coulde be found, which would sodainly lashe out great riches for the kingdome of God, although themselfes had forsaken a fewe small thinges of lyttle price or value. Therfore Jesus repeteth the thinges whiche he spake before, mittigating the sharpnes therof wt pleasant wordes, & expouning ỹ darke saying, which they vnderstode not. My childrē saieth he, how hard is it for thē ỹ haue great substāce, & trust vnto it, as the cōmon sort doe, to enter into the kingdō of god? And least this seme to sore a saying, I wyl yet speake much sorer wordes thē these, but most true withal. It is easier, I say, for a camell to go tho-to go thorow a nedels eye, the for a riche man to enter into gods kingdome.

And they wer astonied oute of measure.

The disciples after they had heard hym say so, were muche disquieted in their myndes, and reasoned thus among them selfes: If no man can be saued vnlesse he enter into the kyngdome of God, and if no manne can enter into Goddes kingdome, excepte he haue forsaken hys ryches: then sith we see all men so inordinately loue the same, that it seemeth they will in no case forgoe the: what riche mā can there be saued? This carefulnes of the disciples, smelled of the godlye charitie of their Lorde (for they were desirous that as many as might possible, should entre into the kingdom of god) but as yet they vnderstode not the nature and vertue of the christian profession, whiche cōmaundeth vs, nothing to passe vpon wyfe, children, parentes, no nor life to, if ỹ case so require. It is the easiest thing ỹ there may be, yf a mā way and ponder the thyng selfe, to contemne and set naught by rychesse: & again the most greuous thyng of al, if we regard ỹ manours of the people.

Jesus loked vpon them: & saied.

Therfore the Lord perceiuyng his disciples to be carefull, and heuy, by reason of the wordes he spake vnto them, and at the next doore to desperacion, recomforteth them agayne. But fyrste he loketh vppon them as he is wonte to do, so ofte as he is about to speake any notable thing, or of great importance. Why despayre ye, sayth he, of the saluacion of riche men? The thinges which I require, be of much difficultie: but there are muche harder thynges to be performed. There is nothyng harder, the to set naught by life for ỹ gospels sake. Herein you shal haue me your capitaine. If ther shal some be founde, vnto whō the gospell shal be more deare then life, will you then despayre, that there shalbe some who wyll set lesse by their riches, then by the gospell? These thinges seme vnpossible to humayne affections: But all this is easily brought about by goddes helpe. God requireth hard thynges, and suche as be farre aboue the strengthe and power of man: but the same putteth to his helpyng hande, that man may be able to accōplishe his commaūdemētes. And so cummeth it to passe, that man can do that by god almightyes helpe, which of himselfe he is in no case able to do. Who so with all the harte of his body trusteth hym, shalbe able to do al thynges by him. Therfore he that passeth not vpon his goodes for ỹ kingdom of god, sustaineth no losse therby, but hath great profite & vauntage. And to know this, is a thing pertainyng, not to mans wisdom, but to faith geuen vs frō heaue. For whoso euer he be ỹ with hart & mind beleueth that for ỹ goodes forsaken, which hindred vs frō doyng the busines of saluacion, a hundreth fold so much, is geuē vs here in this worlde, and in the worlde to come life euerlasting, the same will with right good wyll make suche an exchaunge.

The texte.

¶ And Peter began to say vnto him: Loe, we haue forsaken all, & haue folowed the. Jesus answered, and said: verely I say vnto you, there is no man that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or systers, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or landes for my sake and the Gospelles, but he shal receiue an hundred folde: nowe in this life, houses and brethren, and systers, and mothers, and children, and landes, with persecutions. & in the worlde to come, eternal life. But many that are first, shalbe last, and the last first. And they wer in the way going vp to Jerusalem, and Jesus went before them, & they were amased, and folowed, and were afrayed.

Of these wordes wherby Jesus brought his disciples out of despayre, the same receyued more courage, and boldenesse, then they shoulde haue done. For nowe Peter by comparyng himselfe to the yongman, who departed away al heauy & mourning, began to stand much in his owne cōceipt, saying:

ceipt, saying: Loe, we haue forgone al ꝑ euer we had for thy sake, & folowed the. What haue done what thou whileere requiredst of ꝑ yong man. To him thou promisedst treasure in heauen: what rewarde then ought we to hope after. If a man regard the valuacion of the Apostles goodes, they forsoke not muche, especially Peter, who was a fyther man, and with muche a doe gate his liuyng, with his daily trauaile and labour. But vnto euery man, his owne propre substãce is greatest. And he forgoeth very muche, whiche so forsaketh all his goodes and ryches, that he hathe no mynde, neyther to restore, nor to encrease the same agayn. He that hath cleane put away al affection & gredy desire of ryches, the same hath forsaken, not onely so muche as he was worthe but also so muche as he myght haue delyred. The lorde after this rule estemyng the goodes forsaken of the Appostles (who with right good will did also forsake suche thinges as were muche dearer vnto them, as their parentes, their wyues, and their kinsfolkes) answered in this wyse: I tell you this for a suretie: Not onely you shall not be deafeased of your reward, but also there shall be none who for my sake, and the loue of the gospell, hath forsaken house, brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or children, or landes, but he shall receyue for euery of these thynges so forsaken, a hundreth folde so muche, and that euen in this p̃sente life, be ꝑ stormes of persecucion neuer so great. For much more shal encrease through ꝑ charitie of the gospel, then was taken away by the crueltie of persecutours. For one carnall brother, or sister forsaken, he shall haue so manye brethren, and systers, as felowes in profellyng of the gospell. The affections of the spirit be more diligent, and pleasaunter withall, then are thaffectiõs of nature. For one father, & mother, he shall haue so many fathers, as teachers: for one house forsaken, he shal haue euery where a house, wherfoeuer theuãgelike & chaste charitie shal reigne, which doubles maketh al thinges cõmõ. For a litle piece of lãd forsaken he shalbe partaker of al ꝑ lãds which ꝑ true profetlours of ꝑ gospell haue possessio of. And if these thinges cãe not to passe, yet ꝑ losse of temporal goodes shalbe sufficiently recompenced w the ghostly giftes of the soule, so ꝑ a man had a hundreth times leuer haue ꝑ thinges receyued, then ꝑ thinges forsaken. There is no cõparison betweine suche thinges as be transitory, & will sone perish, although no man take the away, & the riches of the soule, wherin no man can gene but god alone: no ma can take away, but he that couetly them. And if this seme but a small gaine, there shalbe added therto, the possession of eternal life in the worlde to cum.

Whyle these sayinges the forsayed the weake myndes of his disciples, least they should ether forethinke that they had forsaken suche thynges as they forsoke, or els fall again in time to time to the loue of worldly riches, and goyng about to be enriched w vile thinges, were miserable poore, as touchyng the goodes and riches of the soule. For is a naughtye thynge, whe a man falleth agayne from the loue of the goodes of the soule, to the desire of the goodes of the body: for true riches to haue and decernable riches: from euerlastyng commodities, to fayning and transitory. Nowe lest that by prayse of his disciples for forsaking these goodes, and ministryng their affection vnto the same, they should fall to couetousnes, he spake further a little sentence of this tenour as hereafter: But many that now seme

Jesus answered and said.

But many that are first.

first, shal

first shal once be last. Neither are they to be despayred of, who be not yet able to perfourme what the vertue and strength of christian perfection requireth: neyther ought such to trust themselfe, as haue profited to a certain degree therin. For there are some who haue done the like as you haue, and yet for all that, they shall fall agayne to a more mischeuous couetousnes. And ther be some, who at this present, cannot contemne and sette naught by their goodes (of the whiche sort that yong man was one) the whiche in tyme to ruin shal excel suche as appeared to haue forsaké al the world. Finally it shalbe found ỳ those wer purest of al, who after ỳ iudgement of the world, semed richest: & contrarily suche as appeared to contemne al worldly thynges, were moost gredy and desirous therof. For this prayse and commendacion standeth not in thinges, but in affectiõs. He is the purer manne of both, who possesseth suche goodes as fortune hathe lent hym, as though he had them not, ready to departe therwyth, so ofte as his neyghboure is to be holpen, not reioycyng ouer muche yf anye encrease be, nor pynyng awaye for sorowe, yf anye thyng be taken from hym: then he that letteth greate store by ỳ lyttle he hathe, and neuer maketh an ende to augement and encrease the same. Hereby he seemed to meane Iudas, who albeit that he forsoke all that euer he had, as the other dyd, and folowed Iesus, yet afterwarde was he perceyued to be a more naughtye couetous wretche, then those, whiche after the iudgemente of the worlde be ryche.

With suche wordes Iesus trained the myndes of his disciples by little and litle agaynst the most greuous storme of all that was at hand, the mẽcion wherof they vtterly abhorred. For nowe began he to goe vp to Ierusalem, the whiche name the disciples hated, bycause they had heard saye, howe their mayster should there suffer muche shame, and vilanye. In other places of the Gospel it is oft tymes mencioned, howe they wente before, as when beyng hungry they plucked the eares of corne. In this vyage they coulde not so doe. For it is a paynfull iourney to go vp to Ierusalem. It is for them that be of valiant courage, & strong in spirite, and such in whõ this world hath nought that is his. Therfore Iesus nowe goeth before, & the disciples folowe after all heauy & murmuring against him, because he would willingly put himself in manifest daunger of lyfe. They both maruayled what mynd he had so to do, & also feared their owne partes, leaste he would bring them into like daunger. Such disciples, so grosse, and weake withal suffered Iesus: and doth it greue vs sith we be weake our selfes, to beare with the dulnesse of the weake? They gaped after a kingdom, they desyred to be partakers of glory, & reasoned who should haue the chiefe place or preeminẽce: but they vtterly abhorred that thyng whiche was moost necessary for their saluacion.

And thei wer in the way going vp to Ierusalem,

Can ye drynke of the cuppe that I drynke of? and be baptised with the baptisme ỳ I am baptised with? And they sayd vnto hym: That we can. Jesus sayd vnto them, ye shall in dede drynke of the cuppe that I drynke of, and with the baptisme that I am baptised withall, shal ye be baptised in. Nowe when the Apostles were all in theyr dumpes, and like men amased by reason of these wordes, and durst not now counsayl hym to the contrary: two of them, that is to wete, John, and James the sonnes of zebede, came vnto hym alone. These. ſi. after they heard him speake of his resurrection, conceyued good hope, that, ỳ same kyngdome whiche he had so oft tymes promised to cūme, should berye shortly begyn. For as yet they had not cleane cast out of theyr mindes desyre of worldly aduauncement. For they set theyr mother a worke, and by her desyred him to haue somme preeminence & souerayne dignitie geuen them in the same kyngdome: but or euer they vttered theyr mynde, they dyd what they coulde to get a faythfull promise of him before hande to haue theyr requeste graunted, because it should not then be lawfull for hym to deny it them. The Lord makyng as though he would deny them nothyng whatsoeuer they demaunded, bad them tell on hardely what great thyng it was that they sued for.

For it ſemed that they would deſyre ſome weyghty thyng, or hygh promocion. Lorde, ſaye they, oure petition and ſuyte is, to haue this honourable preferment in thy kyngdome, that we maye ſit nexte the, the one of vs on thy righthand, and the other on thy lefte. Jeſus by aſkyng them a queſtion, playnly bewrayed theyr ignorauncē and rudenes. For as yet they dreamed vpon a certayne corporall kyngdome: as yet theyr myndes were vpō the primacy. Howbeit it was then no time to rebuke them for theyr groſſe ymagination: but yet bryngeth he them agayne to the remembraunce of deathe, the which they ſo muche abhorred. Becauſe, ſayeth he ye perceyue not what maner a thyng the kyngdome of God is, therefore ye wotte not what ye deſyre. You ſeke after vaynglory, & conſydre not by what meanes the true glory of my kyngdome is attayned. I wyll open you the way, & yf the ſame do like you, then truſt ye verely to haue the glory that you deſyre, ſaue alonely that ſhal be a true glorye, and not ſuche a one as you dreame vpon, and imagine it to be. Can you drynke of the cuppe that I nowe make my ſelfe ready to drynke of? Can ye be baptiſed with the baptyſme that I ſhall ere it be long be baptiſed withall? They of a gredy deſyre to haue theyr petition graunted, as they foliſhly deſyred this preeminence, euen ſo dyd they raſhly promiſe for theyr behalfe, and ſaye they could: notwithſtanding as yet they knewe not them ſelues arighte. Neyther did the mooſt gracious Lord rebuke them for this theyr great foly, forasmuch as the tyme was not yet cum, that they ſhould be receyuable of theſe myſteries. As yet whatſoeuer they heard, they heard it as it were in a dreame: and yet did he with neuer the leſſe diligence, teache, and inſtruct them, euer attempering his wordes to theyr weakneſſe, becauſe they beyng afterwardes, as a man would ſaye, wakened out of theyr ſlepe, and manyfeſtly percepuyng the truth by the holy ghoſt, ſhoulde with more entire affection loue theyr Lorde, who beyng ſuche a one as he was, would ſo gently beare with ſuche maner of diſciples: & alſo becauſe they beyng once growen to more perfection, ſhould agayne folowe his gentlynes in bearyng with the weakneſſe of theyr euen chriſten, whom they ſhould happen to inſtruct, hauyng alwayes in theyr remembraunce, howe ignorant, howe forgetfull, and howe dull they alſo them ſelues ſometyme were. This was an ambicious ſaying: Let vs ſit next the in thy kyngdome. It was vnaduiſedly ſpoken when they ſayd: We can do it. For it was ſpoken of them, whoe would ſone after deny theyr Lorde and mayſter for feare. But ſuche error as ſpryngeth not of malice or obſtinate euylnes, but of ſymplicitie, muſte eyther be cured, or els borne withall for a ſeaſō. Therfore Jeſus anſwered: Truely ye ſhal drynke of my cuppe, & ſhal be baptiſed wᵗ the baptiſme that I am baptiſed with: but in tyme to come. For as yet ye are not able to do ꝑ thyng, whiche ye beleue ye can do. Therfore prepare your myndes hereunto: but leaue all ꝑ iudgement of your reward to God ꝑ father. Let your only endeuor be to counterfeyte me, & folowe my trace. He hath for euery mā his peculier rewardes already prepared, and wyll diſtribute the ſame as it ſhall pleaſe him. For this matter is not ſo ordred in the kyngdome of heauen, as it is in prīces courtes, wheras he is not alwaies chief in dignitie, whiche deſerueth ſo to be: but he whōe the prince or kyng chiefly fauoreth. Sōetimes he fauoreth ꝑ naughtyeſt perſō of all. But wᵗ my father there is

But Jeſus ſayd vnto them, &c.

Ye wot not what ye aſke.

Can ye drinke of the cuppe.

And they ſayd vnto him, &c.

Jeſus ſayd vnto them.

no regarde

no regard of person. Neyther is it your parte to regarde the measure or multitude of your merites & deseruynges, sith you are able to do nothyng of your selues: nor to considre howe far ye passe other. You must only do your endeuoyr accordyng to the powr that God hath geue you, to folowe me. Ye shal not be defeated of your reward, although you thike not theron at all. For he that fighteth for the rewardes sake, and would not els fight vnlesse he thought he should be rewarded for his labour, clene disapointeth him selfe of the reward. Let no man be his owne iudge, but do what he can: and then remitte the whole iudgement vnto God.

¶ And when the ten heard it, they began to disdayne at James & John. But Jesus, when he had called them to him, sayd vnto them: ye know that they which are sene to beare rule among the people, raygne as lordes ouer them. And they ỹ be great among them, exercise authoritie vpon thē: neuertheles, so shal it not be amōg you. But whosoeuer of you wyll be great among you, shal be your mynister. And whosoeuer of you, wyll be chief, shalbe seruaunt of al. For the sonne of man also cam not to be ministred vnto, but to minister, and to geue his lyfe for the redempciō of many. The texte.

And loe, howe one euyll sprang of another. The simplicitie of these two disciples, bewrayed a greater rudenes & ignoraunce of the rest. For after it was come to the others knowledge what the twoe brethren, although they request was not graunted them, had desired of the Lorde, they all in maner disdaynyng hereat, were angry with them and in theyr toppe, because not regarding their simplenes and meane estate, they presumed to desire the fyrst or chief place whiche was rather due vnto them. There was none of thē all but hoped he should haue had ỹ preferment him selfe, accordyng as eche of them fauored his owne gyftes, and desertes. Doubtles these are very affections of suche persons, as leade theyr liues in prynces courtes. Euery man there highly estemeth him selfe: euery man warraunteth him selfe the moost honorable aduauncemētes, and hath great heartburning and disdayn at others preferment, saue that the ambicion of courtyers is spiced with malice, where as the disciples ambicion was nothyng els but mere ignorance and simplicitie. And whyles they straue thus for the preeminence & primacy, they had cleane forgotten the wordes that Jesu had spoken of the least, and greatest in the kingdome of heauen, and of the imitacion & folowyng of ỹ litle one. If any man aske the question why the Lord suffered so great ignoraūce so long while to cōtynue in his disciples, by whose mynistery he purposed to haue the doctryne of the gospell preached & raught throughout al the whole world: Truely, the chief cause was because he would by litle & by litle cleane weed out of theyr myndes this, & suche other naughty affections, & therfore dothe he suffre them so oft to fal agayne into the same affection, ỹs to say, into ambicion, or desyre of dominion & preferment: euen as if a man be sone deliuered of an ague, he soone forgetteth bothe his disease, and also the benefite of the phisicion, that cured him: Agayne if he ofte tymes recidiuyng, and fallyng into the same disease agayne, be at the length with muche a do rid & healed therof, then doth he the more hate his disease, and also the more knowledge the benefite of his healyng, and shall better knowe howe to cure other that are likewise diseased. Therfore Jesu perceiuing that the fōde petition of ỹ two & the disdaynfull wrathe of the other, pssued bothe out of one well, called them all vnto him, because he would minister phisicke vnto them all with one medicine. As oft sayth he, as ye heare me speake of the kingdome of heauen But Jesus when he had called them.

(which verely is a ſpirituall kingdom, and differeth no leſſe frō this worldly kyngdome, then the perthe differeth from heauen) do not you by vayne and phantaſticall ymaginacion, fayne ſuche a likenes & an apparaunce of thynges, as you ſee here in yerthly kyngdomes. For ye knowe that thoſe which ſeme to be chiefe rulers amōg the heathen people of this world, play the lordes ouer ſuche as be vnder theyr obeyſaunce, and ſubiection. And they whiche are great men among the heathen do exercile theyr power and authoritie ouer them, ỹ they haue rule & gouernaūce of. Beware ther be no ſuche thyng amōg you. Here a deſire to helpe the neyghbour, maketh a mā greater, & not ỹ deſire of worldli preferm̄et. Therfore as I haue alſo taught you before tyme, whoſo deſyreth to be great in very dede among you, let ỹ ſame be your miniſter: let hym, I ſaye, not exalte him ſelfe to beare rule, but humble him ſelfe to do all men good. And whoſoeuer wyll be chiefe among you, let the ſame be the ſeruaunt of all the reſt: let him not chalenge any ſoueraigntie or preemiēce, but ſerue to thende he may do all men good: not ſeking hereby his owne honour, but referring all the whole prayſe & glory vnto God, whom he ſerueth in his mēbres. Let it not greue you to counterfaycte the enſample whiche you ſee playnly expreſſed in me. For the ſōne of man came into the world not to rule, nor to laye the yoke of bondage vpon other mens neckes, but to be a miniſter for euery mans ſaluacion: and not onely to ſerue for all mens wealth and cōmoditie, but alſo to geue and beſtowe him ſelfe for the enfraunchiſyng of bondmen, to this ende, that by ỹ deathe and loſſe of one, a greate many ſhoulde be ſaued. Of a truthe this is the very Euangelyke and chriſtian ſoueraigntye, whiche whoſo wyll deſyre, let hym deſyre it as I do, and loke for a reward, not ſuche a one as he appoincteth vnto him ſelfe, but ſuche as it ſhal pleaſe the father to geue him: lyke as I without condicion obey my fathers cōmaundementes, euē to the croſſe, wholy referryng the reward of myne obedience vnto his will, and godly arbitrement. It ſhalbe a great ſhame for you to deſire dignitie as you ſe worldly princes do, & to ſeke for a reward of the father of heauē. Eyther deſire you the kyngdome of heauen, and loke after an heauenly reward: or els if you deſire this worldly kyngdome, then require ye not the reward of the kyngdome of heauen,

But whoſoeuer of you wyl be great.

For the ſōne of man alſo came not. &c.

With ſuche leſſons and monicions they were beforehand inſtructed & taught, who went with Chriſte to Jeruſalem. For the cleaner that euery man is from all affections, the better appoynted is he to go to ỹ battayle of the croſſe.

The texte. ¶ And they came to Hierico. And as he went out of the cytie of Hierico with his diſciples, and a great numbre of people, blynd Bartymeus the ſōne of Timeus, ſate by the hye wayes ỹ de begging. And when he heard that it was Jeſu of Nazareth, he began to crie, and ſay: Jeſus thou ſōne of Dauid, haue mercy on me. And many rebuked him that he ſhould holde his peace. But he cryed the more a great deale: thou ſonne of Dauid haue mercy on me. And Jeſus ſtode ſtyl, and cōmaunded him to be called. And they called the blynd, ſaying vnto him: Be of good cōforte, ryſe, he calleth the. And he threwe away his cloche, & roſe and cam to Jeſus. And Jeſu anſwered, and ſayd vnto him: what wylt thou that I doe vnto the? The blynd ſayd vnto him: mayſter, that I might ſee. Jeſus ſayd vnto him: go thy way thy fayth hath ſaued the, & immediatly he receyued his ſight, and folowed Jeſus in the way.

Nowe were they cum to the cytie of Hierico, whiche is not farre from Jeruſalem. Hierico in the Syrian tong ſignifieth the Mone. By the mone is figured is figured this present life, which is nothyng els but the common course of the worlde, where some be borne & some dye: some be sicke & some be whole: some growe towarde mans state, & some drawe in age: sometymes chaunceth glad thynges, and somtimes heauy. For our cause Jesus came doune from that heauenly tranquilitie: yette wyll he not tarry here, but hasteth to Jerusalem, being very desirous of mans saluacio. And hitherto his disciples, & with them a great multitude of people, folowed him. Marke well howe Jesus is euery where as he is called. Eyther he teacheth, or healeth, or els restoreth to lyfe agayne. What his death should cause throughe the beliefe of the gospell that was preached, he shewed nowe playnly by a corporal figure. Mankynd was blynd through ignorauncē of the trueth, and poore and beggerly for lacke of all vertues. Unlesse Jesus had passed by vs, there had bene no hope of light.

Blynd Bartymeus the sōne of Tymeus.

For a certayne blynd begger well knowen of the people, called Bartymeus, the sonne of one Tymeus, sate by the high wayes syde, who when he perceyued hym to cum, began to cry, & saye: Jesu the son of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. Fyrst ỹ brute or preaching of the Gospell, sheweth vs that Jesus passeth by: then the great confydence whiche we straytwayes conceyue of hym, wyll not suffre vs to holde our peace when he goeth by. For the synner knowledgyng and confessing his wretched liuyng, cryeth vpon the mercyful sauiour, and desyreth him to take mercy and compassyon vpō him. He is at the next doze to light, who so knowlegeth his owne great blyndnes. To say, Lord haue mercy vpon me, is not a saying of the Pharisеys, who thought them selues to be men of a perfyte syght, but an euangelyke & christian saying. Neyther vse the Pharisеys to saye: O thou sonne of Dauid. For they saye: is not this the carpenters sonne? That blynd mā sawe a great deale more in the darke, then ỹ Jewes do at this present day, whiche boast and bragge vpon the knowledge of the lawe, and professe them selues to be guides of the blynd. But the multitude of people is an unpediment and hynderaūce to the sely wretche, thus crying & callyng for mercy. For what other thyng can they do but disturbe and trouble? His cōscience also cryeth out agaynst him, not with one voyce, but with as many, as are the offēces that he knoweth him selfe guilte of, saying: what hast thou to do with Jesus, which art defiled wt so many sinnes? The lawe cryeth & barketh against him, saying: ỹ cryest in vayne: God is iust: loke after punishment for thyne offences. The rulers of the synagog cry out agaynst him, cōmaunding that no man preache, no nor be so hardy as once to name this name Jesu, saying: there is no healthe and saluacion in Jesu, but in Moyses. To be short, ỹ same thing do the Philosophers & heathē prynces. But that a manne may knowe a very euangelyke & christen fayth in this blynd man, he gaue not ouer when the people thus cryed agaynst him, insomuche that being rebuked, and commaunded to hold his peace, he cryed louder then he did before, saying: Thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. The people were offended with his crying: Jesus alone was nothyng offēded herewith, but stode styl, and cōmaunded him to be called vnto him. He heard him cry as he passed by: but he made as though he had not heard him. This came not of any daūgerousnes on Jesus behalfe: but was the acte of him, who wēt about to wring out of him a notable fayth, for the ensample of other: and his pleasure was to teache al men by this blynd man,

And many rebuked hym.

And Jesus stode stil, and commaunded him. &c.

how & by what meanes light may be extorted or gotten perforce of Jesu.

The fyrst hope to obtayne light, is to haue Jesus to stand styll at oure crieng: The seconde, to be called vnto hym, eyther by the teachers of ỹ gospell, or els by the secrete inspirations of the holy ghost. For the blynd man could not go vnto hym, vnlesse he had bene led & guided by holy scripture, which we ought in no wyse to dispise, although it be ministred by manne. The Apostles, and preachers of the gospell, do happily call a blynde man, when they cal hym at the commaundement of Jesu. But now a dayes they call without his cõmaundement, not vnto hym, but to ỹ aydes of humayn Philosophie or Heathen learning, to thobseruation of Moyses lawe, & to ỹ cõmodities & pleasures of this present life. Assuredly these callers make the blynde more blynd then he was before. But the Apostles obeying their maysters cõmaundement, called this man vnto Jesus, and so true is it, ỹ they dyd not crye, and brable agaynst him, as the people did, that they put hym (hauing good hope already) in more hope and comfort, saying: Be of good chere, arise, Jesus calleth the. The blind man cõceyued so great hope herewith, that he cast awaye his cloke which defended him agaynste ỹ cold weather, and skipped out of the place where he sate, and ranne to Jesus.

And they called the blinde saying.

And he threw awaye his cloke.

Here wyll I staye the a litle while, good reader, because thou mayst marke the great readinesse of mynde, and feruent courage of this blynde begger. Howe ofte arte ỹ called vnto Jesus: and doest neyther cast away thy cloke or mantell, nor skyp out of thy denne of miserie, nor run vnto hym ỹ calleth the, but tournest thy backe, but lingrest from day to daye, but castest doubtes, but kindest cauillations and fayned excuses, but waxest tuskyshe in thy filthe, & darknesse, and haddest rather aske an almes of the worlde in a foule beggerly clocke, then receyue lyghte of Jesu, wherein is conteyned the sum of all felicitie. What a goodly and fayre vesture is the garment of innocẽcie, & cleane lyfe? What a foule mantel hath he that is clothed with lechery, with couetousnesse, with excesse, and ambition? How vile & wretched a begger is he, who for a small & corporall commoditie, croucheth & kneleth vnto this worlde? How myserablye blynd is he, that neyther knoweth himself, nor almyghtie God his maker? As ofte as ỹ art called from this miserable wretchednesse vnto Jesus, either when ỹ readest the gospell, or hearest the same preached, or els when ỹ art drawen by a certaine secret inspiratiõ of ỹ holy ghoste, why doest thou not then (all thynges layde aparte, ỹ are wonte to let & hinder a man to attayne so great felicitie) leape vp vnto ỹ hope of a better lyfe? Why runnest thou not to moste sure fayth vnto Jesus, whiche only is able to geue the light, & wyll geue it to all men? Jesus cõmeth vnto the: he calleth the: and doest thou agayne for thy part grutche to mete him? Thou ỹnest and wyddrest awaye euen tyl thy dying day in thy darknesse: but ỹ shalt not euer haue Jesus passing by the. Certes after death he calleth no manne to saluation, but to iudgement. When he passeth by here in this worlde, he heareth hym that crieth: haue mercy vpon me: here he standeth stil, here he calleth, here he geueth light. This begger hath made the ashamed of thy slouthfulnesse, vnto whõ ỹ Lord, when he was cõmen vnto him, sayd. What ayleth the to crye? what wylte thou haue me to do vnto the? what? knewe not Jesus why he cryed? knew not he what he shoulde doe? That is not for: but all this was done for our instruction. Many beleued

ỹ this blynde man loked for an almesse of the lorde, because he was a begger. For so nowe a dayes many cry vnto Jesus: Lord haue mercy vpõ me. And being demaũded what thei sue for, what they desyre to haue, one saith, graũt that J may be riche: an other, that J may gette an office: this man that J maye haue a wyfe with a good dowrie: that man sayeth, geue me bodely strength: another geue me long life: another, graunt that J may be auenged on my enemy. But these thinges Jesus many times taketh away frõ his frẽdes, because it so behoueth for their saluacion. The euangelike begger desired none of al these thinges. For he knew right wel what ought to be desyred of Jesu. Therfore let vs both here & folow him: Rabbone sayeth he, (ỹ is as muche to say, as my maister) make me to see. For being careles for al other thinges he desyred nothig els but light, wherby he might see god & his sõne Jesus, whom to know is euerlasting life: For in scripture to know god, is nothing els but to see God. O very Euangelike & christian prayer. How fewe wordes hath it: but how great faith. Doubtles this is ỹ short prayer whiche pearceth the heauens. Therfore Jesus answered: Go thy way, thy faith hath purchased the helth. He is not byanby a mã vndon, & cast away, whiche seeth not a whit with bodely yes: but whoso seeth nothing at al wt the yes of his soule, ỹ same cannot be saued. To haue recouered these yes is euerlasting lyfe. Heare this saying ỹ pharisaicall felowe whosoeuer thou be, that sayest: J ascribe my safery to mine oft fastinges, to my long prayers, to myne almesdedes & my sacrifices: and for that cause ỹ cryest not wt the begger, haue mercy on me: but sayest, geue me the rewarde due vnto my deseruynges. Nowe Jesus doth contrarily ascribe saluacion vnto faith, & not vnto workes. The blynde mã straytwayes recouered hys sight, not because he deserued it, but for ỹ he beleued. And beyng cõmaunded to go his way, he folowed Jesus. Light is geuen the frely: thy blindnes is taken away for naught. Afterward thou art left to thyne owne arbitrement, whether thou wylt vse the gift of god a right, or no. Thou art not cõpelled to folow: thou hast onely power geuen the to see Jesus: go now whither ỹ wilt, but at thyne owne auenture: What did ỹ blessed blynd man. He returned not backe agayne to his beggerly cloke, or mantell: he retourned not to his old beggery, but forgot all these thinges, & folowed Jesus in the way. It auayleth but lytle to haue knowen Jesus, vnles ỹ do thy deuoyre to folow him, whõ thou seest. Jesus goeth straycht to the crosse, hither must ỹ folowe him, after ỹ hast once recouered thy sight agayne. As long as ỹ art blynd, thou mayest cry: Jesu haue mercy vpõ me: but thou canst not folow him this way, before thine ye sight be restored. For who would folowe him ỹ willingly geueth his soule to death, vnlesse he saw by faith, ỹ worldly reproche wer ỹ way to euerlastyng glory: that bodely tourmẽtes, & afflictions, wer ỹ way to euerlasting ioyes: that death wer the way to life eternal. These thinges the quicksighted of this world, se not perfitely, who do not onely with all theyr ien loke after rule, riches, honours, pleasures, and long life: but also endeuoyre thẽselues to get the same by vnlefull meanes, as by counsaillyng before with Astrontmers, Soothsayers, Inchaunters, or Necromanrers. These thinges, J say, they onely see whiche beleue the doctrine of the gospel, & haue fare trust that they shal receiue and enioy the reward promised in the same.

Theraraphrase of Eraſmus vpon The .xi. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And when they came nie to Jeruſalem vnto Bethphage, and Bethany, beſides mounte Oliuete, he ſendeth forth two of his diſciples, and ſayth vnto them: Go your way into the towne þ is ouer agaynſt you, & aſſone as ye be entred into it, ye ſhal fynd a Colte bound, whereon neuer man ſate, leuſe him, and bryng hym hyther. And if anye man ſaye vnto you, why do ye ſo? ſaye ye, that the lorde hath nede of him, & streightwaye he will ſende him hither. And they went their waye, and founde the Colte tyed by the dore without, in a place where two wayes met. And they leuſed him. And dyuers of them that ſtode there, ſayd vnto them, what do ye leuſyng the Colte? And they ſayed vnto them euen as Jeſus had commaunded. And they let them go. And they brought the Colte to Jeſus, and caſte their garmentes on him. And he ſate vpon hym. And many ſpred theyr garmentes in the waye, other cut downe braūches of the trees and ſtrawed them in the waye. And they that wente before, and they that folowed, cryed, ſaying: Hoſanna. Bleſſed is he that commeth in the name of the lorde. Bleſſed be the kyngdome, that cummeth in the name of hym, that is Lord of our father Dauid: Hoſanna in the highest.

THat thyng was not yet wrought in the myndes of the diſciples, which Jeſus expreſſed and ſet out by a figure, in the blynd mā. They yet ſaw not perfitely with their inward yes, how happie is the death of thoſe that folow Chriſtes death. They yet dreamed vpō this world ly kingdom. The lorde therfore, becauſe he wouldе the better faſten this in theyr myndes, howe ſuche as wyll folow hym, oughte in no wyſe to deſyre the kyngdome of this world, ſhewed thē a ſpectacle, wherby he derided & laughed to ſcorne all worldelye pompe and glorye, as a thyng that laſteth but for a ſeaſon, and ſone ſhall peryſhe: yet by the ſame he playnlye declared, that he coulde haue commaunded whomſoeuer he would, to do what it had pleaſed him, ſaue that his wyll and pleaſure was rather to obeye the wyl of the heauenly father. Fynally he wouldе haue all men to knowe howe he was the ſelfe ſame perſon, whom the Jewes awayted for to come ſo many hundred yeares before, (accordyng to the prophecies and foreſayinges of the Prophetes) for the ſaluacion of the whole worlde. When therefore he approched, and was ny vnto Hieruſalem (for he was by Bethphage, and Bethanye, whiche are two litle townes in the mountaine called mounte Oliuete, from whence a man might haue ſene Jeruſalem) he ſente oute from thence two of his diſciples, geuyng them in commaundement to do as foloweth:

For youre way into the towne. Go ye, ſayth he, into that towne which you ſe yondre directly agaynſt you, and by and by as ye be entred in, you ſhall fynde an Aſſes foale tyed at the gate, the whiche is not yet broken: and whervpon no man hath ridden vnto this day: leuſe it, and bring it hither vnto me. And if any man aſke you the queſtion why you vntie it, ſaye agayne: The lorde hathe nede of thys, and ſtrayght wayes he ſhall ſende it hither to me. The diſciples went their waye as they were bydden, & ſo came, & founde an Aſſes foale tyed before the gate, in a place whereas two wayes mette, and leuſed it. In the meane whyle ſome of thoſe that ſtode by, when they ſawe ſtraunge men vntye the foale, ſayed vnto them: Syrs what meane you? Why vntye you the foale? The diſciples made no other aunſwere, then the lorde commaunded thē to make, ſaying: the lorde hath nede hereof.

The other

The other, notwithstandyng it was vnknowen vnto them, whom they called theyr Lord, dyd yet let the foale go without anye further questioning, or reasonyng the matter with them. The disciples after they had vntied it, brought it vnto Jesus. Here I wolde haue the earnestly monished, good reader, that not onely the wordes which Jesus Christ spake, but also what soeuer he did al his life long, was not done at al auentures, but by the counsayle & wysedome of God, for mannes erudicion. For there is nothing that hath not in it, eyther an ensample set out to thentent to moue and stirre vs to vertue, and godly lyuyng, or a representacion of the old prophecies, or a fulfylling of the figures, wherwith the lawe dyd as it had bene, with certayne darke mysteries or ryddels, signifie Christe: or els a signification of thynges that afterwardes should happen and come to passe. And whereas the mysticall sence of euery thyng is diligently to be searched oute, yet the more he aproched vnto the time of his death, when the busynesse of our saluacion should chiefly be wrought, the more holier mysteries were al thynges ful of. For now was that tyme at hand, the which he greatly thyrsting, and desyryng all mennes saluacion, spake of before, saying: when I shalbe lyfted vp from the earth, I wyll drawe al thinges vnto me. For there was not roume enough in Jewry for his charitie. And there ỹ fruite of ỹ gospel did not counteruayle the labour, and diligence of the tyller. For this cause Christ set for the wylde, and vnbroken asses foale, whereupon no man had sytten before. This foale signifieth the gentiles, who neyther obeyed the lawe of nature, nor were vnder Moyses lawes. For vpon the asses, that is to say, the Synagoges backe, both Moyses, and the prophetes had ridde. Certayne of the newe disciples are now sent out to call the Gentyles, who call them, not to Moyses, but to Jesus. Here wolde there not lacke some whiche would brable and speake agaynste them, and saye: What do you? why vntie you the foale? For this foale had both maysty, and also vncertain Maysters, and was tyed, and stode where two wayes met. Who so is not obedient vnto Goddes commaundementes, hath as manye maysters, as he hath vices that he serueth: and is so tyed, that he hath no house, but standeth in syghte where two wayes mete, redie for euery man that wyll take hym. But when Jesu calleth, no man hath power to resiste. The Jewes cryed, and sayd: This saluacion is ours by promyse. Why then are the Heathen Idolatours ioyned with vs? Unto theim aunswere was made: he that is the Lorde of al, hath nede of suche foales. He is nowe wetye wyth labouring in hayne among the Jewes, and desireth to reste hym vpon the vnbroken foale. That this foale is vnbroken, doeth not displease hym, so that lacke not obedience of faythe. And we ryder hath nede of a newe beaste to ryde vpon.

The disciples whom yet wot not what the matter meaneth, doe neuertheless with their diligent ministery, helpe forth and further the matter. They couer the foale with their mātels, because he should not ride vpō his bare backe. O, whosoeuer thou be that art a preacher, a teacher of the gospel, folow this diligence of the disciples. Whersoeuer thou shalt see an vnbroken Asses foale tyed where two wayes mete, vpryzaunte of the lawe of the gospell, and subiect to many vices, but for folye, and simplicitie, rather then of any malice or obstinate, ryghtuesse: and suche a one as wyll obey yf a man leade it awaye, loke thou vntye it, and bryng it vnto Jeſu. Caſte vpon it the mantell of holſome doctryne: and then Jeſus the Lorde of all, wyll vouchesafe to ryde vpon his backe. Folow thou alſo the diligence of the other, who agaynſt that Chriſte ſhould ryde forthe, couered the way with their garmētes, that is, with enſample of theuangelike and Chriſtian godlyneſſe. Manye there were alſo whiche decked the way with boughes, cut downe frō trees, eſpecially from ỹ Palme trees, which beare the figure of virgyns, and Martyrs. Jeſus the Lorde of al, thought it a royall thing to ryde through ſuche away vpon ſuche a beaſte.

Nowe ſtaye a lytle whyle, good reader, and compare me with this ſpectacle or ſight, one of thoſe that were chiefe amōges the Jewyſh prieſtes: and fyrſt of all regard what manour of perſonage is he, and howe greate whiche rydeth vpon the Aſſes foale. It is the ſonne of God, vnto whom the father hath geuen all power in heauen, and in earthe. It is the ſautour and gouernour of the whole worlde. It is the authour, Lorde, and kyng of all thynges that are created and made: a prieſt for euer after ỹ order of Melchiſedech, who with a becke was able to do what ſoeuer he woulde: whoſe maieſtie all the orders of Aungels doe adore and worſhip: who ſytteth on the right hande of the father almightye. With his dignitie compare me a biſſhop of one temple, whiche hath bought the prieſthode or prelacie laſtyng but for one yeare of a wicked and Heathen kyng, for a fylthy ſūme of moneye. Compare the bare heade of Jeſu, with his tyarre, or myter, all glyſteryng and ſhyning with golde, and precious ſtones. Compare that ſobre, and mylde countenaunce of Jeſu, with his face puffed vp with pride, with his grym forehead, with his frownyng browes, with his ſtately loke, with his contencious or vncharitable mouthe. Compare the bare hādes of Jeſu, with his fyngers laden with ringes, and precious ſtones. Compare the courſe, and homely garment of Jeſu, with his tragical or maſkyng apparayle, who weareth nothing courſer then clothe of golde, or purple ſylke. Compare the diſciples mantels with his golden ſadels, with his couerynge clothes of crymaſyne ſylke, with his ſyluer ſtyroppes, but ouer gylte. Cōpare this cōmune Aſſes foale that caried Jeſu, with ſo many Mules trapped with ſylke, and clothe of golde, with ſo many royal courſers and greate horſes, with ſo manye Palfrayes of greate price, with ſo manye wagons, with ſo many chariottes, with ſo manye chayres of eſtate prepared to carrie one man. Compare me the fewe, and poore ſymple diſciples of Jeſu, with the ſolemne pompe, paſſyng the pompe of any worldly prynce, of ſuche as go before the byſhop, of his henſemen, of Trumpettes of ſundry tunes, of ſuche as enuyron and garde his perſonage, of the bende of horſemenne, and foote menne: among whom as euery of them is moſt proude, hye mynded & ſtately, ſo is the ſame next the byſhoppes owne proper perſon, and in greateſte fauoure and conceipte with him. Compare the toyfull cryenges of the children that went before, and folowed Jeſu, who inſpyred wyth the holy ghoſt, ſong this ſaying taken out of the Prophecie of Dauid: Hoſanna, that is to ſaye, make vs ſafe. Bleſſed is he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde: Bleſſed be the kyngdome of our father Dauid that cummeth. Hoſanna in the hyghest. Compare, I ſaye, theſe toyfull cryinges with the vnghoſtly acclamations, wherwith the multitude of flatterers cry vpō an vngracious Jewysh byshop, saying: God sende ỹ most holy father in god, long lyfe. God graunt his highest prieste the victory. I pray god that the moste blessed and chiefe prelate of religion may raygne in prosperitie. How muche Jesus defyeth suche bisshoppes, this one thing playnely declareth, because he commaunded all that coloured and stately priesthode, with the tẽple therof, vtterly to be abolished & destroyed. For these be they by whom euen nowe in our dayes, Jesus (who will be thonly heade of priesthode,) is slayne in his membres. He seketh for these ministers, ỹ may bring vnto him the Asse, that maye couer the foale with theyr mantels, that maye strowe the waye with Palme boughes, and with godlye acclamations and cryinges, knowleage that the kyngdom of the gospel promysed of the prophetes, is come and presente. Neither geueth he any eare to the Pharisеis muttryng agaynste hym, and not contented with these ioyfull cryinges of the people: but sayth that the very stones shall soner crye out, thē goddes glorye be conceled.

¶ And the lorde entred into Hierusalem, and into the temple. And when he had loked round about vpon all thynges, and now the euentyde was come, he wēt out vnto Bethanie with the twelue. And on the morowe when they wer come out from Bethanie, he hungred. And whan he had spieda fygge tree a farre of hauing leaues, he came to see yf he myght fynde any thing theron. And when he came to it, he found nothing but leaues, for the tyme of fygges was not yet. And Jesus aunswered, and sayd vnto the fygge tree: neuer man eate fruyte of the hereafter whyle the world standeth. And his disciples heard it.

With suche a pōpe the king Jesus entred into the royal citie of Hierusalē, the heauenlye priest entred into the temple, and there as it was beseming for a king, & priest, taught the people, healed the sycke, made strong ỹ weak and feble, as one vsurpyng violent rule in a nother mannes kyngdom. In the meane whyle the wycked prieste, Pharisеis, and headmen of the people treated at the matter: but the symple people ealye to be instructed, cryed ioyfully vpon hym.

Jesus as thoughe he would haue restored the decayed religion of the temple, which ỹ Pharisеis thought that tyme chiefly to flourishe, as he beheldе euery parte therof, diligently vewyng & markyng yf any thyng were done therin, not besemyng the house of god: not because he passed so muche what were done in that temple, whiche he knewe verye well shoulde wyth in shorte space after he destroyed: but his pleasure was to declare by a certayne corporall fygure what maner a churche he woulde haue his to be, whiche he buylded of lyuely stones. Among these stones it is mete that the Christian byshop be conuersaunt and walke, hauing alwaye a diligent eye, and seeyng that there be nothyng among them, whiche maye defyle the temple dedicated vnto God. The thinges that defyle it are ambitiō, filthie gayne, couetousnesse, and falshode. These abhominacions the Lord Jesus doeth not suffre in his temple.

And when he had loked round about vpon al thinges.

Now when the euenyng drewe nighe, he returned into Bethanye, because that in so riche, and royall a Citte, he could fynde no place to be harboured in. O flower of religion, whiche cannot awaye with the chiefe prelate of all relygion. Oh misnamed Hierusalem, whiche blynded wt worldlye lustes, knoweth not her pacifier. O happie Bethany which without the workes of the lawe, through the onely obedience of fayth, deserued to haue Jesus to be

When on the next daye in the morynge early, he retourned from Bethany to Jeruſalem: as he trauayled by the waye, he beganne to wax hongrye who in very dede hongred mannes ſaluacion: & the ſweteſt breade vnto hym that could be, was to redeme mankynde, according vnto the fathers wyll and determinacion: albeit he was alſo, touchyng the nature of manne whiche he had taken vpon hym, veryly pangued with bodely hunger, and felte the grieke thereof as other menne doe, by reaſon of the dzieth of his bodye.

And whā he had ſpyed a fyg tree a far of, &c.

Therfore when he ſawe a farre of a figge tree, which becauſe it was full of grene leaues, appeared to haue had ſome fruite: he ran therunto to ſe whether it had any thyng to aſſwage his honger withall. It is a looze payne when a man is very hongrye, and hath nothyng to eate. But it is a muche greater grief for one to ſee thoſe miſcarye thzough their vnbeleke, whom he is very deſirous to ſaue. And whē he came vnto the figge tree, & deceiued w the allurement of the leaues, founde no fruite theron, he curſed it, ſaying:

And whā he came to it, &c

Neuer man eate fruite of the hereafter whyle the wozld endureth. The diſciples ſecretly meruayled betwene them ſelues why he thus curſed the tree, eſpecially ſyth the tyme was not yet cū, when this kynde of tree is wont to haue fruite. Corpozal honger hath her pzoper angre: But theuāgelike and ſpirituall hongēr, hath a moze ſharpe, and byting teſtineſſe. Chziſt thought euery tarying ouer long wherby mannes ſaluacion was pzolonged. And trees haue due tyme appoynted them of nature, when to bzyng fozth their fruite, ſo that he maye appeare vnreaſonable to pzay that it might be euermoze baraine, becauſe it bzought not fozthe fruite befoze due ſeaſon.

Furthermoze, foz what purpoſe ranne Jeſus to the fygge tree to ſhake downe the fruite yf there had bene anye, ſythe he knewe ryghte well there was none: But this acte which in outwarde apparaunce ſemed fonde, and vnreaſonable, occaſioned the diſciples not onely to be moze attēt and take better hede, but alſo to enſcarche the myſterie therof. The lozde Jeſus moſt hungrye and deſyzous of mannes ſaluacion, founde fruyte in the barayne trees, where there was no hope of fruyte, that is to ſaye, in common wemē, in Publicans, in ſynners, in heathen folkes, in the woman of Canaan, and in the Samaritanes. Onelye in the pzieſtes, Scribes, and Phariſeis, of whom all men had cōcepued greateſt hope ỹ in them ſhould be the ſweateſt fruite of the Goſpel, found he none at al. They kept the foztreſſe of religion: they were continually in the temples: they had knowleage of the lawe, and pzophetes: they loked pale with faſtynges: they vſed long pzayers: they gaue great almes, and beſydes this theyz robes, and bzode Philacteries, made a wonderfull ſhewe, as though they had bene altogether gyuen to ỹ ſtudie of vertuouſe and godly lyuing. Trulie theſe wer the leaues which pzomiſed the wozlde tymely rype fruyte, euen befoze due ſeaſon. But the Lozdes entent was to ſhewe that there is nothyng farther paſte all grace, and goodnes, then is vngodlyneſſe couloured with a coūterfayte ſhewe, oz vſſure of holynes.

The figge tree deſerueth to be curſed of Jeſu, leaſte any man deceyued with the goodlye ſhewe of her leaues, woulde from hencefozthe hope to haue of this ſozt of people, any ſweate fruite of theuangelike, and Chziſtian charitie.

¶ And they cam to Ierusalem, and Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that solde and bought in the temple, and ouerthrew the tables of the money chaūgers, and the stooles of them that sold doues, and would not suffer that any mā should cary a vessell thorow the temple. And he taught, saying vnto them. Is it not written: my house shall be called the house of prayer vnto all nations. But ye haue made it a denne of theues. The texte

Therfore he departed from the figge tree whiche deserued no yll, & came to Ierusalem, wherein was the morall figge tree that hadde bene so long tyme nourished, and dunged in vayne, and yet brought foorth nothing els but leaues. And when he was entred into the temple, he shewed agayne another figure, whereby to declare what puritie besemeth the churche of the gospel, and also what cleanesse becommeth an harte dedicated vnto the spirite of Christe. For with a scourge or whyp of cordes he draue, and whypped out of the temple, the rablemēt of blars, & sellars, and also ouerthrewe the tables of the money chaūgers, and the stooles of the doueselles, & suffred none to carrie anye prophane or vncleane vessell thorowe the temple. And lest he should haue semed to haue bene angrie with them causeleslie, he alleaged the testimonie of the prophete Esay: Is it not, sayth he, written: My house shall be called a house of prayer vnto all nations, but ye haue made it a denne of theaues, deceitfully doing the same thyng therein vnder couloure and pretence of the honoure, and serupce of god, ỹ theaues doe to wayfaring men in their iourneys. The Lorde cared not greatly for the puritie of that tẽple, whiche his wyll was should be destroyed with the rites, & ceremonies therof: but he setforthe vnto vs the notable puritie of ỹ newe temple, wherof him selfe woulde be the chiefe worckman and buylder: couertly signifyeng with all, howe the priestes, scribes, and phariseis, should be worthely deposed from the principalitie of relygion, who had so defiled, euen that auncient, and figuratiue religion, with theyr couetousnesse, falshod, hipocrisie, and all kyndes of fylthynesse. We neuer reade that euer Jesus was so moued: neuer that he vsed lyke cruelitie. What would he nowe do if he sawe his spouse ile the churche (whiche he washed wt his owne precious bloud, to make her cleane vnto him selfe, without any spot, or wrinckell) so to be arayed, polluted, and defiled with all manoure of fylthynesse, and that by the very bishops the rulers of the same? Who haue not only cattell, and piggions to sell, but also all holye thynges, which in very dede, can neyther be bought, nor solde for monye. He seeth it vndoubtedlye, although he winke thereat for a season. Neyther shall such persones therfore escape vnpunished, because god of his great lenitie and gētleneſſe suffreth them, to thend they should repent, and cum to amendement. The daye, the daye shall cumme, when that terrible scourge shall be made, to whyppe al, those into the fyre of hell that be defylers of the holy temple. And Jesus went into the temple.

¶ And the scribes and hye prestes heard it, and sought howe to destroye hym, for they feared him because all the people meruayled at his doctrine. And whē euen was cumme, Jesus wente out of the citie. And in the morowyng as they passed by, they sawe the figge tree, dryed vp by the rotes: and Peter remembred, & sayd vnto him: Master behold, the fygge tree whiche thou cursedst is wyddred away. And Jesus answered, and sayd vnto them: Haue confidence in God. The texte.

how they might destroy Jesus. Oh figge tree, barayne, and cursed in dede. They boast and auaũte them selfes for the chiefe prelates of pure religiõ, & yet, in the name of god, be they sore displeased, that the dekylers of ỹ temple are dryuẽ out a doores. There lacked not in them a wicked mynde ready to committe haynous murdre: but they sought occasyon howe they myght safely accomplishe theyr desire. They alone could not finde in theyr hartes to loue that onely and amyable Jesus, who hurte no body, but did all men good. They feared him, onely because ỹ people meruayled at his doctrine, and conceiued an hygh opinion of him for the miracles they had seene him worke before. Oh wrong shapen holynesse in them that were professours of holynesse. After they had purposed to doe so wycked a dede, they were not afrayed leste god (vnto whome nothyng is vnknowen) would be auẽged: and yet stode they in dread of the people. Why dyd they not at ỹ leaste wise feare Jesus him selfe? They had bothe seene, and heard tel of the great nũbre of myracles that he wrought, whiche were an euident testimonie that goddes power was presently with hym, so ofte as he would him selfe. He that is able to chase awaye dyuels, and put them to flight, can much easlier put them in. He that with ỹ bare word of his mouthe raiseth the deade, and calleth them to lyfe agayne, can with muche lesse difficultie, take awaye the lyfe. If they beleue he is so gracyous and mercyfull, ỹ thoughe he be able, yet wyll he hurt no bodye: why then goo they about to put suche a one to deathe? If they beleue that he wyll also doe, what he is able to doe: why doe they not, euen for very feare of punishment and vẽgeaunce, refrayne from so wicked a purpose? Doubtlesse this was ỹ vncurable blindnesse of them, who thought in theyr owne conceytes none had had iyes, & could haue seen but they. Now when the night eftsones approthed, Jesus, whoe had bene all the daye in the temple fasting, and without meate, departed from Jerusalem. So ofte forsaketh he the citie, offended with the obstinate vndeleke of the inhabitauntes: so ofte cummeth he thyther agayne, to fynde some fruite, if it would be, in so goodly a shew of leaues. But would to god this cursed figge tree had bene nothig els but barayne, and not brought foorth deadly poyson. Jesus, the tyme of his deathe & passion being now at hand, suffered no tyme to passe awaye fruitlesse. He spent all the daye in the temple, and bestowed the nyght in prayer, and priuatly animating and encouraging of his disciples. Agayn, whan early in the morning they retourned frõ Bethany to Jerusalem, & passed by the fygge tree, the disciples perceyued howe it was withered, euen from the very rootes, to the highest toppe.

Peter called to remembraunce what Jesus had done the daye before, & knewe righte well howe he had cursed the tree, and yet meruelyng that it was sodaynly withered in all partes from the very rootes sayd to the lord: Mayster, Loe the figge tree that thou cursedest is nowe wythered. Peter meruayled hereat, notwithstandyng he had oftymes before seene him do farre greater thynges than this. Surely he had forgotten this lesson, how there is nothyng so hard, that faith is not able to bryng to passe. Of faithe springeth all the fruit of the gospel. And because the Synagog wãted this fayth, we see howe she is cleane withered. The churche of the gentiles blossometh and braunccheth oute with manye crownes of martyrs, with manye precyous stones of virgins, with many ensamples of vertue.

For they feared him because all the people, &c.

And when euen was cummen, &c.

And in ỹ morning as they passed by, &c.

And Peter remembred, &c.

On the other syde, what is further past all grace & goodnesse, more abiecte, vyle, & barayne, then the Iewes are? Where is the authoritye of the lawe becumme? where is the meruelous shewe of relygion or holynesse? where is the temple? where are the stately scribes, and phariseis? Is not the figtree all withered? Therfore, sayth he, yf ye wyll blossume, and bryng forth fruite, put confidence, not in your owne strength, but in God.

¶ Verely I saye vnto you, that whosoeuer shall say vnto this mountayne, remeue and cast thy selfe into the sea, and shall not doubte in his harte, but shall beleue that those thynges whiche he sayeth, shall cumme to passe, whatsoeuer he sayeth, he shall haue. Therfore I saye vnto you, what thynges soeuer ye desyre when ye praye, beleue that ye receyue them, and ye shall haue them. And when ye stand and praye, forgeue if ye haue ought agaynst any man, that your father also which is in heaue, may forgeue you youre trespasses.

And Ies⁹ answered & said haue confidēce in god.

I assure you of this one thyng, if a man hauyng a sure beleefe in god, commaunde the figge tree to wyther (which thyng you meruayle at, now it is done) not only that shall forthwith cumme to passe, but also if he saye vnto this mountayne: Auoyde out of thy place, and caste thy selfe into the sea: albeit it seme a thyng very impossible, yet if he speake the word nothing doubting or mystrusting in his harte, but haue conceyued a sure beleefe of mynde, that whatsoeuer he saye shall in very dede cumme to passe, then vndoubtedly whatsoeuer he commaundeth, shall be done. This beleefe towardes god, shall cause that ye shall desyre nothyng of hym in vayne. Therefore truste ye on my warandise, that whatsoeuer ye demaunde of the father, not mistrusting but he wyl graunt you your request, you shall obtayne it, so that your myndes be free from desyre of reuengement: and on condicio, ye desyre but what shal be expedient for your sowle health. He that distrusteth, obtayneth nothyng. For suche a one beleeueth that the father eyther cā not accomplyshe his desyre (where as in dede he is able to doe all thynges with a becke) or at the lest wyse, wyll not let hym haue what he lawfully asketh. That manne also obtaineth not his request, and if he beleue his faith is a naughty shamelesse faythe, whoe so desireth the father to pardone the trespases that he hath committed agaynste his maiestie, where as he wyll not agayne for his parte releale vnto his christian brother, suche offences as his sayde brother had committed against him. Wherfore when ye settel your selfes to prayer, forgeue with all your hartes, if any body haue ought offended you. For vnder this condicion shall your father in heauen releale you your trespaces. If you wyl not forgeue your neighbour the fault whiche he hathe committed agaynste you, neyther wil the father of heaue pardon the offences, wherby ye haue trespased his goodnesse.

Cherfore I saye vnto you what thinges so euer, &c.

And when ye stande & praye

¶ And they came agayn to Ierusalem. And as he walked in the temple, there came to him the hie priestes, & the scribes, and the elders, and sayd vnto him: by what auctoritie doest thou these thynges? And who gaue the this auctoritie to do these thinges? Iesus answered and sayd vnto them: I wil also aske of you a certayn thing, and answere ye me, and I wyl tell you by what auctoritie, I doe these thinges. The baptisme of Iohn, whether was it from heauen, or of men? Answere me. And they thought in them selues saying: if we saye from heauen, he wyll saye: why then dyd ye not beleue him? But if they had sayd of men, they feared the people. For all men counted Iohn that he was a very prophete. And they answered and said vnto Iesu: we can not tel. And Iesus answered: neyther tell I you, by what authoritie I doe these thynges.

These thynges done on the waye, they came againe to Ierusalem, and Jesus, accordyng to his accustomed manour, went vnto the temple. The presence of Jesus in the temple, is soule healthy in the churche. Neyther beseemeth it suche as are in Christes stede, to be anywhere oftener, then in the temple. They are in the temple, whiche entermeddell with those thinges ꝑ pertayne to God, and not vnto this worlde. What maketh a bishop in a campe among warriers? what hath he to doe in theatres, that is to saye, in stages, and places ordayned for the people to behold syghtes and enterludes in? what maketh he in princes courtes? The pharisees, scribes, priestes, and elders were by bodily presence ofte in the temple: but as touchig ꝑ spirite, they were a great waye of. Therfore when the hye priestes ioyning vnto them the scribes, & headmen of the people, because the matter shoulde seme to be done by a lawfull counsayle, sawe how Jesus had all the multitude in the temple, diligently harkening and listenyng vnto his doctryne, and also how, by reason of his miracles, he raygned and played the kyng, as it had ben in a nother princes kingdom (for he droue out marchãtmen, & suche as carried vessels throughe the temple) they went and interrupted him in his preachig, tenuing, theyr old maniere of false reprouing, & sayeing: by what authoritie doest ꝑ these thinges? And who hath geuen the lycence thus to doe? They were not able to disprooue his doctrine: neyther could they denie his miracles, beyng so manye, and so euident with all: nor fynde faute with them, sithe he wrought them all for mannes preseruacion, and that freely. They sought occasion of authoritie, whereby they might haue somme quarell agaynst him. For they wolde not in any wyse that this glorie should haue bene geuẽ vnto God: but all theyr whole drift was, to haue theyr owne authoritie euerye where highliest esteemed. If Jesus (whome they beleued to be nothyng els but a man) had taken vpõ him goddes authoritie, then would they byanby haue made a matier of blasphemye of it. If not, then had there not bene to seke a forged matier of sedition to laye agaynst hym, for that by his owne priuate authoritie, without leaue and lycence of the priestes, and elders, he presumed to do suche a thyng in the temple. What neded them to moue this questiõ of authoritie: syth his very dedes declared that all that was done, was don by the myght and power of god? sithe the thyng it selfe playnly shewed, howe this was he whome God by his prophetes promised long ago to cumme: sithe the father after his baptisme, declared with his owne voyce, that this was his singularly beloued sonne, whõe they shoulde obey. Nowe the authoritie of the priestes, whiche they misused, was good for nothyng els but to let gods glorye. Howbeit theyr frowarde wylfulnesse, dyd also make muche for the aduauncyng and settyng forth of his power, and goodnesse.

And as he walked in the temple, there came to hym ꝑ hye priestes. &c.

Jesus therfore, because he was not ignorant wherabout they went (for what aunswere soeuer he had made, they woulde haue founde faulte therwith: and as yet the time was not cum for him to disclose & cõfesse who he was) Jesus Jsaye, auoyded this deceytful question, w an other wise demaũd. On this cõdition sayth he, wyl I make aunswer vnto your questiõ, yf you wyll answere me firste vnto myne. The baptisme of John, whether was it from heaue, or of men? Soyle me this question. Marke howe easly goddes wysdome snarleth mannes wylinesse, whiche vseth all the craft and policie that may be, agaynste it. They hadde hartes replenished with all worldly subteltie: they deuised all the gylefull wayes that coulde be inuented: And yet whiles they made traynes to entrap him, they perceyued that there were snares prepared and layed for them selfes.

For they thought thus in theyr myndes: If we saye, from heauen, then will he replie: Why dyd you not then beleue him, when he bare witnesse of me. If we saye of men, we stand in ieoperdie to be assaulted of the people. For Iohn was of very great authoritie among the people, and the memorie of him was reputed blessed and holy, because no man doubted but he was a prophet in dede. And for this cause, albeit they were proud felowes and of an haut courage, yet thought they it better to be a litle ashamed, the openly to be reproued, or stoned to deathe. And they thought in thē selues. &c.

Therfore vnto Iesu, who required an answete, they sayde: We can not tell. Then Iesus paying them home agayne w̄ a lyke answere, sayde vnto them. If you know not to me warde that ye knowe, neyther will I shewe you by what authoritie, I doe these thynges that I doe. Compare my dedes with Iohns, and then waye and ponder with your selfes whether it be mete, if ye doubted not of his authoritie, to doubte of myne. And they answered & said vnto Iesus.

The. xii. Chapter.

¶ And he began to speake vnto them by parables. A certayne man plāted a vyneyarde, and compassed it about with an hedge, and ordeyned a wyne presse, & buylded a toure, and let it out to hier vnto husband men, and went into a straunge countrey. And when the tyme was cūme, he sent to the husband men a seruaunt that he might receyue of the husbandmen of the frute of the vyneyard. And they caught hym, & beat him, and sente him awaye agayn emptie; and moreouer he sente vnto them an other seruaunt, and at him they cast stones, and brake his heade, and sent him away againe all to reuyled, and agayn he sent an other, and him they killed, and many other, beatyng summe, and killing sum. And so when he had yet but one beloued sonne, he sent him also at the last vnto them, sayinge: they wyl feare my sonne. But the husbandmē sayd among them selues: this is the heire, cum, let vs kyll hym, and the inheritaunce shall be ours. And they toke hym, and killed him, and cast him out of the vyneyard. The texte.

After the priestes, scribes, and head men hadde, by reason they perceiued the trayne that was made for them, auoyded, as well as it woulde be, the incōuenience of this question, ỹ lord Iesus put forth vnto thē an other questiō by way of a riddle or darke parable, wherunto whiles they vnaduisedly answered. they bothe cōdempned theyr owne wickednes, & also graunted that the authorite (whiche they had hitherto so muche bragged and boasted on) ought worthily to be take away from them, & geuē vnto other. The parable was suche. A certayn man planted a vyneyard, & hedged it round about, lest it shoulde be open for man & beast to runne into: & digged therein a cestern to receiue the new wine, & builded also a towre to defend it with all. When it was in this wyse sufficiently furnished with all necessaries therunto belōgyng, he let it out to hyer to husbandmen, and anon as he had so done, he went into a straunge countrey. And when grape time was cum, he sent his seruaunt to the same husbandmen, vnto whom he had set it out, to receyue of them the frute therof. But they being in a cōspiracie, toke ỹ seruaunte, & all to beat him, & sent hym home agayne emptie. This notwithstandyng A certain man planted. &c. And whē the tyme was come.

the gentle landlorde sent agayne an other of his seruauntes. But they now made worse throughe his lenitie and gentlenes, cast stones at him, & brake his heade, & sent him lykewise awaye agayne all to reuiled, without anye fruite, but laden w̄ iniuries. Yet for all that the same most gentle lord wēt not about in al haste to be auenged, but now ỹ thyrd time sent another seruaūt, & him also they slewe. Agayne after he had sent diuerse of his seruaūtes one after an other, the ende & conclusiō was, that eyther they bet thē all, orels slewe thē. He had then left his onely soone whome he loued tenderly.

And agayne he sent an other. &c.

And so when he had yet but one beloued sonne. &c.

Therfore because that of his wonderfull gentlenesse, he would proue all the wayes & meanes that myght be to reconcyle them, laste of all he sent him also vnto them, thinkīg thus w̄ him selfe: Although they haue despised my seruauntes, yet at the lest wise they will reuerēce this my sonne. But ỹ malice of the husbandmen cōquered al the lordes clemēcie & goodnesse. Whē they sawe how his sonne was cūme, then fell they in a conspiracie together for a more mischieuous purpose. Here now, said they is ỹ heyre: cūme let vs kill him, & by this meanes the whole heritage shal be ours. Then layd they handes on him, & cast him out of the vineyard, and slewe him.

But the husbandmē sayd among them selues. &c.

¶ What shall therfore the lorde of the vyneyarde do? He shall cumme and destroy the husbandmen and let out the vyneyard vnto other. Haue ye not red this scripture? The stone which the builders dyd refuse, is become the chief stone of the corner. This is the lordes doyng, and it is meruaylous in our iyes. They went about also to take him, and feared the people, for they knewe that he had spokē the parable against thē. And they lefte hym, and went theyr waye.

When the lord had made an ende of this parable, he asked the priestes, & scribes: What shal therfore the lord of ỹ vineyard doe vnto such husbandmen? They not marking wherevnto the parable or similitude tēded, so answered the lord that they gaue sentence directly agaynst thē selfes. He shall cum, saye they, & punishe the husbādmen, and set out the vineyard vnto other more faythful & trustie persōs. When Jesus had alowed this answer, he added a testimony out of the psalme, seking for an interpretacion of them who professed the knowledge of the lawe. Haue ye not read, saith he, this scripture folowing? The same stone which ỹ builders refused, is made the head stone of the corner. This was the lordes doing, & it is meruailous in our iyes. Here awakened they & perceyued how theyr mischieuous purposes were not vnknowē vnto Jesus: & vnderstod also ỹ theyr vncurable malice was playnly described by this darke parable. God committed vnto them his people, as a vinearde diligētly furnished w̄ all thinges belonging to the discipline of godlynes, to be wel husbāded. Then he, as though he had bene in a straunge coūtrey, suffered them to doe therwith what them liked. But they husbāded it to theyr owne profit & cōmoditie, & nothig for ỹ lordes behofe, who ought of ryght to haue receiued the fruite therof. Whē they were slacke & negligēt in doing of theyr duetie, he warned them therof by diuerse prophetes: but for all ỹ they waxed euery daye worse & worse, & at the length were ready to expulse Jesus his onely sonne out of Jerusalē, & put him to death: perswading them selfes that he being once slayne, they should be the onely lordes, and proprietaries of ỹ vineyard. But cōtrariewyse it was then to cum to passe, that by the moost iuste vengeaunce & punishmēt of god (whome they had so many tymes & ofte despised) the tēple, & soueraignitie of religiō should be takē quite frō them, & geuē to ỹ apostles.

Haue ye not red this scripture. &c.

For

For afterwarde Jesus (who was by them as a naughty stone, caste oute of the buildyng of the Synagoge) was contrary to their expectacion chosen by the will of God, to be the heade cornet stone, in the building of ỹ church, that should be builded both of the Jewes, and Gentyles: to thintent that he beyng the myddle, and vnmoueable stone, should holde together those two peoples, as it were bothe the walles of the same churche, in one euangelike and christen fayth.

They vnderstoode the Parable, they knewe the Prophecie, and yet blynded with obstinate malice would not tourne from their wickednesse, but for feare of the people that stode rounde aboute them, went their waye from Jesu entendyng to bryng aboute by prypye trapnes, and subtiltie, what they could not openlye doe. Surely there is none so mischeuous a kynde of manslaughter, as that whiche is cloked with a coloure of iustice and holynesse. They went about also to take him.

¶ And they sente vnto hym certayne of the Pharisees, and Herodes seruauntes to take him in his wordes. And assone as they wer come, they said vnto him: Master, we knowe that thou art true, and carest for no man, for thou considerest not the outward apparaũce of men, but teachest the way of God truely. Is it lawfull to pay tribute to Cesar or not? ought we to geue, or ought we not to geue? But he vnderstode their simulation, & said vnto them: why tempt ye me? Bryng me a peny ỹ I may see it. And they brought it. And he sayth vnto thẽ: whose is this image, and superscription? And they said vnto him: Cesars. And Jesus answered, and said vnto thẽ: Geue to Cesar the thynges that belong to Cesar: and to God the thinges whiche pertayne to God: And they maruayled at him. The texte.

Wherfore makyng as though them selfes had bene quiet, and no medlers, they set a worke certaine notable wicked personnes of the Pharisees, and the Herodians, whiche dissented in doctryne among them selfes, but in hatyng of Jesus agreed all in on. Oh folysche wisdome of this worlde. They that haue bene so oftimes put to the worse, do oft tymes cum again, and assayle hym, to thentente it maye appeare that they are at all layes vanquished, and in conclusion departe theyr waye, as vnequal matches to rope or encounter with Goddes wysedome. For nowe was it tyme that Satan (who of late assayled the Lorde, but went awaye with losse of victorye) should by his garde, and mynisters bryng forth all his artillarye and engins against him.

Therfore they that are set vp to playe this parte, goe vnto Jesus, and propoune vnto him a capcious question, because to seke some occasion of hys wordes and answeres therevnto, whereby they maye haue him condempned before themperours deputie. They begyn with a very flatteryng prohemie, as thoughe he could be deceyued with fayre wordes, who so ofte tymes declareth, howe there is nothyng that he knoweth not. Maister, saye they, we knowe ryght well that thou arte a teller of trouthe, and feareste no man, but frankely speakest the truthe without regarde of person. Neythet art thou any whit moued vp to the dignitie, or high auctorite of any man (as many other be, that flatter and coury fauour with potentates & great me) but (men contẽpned) thou truely teachest what god hath cõmaũded. Ther fore tell vs also we pray the: Is it lawfull for vs to pay tribute vnto themperour, or is it not lawful? The pharisees held stifly that the Jewes, beyng a people dedicated vnto god ought not to be tributories vnto Heathe Emperous, and worshippers of Idolles. For thou cõsiderest not.

On the other side, the Herodians defended themperours ryghte. This deceitfull pretence tended hereunto, that yf he had geuen sentence for ỹ phariseis, then should he haue ben accused of the Herodians for an authour of rebellio, or insurrectio against the peror. Jesus, vnto who their craft & wylinesse was not vnknowen, beyng not contented with them, for ỹ they came not to learne, but to tempt hym, answered: Why do you tempt me: bring me forth a peny that I may see it. And by and by it was brought hym. Their seruice was not to seke in makyng of the trayne, whiche came purposely to take him in a trippe. Then loked he on the peny, and saied: whose is this Image, & superscriptio? They answered: the perours. What is this: knewe not Jesus (vnto whom nothyng is vnknowen) the Image, or tytle of the perour: and did the Phariseis, & Herodians knowe it: Yes verily he knewe it wel inough, and that before he loked theron. But he sought an occasio to make a conuenient answere, vnto their deceitfull question. Here was an ensample geuen to declare howe they ought to knowe nothing of princes affayres, whose duetie it is, forasmuch as they profesle theselfes to be Christes vicars in earth, to preache and teache heauenly matters. Nowe heare an answer worthy to come out of Christes mouthe. Yelde ye, saith he, those thynges that pertayne to themperour, to themperour: & those thinges that belong to god, vnto god. He disaloweth not, if suche as are dedicated vnto god, geue vnto the perour, be he neuer so vngodly and wicked a prince, that, whiche is due vnto him for gouerning of the common weale, or what he otherwise violently (exacteth because ỹ losse of money doth not make men vngodly) but he monisheth vs, occasio seruing hi of a thing which is more to the purpose, ỹ is, how al ought to be yelde to god, ỹ is due vnto god. A vile piece of coyne had grauen in it a title, and ymage of themperoure. If thou knowest this tytle, and art content to geue vnto him his duetie, how much more then oughtest thou to yelde vnto almighty god (whose Image euery man beareth) what he ought of duetie to haue. When thou receyuedst Baptisme, Goddes image was printed and grauen in thy soule. Why doest thou then geue it vnto the deuell: Thou glorifiest in the name, and tytle of a Christia man: Why yeldest thou not vnto Christ, that thou owest him by reason of thy profession? All that were there presente marueyled at this discrete and wise aunswere. Two sectes of the Jewes were nowe put to silence with one saying.

But he vnderstode their simulacion.

And Jesus answered, & said vnto the

The texte.

There came also vnto hym the Saduceis, whiche saye that there is no resurrection. And they asked him, saying: Master, Moises wrote vnto vs, if any mans brother dye, and leaue his wyfe behynde hym, and leaue no chyldren, that his brother should take his wife, and rayse vp seede to his brother. There were seuen brethren, and the fyrste toke a wyfe, and when he dyed, lefte no seede behynd him. And the second toke her, and dyed, neyther lefte he any seede. And the thyrde in likewise. And seuen had her, and lefte no seede behynd them: Laste of al the wyfe dyed also. In the resurrection therfore, when they shal rise agayne, whose wife shall she be of them? for seuen had her to wife. And Jesus answered, and sayed vnto them: Doe ye not therfore erre, because ye vnderstande not the Scriptures, neyther the power of God? For when they shall rise agayne from death, they neyther marye, nor are maried, but are as the aungelles whiche are in heauen. As touchyng the deade, that they rise agayn haue ye not redde in the boke of Moyses, how in the bushe, God spake vnto him, saying: I am the god of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, & the God of Jacob, he is no god of the dead, but the God of liuyng. Ye are therfore greatly deceyued.

Then came the sect of the Saduccis, who denied the resurrection of bodyes dies,allouching man wholy to perish after death. Nether beloued they that there was any spirite or Aungell, wherein they dissented in opinion from the Phatiseis. These grosse felowes had also a capcious question wherwith to tempt goddes wisdome. Jesus dyd then take vpon him the person of an vnlerned and ignorant person: but that thing whiche in him was lowest, was hygher, and of more excellencie, then that whiche in them is highest. They assayled him on this wyse. Maister, Moyses in the boke entitled deuteronomium, hath left vs this lawe, that yf any maried man dye without issue, his next brother in age, should mary the wydow, and of her beget chyldren to beare the dead mans name. And yf he decease without children to, then the nexte vnto hym shoulde succede in his place or roume. And then asked him saying.

It chaunced that of seuen brethren the eldest maried a wyfe: he died without issue: Then came the next brother in age, accordyng to the prescripcion of the lawe, and maryed the wydowe: and he beyng lykewyse departed without chyldren, the thyrde brother succeded: and after hym all the other by course, vnto the seuenth, and last man. Eche of them one after a nother, maryed her, and eche of them deceassed without issue. At the length the woma also dyed herselfe. Therfore when the tyme of resurrection shall come, and the seuen brethren, & the woman shal reuiue, which of them al shal chalenge her for his wyfe: for in her lyfe time she was lykewyse maried vnto them al seue. The Saducels thought they would by this conuicte yt thei inferred to this case, make the resurrection of the dead to apeare a very fond thyng, and disagreable to reason: specially yf there should then ryse stryfe and debate among the brethren, for the wyfe, which was common vnto them all. Jesus grutched not to teache those grosse felowes, saying: Doeth not thys question plainly declare yt you be in a wrong belefe, and altogether out of the waye, forasmuche as ye neyther vnderstande the Scriptures, nor yet perceiue the power of almighty God? The scripture is spirituall: and god who made manne of naught, canne rayse hym agayne at his pleasure, from death to lyfe. He will not onely make the deade aliue agayne, but also rewarde them with lyfe euerlasting. Ther wer seuen brethren.

Nowe wedlocke was inuented among men, for this purpose, because the thyng (I meane mankynde) whiche of it selfe, and owne proper nature, continueth not for euer, might by procreacion and encreasing of yt world, be multiplyed, preserued, and continewed. But wheras men neyther dye, nor be borne after the common course of the worlde, what nedeth there any matrimony? For after the resurrection of the dead, neyther shal any mã mary, nor any man geue his daughter in mariage to an other: but as the angels of god in heauen, bycause there is among thẽ no mortalitie, knowe not the vse of matrimony: so shall they that shall be relyued in the general resurrection, be made like vnto the aungells, their bodyes beyng all spirituall & immortall. Furthermore why do you thinke it disagreable to reasõ to beleue yt the ded shal arise again? Haue ye not redde in holy scripture (yt auctorite wherof is coũted amõg you holy, and inuiolable) what god saied whẽ he spake vnto Moises out of yt bush? I am, saied he, the god of Abraham, the god of Isaac, & the god of Jacob. They were then dead, and yet doth he call himselfe their god. Therfore euen the dead do verily lyue, bicause their soules remayne still aliue. For whẽ they shall arise agayne.

And

And if it be so that their soules remayne, what greate nastry is it then for God to call them agayne into their olde bodies, wherin they dwelte before? But yf the dead be vtterly perished, so that neyther bodye nor soule remayneth alyue, then standeth it not with reason, that he is called the God of the dead. As no man glorieth that he is a kyng of those that are not: so is God the God of the lyuyng, and not of the deade. Wherfore you Saducees are farre deceyued, imaginyng that there shalbe nothyng in the lyfe to come, otherwise then you see in this present life. Those thynges no doubt haue a more true, and blessed beyng which are not vnder mans corporal sight, the those whiche are seene with bodely yes. There is nothyng that more truely is, then god, and yet he is not seene, but felt or perceyued.

Ye are therfore greatlye deceiued.

¶ And when there came one of the Scribes, and hearde them disputing together, and perceyued that he had answered them wel, he asked him: whiche is the first of al the commaundementes? Jesus answered him, The first of all the commaundementes is: Heare O Israell: The Lord our God, is lorde onely, and thou shalt loue the lord thy God, with all thy harte, and with al thy soule, and with all thy mynde, and with all thy strength. This is the first commaundement. And the seconde is like vnto this: Thou shalt loue thy neibour as thy selfe. There is none other commaundement greater then these. And the Scribe said vnto hym: wel, master, thou hast said the trueth, for there is one God, and there is none but he. And to loue him with al the harte, and with al the mynd, and with al the soule, and with al the strength, and to loue a mans neyghboure as hymselfe, is a greater thyng, then al burnte offeringes, and sacrifices. And when Jesus sawe, that he answered discretely, he sayd vnto him: Thou arte not farre from the kyngdome of God, and no man after that durste aske him any question.

Yet for all this these wicked felowes made not an ende to tempte Christ. After the Saducees, came the Phariseis, and the Scribes, who were encouraged to take him in hand, because he hit the Saducees in the teeth with ignorance of the lawe. For the Scribes and the Phariseis auaunt themselues more then other, for the greate knowledge they pretend to haue in the same: and dissenting in opinion from the Saducees, do beleue there are angels, and spirites: and that mens soules remayne alyue after the bodyes be deade: and finally that the dead shall rise agayne. These felowes beyng right glad that the Saducees were put to a foyle & blancked, and that Jesus had answered to their myndes, dyd like learned men, propone and put forth vnto him by one of the scribes, set vp for the nones to play this parte, a notable question out of the most inward mysteries of the lawe. They asked hym what was the chiefe, and greatest commaundement in the whole lawe. Jesus straight wayes answered them out of the boke entyled Deuteronomium, where as it is written on this wyse: Heare O Israel, the lorde thy God is one God, and thou shalt loue the lord thy god with al thy hart, and with al thy soule, and with all thy mind, and with al thy strength. This is the chiefe and the greatest commaundement: next vnto this, is that followeth: Thou shalt loue thy neybour none otherwise the thy self. There is no other cõmaundemẽt greater then these two, because they cõprise the sume & effect of ỹ whole law. When the Scribe heard him saye so, he said agayne: Thou hast wel & truly answered how there is one god, & none other but he, and that to loue him with al the hart, & with al thunderstanding, and with al the soule, & with al the stregth, is a thing which passeth al burntoffriges, and other sacrifices. Jesus perceyuing ỹ he had right discretly aunswered, said vnto him: Thou art not far frõ ỹ kingdõ of god. For ỹ euãgelike godlines stãdeth not in sacrifices of beastes, but in cleannes of spirit. Ye is not

farre frō this meanig, whoso preferreth ꝑ cōmaundemēt which is spiritual simple or playne, before all other preceptes, which be rather figures & tokes of true godlines, thē the thing self. But the cōmon sort of the Jewes belcue verily that the chiefest parte of vertue & godly liuyng, standeth in visible thinges: as in washinges, in keping of the sabboth daye, in choyce of meates, in offred giftes, in sacrifices, in holy dayes, in fastinges, & in long prayers. Whoso with all his harte loueth god for gods self (the whiche can neuer be loued inough) and his neybour for goddes sake: the same hath made sufficient sacrifice.

After that Jesu had thus with his wisdō euery where confounded & ouercome thē, than ceassed they to tempt him, least they should haue departed vō greater shame, if they had bene stil reproued in the presence of the people. They counted Jesus for an ignorant person, and auaūted & set out thē selfes among the simple & vnlearned people, what with their magnifike & hye titles, and what vō their tragicall & masking apparell, as though they had bene almost god almighties peeres. Howbeit the vnāgelike & godly wisdom, standeth not in the multitude of sciences, but in pureness of spirite. As Jesus was reputed among the Scribes, Pharisees, priestes, and head men of the people, so afterward were the apostles taken for rude & ignorante persons among the Philosophers, rulers, and princes.

And no man after ꝑ durste aske him. &c.

¶ And Jesus answered, and said, teaching in the temple: How say the Scribes that Christ is the sōne of Dauid? For Dauid himself inspired with the holy ghost, saied: The lorde sayed to my lord, sit on my right hand, til I make thine enemies thy footestoole. Dauid himself calleth him lord, and how is he then his sōne? and muche people heard him gladly.

But although the Scribes and Pharisees ceased to tempte Jesus, yet ceased not he to teache them. For when he had propounded vnto them beyng assembled altogether, a question, and asked whose sonne was Messias whom they wayted for: and they had āswered again out of the Prophetes: the sonne of Dauid: he moued a doubt that none of them all coulde assoyle, saying; how standeth it that Messias is the sonne of Dauid, since Dauid him selfe inspyred with the holy ghoste, speaketh in the Psalme as foloweth: The Lord said vnto my Lord, sitte on my right hand, til I make thine enemies thy footestoole. Sith thauctorite of the progenitoures is greater then is thauctorite of the offspryng and neuewes, by what reason the doeth Dauid call him, who shall be borne of his seede, his lorde? It is a like thig as though the father would call the sonne Lord. The Scribes, & the Pharisees, who had in thē the spirite of the flesche, as yet vnderstode not this mistery. Dauid inspired with the holy ghoste, sawe in Christe, who was not then borne, a thing farre aboue the nature of man, where as himselfe was notyng els but a man. Some when the Scribes, and Pharisees held their peace, and could make no answer hereunto, the moste part of the people fauoured Jesu, & had a great delite to heare him dispute & reason the matter.

How say the Scribes that Christ. &c.

¶ And he said vnto them in his doctrine: beware of the Scribes which loue to goe in long clothing, & loue salutacions in the market place, & the chiefe seates in ꝑ congregacions, & the vppermost romes at feastes, whiche deuour widowes houses, & vnder a pretence, make long prayers. These shall receiue greater dampnacion.

cious purpose, began openly to disclose their naughtines in thaudiēce of ỹ people: not because to backbite & slaūder thē: but he toke frō thē the visure of counterfait vertue & holines, lest they should frō thencefoorth any more deceiue the people. For now the time required ỹ he should so do. Therfore putting forth & preaching vnto thē his owne doctrine, ỹ is to saye, a franke doctrine, and suche a one as flattereth & coueth fauour wt no mā, he sayed: beware least the royal shew of the Scribes, & Pharisees deceiue you. They study not your soule health, but their owne glorye. For they couet to go in long roabes doune to the ankle, to thentent they maye appeare to be mē of greate perfection: and they seke after salutacions in the market place, & the preferment of the chiefe seate in assembles: and in all feastes, and bankets the first place or vppermost roume of the table. They vse also long prayers, because they maye seeme holyer then other. And by reason of suche coloured holinesse they crepe into the fauour of blessed and godlye widowes, but simple withal: whiche for diuers causes are apte to be deceyued, eyther because of the weakenes of their sexe and kynde, or for ỹ they be widowes, and lacke husbandes to defend thē, or els because they be ryche & wealthy. To thē come they of their owne swinge, vnder pretence to be their patrons, & defendours, & with their counterfayte holinesse deuour vp their houses. But so little shal this their Hipocrisy profite theim, that they shalbe more greuouslyer dampned of god, for so muche as they couered their naughtines with a colour of holy & vertuous liuing. Therefore take ye good hede of those, least ye be deceyued.

And when Jesus sate ouer against the treasury, he beheld howe the people put money into the treasury, & many that were riche, cast in muche. And there came a certayne poore wydowe, and she threw in two mites, whiche make a farthing. And he called vnto him his disciples, and saith vnto thē: Verily I say vnto you, that this poore widowe hath caste more in, thē al they whiche haue cast into the treasurye: for they al did caste in of their superfluitie, but she of her powertie did cast in al that euer she had, euen all her liuyng.

These thinges done, Jesus went into that parte of the temple where the treasury was, wherin the offered gyftes were kepte, and sitting directlye against it, beheld those that made their oblacion, and caste in giftes. And many riche folkes caste in greate giftes, whom the prieftes would therfore should be counted as it were, more holier then other, measuring their godlines, after the rate and measure of the gifte that they offered.

And many that were rich cast in much.

In the meane season there came also a certayne poore wydowe, and threwe in two lyttle pieces of coyne, whiche made a farthyng. There was none among them all that preferred not those ryche folkes before thys poore woman. But Jesus iudgement farre differeth frō the iudgement of the Scribes, and Pharisees, the whiche thyng he woulde not haue his disciples ignorant of. I tell you, sayeth he, for a certayntie, thys wydowe, be she neuer so poore, hathe geuen more to the treasury, then all the other, whiche seeme to haue geuen most lauishely. For the other gaue of their abundaunt superfluitie. They gaue muche, howbeit they reserued more to them selfes.

But she of her powertie.

But this woman of her lyttle poore substance, hath geuen all together, reseruyng nothyng vnto her selfe. For God doeth not esteme the gyfte after the measure and value of the thyng that is geuen, but after thaffection and mynde of the geuer. Jesus is pleased with suche a widowe, and dayneth to be her spouse be her spouse and confortor. The Synagoge like a proud housewyfe boasteth & craketh vpon the ryches of her righteousnes: she boasteth vpon her riche ornamentes of good workes: She gloryeth in her husbād Moises, vnto whom she was neuer obedient: She auaunteth her selfe, because the prophetes were her fonnes, whome she eyther slewe with wicked murther, or at the least wyse persecuted. She hath euer in her mouth, the Lordes temple, the lawe of God, the Patriarkes Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Israell. She goeth with her garde of priestes Scribes and Phariseys. But the churche like a poore wydowe hath nothyng to boast vpon. She knowledgeth lacke of good workes: and yet that lytle ỹ she hath, she wholy dedicateth and offereth vnto God. Nowe what can be poorer then suche a wydowe, as leaueth her selfe nothyng at all: She knowledgeth not Moyses to be her husband, because she knoweth not circumcision: because she abhorreth the sacrifices of beastes, beyng contented wholely to haue offred vp her selfe vnto almyghty God. The Lorde her spouse, inasmuche as he hath forsaken the yearthe, & is returned into heauen, semeth to haue forsaken his wydowe: whiche nowe, lyke a woman destitute of all succour, is spoyled, banished, imprisoned, afflicted, & oppressed bothe of the Iewes and Gentyles. She heareth dayly: where is thy spouse? It semeth that she wyll starue for hunger, which hauyng so smale substaunce, hath cleane forgone that lytle she had, and lefte her selfe nothyng. It semeth she wyll dye shortly wt reproche of baraynes, which hath lost her husband. But this widowe which after ỹ iudgement of the world is past al healpe, & vtterly vndone, the prophete Esaye conforteth on this wyse: Be ỹ glad thou barayne ỹ bryngest furth no fruit: breake furth and cry ỹ that trauailest not: for the desolate hath many mo chyldren then she that hath an husband. Do not we se that this prophecy is fulfylled? The synagoge is hongry, & dyeth. The churche is encreased, & spred abrode, triumphing in Martyrs, florishing in virgins, and reioysyng in so many thousandes of Confessours. She hath not one farthyng of her owne proper riches: but of her spouses riches, she hath tried gold, fine, and pure: she hath precious stones inestimable. For throughe sincere and pure fayth towardes her tyshe spouse, whatsoeuer he hath, she hath the same. The synagoge, albeit she semed to geue much vnto God, yet dyd she reserue more vnto her selfe then was sufficient.

Wylt thou see the synagoge geuyng her gyftes? heare ỹ Phariseye prayeing: I thanke the Lord, saith he, that I am not such a one as other men be. Nowe marke me how muche he reserueth vnto him selfe when he sayth: I faste twyse in the weke. I geue the tenth part of all my goodes vnto poore people. On the other syde, marke me the fashion of the wydow. She knocketh her brest, she dareth once not lifte vp her eyes to heaue warde, she doth nothig but cry: God be merciful vnto me a synner. The synagoge, whiles she craketh vpon her owne iustice, hath neyther any of her owne, nor yet gods iustice. The churche whiles she renoūceth & putteth away frō her al glory of righteousnes, & knowledgeth her owne vnrighteousnes, is enriched wt the iustice & righteousnes of her spouse.

The.xiii. Chapter.

The texte. And as he went out of the temple, one of the diſciples ſayd vnto him: Mayſter, ſee what ſtones, and what buildinges are here. And Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid vnto him: Seeſt thou theſe great buildinges? There ſhal not be lefte one ſtone vpō another, that ſhall not be throwen doune. And as he ſate on mount Oliuete ouer agayuſt the tēple, Peter, & James, and John, and Andrewe, aſked him ſecretely: tell vs, when ſhal theſe thinges be? And what is the ſigne when all theſe thinges ſhalbe fulfylled? And Jeſus anſwered thē, and began to ſaye: take hede leſt any man deceyue you. For many ſhall cumme in my name, ſaying: I am Chriſt: and ſhall deceyue many.

THere was nothyng in the temple ẏ pleaſed Jeſus, ſaue the poore wydowe onely, in the which tēple there was nothing els, but coūterfaite deuocion, & fayned holines. Let vs alſo who profeſſe our ſelues to be ẏ diſciples of Jeſu, departe out of the Jewiſhe tēple. Let vs ſet aſyde al truſt of carnal workes, & embrace the righteouſnes of the euangelike and chriſtian fayth.

Therfore our ſauiour departed thence to build another temple, whiche ſhould be holy and ſpirituall in dede: and of building ſo ſubſtāciall, ſure, & ſtrong, that the very gates of hell ſhould neuer be able to preuayle againſt it. When he was gone out, one of his diſciples ſayde vnto hym: Mayſter, behold howe great and houge are the ſtones of this temple, and what a ſtronge building is here: couertly meaning that it was a ſtronger piece of worke, then that it coulde by proceſſe of tyme fall in decay or ruyne. Oh Jewiſhe iyes. They outwardly maruayled at ſtones couched and heaped togethers by mans hande, as thoughe Jeſus had bene delited with ſuche a buylding. Jeſus anſwered agayne: Seeſt thou this great and curious edifice? There ſhall a tyme cum when there ſhall not one ſtone remayne vpon another vnthrowen doune: muche leſſe then ſhall the ſame buylding contynue for euer. Nowe Jeſus lotheth, and contemneth all that euer is ſene with bodily iyes, for the great deſyre he hath of this ghoſtly and ſpyrituall temple. As he ſat in that parte of mount Oliuete (where he chooſe his lodging for that night) from whence the temple of Jeruſalem myght be ſene, the diſciples called agayne to theyr remembraunce his wordes, wherby he had tolde before how it ſhoulde cumme to paſſe, that the ſayd temple ſhould be deſtroyed bothe ſtycke and ſtone, euen from the very foūdacion. For they ſuppoſed that the kyngdome of God, wheron they ceaſed not as yet to dreame, ſhould cum immediatly after the deſtruction therof.

Therfore foure of them, that is to wete, Peter, James, and John & Andrewe went priuily vnto hym as he there ſate, to the entent that lyke as he had ſhewed vnto a few perſons aparte, the myſtery of his trāſfiguracion, ſo ſhoulde he lykewyſe diſcloſe vnto them, being but a fewe, all the ſecretes concernyng the tyme when his kyngdome ſhould cumme and begyn: whiche thyng he would not perhappes open vnto all the other. And for this cauſe they ſayd vnto hym: Tell vs when theſe thynges ſhall cum to paſſe, and by what token we maye knowe when the ſame tyme is already cum & preſent. The Lorde who had already weded out of his diſciples al carefulnes for ſuſtenaunce, deſire of reuengement, and prouidence of lyfe, or forecaſtyng how to lyue, woulde alſo wede out of theyr mindes al ſuche curioſitie as maketh a man ouer buſy & inquiſitiue, to knowe ſuche thynges, as nothyng appertayne vnto his ſaluacion. Therfore he ſo tēpreth his wordes

On of his diſciples ſaid vnto him.

And Jeſus anſwered again

And as he ſat on mount Oliuete.

And Jeſus anſwered thē and began to ſaye.

des, that by the same he signifyeth not onely that the cytye of Jerusalem shall one day be destroyed, but also that after his departure, greuous stormes of persecucion shall arise agaynst the preachers of the gospell: and fynally that the ende of the worlde, or domes day shal cumme. But as it is expedient for all men to knowe how they shall one daye make an ende of this present life, to thentent they maye euer make them selues redy agaynst the same, so his wyll and pleasure was to haue his disciples fully persuaded that a tyme should likewyse cumme, when he would returne into the worlde agayn, a iudge bothe of the quicke and dead: but when ỹ time should cum, because it was not expedient, he would in no wise haue it knowen. Therfore he began to speake of these matters, in suche wyse as here ensueth.

Take hede leste any man dece. you.

Beware, sayth he, lest any man deceyue you. For there shall many cūme who wyll chalenge and take vpon them my name, and euery of them wyll fayne hym selfe to be Chryst, and by this crafty delusyon, deceyue manye vncircumspect persons.

The texte.

Whē ye shall heare of warres, & tidynges of warres, be ye not troubled. For suche thīges must nedes be, but the ende is not yet. For there shall nacion aryse agaynst nacion, and kyngdome agaynst kingdōe. And there shalbe yearthquakes in al quarters, and famishment shall there be & troubles. These are the beginning of sorowes. But take ye hede to your selues, for they shal bryng you vp to the cōsayles, & into ỹ Synagoges, and ye shall be beatē, yea, and shalbe brought before rulers & kynges for my sake, for a testimonial vnto thē. And ỹ gospel must first be published amōg all nacīōs.

The great busynes & rufflyng of the worlde, wyl shewe ỹ my cūming approcheth, and ỹ worlde is nigh at an ende. But you must not straightwayes when warres are moued, or when there is any terrible bruite or rumoure of warres to be moued, be so dismayd therewith, as though the same tyme were already present. For these thynges shall cumme, & yet shal not the end of the worlde furthwith ensue. They shall onely be preludes of the end that is to cumme, euen as in an olde mans bodye, diseases oftymes chauncyng, are foretokens that his body shall shortely decay and perysche. The temperature of the qualities, is the thyng whiche preserueth bodely health.

But when by reason the same qualyties do stryue one against another, the whole bodye is distempered, then is it an argument that the destruction thereof approcheth. There shall nacyon rise agaynst nacion, realme agaynst realme, and one of them go about with great powers, and hostes of men, to destroye another. Moreouer the yearth it selfe, as thoughe it were not content to norishe so wycked and vngodly people, shalbe shaken with yearthquakes, and so shall there be in sondry places of the worlde, greate dearthe and sampne, because it shall deny men theyr naturall foode & sustenaunce. Furthermore the ayre, as thoughe it were angry with the same vngodly folkes, vnworthy of lyfe, & breath, shalbe noysome, and deadly. When ye see many of these signes & tokens, yet loke ye not byanby for domes daye. For these euils shalbe onely the begynning of the calamitie to cum. Neyther shall your selues be free frō such euils & troubles. And therfore loke well about ye, lest ye be clapt in the neckes or ere ye beware. For men shall accuse you, and bryng you before counseils, & synagoges: and ye shalbe presented before kynges & rulers, to answere in causes of lyfe, and deathe: not for any offence, or euyl dede done on your behalfe, but onely for the profession of my name: & this shall they do, because all the worlde may knowe, howe they were worthely cast out of the kyngdome of God, sithens they

For there shall nacion arise agaynst nacion

But take hede vnto your selues.

For a testimonall vnto them. &c.

they so persecuted the preachers of the same. But lette not these thynges muche trouble your myndes. The cruelnes of wycked persons, shall bring nothyng to passe agaynst the procedyng of the gospell. Neyther can any man slea you before your tyme. For domes daye shall not cum, before the gospell be preached throughout all the worlde.

And the gospell must first be published.

¶ But when they leade you, and present you, take ye no thought, neyther ymagine afore hand what ye shal saye, but whatsoeuer is geuē you in the same houre, ꝑ speake. For it is not ye that speake, but the holy goste. The brother shall deliuer vp the brother to deathe, and the father the sonne, and the chyldren shall ryse agaynst theyr fathers & mothers, and shal put them to death. And ye shalbe hated of all men for my names sake. But whoso endureth vnto the ende, the same shalbe safe.

You nede not therfore to prepare you any worldly succours agaynst ꝑ violēce & tiranny of persecutours, or take thought how to escape their iudgemētes. When there is any accion cōmensed agaynst you, loke ye go, & appeare, lest ye seme to dispise ꝑ publike authoritie. For this thyng also shall make muche for the enlarging & spredyng abrode of ꝑ gospell. But when ye are goyng to appeare, be you not carefull, studying w your selfes what answere to make, & howe to tell your tale, for ꝑ ye are not sene in the lawe, but men ignoraunt in cyuill pleas: as the common sort of people are wont to be carefull in suche case, who make oratours & Rhethoricions theyr aturneys, and proctours in pledyng of matters. But whatsoeuer cummeth vnto your mindes, that speake you. For your selues shall not be authours of suche wordes as you shall speake, but instrumentes onely. The holy ghost shall speake by you, suche thynges as shalbe expedient for the bulynes of the gospell. But suche persecutions must ye not onely loke for of aduantes, and enemyes, but also of your frendes, and kynnesfolkes. For one brother shall take the lawe of another, & accuse him of deathe worthy crymes, all naturall loue & affection cast aside. And the father shall likewyse accuse the sonne, contrary to naturall loue and kyndnes. Furthermore the chyldren shal also rise against theyr parentes, & cause them to suffre death. And where as ye hurte no body, but bryng the tydinges of saluacion to all men: yet shal ye be hated of all them that loue this world, onely for the displeasure & malice they beare to my name, whiche you shall preache. But in all these euils it shalbe nedefull for you to be armed with perseueraunce & constancy of minde. For who so continueth in his good beginninges to the ende, shalbe safe, because no calamity is able to destrope him, that with cōstant heart and mynde beleueth the gospell.

Neyther ymagyn.

For it is not ye ꝑ speake.

The brother shall deliuer vp ꝑ brother.

And the father the sone.

And ye shalbe hated.

But whoso endureth.

Moreouer, when ye see the abhominacyon of desolacyon (wherof is spoke by Danial the prophet) stand where it ought not, let him that readeth, vnderstand. Then let them that be in Iury, flie to the mountaynes, & let him that is on the house top not go doūe into the house, neyther entre therin to fetche any thyng out of his house. And let him that is in the felde, not turne backe agayne vnto the thynges which he left behid hym, for to take his clothes with him. Wo shalbe then to them that are with chylde, & to them that geue sucke in those dayes. But praye ye that your flyght be not in the winter. For there shalbe in those dayes suche tribulacion, as was not from the beginnyng of creatures, (whiche God created) vnto this tyme, neyther shalbe. And excepte that the Lord should shorten those dayes, no fleshe should be saued. But for the electes sake whom he hath chosen, he hath shortned those dayes.

The texte.

If ye require a signe to geue you knowledge when this extreme calamitye hangeth ouer your heades: when ye shal see the abhominacion ꝑ maketh desolacion stāding in ꝑ place where it is not beseming it should stand, then let him whiche readeth Daniels prophecy, vnderstand it. For then it shalbe hyghe tyme for euery mā, al other thynges omitted and left vndone to shyft to shyfte for hymselfe by flyeng away, and to saue his lyfe, not by worldlye aydes, but by swyftnesse of flight. Then let al that be in Jewry, the flourishingest, and moost famous parte of the countrey, flye vnto the desert and wyld Mountaines. If this calamytie take any man on the house toppe let hym not go downe into the house, nor entre into his parloure, or chãbre to fetche out any thyng from thence: but as he is found: so let hym gette hym awaye, and be gone. And if at that season anye manne be labouryng in the fieldes naked, and without clothes, let hym not rũne home againe to fetche awaye his clocke, or mãtell, but flye strayght way some whither els: so swift shall ỹ cloud of ỹ miserie & calamitie be, which shal ouerflow this coũtrey. Therfore in wofull case shall they be which are great wt child, & they also ỹ haue children sucking on their breastes, because nature wil not let such as are wt child to cast awaye their burthen: nor natural kindnesse suffre ỹ other to flye away from theyr children. And the onely way to saue ỹ lyfe shalbe to flye without any tarying. Therfore desyre you of god, that this calamitye chaũce not in the wynter season, nor vpon the Sabboth daye. For ye must not onely flye away as fast as your legges will beare you, but also a great way of. But wynter seasõ because the daye is than short, is an yll tyme to flye far in. And ỹ law forfendeth to trauayle far vpon the Sabboth daye.

Then let thẽ ỹ be in Jewry etc. ꝛc.

And lette hym that is in the fielde.

Woe shalbe then to them.

But praye ye that youre flighte.

All that the Lord hath hitherto sayd, is spoken in suche wyse, that it semeth partly to pertayne to the destruccion of the citie of Hierusalem: partlye to the times of persecutions whiche were moofte sharpe, and vehement at what season Stephan was stoned to death: and partly to the laste ende of the worlde or domes daye. Yet is there included in the same wordes, a morall sence, whiche teacheth vs, howe that beyng delyuered from al worldly impedimentes, and encumbraunces, we ought alwayes to awayte for the cummyng of that day, when we shalbe presented before almyghtie god to receyue our dome and iudgement. He canne neuer be prepared agaynste that day, who eyther for loue of temporal thinges, or els thorow thenforcement of carnall affections, that is to saye, for his parentes, wyfe, or chyldrens sake, is called backe agayne to the daunger of the losyng of euerlastyng saluacion. He is laden with a vessell, whoe beyng ouercharged and letted with worldly ryches, ceaseth to do those thynges whiche pertayne to eternall health. He is burthened wt a mantell, whoe for takyng hede vnto ỹ bodye, regardeth not the soule. He is slow of foote by carryeng of an infaũt, whoe by reason of naturall affections, refrayneth not from those thynges whiche he knoweth ryght well are by al manour of meanes to be exchewed: ne hasteth to thattaynyng of those, whiche he knoweth ought (all lettes and impedimẽtes set aside) greatlye to be desyred. Wynter taketh them flying, who for the lytle lyght that theyr weake fayth geueth, and because charitie is colde and faynt in them, do not fynishe theyr iourney, and manfully goe thorowe whither they began to go.

Moreouer the superstitious obseruation of the Sabbothe bryngeth those persones in to daunger, who by reason of an vnryght and aukeward iudgement, tremble and quake for feare, where there is no cause of feare: & where they ought chiefly to feare in dede, are fearles: as when a mã is bold to trãsgresse the cõmaundement of God, for feare least he breake mãs constitucions. For ỹ Lord himselfe taught opẽly ỹ the Jewes Sabboth was

For there shalbe in those dayes.

Furthermore the wordes that ensue, seme rather to pertayne to the last daye of the worlde, before the whiche daye, great busynes, and hurly burly shall vniuersally happen for the cummyng of Antichryst. Those dayes, sayth he, shall be so full of miseries on euery syde, that there hath not bene lyke tribulacion and affliction from the creacion of the worlde vnto this daye, nor hereafter shalbe. If this affliction shoulde long whyle continue, as it shalbe fell, and cruell for the season, there should not one mā be saued. But God of his infinite mercy and goodnes, hath prouided ỹ this storme shall shorte while endure, for theyr sakes, whō he hath chosen to lyue euerlastyng. For of these he wyll suffre none to perysh, what storme of euyls soeuer shall arise. Wherfore there is no cause why any mā shoulde feare him selfe, so that he persever and abyde styll in the euangelike & christian fayth, as nighe vnto the shoteanker or surest refuge. No puissaunce shall caste them doune, whiche haue a constant beleife in me.

The texte.

¶ And then, if any mā say to you, lo, here is Christ: lo, he is there, beleue not. For false Christes, & false prophetes shal rise, & shal shewe miracles, and wonders, to deceyue, if it were possible, euē the elect. But take ye hede, behold, I haue shewed you all thinges before.

For false Christes and false prophetes. &c.

Onely take heede that in stede of me, you embrace not another Chryst. There shalbe more ieoperdy of deceyuers, then of persecutours. For there shal aryse in those dayes false Chrystes, who shal vntruly chalenge, & take vpon them my name, and person. There shall aryse also false prophetes, whiche vnder a cloke and coloured shewe of holines, shal fayne them selfes to be prophetes, and in worckyng of Magicall wonders, & miracles cloked by the crafty illusions of deuels, folow the prophetes, and me: so that euen the very elect (if any power could preuayle agaynst God) may be deceyued by suche legierdemayne, and iugling castes: Therfore if any man shal say vnto you: Loe, here is Chryst, beleue him not: or if any call you backe to another place, and say: loe, here he is: what place, what apperaūce of thiges, or what maner of honour or seruig of God soeuer he shewe you, beleue him not. For after that Chryst hath once forsaken the world, he cānot be shewed nor pointed to with fyngers, but wyl lye hid in mens soules, and this shalbe the signe and token to know where he is: when any doth with his lyfe, & conuersacyon expresse his doctryn, & put it in execution. Howbeit he wyll not cumme at domes daye, so as he nowe cummeth, but wyll sodaynly and vnloked for shew him selfe frō an hygh after the maner of a flasshe of lyghtening, dreadfull to the wicked, who shall be cast into euerlasting fyre: and agayne amyable & louely to godly persons, whiche shalbe called to the fellowshyp of the heauenly kyngdome. Therfore if you chaūce to liue in these dayes, beware ye embrace not in stede of me, some counterfayte Chryste. Loe, I haue told you all thynges before hand. There remayneth behynd, that you retayne and kepe my wordes in memory.

But take ye hede, beholde I haue &c.

The texte.

¶ Moreouer in those dayes after that tribulacion, the Sunne shall ware darke, & the Moone shall not geue her lyght, and the starres of heauen shall fall, & the powers which are in heauen shall moue. And then shal they se the sonne of man cūming in the cloudes with great power and glory. And then shall he sende his aungels, and shall gather together his electe from the fower wyndes, frō the ende of the yearth, to the vttermost parte of heauen.

Now after these forsayde calamities of warres, persecutions, famyne, pestilence pestilence, and earthy quakes be paste, there shal also ensue many other wōderfull signes and tokens out of heauen, al the elemētes beyng, as it were, yrefully let to take vengeaūce vpon the wycked people. For the Sūne, the fountayne of lyght, shal wex darke, therby as it were embrayding ỹ vngodly w̄ theyr blyndnes, because they would not see ỹ euerlasting Sūne & lanterne of ỹ world. Neither shal ỹ Moone, which is wont to shine in ỹ night, a put awey ỹ darknesse therof, geue her light ỹ she boroweth of the Sūne. Furthermoze men shal see the starres fall downe from the firmament to the earth, which haue bene so many hūdred yeares there fastened for mans behoue & commoditie. And besides this, the powers of the heauens (by vertue whereof those meruelouse bodies haue continued euen frō the creation of the world, their courses and offices appoynted thē of god) shalbe moued: so great shall the feare be of the dreadfull daye of dome approchyng.

The Sunne shal wex darke

The Moone shall not &c.

And the powers which are in heauen.

These thynges done, all that be then aliue, shal sodaynlye, and with the twynkelyng of an eye, see the sonne of manne (who is nowe taken for an vnderlyng, and not regarded) appeare in the hyghest cloudes wyth greate puyssaunce, and in the glory of the father, and with him innumerable multitudes of Aungels. Then will he sende out his Aungels, who wyl let none of his chosen be awaye, but wyl assemble them altogether frō euery quarter, whether they be quyck, or els dead, but must sodainly be reliued again: he wyll send them out, I say, to gather al the membres of the mistical bodie vnto their head, to thentent that thei which haue bene partakers of afflictions and persecutions for the gospelles sake, may lykewyse be companions and partakers with hym, of euerlastyng ioye and blyssfulnesse. It skylleth not whither that good mennes soules haue gone, neyther into what place their karkases haue bene throwen: Aungels shall fynde them oute, and gather them together from the fower quarters of the world: and againe from the hyghest pole of heauen, to the lowmoste. Euery soule shalbe toyned vnto his owne proper bodie, and al the electe and chosen people shal lykewise be conioyned vnto theyr head.

And then shal they see the sonne of mā.

And then shal he sende hys Aungels.

From the fower wyndes.

Learne a similitude of the fygge tree, when his braunche is yet tender, and bathe brought forth leaues, ye knowe that sūmer is neare. So in lyke maner whē ye se these thinges come to passe, vnderstand that he is nye, euen at the dores. Verely I say vnto you that this generatiō shall not passe, tyll these thinges be done. Heauen and earthe shall passe, but my wordes shall not passe. But of the daye and tyme, knoweth no man, no, not the Aungels which are in heauen: neither the sōne himself, saue ỹ father only.

The texte.

Nowe learne this parable of the fygge tree. When his braunche is yet tender, and bringeth forth leaues, ye knowe that sūmer is nye. So lykewise when ye se these thinges come to passe, vnderstande that he is nye, euen at the dores. Verely I say vnto you that this generatiō shall not passe, tyll these thinges be done. Heauen and earthe shall passe, but my wordes shall not passe. But of the daye and tyme knoweth no man, no, not the Aungels which are in heauen: neither the sōne himself, saue ỹ father only.

Nowe learne this daye come sodaynly vpon you, when ye are nothyng at all prepared, you maye gesse by certayne foresygnes and coniectures when it is nere hande, euen as ye maye coniecture and gather by the fygge tree that summer wyll shortly come. For when the braunches of this tree begyn once to waxe softe and tender, beyng about to bryng forth theyr fyrst fruite called grossi: and when the leaues be alreadye budded oute, ye knowe that summer is not farre of. But it is muche certayner that that day shal come, then it is certayne, that summer foloweth after wynter. This thyng do I auouche vnto you: This age shall not passe tyll al these thynges shal happen. Among corporal thynges there is nothyng more stable and sure then heauen: nothing more vnmouable then is the earth: but yet both heauen, and earth shall sooner alter and chaunge theyr nature, then my wordes be

vayne, & of none effect. Be ye not catefull to knowe certaynely when that same last day shall come, forasmuche as it is not geuen vnto the Angels to knowe it: no nor yet to the sonne himselfe. For the father hathe reserued this secrete knowledge to himself alone, because he perceyued it was expedient for your soule helth he shoulde so do. Be you most certaynly assured þ it shall come: but aske ye not when, lest by this meanes ye become careles.

But of that day and time

The texte. Take hede, watche, and pray, for ye knowe not when the tyme is. As a man whiche is gone into a straunge countrey, and hath left his house, and geuē his substāce to his seruauntes, and to euery man his worke, & cōmaunded the porter to watche. Watche ye therfore, for ye knowe not when the mayster of the house wil cum, at euē or at midnight, whether at the cocke crowyng, or in the dawnyng lest if he come sodaynlye, he fynde you sleppyng: and that I say vnto you, I saye vnto al, watche.

Beware alwayes and take good hede: watche & pray continuallye, since you are vncertayne when that dreadfull day shal come vpō you. You shall take good hede, if you wyl not trust vnto worldly aydes, neyther put confidence in any worldly creature: but wholy hang vpon me, & my cōmaundementes. You shall watche, if by refraynyng frō superfluitie, & al bodelye pleasures you wyll wholy bend youre selfes to holynes of spirite, & vertuous liuyng. You shal praye, if you wyl most feruently desire those thinges, whiche are prōmysed vnto them that styl persever and continue in the profession of the gospell. Satan hath his craftes to decepue, euen wyse, & circumspect persons. Agaynst these craftes you must vse the wysedome, and policy of the serpente. The world, & the flesche haue their entysynges, wherwith they so delite the myndes of reckles folkes, that (as I maye call it) slepe, securitie, and forgetfulnes of thinges eternall, crepeth vpon them ere they be ware. Of these thinges springeth eyther contempt, or els desperāce of the kyngdome of heauen. God wyll not cleane forsake his chosen, but he loueth wakefull and heedefull persons: yet wyl he that when they haue done what may be done by mans endeuoyre & diligence, they neuertheles cease not to praye, fully persuadyng themselfes howe it is God þ geueth þ beginnyng, procedyng, and consummacion of euerlastyng blisfulnes.

So watche you, as though God wyl forsake you for a tyme: so praye you, as though whatsoeuer ye go about, shall come to none effecte, wythout he put to his helpyng hand: And because the Lorde Jesus wouldc the deplier fasten this doctrine in the myndes of his disciples, he added a symilytude very fit for the purpose. When I shall forsake you, sayeth he, so demeane your selues, as faythfull and wyse seruauntes would do, vnto whome the Lord beyng about to make a voyage into a straunge countrey, hath geuen authoritie to order & guide his house: & hath assigned to eche of theim his worke, & office. Furthermore he hath commaunded the porter to watch for feare of night theues. These seruauntes, because they be vncertayne of their Lordes returnyng home, do styl endeuoyre them selues to do their office & duety, that whensoeuer it shall chaunce hym to come home agayne, he maye fynde them watchyng. It is more certayne that I shall cum agayne to you, then that their lorde shall eftsones returne vnto them. There maye some chaunce befall, that he miscarye whiles he is from home in the straunge countrey. But as sure as God is in heauen, I wyll come agayn, albeit the daye when, be to you vncertayne. Therfore do you as good and thryftie seruauntes are wont to do. Euer watche and loke after my retournyng. You cannot tell when the Lorde wyll come, at euen, or at mydnyght: whether at the Cocke crowyng, or in the dawnyng of the daye, least yt he come sodaynlye (as he wyll come in very dede) he fynde you sleapyng, and slacke, or negligent in doyng of your duetie.

That I speake to you, I speake by you, to al that shalbe borne vntyll the worlde be at an ende: watche you. Euerye man muste watche that wyll be saued: Euery man must do the worke that the lorde hath committed vnto hym, but especially and aboue all other, it behoueth the porter to watche, who watcheth for the safegarde of the whole familye. And although the people doe sometymes take a nappe, yet hath the shepehearde no leasure to slepe. Nowe is all this present life (wherin is no certayne difference betwene good thinges and bad, and wherin is exceedyng muche ignorãce or blyndnesse, and very litle lyghte) al thys lyfe, I saye, is in comparison of the life to come, nothyng els but nyght. And albeit that in the ende of the worlde the Lorde wyll come once for al, to all men generallye, yet commeth he also to euery man seuerally at the houre of death. Therfore euery man particularly ought to watche against this his cõmyng, because it is euen as vncertayne as the other. For he commeth vnto some late in the euenyng, as in growyng age: to some at mydnyghte, as when they are in their flowers, and beste lykyng: to other some at the Cockecrowing, that is to wete, in olde age. Ye muste neyther truste to your strength, nor to your age. The tyme and houre of death is lyke vncertayne to all menne.

And that I say vnto you

The. xiiii. Chapter.

After two dayes was Easter, and the dayes of swete breade: And the hie priestes and the Scribes sought how they might take hym by craft, and put hym to death: But they sayd: not in the feast daye, least any busynesse arise amonges the people. The texte.

NOwe that moste holye, and solemne feast of Easter drue nyghe, that is to say of Pase, which worde signifieth in the Hebrue tõgue, a passingouer, on ỹ which day the holy bloud of the vnspotted lambe shoulde delyuer vs frõ the vengeaunce of the sleying swerde, and beynge brought out of Egipt through the red sea, and wildernesse of this worlde, bring vs vnto the heauenlye Hierusalem, into a countrey flowing with mylke and honye. For the Iewes passeouer, whiche they yearelye celebrate and kepe moste highe and holye, was nothyng els but a figure and shadow of this sacrifice, like as was this ceremony, that they dyd on these dayes forbeare leauened breade: exhortyng vs hereby, to suche puritie and cleanesse of lyfe, as becommeth a professiõut of the gospell. After two dayes expired, the daye that they called the preparyng daye should be. But as the chiefe priestes and Scribes, deuoutly prepared and made themselues readie to celebrate thys corporall passouer, so dyd they lyke vnwyse felowes, wickedly make haste to offer vp that same true lãbe, whiche that solemne sacrifice had so manye hundred yeares figured.

And the hye priestes and the Scribes.

For nowe were they at a full poynt to slea Iesus; but because they durste not openly do it, for feare of the people, they thought good to lay hande vpõ him, hym, and put him to death by gyle and treason. And for this their purpose, that daye of all other, was most conuenient: to thentente the typyng of the new testament, should agree with the fygure of the olde. They them selues, dyd not chose this day, but it was fore appoynted vnto this sacrifice by the eternal decre and ordinaunce of the father.

But they say: not in ỹ feast daye.

For they counsayling together howe to slea Jesus, sayed: Not on the feast day, least there arise any busines and hurly burly among the people. Doubtlesse it is a Jewyshe feate, to stande in awe of menne, and all thys whyle nothyng to dreade god at al. Jesus knowyng the tyme was come, in the whiche it was the fathers wyl to haue that same euerlasting sacrifice to be made, departed not from Jerusalem, least he should haue semed to haue fayled at the place fore apoynted vnto this busines.

The texte.

¶ And when he was in Bethania in the house of Symon the leper, euen as he sate at meate, there came a woman hauyng an alabaster bore of oyntment, called Narde, that was pure & costly: and she brake the bore, and powred it on his head. And there were some that were not contented with themselues, and sayed: what nede thys waste of oyntment? For it myght haue bene solde for more then thre hundred pence, and haue bene geuen vnto the poore, and they grudged agaynst her.

When he therfore feasted at Bethany with his frendes, in the house of Symon, surnamed the leper, one of the geastes that feasted with hym was Lazarus. This house preseteth vnto vs, the agreyng, and frendely felowshyp of the church: the which beyng vncleane, he washed and purified with his precious bloude: and beyng dead through sinne, and vnrighteousnesse, he made aliue agayne by his death & passion. With suche persones, Jesus loueth to syt at table, rather then with the priestes, & pharisees, who thought themselues cleane and aliue, notwithstandyng they were suche in soule, as Symon and Lazarus were in bodye. As they thus feasted, ther came in a certayne woman hauyng an alabaster bore, full of pure, good, and precious oyntment, called the oyntment of right Narde: whiche brake her bore, and powred al the oyntment vpon the Lordes heade, as he sate there at the table. Jesus who was neuer delited with the pleasures and delicacies of this worlde, loueth to be anoynted with suche manoure of oyntment, after the spirituall meanyng. The churche is lauishe and prodigall in bestowing thys oyntmente vpon her dere and welbeloued spouse. What precious thyng soeuer she hath, the same reserueth she not to her self, but powreth it vpon Jesus heade, vnto whome all honour and glory is due. The house of ỹ churche is in most ample wyse enlarged & spred abrode throughout al the whole worlde: but the swete sauour, & fragrant smel of this ointment hath fylled euery corner & part therof. This swete sauoure alureth & causeth many a one to desyre that they may be admitted into ỹ same house, wherin Jesus sitteth at meate with his frendes. But ther be some which of spite & enuye, speake agaynst the delicacies of Jesu: as the Jewes, who rather seke theyr own profit, glory, & cõmoditie, then the glory & honour of Jesu Christ. For so dyd certayn of his disciples ỹ yet sauoured of the flesh, but specially Judas Iscariothe: who beyng not contented in his mynde, & muttryng with himself against this womannes facte, sayed on thys wyse: what neded it to waste or cast away this so pure good oyntment? For it myght haue bene solde for thre hundred pence, and with that money many a poore body haue bene relieued. And the losse of this oyntment greued the so so muche, that they made a great murmuring agaynst the godly prodigalitie of the woman. That thing is well loste, whiche is employed vpon Christes glorie: Yea, to saye the truth, ther is nothyng that lesse perisheth. The synagoge is sparing to Christeward, and wasteful or prodigal to her owne person. Contrarily, the churche regardeth not the price & valew of that she hath receiued of Christe, but breaketh the vessel, and rashlye powreth oute all that euer she hath, vpon her spouses heade. The poore wydowe whiche cast a farthing into the treasurie, pleased Christ highly. So doth this woman content hym also, which for his loue and sake, hath loste her precious oyntment. The widowe knowleagyng her pouertie, broughte forth all the poore substaunce she had, and caste into the treasurye: and the other beyng nowe riche, and wealthie through the lordes liberalitie, dyd not onelye geue hym al that euer she had, but also sustayned the losse of her vessel. The one gaue her goodes and lyuyng: the other gaue euen bodye and soule, yf that canne perysshe whiche is geuen vnto Jesu. Where be they nowe that grudge and murmoure agaynste this prodigalitie, which is so pleasaunte and acceptable to the authoure of grace? Christ geueth of his owne plentifully, to thentent that the good sauour of his liberalitie, maye the more be spred abrode. He requyreth no rewarde for any thyng he geueth: but here onely he is ambitious or desyrous of honoure. He willeth ỹ we knowleage hys well doyng and benefites, not because he hath any nede of suche prayse and commendation, but it hath pleased hym by this meane to geue vs hys gyftes and ryches.

¶ And Jesus sayed: let her alone, why trouble ye her? She hath done a good worke on me. For ye haue poore with you alwayes, & when so euer ye will, ye maye do them good, but me haue ye not alwayes. She hath done that she could, she came afore hand to anoynt my bodie to the buriyng. Verely I say vnto you: wheresoeuer this Gospell shalbe preached throrow out the whole world, this also that she hath done shalbe rehersed, in remembraunce of her. The terte.

The Lord (of whom alone it is sufficiēt to be alowed) defendeth ỹ godly diligence of the womā agaynst his disciples muttryng and murmuryng against her. Why, saith he, make you this businesse vō this womā? Suffer her to take her pleasure. She hath done me a good turne. For whereas you cloke your couetousnesse vō a pretence to socour the poore, know ye ỹ what soeuer is geuē to me, the same is geuen to a pore body. These cōmune pore folkes, & beggers, you shal euer haue vō you whō you maye do good vnto, & helpe as oft as ye wyll: but ye shal not alwayes haue me present, to wyn my fauour by such corporal benefites. I haue ben but once in my lyfe time thus honoured: and the thyng that is done, is not done to thentent ỹ many should take ensāple therby, to vse such manour of bodily refreshinges: but because al men should after the spiritual sence & meaning, do the like. This womā wotteth not what she doth, & yet vō a godly endeuoyre and diligence doeth she as much as lyeth in her to do. My death is nere hande, then wyll she desyre to anoynte my body ỹ must be buried. And because she shal not then haue tyme so to do, she preuenteth the tyme: & yeldeth me that honoure whiles I am alyue, which she can not geue me whē I am dead. But so true is it ỹ her godly endeuoyre (which you speake & murmoure against) shal not lacke it rendigne & worthy prayse, that where my death shal by preachyng of the gospell, be renoumed & spoken of throughout al the whole worlde, she For ye haue poore. She hath done that she could.

shall lykewyse be remembred and spoken of, because she honoured it with suche a gyft and present before I dyed.

The texte. And Judas Iscarioth one of the twelue, went awaye vnto the hie priestes to betraye him vnto them. When they heard that, they were glad, and promysed that they would geue him money. And he sought howe he myght conuenyently betraye him.

With these wordes the Lorde caused his disciples to cease their muttryng. But Judas Iscarioth one of the twelue (who vntruely dispensed ꝯ commõ money geuen for the relefe of the poore) could in nowyse suffer the losse of this oyntment, but went streyghtwayes vnto the hyghe priestes, to betraye Jesus vnto them. For it was not vnknowen vnto hym, howe they studied to take him by decepte and treason. After the hyghe priestes heard this, they were right glad. It pleased them very wel that one of household w̃ Jesu, should be the chief worker of this mischief. They agreed of the summe of money that Judas should haue for his labour. And there was mutuall fayth found in that wicked counsell, and conspiracie, whyche is sealdome kepte in honest and leafull couenauntes. Judas beleued the bare promise of the priestes, without eyther wrytyng, witnesses, or sureties. He ymagined with himselfe whiche waye he might betraye Jesu vnto the priestes, and Scribes after such a sort, as they desyred: that is to saye, in tyme, and place conuenient, least any busynesse or insurrection should aryse hereof. For this condicion was expressed in the couenaunt. In the meane tyme, whyles Judas, and the hye priestes counsayled together how for to destroy hym, Jesu went about the busynesse of mannes saluation.

When they heard ꝑ, they were glad.

The texte. And the fyrst daye of swete bread (whē they offred ꝑsalfouer) his disciples sayed vnto hym: wher wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the passouer? And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, & saith vnto them: Go ye into the Citie, and there shall mete you a man bearing a pitcher of water, folow him: and whitherfoeuer he goeth in, saye ye to the good man of the house, the mayster sayth: where is the geste chamber where I shal eate passouer with my disciples? And he wyl shew you a great parlour paued and prepared. There make ready for vs. And his disciples went forth and came into the citie, and founde as he had sayd vnto them, and they made ready ꝑ passouer.

Nowe was the fyrst daye of the feast of swete breade come, on the whiche daye the Jewes were wonte to offre vp theyr easter lambe. Therfore Jesus disciples sayed vnto hym. Whither wilt thou that we go, & prepare the thy easter souper? Jesus sent out two of them to make prouision therefore, saying vnto them: Go ye into the Citie, and assone as ye be entred in, ther shall mete you a man carryng a pitcher of water: hym folowe ye, and into what house soeuer he entreth in, saye these wordes to the good man of the house in my name. The mayster sayth, where is the soupyng chãber where I maye eate my easter lambe w̃ my disciples? and he shall streyght wayes shewe you a large soupyng chamber, paued, and all readie prepared for the feast ꝑ shalbe made therin. There prepare you for vs oure Easter souper.

Here marke me the simple obedience of the Apostles, suche an obedience as they also shewed before, when they were sẽt out to fetche the Asses foale. Marke also this, that there is nothyng hyd and vnknowen vnto the lord: so that it is manifest and playne hereby, that he both foreknewe, and wyllingly suffred whatsoeuer he suffered for our cause. Further, marke his authoritie. At the namyng of this worde (Lorde, or Mayster) the asse was by and by let go. Agayne at the namyng of the same worde, the souping chã-

The disciples went theyr waye, and came into the cytie, and found one carrying a water pitcher: whom they folowed, and entred into the house where he went in, and declared vnto the goodman of the house, theyr maysters commaundement. He without anye tarryeng shewed them a soupyng chãbre, wherin the disciples prepared theyr easter lambe, that is to say, the last, and mysticall souper, whiche shoulde bothe represent the figure of the olde lawe, and also sacramentally present and exhibite vnto them, the sacrifice of the newe lawe, and gospell. And his disciples went to the, &c.

¶ And when it was now euen tyde, he came with the twelue, and as they sate at borde, and dyd eate, Jesus sayde: Verely I say vnto you, one of you (that eateth with me) shall betraye me. And they began to be sorye, and to saye to hym one by one, is it I: And an other sayd, is it I? He answered and sayd vnto thē: it is one of the twelue euen he that dippeth with me in the platter. The sõne of mã truly goeth as it is writen of him, but woe to that man by whome the sonne of mã is betrayed. Good were it for that man, if he had neuer bene borne. The texte

In the euentyde Jesus folowed with his twelue disciples, whome only as chosen felowes, his pleasure was should be wytnesses of all that should be done in this mooste holye feaste or maundye. When they were all set at the table, and takyng theyr repast, Jesus sayde vnto them: I assure you ỹ one of you that eateth with me, shall betraye me. As he had so sayd, eleuen of them were stryken with greate sorowe and pensiuenesse. And as they sate at borde.

For there was none of them all that knewe him selfe fautye, saue Judas only. But yet durst they not truste to the weakenesse & frailtye of mans nature. Therfore eche of them desyrous to be delyuered of this pensiue carefulnesse by the lordes discrying of the traytoure, sayde vnto him: Is it I. Neyther was Judas, who knewe him selfe culpable, ashamed to say with the rest: Mayster am I he? Jesus, to shewe vnto his disciples a perfeite ensample of lenitie and meknesse, thought it better to suffre them a while to be troubled with heauinesse, then to bewrayе the traytour: vsyng all the wayes & meanes he coulde, to cause him to retourn from his wicked & mischieuous purpose. Therfore he sayde: It shall be one of the twelue, who is so familiare with me, that he dippeth in the same platter ỹ I doe. And this is the rewarde which he wyll geue me for my gentle and familiar entertainment. Nowe Judas perceyued that it was not vnknowen vnto the lorde where aboutes he wēt: and he sawe also suche meknesse in him, as the lyke had not bene heard of before. Jesus woulde not discrye him (of whome he should gnone after be mooste fallye betrayed vnto death) vnto the residew of his disciples, because they woulde peraduenture if the treason had bene opened, haue cruellye handled him for theyr maysters sake. But oh vncurable malice. What stone, what diamond woulde not so great gentlenesse make to relēt: specially of hym who could hurt and displease with a becke. But the same gentilnesse more encouraged the wretch to doe thys wycked and mischieuous dede. And they began to be, &c. He answered & said vnto them.

Then went Jesus forth wt his tale in this wyse: howbeit as cõcerninge me, nothyng shall be done otherwyse thē I will my self: but as the prophetes haue sayde and prophesied of the sonne of man, so shall it be. It is ex- The sonne of man truly.

pedient for a great many that he be delyuered & betrayed to death. But yet wo be to him through whose malyce and wyckednesse he shall be betrated. He procureth a thyng which shal be soule healthe to other, and to hym selfe vtter confusion. It had bene better for hym that he had neuer bene borne. Howbe it this wicked mynd, and purpose of Judas, was neuer a whit reformed, neyther with so great meknesse of the lorde, nor yet for dreade of ỹ great horryble punysshemẽt whiche he threatened him withall: so great a mischiefe is couetousnesse.

But wo to that man. &c.

¶ And as they did eate, Jesus toke bread, and when he had geue thankes, he brake it, and gaue it to them, and sayd: Take, eate, this is my body. And he toke the cup, and when he had geuen thankes he toke it to them, and they all dranke of it, and he sayde vnto them: This is my bloude of the newe testament whiche is shed for many. Verely I saye vnto you: I wyll drinke no more of the fruite of the vyne vntil that day, that I drynke it new in the kingdom of God. And when they had said grace, they went out to mount Oliuete. And Jesus sayth vnto them: All ye shall be offended because of me this night. For it is wryten: I will smyte the Shepherd, and the sheepe shal be scatered. But after that I am rysen agayn, I wyll go into Galile before you. Peter sayd vnto hym: And though all men be offended, yet wyll not I. And Jesus sayth vnto him. Verely I saye vnto the, that this daye, euen in this night before the Cocke crowe twyse, thou shalt deny me thrice tymes. But he spake more vehemently, no, if I should dye with the, I wyll not denye the. Likewise also sayde they all.

Furthermore in this souper, Jesus commended vnto his disciples that moste holy sacrament or signe of his deathe, and of the perpetual couenaũt made with those that would contynew in the euãgelike and chrystiã faith: for this cause he toke breade, and after thankes geuen to God the father, brake it, and gaue it to eche of them, saying: Take, eate, this is my bodye. Also he toke the cuppe, and after thankes geuen, gaue it them, and they all dranke therof. Then he sayde vnto them. This is my bloud of the new testament whiche shal be shed for manye. Be you well assured of this that I shall tell you: from hencefoorth I wyll drynke no more of the fruit of ỹ vine tyll that day that I drynke it newe in the kyngdome of god. Whẽ the souper was done, and grace sayd in the laude and prayse of god, according to theyr maniure and custome, the same night they departed from Jerusalẽ vnto mount Oliuete. We must euer thanke, & prayse God bothe in weale and woo. There Jesus knowing the frayltye and weaknesse of his disciples, prepared and strengthned theyr myndes, that they myght be able to suffre the storme of persecution whiche hãged ouer theyr heades. All ye, saith he, shall be troubled this night for my cause. And this thing dyd Esaye also prophecye of before. I wyll smyte, sayth he, the shepherd, and the sheepe shal be scattred abrode. But dispaire ye not. Ys my death shal trouble you, and cause you to disperse and scattre abrode: so shall my resurrection recõfort you, and gather you together agayne. For I will reliue, as I said, on the thyrde day, and being reliued, wyl goe before you into Galyle. After ye haue there sene me, you shall putte awaye all sorow and heuynesse.

And when they had said grace. &c.

All ye shall be offended. &c.

Peter sayde vnto him. &c.

And Jesus sayeth. &c.

When Peter, who as yet knewe not his owne weaknesse, hearde hym saye so, he answered againe very manfully, but yet rashely with al, saying: Although all the residewe be offended with thy death, yet truly will I not be troubled therwith a whit. Jesus desirous cleane to wede and pluck out of our myndes all truste of our selfes, sayth vnto him: O Peter, ỹ deniest that that thing shall be done, whiche bothe the prophetes, and I my selfe

(whome it had bene thy parte to beleue, and in no wyse to gayneſaye or cõtrary me with wordes) haue tolde before thal cumme to paſſe. O thou raſh promiſer: Yea, the ſtronger thou thynkeſt thy ſelfe to be, the more notably thalt thou be troubled aboue al other. This thing I aſſure the of: before ỳ cocke crow twiſe this ſame very night, thou ſhalt thryſe denye me. Yet is ỳ preſumcion of Peter nothyng abated herewith, in ſo muche ỳ he maketh a more ſtoute, and greater promyſe of hym ſelfe, then he dyd before, ſaying: Yea, if there be no remedy, but I muſt nedes euen dye with the, yet I wyll neuer denye the. As Peter ſayd, ſo ſayd the reſt of the diſciples, to thentent that they erryng together, ſhould be all refourmed together of theyr ercoure, and knowe howe vnable they were to doe anye thyng by theyr owne ſtrength and power: and fynally perceyue howe it was not poſſible for any thing to be vayne or vntrue, which came out of Chriſtes mouth. A litle before, they all agreed together in confeſſing truly whoe Chriſt was, and the commune opinion of them al was prayſed in Peter. Here they agree al together in a raſhe confidence and truſt of them ſelfes: and in Peter alone the raſhenesſe of them al is rebuked. Only Peter denied Jeſu, & the reſt would haue done the lyke, if occaſyon had ben geuen thẽ ſo to doe. For they would haue denyed him, if they had not fled awaie. The bolde ſtomacke of Peter, the whiche was more conſtant in hym then in the other, brought him into this daunger. None of all theſe thynges chaũced vnto the diſciples of any ſet malyce, as it happened to Judas, but onely through mans imbecillitie & weakeneſſe. And therfore Jeſus vſed ỳ obſtinate wickedneſſe of Judas. to our ſaluation: and would haue the wickedneſſe & frailtie of his apoſtles dyuerſely declared, becauſe to teache all other by them, how no man ſhould warrand hym ſelfe ought of his owne ſtrength, but when ſoeuer the ſtorm of yuels and aduerſities aryſeth, wholely to hang vpon the heauenly ayde & ſocoure: which ſo much the more preſently helpeth man, as he diſtruſteth his owne ſtrengthe and power. The apoſtles could not yet be reproued by worde: but the tyme would come when the experience of ỳ matier ſhoulde at the length, make them to knowe them ſelfes.

Likewiſe alſo ſaide they all.

And they came into a place which was named Gethſemany. And he ſayeth to hys diſciples: Sit ye here whyle I go aſyde, and praye. And he taketh with hym Peter, & James, and John, and bega to ware abaſhed, and to be in an agony, and ſayeth vnto them: My ſoule is heuy, euen vnto the death. Tary ye here and watche. And he went forth a lytle, and fell downe flat on the ground, and prayed that yf it were poſſible, ỳ houre myght paſſe frõ him. And he ſayd: Abba father, all thynges are poſſible vnto ỳ, take awaye this cup frõ me. Neuertheleſſe not that I wyl, but that thou wilt be dõe.

And he taketh with him Peter, &c.

Therfore they came into a place called Gethſemany. This Gethſemany is a valley lyeng at the foote of moũt Oliuete. No man can mount vp to the croſſe of Jeſu, vnleſſe he fyrſte cum downe vnto this valley: vnleſſe he humble and abaſe him ſelfe by renoũcing of all the aydes and ſocours of mans pryde and loftyneſſe. Here commaunded he the other eight to tarrie, and takyng vnto him three, that is to ſaye, Peter, James, and John, gate him awaye not farre of, becauſe he woulde geue hym ſelfe to prayer & contemplacion. Behold here the engynes, and artilerye of the goſpell againſt the violence of perſecutions. There were two thynges in Jeſu moſte contrarye: that is to wete, his diuine maieſtie, then whiche there was nothyng higher, or of more excellencie: and his humayn weakeneſſe, thẽ which there was nothyng

was nothyng more vile, or of lesse reputacion. Because vnto these three disciples he had geuen before somme taste of his hyghnesse & diuine maiestye, it was his wyll and pleasure they should nowe be wytnesses of his greatest abasing of hym selfe, and humilitie: to thintent that in the same Christ, they should learne, bothe what they ought to counterfayte and ensue, and also what to hope after. Here nowhere appeared his face all shyning, and glitterynge like the Sunne: nowhere his apparayle whyter then the snow: nowhere Moyses and Hely cõmunyng with hym: and to be shorte, no where was hearde the fathers voyce as it was before, but as a man vtterly forsaken and destitute of all helpe and socoure, he began to be sooze troubled in spirite, and dismayed with great anguishe and agony of mynd: for he was a very naturall man, and notablye expressed in hym selfe, what is wont to chaunce vnto those persones, who are nothyng els but men, whensoeuer any suche storme hangeth ouer theyr heades. Neyther dyd he cloke & dissemble the thyng among his frendes. I thorowly, sayde he, feele in my mynd sorowe and heuinesse vnto death. He sought for comfort euery where, and found none at all. But yet is it a certayne kynde of solace and comfort, to complayne vnto our frendes of our calamitie, though they wil not helpe vs. Therfore he commaunded also these three to tarrye here, and watche. That done, he went forth a litle, and as one cleane destitute of all worldly cõforte, & vtterly forlorne and past helpe (as touchyng mãs helpe) fled vnto ỳ father for socoure: of whome yet he should not by and by be eased of his greife. Wherfore he fell downe flatte on the grounde: and lying groueling, prayed the father, that (if it were possible) the tyme of this battayl might passe awaye. The nature of his bodye feared the tourment, and death that was nye hand. Abba father (sayd he) Thou canst doe all thinges: take awaye this cuppe from me, that I drynke not therof. Neuertheles let that be done that thy wyll hath decreed, whiche wylleth nothyng but what is moste expedient and best: & not as the weakenesse of this body desyreth.

And saieth vnto them

And he went forth a litle.

Abba father, al thynges &c.

¶ And he came and founde them slepyng, & sayth to Peter: Symon, slepest thou? Couldest not thou watche one houre? watche ye, and praye, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirite truly is ready, But the flesche is weake. And agayne he went aside, & prayed, and spake the same wordes. And he returned, and fond them a slepe agayne, For theyr eyes were heauy. Neyther wyst they what to answere hym. And he came the thyrde tyme, and sayde vnto them slepe henceforth & take your ease, it is ynough. The houre is comme, beholde the sonne of man is betrayed into the handes of sinners, ryse ye vp, let vs goe. Loe, he that betrayeth me, is at hand. And immediatlye, while he yet spake, commeth Judas (which was one of the twelue) and with him a great numbre of people, with swerdes and staues, from the hie priestes, and scribes, and elders. And he that betrayed hym, had geuen them a generall token, saying: Whosoeuer I do kisse that same is he, take hym, and leade him away warely. And assone as he was com, he goeth streight waye to him, and sayeth vnto hym: Mayster, mayster, and kyssed hym. And they layed theyr handes on him, & toke hym. And one of them that stode by, drue out a swerde, and smote a seruaunt of the hie priest, and cut of his eare.

Whē he had thus prayed, he returned vnto his three disciples whome he leste behynd hym and founde them now slepyng. And then called he Peter, who a lytle before had made so stoute a promise, saying: Simon, slepest thou? Couldest thou not watche as muche as one hour with me? This tyme admitteth no sluggyshnesse. For he slepeth not that goeth about to destroye vs. Watche, and praye, lest ye entre into temptacyon, because ye shall be in shall be in ieoperdie to be ouercommen therwith, if it cum vpon you when ye are nothyng prepared. The perill is like commune vnto vs all. I watch and praye for your healthe and safette: Do you likewyse watche, and praye as I doe, that you maye ouercomme with me. The spirite is ready, & wylyng, but the flesche is weake. The spirite must be stayed and stablyshed w̄ watchyng, and prayer, leste the flesche haue the vpper hande.

Whē Iesꝰ had thus spoken, he wēt eftsones to the place frō whēce he cāe, & made his prayers vnto the father, with lyke tenour of wordes as he dyd before: desiring hym, that he myght not drynke of the cuppe which was at hand: and anone he retourned to his disciples, and found them agayne sleping. They napped in the beholding of his maiestie, in so much that Peter wist not what he sayd. In like manour doe they here slepe in the beholding of his infirmytie and weakenesse, and know not wel what answere to make him rebukyng theim. Iesus retourned the third time from prayer vnto his sayde disciples: and the third tyme he founde them a slepe. Bothe they and we had perished, vnles Iesus had watched, and prayed for vs al. Therfore after they were wakened, he rebuked them because he would by them styrre vp and awaken all slewthfull persones. Slepe ye, sayde he, frō henceforth, and take your reast, You haue slepte ynoughe. The thyng selfe wyll nowe wake you whether you wyll or no. The very poynt, & moment of the tyme is already cumme. Loe, the sonne of manne shall anon be betrayed, and deliuered into theyr handes that are alredy set on mischief. Ryse vp, & let vs goe mete them. For nowe the Lord Iesus had by prayer made him selfe strong in mide agaynst the storme of afflictions ẏ was at hād. Neyther shewed he any tyme afterward any token of feare, or werines: but gaue vs an ensample of most constaunt & stedfast patience vnto the last houre. He had no soner spokē these wordes, but Iudas Iscarioth one of the nūbre of ẏ twelue chosen disciples, and amonges them taken for the chiefe, was cum, and with him a great bende of souldiers kensed with swerdes & staues agaynst Iesus beyng without armour, & weaponlesse. Neyther lacked there here authoritye. The hye priestes, scribes, and headmen of the people, sent this power. Here marke me (good reader) the notable conflict of the euangelike and christian godlynesse agaynst fayned and counterfayte holynes. Thus is the truthe of the gospell dayly assaulted: thus doeth it alwayes ouercome and get the victorye. There is none meter to betraye it then he, whoe professing himselfe to be a preacher & teacher of the same, teacheth those thynges that are of the flesche. There is muche more ieoperdye of false doctrine, then of the swerdes, and staues of souldiours that are notorious and open mysdoers. Yet dyd not Iudas well trust to his owne strength, and policie, when he should betraye the lorde. He toyned vnto him a great bend of souldiers well weaponed, and beslydes them, the authoritie of bothe the states, that is to saye, both of the spiritualtie, and temporaltie. And al these thynges dyd they in the nyght, hauyng awayted as well opportunitie of place, as of tyme. There must needes be moste horrible darkenesse, where Iesus is bound, and taken. This was the power of darkenesse: & Satan was suffered a whyle to seme to haue banquished and ouercome Christe. What greater blyndnesse could there be then to go about by mannes policie to betraye him, vnto whome nothing is vnknowē: then with swerdes,

And agayne he went aside.

And he came the thirde tyme, &c.

Behold the sonne of mā.

And immediatly while he yet spake, &c.

and ſtaues to aſſault him, whoe with a becke ranne doe what him luſte. Iudas dyd not openly ſhewe him ſelfe to be the capitayne of this vngracious compaygnie, but gaue them firſt a token, ſaying: whome ſoeuer I kyſſe, the ſame is Ieſus: Laye ye handes vpon hym, & leade him charely, leſt he ſcape from you. The prieſtes were well ware of this, that the money ſhould not be diſburſed vnleſſe Ieſus were in theyr handes and cuſtodie. Then began Iudas to goe a prety waye before the ſouldiers, as though he had gonne about ſome what els: but yet he went ſo before them, that he was euer in theyr ſyght. And anon as he was cumme vnto Ieſus, he ſaluted and kyſſed hym, according vnto his accuſtomed maneure. Neither dyd Ieſus here abate any parte of his gentylneſſe towardes the traytour. He onely nipped hym by the conſcience, ſaying: My frynde for what entent arte thou cumme? He knewe right well how he would neuer tourne from his wickednelle, and yet vſed he all the meanes that myght be, to reſourme hym: teachyng vs hereby to vſe all the gentleneſſe, and fayre means we can poſſible towardes ſynners, becauſe we be vncertayne whether they wyll one daye tourne and cum to amendment. If they amend, then haue we won the ſoule health of our euen chriſten: yf they amende not, yet ſhall not oure gentle demenure be vnrewarded. A kyſſe is a ſygne of mutuall loue and charitie. Charitie declareth vs to be the diſciples of Ieſu. Wherfore there is no greater poynt of enemitie, then a fayned kyſſe. Certes ſuch a kiſſe do falſe prophetes, euē in theſe dayes, gyue vnto Ieſu, which vnder pretence of chriſtian godlyneſſe, ſerue theyr belies, and ſeke after the prayſe of the world: and in ſtede of the ſpirituall fredome, teache a verye Iewiſhe religyon. At the token of this venimous kyſſe, the ſouldiours laide handes on hym, and bound hym. The diſciples when they ſaw this ruffling and buſynelle, waxed fumiſhe and angry. And nowe Peter cleane forgetting what the Lorde had tolde hym before, thought the tyme was cum wherin it ſhould be his part to doe ſomme worthy feate, according as he had right courageouſly, and like a bold mā promyſed to doe. He drewe out his ſwerd, and ſtrake the highe byſhops ſeruaunt called Malchus, becauſe he more fierſe then the reſt, firſt haſted to laye handes on Ieſus. Howbeit the Lord ſo ordred the ſtroke of his ryght hande, that he dyd Malchus no other harme, ſaue alonely cut of his right eare: the whiche the ſame moſt gracyous lord anone as he had rebuked his diſciple, reſtored agayne, & ſo made him amendes for the hurt of this ſmall and daungerles wounde. So beneficyall was Ieſus to all men, that we ought to be aſhamed to haue, ſo muche as a wyll or an entent to be reuenged vpō any mā: I wyll not ſaye to hurte ſuche, as hath not deſerued our diſpleaſure.

And he that betrayed hym had geuē them ꝛc.

And as ſone as he was come. ꝛc.

And they laid theyr handes on him. ꝛc.

And one of them that ſtode by. ꝛc.

The texte.

¶ And Ieſus anſwered, and ſayde vnto them: ye be cum out as vnto a theke, with ſwerdes and with ſtaues for to take me: I was daily with you in the temple teachig, & ye toke me not. But theſe thynges cum to paſſe, that the ſcriptures ſhould be fulfylled. And they all forſoke hym, and ranne awaye. And there folowed him a certayne yongman clothed in lynnen vpon the bare, and the yonge menne caught him, and he lefte his lynen garment, and fledde from thence naked. And they led Ieſus awaye to the hye prieſte of all, and with hym came all the hye prieſtes, and the elders, and ꝑ ſcribes. And Peter folowed him a great waye of (euen tyll he was cumme into the palace of the hye prieſte) and he ſate with the ſeruaūtes, & warmed him ſelfe at the fyre.

Further

Further, as Jesus will not be defended with any other aydes, then wyth the swerd of the gospel, ꝯ which pearceth to the innermost partes of mens hartes: so was it his wyll that this armed compaigny of souldiers shoulde knowe, that he could not haue bene apprehended by any puissaunce or power of man, vnlesse he had both willingly and wittingly put hymselfe into their handes to be taken. Therfore he tourned him vnto the, and saied: sirs what ayleth you to come out hyther to me at midnight, with swerdes, and staues, as vnto a theefe that would stand at his defence with lyke weapon? I was dayly at Jerusalem, not priuilye, but openly where euery bodye myght see me: in the place where most haunt & resort of people is, I meane in the temple: healing sicke folkes, & teachyng the truthe. I was euer weaponlesse, & accompanied but wt a small number of disciples, who were likewise without armoure and weapon. Why dyd ye not ther take me? Surely you might haue done it then with lesse businesse, yf it had bene so decreed.

I was dayly with you in ꝯ temple.

But this is your time: in so much that you may by goddes sufferaunce, do nowe to me what ye luste. And that it shoulde so be, the scriptures, whiche cannot lye, haue foreshewed many yeres sithens. When he had sayd so, there was but who myght first lay handes on hym: and anon the disciples fearing themselfes, forsoke their Lorde, and ranne away, some to one place, and some to an other. It is lawfull for weake persons to flye, who are not as yet mete & able to suffre persecution. Albeit there chaunceth a tyme, whe that to flye, is nothyng els, but to deny Christ. There must we not flye, but euen of our owne accorde hasten to dye. When that by thy deathe the Gospell taketh more disprofite, then commoditye, then flye awaye, and hyde thy selfe. But when that by the same, the gospell hath muche prophytte, and contrarily great disprofite and hinderaunce, if thou auoyde the daũger therof, then sticke not to go and mete the hangman. There was among the twelue, a certayne young stryplyng that loued Jesus more then the reste, & folowed hym weping ledde with his armes bounde like a captiue or prysoner: whose bare bodye was clothed with one fyne lynnen garmente onelye. Hym they knewe, & toke. But he caste of his lynnen vesture, and so escaped out of theyr handes, sauing his lyfe by the losse of his garmente. He that so flyeth after the spirituall sence flyeth happely. For what els is this bodye but the vesture & garment of the soule? As ofte as Satan layeth hand vpon the soule, passe not vpon the linnen garmente, and so saue thy selfe, and scape out of his daunger. Nowe beholde howe theuangelike veritie is hãdeled after it is betrayed of a wicked disciple. The cruel garison of souldiers leadeth it bounde to the chiefe menne of bothe the states, who are in a conspiracie to destroy it. Fyrste it is brought vnto the hyghest priest. Ther is no more mortall an enemy vnto Jesu, then is a wicked Bysshop. Nowe bicause the matter should seme to be done wt more auctoritie, thither assembled all the prynces, Scribes and elders. This is the authoritie of this world, whiche is in a conspiracie agaynst poore, simple, and playne veritie, but yet inuincible withal. All this while Peters harte fayled him not. Howbeit he folowed Jesus alooke, and was nowe a cloked disciple: and no meruayle, sithe the tyme drewe nere, when he would denye hym. For mannes bolde stomacke is good for nothyng els of it selfe, but to make the synner more outragiously to offend.

And they al forsoke him.

And there folowed him a certane yong man

And with him came all ꝯ hie prestes.

And Peter folowed hym a great way of.

Therfore he preased into the palaice of the hyghest prieste, and there sate a-midmong the lewde and vngracious companye of seruauntes, and warmed himself by the fier, as one that woulde be rather a beholder of the Lordes passion, then a folower.

¶ And the hye priestes, and all the councel, sought for witnesse against Jesu, to put him to death: & found none, for many bare false witnesse against him, but their witnes agreed not together. And there arose certain, and brought false witnesse against him, saying: We heard him say, I wyl destroy this temple that is made with handes, and within thre dayes, I wyll buylde another, made without handes. But yet their witnesses agreed not together.

In the meane season suche of the priestes as were chiefe in dignitie (among whom as euery one was highest in auctorite: so was the same more wicked then the other) and with them the residue of the councell, least they shoulde haue semed to be rather murtherers, then auengers of herely, and vngodlinesse, sought for some witnesse against Jesus, wherby they myght put him to death. They desyred nothyng els, but his death and destruction, who freely offered al men life euerlastyng. Yet coulde there no mete witnes be found. Jesus onely was he, against whom mans craftines coulde fynde no conuenient witnesse. For nowe there came in many before the Judges, who deposed against him, but their witnesse was so simple and sleder, that it appeared not to those moost vniuste felowes them selfes, sufficient to condempne him, whom they had in very dede condempned already among the selfes, before he was brought vnto his arraignement. At the lengthe there rose vp certain persons, who gaue fore euidence against him, saying: we wil denounce vnto you, suche thinges as we knowe certaynly to be true. For we heard him saye (with these eares) I will destroye this temple made by mannes handes, and after thre dayes expired, I wyll buylde an other, that shall not be made with the handes of man. They woulde that this sayinge should appeare to be a blasphemye spoken against the Lordes temple. Yet dyd not their witnesse (albeit to aggrauate the haynoulnes of the crime, it conteyned some truthe) seme lawfull, and sufficient.

For many bare false witnesse.

But yet their witnesses.

A man would haue sayed, that the iudges had taken conscience in the matter, and fauoured the defendaunte: Howbeit this dilygence of the priestes was for nothyng els, but bicause Jesus should not by any meanes be quit and escape this iudgement.

The texte. ¶ And the hye priest stode vp amongest them, and asked Jesus, sayinge: answerest thou nothyng? How is it that these beare witnesse against the? But he held his peace and answered nothyng. Agayne the highest priest asked him, and saied vnto him: Art thou Christ, the sonne of the blessed? And Jesus said I am.

Yet all this whyle is there nothyng done against him. There nedeth the helpe of the highest priest or bishop of all, to destroy Jesu. He therfore perceyuing ỹ the matter went but easily forward, rose vp in the middes of the councel, and began to speake vnto Jesus seking some occasion of his wordes, wherby he might condempne hym. Hearest thou, saith he, what crimes are layed vnto thy charge? Haste thou no answere to make hereunto? Jesus held his peace, and gaue him not a word to answere. For, for what purpose should he haue answered to those thynges, whiche them selues iudged but lyght matters, and of no waight? Therfore the highest Bysshoppe styl sought occasion, and questioned with him, saying: Art thou that selfe same

Christ

Chriſt the ſonne of God, who is euer to be prayſed: Jeſus cõfeſſed he was. For it was not his part to denye that thyng, whiche it behoued al men to knowe.

¶ And ye ſhall ſee the ſonne of man ſittyng on the ryght hande of power, and cõmyng in the cloudes of heauen. Then the hye prieſt rent his clothes, & ſaied: what nede we of any further witneſſes: ye haue heard a blaſphemy, what thynke ye? And they al condempned hym to be worthy of death, and ſome began to ſpyt at hym, and to couer his face, and to beate hym with fiſtes, and to ſaye vnto hym: Areade. And the ſeruãtes bufferred hym on the face. The texte.

And becauſe he knewe they would not beleue in hym, or at the leaſt wiſe would contemne him, by reaſon of the weakeneſſe of his bodye: he added an other ſentence to feare them withal. You ſhall ſee (ſayd he) the ſonne of manne ſitting on the right hande of the diuine maieſtie, and cummyng on hygh in the cloudes of heauen, with great glory, and many aungels waityng vpon hym. He meante of his ſeconde cummyng: when he wyl retourne, not lykewiſe lowe as he was then, but in diuine maieſtie, a iudge both of ỹ quicke, and deade.

The wicked prieſtes wer ignorant in the lawe: yet might they haue lerned of the Phariſeis, that both the cummynges of Meſſias, were prophecied of by the prophetes: the one not regarded and paſſed on, the other royal, and dreadefull. But they had no leyſure to compare Jeſus dedes, wyth the prophecies, and foreſayinges of the Prophetes. All that euer they wente aboute was nothyng els, but to bryng him to deſtruction. Here the hygheſt prieſt clokyng his wickedneſſe with a vyſure of Godlyneſſe, rent and tare his clothes, therby to make the blaſphemye to appeare more haynous and deteſtable. Then the hye prieſt rent his clothes.

What nedeth there, ſayth he, any further witnes: your ſelfes haue heard an open blaſphemye. The wicked Byſhoppe deſyrous to ſet forth his own glory, couldе not abide to heare Chriſtes glory aduaunced: ſuppoſing that what glory and praiſe ſoeuer had bene geuen vnto Chriſt, ſhould haue ben to the great derogacion and miniſhyng of his maieſtie. Woodneſſe cauſed him a litle before to riſe out of his place: and yet in ſo doing, he gaue reuerence vnto the ſonne of God. Nowe dothe he rente his clothes, propheceying hereby, howe it ſhall come to paſſe, that the true byſhop raignyng, the carnall and figuratiue biſhophode ſhalbe cleane aboliſhed and ſet aſide. The glorious ſynagoge was rent, but Chriſtes coat remayneth ſtil hole. What is farther from blaſphemye, then to ſet forth the glory of the ſonne of god: then to teſtifye that all ſhall come to paſſe, whatſoeuer the Prophetes haue propheceyed to cum: And yet the vngracious biſchop iudgeth this to be ſuch a blaſphemy, as nedeth no witneſſes. What, ſaith he, thynke you herein: All they with one conſent gaue iudgemẽt that this ſaying was an offence worthy of death. Forſothe a mete & a worthy counſell for ſuche a prieſt. Nowe is it to be conſidered howe theuangelike veritie is entreated in ſuche counceis, where as a wicked prieſt, who faine would be taken for a god, cannot abide to haue the glory of the ſõne of god auaunced: where the Scribes do not vtter what they haue learned of the Prophetes: where the head men, & elders of the people, be in a conſpiracie with the chief prelates of the temple: where ſuche waged ſeruauntes, and hyred ſouldiers beare a ſtroke, as are of their owne naughty diſpoſicion enclyned to al myſchiefe. What thinke ye. &c.

For

And some began to spit at him.

For nowe some of them beganne to spitte at Jesus, as thoughe he had bene lawfully condempned: and other some couered his face with a vayle, and after they had buffeted him, sayed: Prophecie, and reade who hath striken the. Thus they reprochefully scorned hym, because he suffred the people to take hym for a prophete. Furthermore the priestes seruauntes dyd lykewise beat & buffet hym. These thinges wer more fell, and cruell then death: but this ensample was ordeyned for our enstructiō. In suffering of reproche & vylanye none passed Jesus: but in worcking of miracles there were some, that went beyonde him.

The texte.

¶ And as Peter was benethe in the palace, there came one of the wenches of the hiest priest, and when she sawe Peter warmyng himself, she loketh on hym, and saith: wast not thou also with Jesus of Nazareth? And he denyed, saying: I know him not, neyther wote I, what thou sayest. And he went out into the porche, & the Cocke crewe. And a damosell (whan she sawe hym) began agayne to say to thē that stode by: this is one of them. And he denyed it again. And anone after they that stode by, said again to Peter: surely thou art one of them, for thou art of Galile, and thi speache agreeth therto. But he began to curse, and to sweare, saying: I know not this mā of whom ye speake. And againe the cocke crewe, & Peter remembred the worde that Jesus saied vnto him: Before the cocke crowe twise, thou shalt deny me thrce tymes. And he began to wepe.

Whiles al these thinges wer done vnto Jesu, Peter being a fearful beholder, sate in the neither parte of the palace among the wicked bishoppes seruauntes. For there was a conuenient place for him, sithe he would deny Jesus. Hither came a certayn wenche of the highest priest, which, after she had espyed hym warmyng himselfe with other by the fier, and had iyed hym diligently, began to knowe his shape and phisnamye, and sayed vnto him: yea thou to wast with Jesus of Nazareth. Peter fraied with these wordes denyed it, saying: I knowe not the man, nor wote not what thou meanest. It was cōuenient that this stowte promiser, bycause he myght the better knowe his owne frayltie, shoulde be made afearde of a wenche, to thentent that he afterwarde boldely professing the name of Jesu before rulers, and princes, should knowe that his boldenesse and constant courage of minde, came not of mannes strength, but of the holy ghoste. He therefore beyng nowe afearde, and halfe mistrusting that place, gate him oute of the hall. Yet departed he not out of the byshops palace. Whiles he abode here, the cocke crewe. Peter heard that, & yet remembred not what Jesus had tolde him: so greatly was he afrayed. Then a certayne damosell (when she sawe him) began to detect him again to thē that stode about her, saying: Thys is one of theyr number. Peter eftsones auoyded her saying with a lye, denying flat that he was any of the Apostles. And anon after when the seruauntes whiche stoode by whyles the damosell knewe and discryed hym, had them selues well vewed his fauour & apparayle, they lykewyse began to know him, and sayed: Verilye þ art one of them. For thou art of Galile. The firste that detected him was a woman. Oh what a peril it is for Christes disciple to be knowen in bishops, and princes courtes? Vnlesse he vterlye denye hymselfe to be Christes disciple, he standeth in ieoperdye to lose his lyfe. Peter is also in ieoperdy, by reason of his mother tōgue and countrey languag. Suche manoure of courtes can abyde no syncere and pure veritie. Nowe shall Peter at the length, be made a right courtier vp and downe.

And he denied saying.

And a damosell when she sawe him.

And thy speache agreeth therto.

For he

For he beginneth to sweare depely, and to curse withal, that he neuer in al his lyfe time knewe this Jesu, whom they spake of. And as he had spoken the worde, the cocke crewe agayne. Peter came not to himselfe agayne, before Jesus loked vpon him. Therfore at the length callyng to his remembraunce the wordes that Jesus had spoke vnto him, when he sayed: before the cocke crowe twise, thou shalte thrise deny me: He wente forthe of Cayphas house, and brast out a weppyng. Yet wente he not to hange himselfe, as Judas did, bicause he fell not of obstinate frowardnesse, but by mās frailtie and weakenesse, and that by the sufferaunce of God, bicause his fall should be our instruction. But this showre of teares which brast out of his yes, quenched the lightenyng of Goddes wrathe and anger. He wepte not to fore he was gone out of Cayphas palayce. For there the more naughtipacke that euery one is, the more he estrmeth and fauoureth himselfe.

Peter remembred þ word

And he began to wepe.

The. xv. Chapter.

The texte.

And anon in the dawnyng, the hie prestes helde a counsayle with thelders and the scribes and the whole congregacion, and bounde Jesus, and led hym away and deliuered him to Pylate. And Pylate asked him: Arte thou the kyng of the Jewes? And he answered and sayd vnto him: thou sayest it. And the hye prestes accused him of many thinges. So Pylate asked hym agayne, sayng: Answerest thou nothyng? Beholde howe many thinges they lay vnto thy charge. Jesus yet answered nothyng, so þ Pylate meruayled.

L that nyght was spente in Cayphas house in destroyng, mockyng, and skornyng of Jesu. In the mornyng early after they had counsayled together afresh, the hye prestes, with the elders, Scrybes and al the whole assēble, led him awaye with his armes bounde, & deliuered him vnto Pilate to be iudged: whō they had with their fore iudgemēt alreadye cōdempned. Nowe are they of iudges become accusars. Pylate, their accusacions and complaintes heard, called Jesu, & asked him: Art thou that same kyng of þ Jewes? Jesus answered: Thou sayest: couertly knowledgyng and confessing that he was the selfsame. Yet was Pilate not a whit moued with this answer, bycause there apeared nothyng in hi, wherby he semed desirous of any worldly kingdō. Furthermore the hye prestes, lest he should by any meanes haue bene quit, gathered together diuerse criminal articles agaynst him, to thentent that amongest many matters, ther should at the least wise be sum thig to fine, which would moue any iudge not beyng to vniust, and partiall, to geue sentence against him. Pilate perceiuing howe al was done of pruate displeasure and malice, sought occasiō to discharge him of such matters as he was arraigned for. Therfore whē he came again vnto Jesus, & Jesus would geue him neuer a word to answere, thē sayd he vnto him: Makest þ no answere, seth thou art in so great daūger to lose thy life? See howe many articles these felowes lay against the. Jesus from thencefoth made no answere, who desired not to escape this iudgemēt, lest the veritie of his death, should haue bene let or hindred therby, and also bicause he knewe righte

well that the malyce of the pryestes woulde not yet haue ceased, although they had not this way preuayled against him. For thys cause his wyll and pleasure was so to dye, that it myght appeare that he dyed willyngly. The Emperours deputie, albeit he were a paynim yet dyd he abhorre the murthering of a man, whom he iudged to be an innocente and giltlesse person: and therfore vsed he all the wayes and meanes he could possible, to delyuer him. For he sawe well there was no healpe to be had on his behaike, whereby he myght so doe.

The texte. ¶ At that feast Pilate dyd deliuer vnto them a prysoner, whom so euer they would desire. And there was one that was named Barrabas, whiche laye bound with them that made insurrectiō: he had committed murther. And the people called vnto him, & began to desyre him that he woulde do, accordyng as he had euer done vnto them. Pilate answered them, sayinge: wyll ye that I let lease vnto you the kyng of the Iewes? For he knewe þ the hye pryestes had deliuered hym of enuye. But the hye pryestes moued the people that he should rather deliuer Barrabas vnto them.

There was a custome among the Iewes that at the feast of Easter, one of them shoulde be lewsed which lay in prison for any deathworthy offece: whom so euer the Iewes desired to be geuen. At that season there was in durance a certaine notable felon, much spoke of for his vngracious dedes, named Barrabas, who had bene a sturrer vp of sedicion in the cyte: & in the busines, and hurly burly that he made, had cōmitted manslaughter. Pylate determined with himself to vse this occasiō to saue Iesu. Therfore when the people were cummen together, accordyng to their auncient custome, to desire to haue some fellon pardoned, in token of their safe deliueraunce and scappyng out of Egypte, Pylate answered in this wyse: I haue two prisoners, Barrabas whom ye knowe, and Iesus whome men call the kyng of the Iewes. Wyll ye therfore that I lewse vnto you Iesus? Pilate perceyuing that he coulde haue no ayde and helpe of the pryestes, went vnto the people bicause to haue had some ayde and assistence of them, trusting þ by their fauour, Iesus should haue bene deliuered. And so had he bene without faile, if the malicio⁹ bishops (neuer weary to worke mischief) had not moued them rather to desire to haue Barrabas pardoned, then Iesus.

But the hye pryestes moued þ people.

The texte. ¶ Pylate answered agayne, and sayd vnto them, what wyll ye then that I do vnto hym whom ye call the kyng of the Iewes? And they cryed again: crucify him. Pilate sayed vnto the, what euyll hathe he done. and they cryed the more feruently. Crucify hym. And so Pylate willyng to contente the people. let lose Barrabas vnto them, and deliuered vp Iesus (when he had scourged him) for to be crucified.

When this thyng had so chaunced, contrary to the deputies expectacyon (for he hearde say that Christ was hyghly in grace and fauour with the people) yet ceassed not he to helpe him, as much as in him laye. What the, saied he, will ye that I doe with the kyng of the Iewes? lokyng to haue hearde of them a more fauourable and gentler sentence. But here the wylye Bishoppes were very circumspecte, who had before hande infected the myndes of the comminaltie with their wickednesse. Neyther is the auctoritie of suche Byshoppes good for any thyng els, but to moue Prynces, & the people against the truthe of the gospell. The people therfore cryed agayn: crucifie him. The byshops had also beaten into their heades, that the shamefullest kinde of death of al, should be chosen out for him: bycause his name should hereby be coūted detestable and cursed among all the Iewes. For the lawe pronounced him cursed, who so hanged in wood.

So studied

So studied they not onely to bereaue him of his life, but also vtterly to extynct and abolysshe his good name, whiche was a fact muche cruellet then deathe. They could not abide that any mans name should be coũted holy, saue theyrs. Neyther did Pylate here yelde vnto theyr furye, but spake hard agaynst them, saying: I am the emperours deputie. It is not lawfull for me to put any man to deathe, vnlesse he be duely conuicted. What offence hathe he done wherfore he ought to be crucyfied? Here the deputye nothyng preuayled. For they cryed out more furiously: Crucify hym. Yet for all ỹ Pylate sharãs not in Chrystes cause, tyll they laid vnto his charge treason agaynst the emperour. It was not conuenient that Jesu shoulde be done to death, excepte the emperours authoritie had serued the furye of the byshops. Pylate perceyuing what daunger hanged ouer his heade, on the one syde, of the emperour, on the other, of the clamourous people, albeit he knewe ryght well that Jesus was an innocent and harmeles persõ, yet wylling to yelde & confourme hym self to the mortall hatred of the byshops, Scrybes, elders, and people, gaue sentence of death agaynst hym: but wt the same sentence he both cleared the innocent of al crymes, and also condemned the prestes, and people. For he pronounced hym to be innocent & giltles, whome he let them haue to crucifye.

Pylate sayd vnto them.

And they cryed.

And so Pylate wylling to content the people.

Suche maner of Pylates shall the truth of the gospel euermore haue: and would to God there dyd not aryse among vs some byshops, which are farre beyound those byshops in all mischiefe & vngraciousnes. Whẽ therfore Jesus was cõdemned to deathe, he was fyrst beaten with scourges. But when the Jewes were not here with satisfied, Pylate deliuered hym to the garysõ of the souldiers to be crucifyed. So it pleased the hygh wysedome of God ỹ Jesu the fountayne of all glory, should be put to al kindes of vilany, by all sortes of people: to the entent we should not be dismayed with any maner of worldly euils or aduersities. Judas betrayed hym: the bishops, Scribes and headmen of the people counsailed together: ỹ seruaũtes toke him: Cayphas the highest priest, chief worker of all this mischief cõdemned hym: the Councell, and theyr seruauntes scorned him as a condemned person: the people cryed out agaynst him like mad folkes: ỹ Emperours name maketh the iudge afrayde: Herode dispiseth: the emperours deputie geueth sentence: and in all theses Cayphas, & in him the deuyll.

And deliuered vp Jesu whe they had scourged him.

And the souldiours led hym away into the common hall, & called together the whole multitude, & they clothed him with purple, & they platted a croũe of thornes, & croũed hym withall, and began to salute him: hayle kyng of the Jewes. And they smote him on the heade with a rede, and dyd spite vpon him, and bowed theyr knees, and worshypped hym.

Nowe remayneth there behynd, that the wycked garison of souldiers do lykewyse play theyr partes, & among the also was Cayphas. All the shame & villany that Jesus was put vnto: all his distruction (if it may be sayd ỹ he was destroyed) came of Caiphas, who vnwares wrought a thing moste blessed and holy. For he made this sacrifyce, without which no man could haue attayned saluacion. When therfore Jesus was cast and iudged to dye, Pylates seruauntes led him into the hall of the palace. For the Jewes, who were desyrous to seme holy, durst not entre into the palace of a Panym, because they would come pure & cleane to celebrate theyr Passeouer. And yet was theyr myndes in the myddes of the Palace, and in the very handes of the souldyours, whom beinge of theyr owne enclynacyon ready to do all myschyef, they prouoked and encensed therunto.

After Pylate had once delyuered his handes of Jesus, he thought it made no great force howe he were done to death. So dyd Herode fauour the vertue, and goodnes of John, that at the requeste of a peuishe wenche he caused his head to be stricke of. Howbeit ỳ fauour of Pylate was more constant then so, but yet in conclusyon he deliuered hym to be crucyfyed. And this was done lest any that professeth the truth of the gospell, shoulde trust vpon any worldly ayde and succour. Then the souldyours, because they would the more take theyr pleasure on hym in putting hym to shame and villany, called together the whole garyson of theyr companions: and in mockage, clothed him with a garment of purple, as it had bene wt a kinges robe: thē put they on his head a croūe platted of thornes, in the stede of a diademe, and being thus disguysed, they began with one voyce to salute hym, saying: Hayle kynge of ỳ Jewes. Furthermore they strake his head with a rede, whiche they gaue hym in his hande in the stede of a scepter: and dyd also spit vpon hym, and bowyng theyr knees, worshipped him. Jesus all this while helde his peace, and pacyently yelded to all theyr dispiteful doynges, transportyng vnto his owne persone that shame & villany, which was due vnto our offences, because to aduaunce vs vnto his glory.

And called together the whole multytudes, &c.

And they smote him.

The texte. And when they had mocked him, they toke the purple of hym, and put hys owne clothes on hym, and led hym out to crucifie hym. And they compelled one that passed by called Simon of Cyrene (the father of Alexander and Rufus) whiche came out of the felde, to beare his crosse. And they brought hym to a place named Golgatha (which is, if a man interprete it, the place of dead mennes sculles). And they gaue hym to drynke wyne myngled with myrre, but he receyued it not.

These thynges done, they tooke of agayne the purple garment, & put on his owne clothes, to thentent that carying his crosse among myscloers, he myght be deserned, and knowen of euery body. And this the malycious prelates caused to be doue, because they wouldе the more alienate and with drawe all mens myndes from him. As they were going to the place of execucyon they met a certayne felowe called Symon of Cyren (the father of Alexander, and Rufus) cōmyng from his ferme: whom makyng refusall to beare Chrystes crosse, the souldiers (notwithstandyng he was a ryche man and of theyr acquayntance) dyd of a soudiourly malapertnes compel maugre on his heade to beare it: not because to fauoure or ease Jesus, but for the spedier finishing of the execucion. Some men necessitie constrayneth to embrace the crosse of Jesu: But this is a blessed necessitie that draweth a man to saluacyon. The Apostles enforced no man to go to Chryst: but the souldiers vsed compulsyon. Howbeit the vyolence of these naughty packes hath bene many a mans saluacyon. They brought him into a place slaunderous & reprochefull, by reason that suche as trespased ỳ lawe ther suffered execucyon: called in ỳ Syrian tong, Golgatha, and in Latyn Caluaria, the whiche worde implyeth in Englysche a place of dead mens sculles. There gaue they hym wyne myngled with myrre, to drynke. For wyne is customablie geuen to men, when they be a passyng. Howbeit that wyne, for so muche as it was corrupted with the bytternes of the Jewes, Jesus receyued not when it was offred him. For a lytle before he dranke with his disciples, and woulde not drynke agayne of the fruite of the vine, tyll he should drynke it newe in the kyngdome of God. He hated the bitter wyne whiche the vyne of the Jewishe synagoge brought him furthe, that was become bitter vnto her lorde, and tyller: and in stede of type grapes. yelded the fruite of the wylde vyne. He hated the vyne of wycked persons, and thyrsted for a nother kynde of wyne. That was, the newe wyne of the spirite of the Gospell, the whiche spirite after his ascending vp into heaue, he most plenteously powred vpon his disciples.

The texte. And when they had crucifyed him, they parted his garmentes, castyng lottes vpon them what euery man should take: and it was aboute the third houre. And they crucified hym. And the tytle of his cause was writtē: the king of the Iewes. And they crucified with hym two theues, the one on the ryghthād, and the other on his left. And ꝑ scripture was fulfylled whiche sayth: he was counted among the wicked.

When Jesu was lyfted vpō the crosse, those that crucified him, parted his clothes amonge them: and for his cote (whiche was wrought in suche wyse that it could not be deuided) they cast lottes, whose fortune it should be to haue the whole. Nowe consydre the pouertye of Jesus, who had nothyng left hym in yearth. He hangeth in the myddes betwene heauen and yearth. So must he be naked: so must he be lyghted of al burthens: so must he be high, that will encountre with the enemy of mans saluacyon. When Dauid should fight with Golyad, he cast awaye all the armour & weapon of Saule, whiche did rather burthen him, then do hym any stede. It was the thyrd houre of the daye when they nayled hym on the crosse. There was set vpon the toppe of the crosse the tytle of the cause wherfore he suffred, whiche was this: The kynge of the Jewes: wrytten in three languages, that is to saye, in Hebrue, Greke, and Latine. And with him they crucyfied two theues, in suche wyse that one of them honge on his tryght syde, and the other on his left, on eyther syde enuyrōning hym hanging in the myddes. And this was done by the procurement of the wycked priestes, because to make his name shamefull. The prophet Esay prophecyed it should so be, saying: He was reckened among the vniust and wycked.

And it was about ꝑ third houre.

And they crucified with him.

The texte. And they that went by, rayled on hym, wagging theyr heades, and saying: A wretche thou that destroyest the temple, and buyldest it in three dayes, saue thy selfe, and cum doune from the crosse. Lykewyse also mocked hym ꝑ high prestes among the selues, with the Scribes, and sayd: He saued other men, hym selfe he cannot saue. Let Christ the kyng of Israell descēd now from the crosse, that we may see and beleue. And they that were crucyfied with hym checked hym also.

Neyther could the malicious bishops, & Scrybes yet be satisfyed with these so great euyls and manyfolde displeasures. For syrste the Jewes passyng by the crosse, rayled on hym as he honge theron: and as it wer vpbraydyng hym now ouercom, sayde vnto him in derysion and mockage waggyng theyr heades wal: A wretche, thou that destroyest Gods temple, and buildest it agayne within three dayes: Nowe shewe what thou cāst do: Put furth this myght & power wherupon thou braggest: saue thy selfe if thou be able, & cum doune frō the crosse. Neyther dyd the hygh bishops or priestes vse any gentler language vnto hym, who with the Scrybes skorned him among them selues, saying: He hath saued other, but hym selfe he is not able to saue: He hath made his vaunt howe he was Christ: he bragged that he was the kyng of Israell. If his promyses be true, let vs see hym nowe cum doune from the crosse, & then wyll we beleue on hym. The prieſtes entended by theſe reprochefull wordes cleane to withdrawe al me from the beleefe of Jeſu. So are the Martyrs euen at this daye oft tymes ſcorned, & with like reprochefull wordes rayled on in theyr martyrdome, & corporall tourmentes: ſo is the verytie of the goſpell berated & laughed to ſcorne of the myſcreauntes, whiche is many tymes ſo hardly handled, ỹ it ſemeth to be vtterly oppreſſed.

Yet ceaſed not this outragious raylyng agaynſt Jeſu. The .ii. theues that were crucyfied wt him, rebuked the innocent as they hong on ỹ croſſe. But here alſo did Jeſus accordyng vnto his name. For he ſaued one of them.

The texte. And when the firſt hour was cum, darknes aroſe ouer all the earth, vntyl ỹ ninth houre. And at the nynth houre, Jeſus cryed wt a loud voyce, ſaying: Eloi, Eloi lamazabathany, which is (if one interprete it) my God, my God, why haſt ỹ forſaken me? And ſome of them ỹ ſtode by, whē they heard that, ſaid: behold he calleth for Helias. And one rāne & fylled a ſponge full of vynegre, & put it on a rede, & gaue him to drink, ſayig: let him alone. Let vs ſee whether Helias wyll cumme, and take hym doune.

And at the nynth houre. At the ſixte houre there aroſe a darkenes, whiche couered all that land: and endured tyll the nynth. Then Jeſus deſtitute of all mans helpe, cryed vnto the father with a loude voyce, reciting out of the pſalme the prophecy whiche was ſpoken of him before: Heloi, Heloi, lamazabathany, the whiche wordes interpreted, are as muche to ſaye in Engliſhe: as my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? When ſome of thē that ſtod by heard him ſpake theſe wordes, and vnderſtod not wel the Hebrue tong, they ſayd: He calleth vpon Hely. There be many ſuche falſe prophetes, and interpreters of ſcripture, euen in oure tyme, and euer ſhalbe tyll the worldes ende, whiche expounde ỹ wordes of Jeſu, no better then thoſe ſcorners did. Thē when he cryed agayne: I am athyrſt: there ranne one vnto hym, & raught him a ſponge full of vynegre, faſtened to a rede, ſaying: Let hym alone: let vs ſee whether Hely wyll cum, & take him doūe fro the croſſe. When he had eftſones taſted the vynegre, he would not drink therof. He thyrſted another wine, whiche they would not geue hym, that refuſed to beleue the goſpell.

And ſome of them that ſtode by.

And one rāne and filled.

The texte. But Jeſus cryed with a loud voyce, and gaue vp the ghoſt. And the vayle of the tēple did rent in two peeces, frō the toppe to the bottome. And when the Centuriō (whiche ſtode before him) ſawe that ſo he cryed, & gaue vp the ghoſt, he ſayd: truely this mā was the ſonne of God. There were alſo women a good way of beholding hym, amōg whome was Mari Magdalene and Mari the mother of James the lytle, & of Joſes, and Mari Solome (whiche alſo whē he was in Galyle, had folowed him, & miniſtred vnto hym) and many other women whiche came vp with him vnto Jeruſalem.

Jeſus (all thynges fulfylled) gaue a great ſkryke, and therwith yelded vp the ghoſt. And byanby the vayle of the temple whiche diſſeuered thoſe thynges that the Jewes counted moſt holy from ỹ ſyght of the multitude or common people, was rent frō the vppermoſte part to the loweſt. Shadowes ceaſe, and baniſhe awaye, aſſone as verite commeth once to lighte. Neyther ſhould it be any more nedefull for any prieſt to entre into the ſanctuary, after that ſacrifice was once offred vp, and made: whiche alone was ſufficient to purge the ſynnes of the whole worlde.

And when the Centurion. Nowe when the capitayne ỹ ſtode ryght agaynſt Jeſus, as a mynyſtre, and wytnes of his deth, who had ſene many a one before put to execution, ſawe howe that contrary to the manoure of other, he yelded vp the ghoſt and dyed immediatly as he had geuen this great ſkryke, he ſayde: Truely this man was the ſonne of God.

See here the fyrst fruites of the gentiles, confessyng the vertue, and power of Christ. He that confesseth hym to be a man, and the soone of god: confesseth him to be both God, and manne. Albeit the captayne as yet vnderstode by the sonne of God, a man notably beloued of god.

Marke this also, howe our sauiour is euerye where a sauiour. When he was a dying on the crosse, he saued one of the theues. And anon as he was deade, he drewe the captayne vnto the profession of Christen fayth.

There were also women that stode a good waye of, and beheldе al that was done: among whome was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the lesse, and of Joses: & Mary Salome, the whiche all the whyle that Jesus continued and taught in Galile, folowed hym, & ministred vnto hym of their substaunce: and besides these, diuerse other, whiche likewise folowed hym in his voyage to Jerusalem. There were also women.

¶ And nowe when the euen was come (because it was the daye of preparyng, that goeth before the Sabboth) Joseph of the citie of Aramathia, a noble counsaylour, which also loked for the kyngdom of god, came and went in boldly vnto Pilate, and begged of hym the bodie of Jesu. And Pilate meruayled if he were already dead, and called vnto hym the Centurio, and asked of hym whether he had bene any whyle dead. And when he knew the trueth of the Centurio, he gaue the body to Joseph. And he bought a lynnen clothe, and toke him downe, and wrapped hym in the lynnen clothe, and layed hym in a sepulchre that was hewen out of the rocke, and rolled a stone before the doore of the sepulchre. And Mary Magdalene, and Mary Joses, beheldе where he was layed. The texte.

When the euentyde drewe nye, forasmuche as it was the preparyng day, so called, because it was the euen of the great Sabboth: ther came one Joseph of the citie of Aramathia, a noble, and a ryght worthy senatoure, who lykewyse hoped after the kyngdome of God. This man because he hada good opinion of Jesu, was bolde through the affiaunce of his nobilitie, to go vnto Pilate, and desyre of hym the bodye of Jesu. Pilate meruayled yf Jesus beyng but a yong man, were already dead: because manye had bene wonte to liue two or three dayes after theyr legges were broken. And Pilate meruayled.

Therfore he called vnto hym the Capitayne, who stode by the crosse, and demaunded of hym whether he were already dead, or no: And when by his informacion he was wel acertayned that he was dead in very dede, he gaue the bodye to Joseph. For Jesus as long as he lyued, suffred hymselfe to be beaten and spit vpon of wicked persons.

But anone as he was deade, he claymed his dignitie, and woulde not be hādled but of godly persons, no nor somuch as be sene but of his disciples, who were appoynted to lyue euerlastyng: teachyng hereby, that no manne should chalenge his dignitie in this worlde. Let amā by honour, and dishonour, by glory, and reproche, only endeuour hymselfe to finysh the businesse of the gospell. For dignitie beginneth neuer to florysshe tyl after death.

Joseph beyng ryght ioyefull that he had obteyned so precious a gyfte, boughte a piece of fyne lynnen clothe, and therin wrapped the bodye, and layed it in a newe sepulchre hewed out of free stone: and then rolled a great stone to the doore or entrye of the sepulchre, that no man should lyghtly cōueye awaye the body by stealth.

But

But of the women whiche beheld the lord when he dyed, two folowed him vnto the sepulchre: that is to wete, Mary Magdalene, and Mary Joseph, marking where the bodye was layed, to thentent that they myght at tyme conuenient thyther repayre, and honourably perfourme the solemnities, & ceremonies belongyng vnto burials, accordyng to the manour and vsage of that nacion.

The. xvi. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And when the Sabboth was paste, Mary Magdalene, and Mary Jacob, and Salome bought swete odoures, that they might cum, & anoint him. And early in ỹ morning, the firste day of the Sabboth, they came vnto the sepulchre when the Sune was risen, and they sayd amõg themselues: who shal rolle vs awaye the stone frõ the doore of the sepulchre? And when they loked, they sawe how that ỹ stone was rolled away, For it was a very great one. And they wet into the sepulchre, & saw a yõg man sitting on the right syde, clothed in a long garment, and they wer afrayde.

BEcause that on the preparyng daye (on the whiche day the lorde was buried a litle before the euentyde, immediatly after the Sunne settyng) it was not lawfull to doe any worke for the reuerence, and high solemnitie of the Sabboth: these women ceased for that tyme to make further prouision for spices, as they began to do, awaytyng for the ende of the nexte daye folowyng. And anon as the Sunne was gone to glade, and the tyme come agayne when menne might lawfully retourne to theyr busynesse, thẽ came Mary Magdalene, Mary of James, and Salome with spices readie prepared, to enoynte Jesus. And early in the morneyng vpon the fyrste day of the Sabothes (the whiche folowed nexte after the Sabboth was ended, & was the thyrde day frõ the preparing day) these wel disposed wemẽ came to ỹ sepulchre, what tyme the element waxed nowe fayre and bryght about the Sunne rysyng: and sayed one of them to another: who shall rolle vs awaye the stone, frõ the doore of the sepulchre? The stone was great, and hougie: and it passed womans strength to remoue it. And they loked aboute yf they coulde gette anye body to helpe them: & in the meane whyle that they thus loked backe, they sawe the stone already remoued to theyr handes. Then anone as they were entred into the doore of the sepulchre, they sawe a yong man sitting on the right syde of it, clothed with a long white garment. With this sighte, thoughe it wer a tyght ioyfull syght, and a token of good lucke, yet because it appeared sodaynly, and at vnwares, they were amased.

The texte, And he sayth vntõ them: be not afrayed, ye seke Jesus of Nazareth whiche was crucified. He is ryssen, he is not here. Behold the place wher they had put him. But go your waye, and tell his disciples, and Peter, he goeth before you into Galile, ther shal ye see hym, as he sayed vnto you. And they went out quyckly, and fled frõ the sepulchre. For they trembled, and wer amased, neyther sayed they any thing to any mã, for they were afrayed.

But by anby an Aungel recomforted them with swete & pleasaũt wordes, saying: you haue no nede to be afrayed. You seke Jesus of Nazareth, who was nayled on the crosse. He is rysen: he is not here. Behold the voide place where they had put his body. Therfore all this that you haue prepared to honour and reuerence hym with all, is superfluous.

Get

Get you hence rather, to shew vnto his disciples, beyng greatlye dismayed with their lordes death: but especially vnto Peter (who because he denyed him thryse, is twyse as sore as the rest) Get you hence, I say, to shewe them howe Iesus wyll go before them into Galile. Thither let them folowe. Ther shall you se him alyue, whome ye nowe bewayle as deade. But these wemen, what for great ioye and gladnes, and what for the feare they were in by reason of this straunge syght, fled out of the Sepulchre, and spake not one worde as long as they were there: so greatly were they afeard. And they wēt out quicklye.

¶ When Iesus was ryssen early the fyrst day after the Sabboth, he appeared firste to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had caste seuen dyuels. And she went and told them that wer with him as they mourned, and wept. And they, when they heard that he was alyue, and had appeared vnto her, beleued it not. After that, appeared he vnto two of them in a straūge figure as they walked, and went into the cōtrey. And they went, and tolde it to the remnaunt. And they beleued not these also. The texte.

As yet Iesus had not appeared to any bodye: but after he was ryssen, he appeared fyrst of al to Mary Magdalene, out of whome he had caste seuen deuels: and this appearing was the fyrste daye after the great Sabboth early.

She incontinent shewed the disciples (who wept and mourned for their lordes death,) what she had sene. But when they hearde her tel howe he was alyue, and that her selfe had sene hym, and hearde hym speake, they gaue no credence vnto her wordes. So cleane out of memorie was the thyng whiche he had so ofttymes promysed, that is to saye, howe he would ryse agayne on the thyrde day. The same daie that he appeared vnto Mary Magdalene, he appeared also vnto two disciples in the likenesse of a straūger, a wayfaryng man as they went from Hierusalē into the cōtrey. But they knowyng at the length that it was the Lorde, retourned to Hierusalem, and shewed vnto the residew of the disciples, what they had sene. Neyther was suche thinges as they tolde, beleued of the moost parte. And she went and tolde the.

After that appered he vnto two of them.

Afterwarde he appeared vnto the eleuen as they sat at meate, and caste in their teeth their vnbeleefe, and hardnesse of hart, because they beleued not them which had sene that he was ryssen agayne from death. And he sayed vnto them: Go ye into al the world, and preache the gospell to al creatures, he that beleeueth, and is baptised shalbe saued. But he that beleeueth not shalbe damned. The texte.

Last of all when he was readye to depart hence, and returne into heauen, he appeared vnto the eleue Apostles as they sate at meate (for Iudas was then dead) and hit them in the teeth with their vnbeleefe, and hardnesse of hart, because they would not beleue those persones, who had sene that he was ryssen agayne from death. For it was not requisite that al should se his death, and resurrection, but sufficient for the fayth and certaintie of the gospell, that the thyng was once proued by mete and conuenient witnesses: Els howe shall the heathen geue credence to those thinges that were done, yf they woulde lykewyse discredite the apostles reporte, as Thomas, and some other of them dyd at the begynnyng.

And Iesus sayed vnto them. After all these thynges are nowe at the length proued, and ryght well knowen of you by sure argumentes and proofes: go your waye into al the worlde, and preache this gospell to al the nacions therof. And he sayed vnto them.

For

For I dyed for all men, and lykewyſe for all men haue I ryſen agayne. It is not now nedeful to kepe the ceremonies of the olde lawe. It is not nedeful to vſe any mo ſacrifices, and burnt offrynges to pourge ſynnes. Who ſo beleueth the goſpell (whiche thoꝛowe my death offreth to all that beleue in me, free remiſſion of al ſynnes) and beyng waſhed with water, receyueth a ſygne oꝛ token of this grace, the ſame ſhal be ſaued. Who ſo beleueth not the goſpell (ther is not why he ſhould truſt to the obſeruation of Moyſes lawe, oꝛ heathen learning and philoſophie,) the ſame ſhalbe dampned. This waye is open for euery man to go to ſaluation by: but it is but one waye onely.

He that beleueth and is baptiſed.

¶ And theſe tokens ſhall folowe them that beleue. In my name they ſhall caſt out deuels: they ſhall ſpeake with newe tongues, they ſhal dryue awaye ſerpentes; and if they dryncke any deadly thyng, it ſhal not hurt the. They ſhall laye theyꝛ handes vpō the ſycke, and they ſhall recouer.

And leſt your preachyng ſhould not be beleued, ther ſhalbe ioyned thervnto a power to woꝛke miracles: ſo that there lacke not in you an Euāgelike fayth: and ſo that the thing ſelfe do require miracles. The chiefe power and vertue of the Euangelike grace, lyeth hyd in mennes ſoules: but yet when for the aduauncyng of the goſpell, there ſhal nede anye miracles, the ſame ſhall not lacke for the weakes ſake. They that will beleue in me, ſhall caſt out diuels, not in theyꝛ owne name, but in myne: they ſhal further ſpeake with newe tongues, and dryue away ſerpentes: and yf they dryncke any deadly thyng, oꝛ poyſon, it ſhall not anoy them. They ſhall laye theyꝛ handes vpō the ſicke, & they ſhalbe whole. Whē theſe thinges are wꝛought & done in mens ſoules, then is there a muche greater miracle wꝛought, but the ſame is hid, and not ſene. Couetouſneſſe, pleaſure of the body, ambiciō, hatred, wꝛathe, and enuy, be very poyſons, and deadly diſeaſes of ỹ ſoule. Theſe diſeaſes ſhall they cure and put a waye in my name, and that continually. But for ỹ weakes ſake, & ſuche as are hard of beliefe, the other miracles ſhal alſo be ofttymes wꝛought, to thentent the groſſe ſoꝛt of people may perceyue, that in my diſciples is a ſpirite moꝛe puiſſaunt, then all mās ſtrength and power.

¶ So then, when the Loꝛde had ſpoken vnto them, he was receyued into heauen, & is on the right hande of god. And they went foꝛth, and preached euery where, the lord woꝛkyng with them, and confyrmyng the woꝛde with miracles folowyng.

To the moste vertuous ladie / the moste gracious Quene Katerine, wife vnto the moste victorious and moste noble Prince Henry the eight, King of Englande, Fraunce and Ireland, &c.

Nicolas Udall wisheth prosperous health, and long continuaunce, with grace, peace, and all ghostely coumforte in our Lorde Jesus Christe.

Lyke as our Maister Christ in the ghospel, most gracious Quene Katerine, whan the woman that had lyued wickedly, beeyng now by his grace called frō hir sinnefull life to perfect repentaunce, and ende-mēte, came vnto him sitting at his repast in ỳ house of Simō the leper, & washed his fete with the teres of hir yes, wiped the same with ỳ heare of hir head, poured foorth vpon his head a precious swete oyntmente, and also enoynted his fete therewith, did so well allow hir true deuocion, hir earneste zele, and hir tender compassion whiche she had to coumforte him, that he did not onely emong all the coumpaignie declare hir present coumforte in forgeuing hir euen there all hir offentes and wickednesse afore past, but also promised that she should not lese the condigne rewarde of renoume for hir tender gentilnesse to hym shewed, in so muche that afore all the presence he openly protested that whersoeuer throughout all the world the gospell wer afterward preached, there should the in suche wyse at all occasions, bee had in mynde that the remembraunce of hir good herte and thankefulnesse towardes hym should neuer dye nor bee forgotten: So Luke ỳ Euāgelist, & Paule with the other Apostles of Christe did in their holy writynges not onely make mention of suche men and preachers as wer feithfull workers or ministers in Christes vineard, but also by whatsoeuer good matrones and deuout weomē their sawe and found either that God was glorified and his honour auaunced, or the gospell preferred, the woorde of God furthered the preachers of the same maintened, the younglinges in the feith cherished, the true christians in their powertee refreshed, the nede of the feithfull relieued, or the vnfeigned beleuers in aduersitees coumforted and succoured: to suche godly weomen their did not forgeatte ne leat passe to geue laude, praise, and commendacion, as well for the due rewarde of the parties selfes, as also for the good ensaumple & encourageyng of others to doo the lyke. For this cause dooeth Luke in his ghospell more then once make mencion of Marie Magdalene, of Johanna the wife of Chusa, of Susanna, and Marie the mother of James. And in the actes he neither forgeatteth ne omitteth to commende Dorcilla. Tabitha. Lydia. Damaris. For this consideracion Paule commendeth vnto the Romaines Phoebe, Marie, Triphena, Tryphosa, Perfis and others. For this respecte did Hierome wryte a whole traictise entitleed of noble and famous weomen, whose nobilitee and also renoume he estemeth and measureth by none other thyng, but by their godlinesse, deuocion, zele, and endeuour to sette foorth Christes holy ghospell, and by their godly conuersacion twigned with most studious diligence in readyng the scriptures. Wherfore most gracious Ladie, although here now to renewe the memorie and praise of the manifolde moste excellent vertues, and ardent zele of your highnesse towardes the promotyng of the knowleage of Goddes holy woorde & gospell, bee a thyng more due to your moste worthie deserres, then easie for my rude penne to expresse theim, and more appertaineth to my duetye, then it standeth with myne habilitee and power accordingly to sette theim foorth: yet so to dooe at this presente I haue thought partely a thyng nedelesse, because your excellencie dooeth so ferre surmounte and passe al praises which my slendre vtreaunce is hable to geue you, that I should therin seme to doe a muche like thing, as if I would bring foorth a smouldreyng smokie fyrebrande in a bright sunne daie, of purpose to help augmente the clerenesse of the sunne: and partely superfluous, bicause that on the one side all men doe alreadie knowe your incõparable vertues, and doe with one accorde magnifie thesame, & on the other syde, for ỳ your highnesse dooeth so muche tendre and seke goddes glorie, that ye euidently declare your self nothyng lesse to mynde or to desire then the vaine praises or commẽdacion of this world. Yet lyke as the shadowe doeth remedilesse folowe and accoumpaignie the bodye in the sunne light, so glorie and renoume doeth ineuitably folow and associate excellẽt vertue. And where the deserres of true vertue are so greate and so iust, it cannot bee chosen but that glory and renoume must arise, and so muche the more, because your highnesse, (as muche as in you lyeth,) dooeth flee it. For glorie (saieth the philosophicall poiese,) is of the nature of a Crocodile, whiche beyng a beaste in the floud of Nilus in Egipte, hath this properetee, that if one pursue hym to suppresse hym, he fleeth and will not abyde: and if ye flee, than will the Crocodile folowe and ouertake you. And forasmuche as glorie is by the philosophiers diffined to be a cõstaunt and perpetuall prayse geuen to any partie by a common consente of good people for the excellencie of vertue euidẽtely shewyng it self in thesame partie, (as in dede vertue cannot bee hidden but will appere) how can it bee possible that your renoume should dye, whose manyfold excellente vertues dooe from daie to daie more and more encreace? How can your praise decai, whose actes and monumentes are consecrated to immortalitee, as thinges not builded vpon the sand of ambicious seking, nor (lyke bubles in ỳ raine water) puffed vp with an vncertain blast of worldly vanitee: but founded vpon the sure rocke of Goddes woorde, from whens issueth the liuely and thesame the euerlastyng fountayne of true glorie in dede. Neither maie your highnesse in this case refuse any mãs woordes of praise & commẽdacion, forasmuche as it is a matier as laudable to acknowleage the good thynges whiche in dede are in vs praise woorthie, as it is vncõmendable thorough vain arrogancie to take vpon vs that we haue not. And though your grace is so ferre from all ambicion and also affeccion of this worldes rewarde, that ye haue no yie to any mortal mannes recompense, yet cannot good folkes but extolle and magnifie the inestimable noumbre of diuine giftes of grace so plenteously heaped and couched in so noble a Princesse. Though ye would haue your well doynges hidden and vnspoken of yet cannot the gratitude of the people holde the peace, or passe it with silence. Though your gracious benignitee require no thankes, yet cannot the honeste hertes of the people forbeare or refrain by open protestacion to acknowleage by whom thei daily receyue incomparable benefites. Though your modestie nothyng

lesse seketh then the fame of your good actes to bee blowen abrode: yet can not our duetties but brast out into woordes of testifiyng how muche we thynke our selfes bound vnto your highnesse: so that although the great & manifold benefittes whiche I haue priuately receyued at your grates handes did not now moue me, yet could I not in this most iuste occasion of the publike gratulacion holde my peace. For your vertuous liuyng euen from your tendre yeres enbraced, folowed, and still continued, your pregnaunt wittinesse ioyned with right woondrefull grace of eloquence, your studious diligence in acquiryng knowelage aswel of other humain disciplines, as also of holy scriptures, not onely to your owne edifiyng, but also to the moste godly ensaumple and enstruccion of others, your incõparable chastitee whiche as a moste precious Iewell ye haue by auoidyng all occasions of idlenesse and by contemnyng prouocacions of all vain pastemps kepte not onely from all spotte, but also from all suspicion of stainyng, your singular modestie coupled with passyng great integritee and innocencie of all your behaueour, your other manyfold vnestimable giftes of grace, & emong theim most principally your studious sekyng to promote the glorie of God and of his moste holy ghospell, haue ben the thynges that haue moued the moste noble, the most renoumed, and the moste godly Prince of the vniuersall worlde our moste gracious soueraigne Lorde kyng Henry the eight, to iudge and esteme your grace a mete spouse for his maiestee, and emõg so many weomẽ of nobilitee, of honour, & of muche high price & woorthinesse you alone to picke out to bee his moste dere beloued and most lawful wife. Neither dooe we doubte moste gracious Ladie, but that as the prouidẽce of God hath fourmed & aptised your grace to bee a woorthie & mete spouse for suche an housebande, so hath it by a speciall election deputed and preserued thesame to some high and notable benefite of the commõ weale, and to bee an instrumente of his glorie. The towardenesse and lykelyhood wherof lyke as in mennes opinions vndoubted, so doeth it alreadie beginne to shew it self in a noumbre of thynges whiche otherwise wer not to bee looked for to procede from any woman: muche lesse frõ a woman of nobilitee brought vp in the Courte of a king, where Fortune commonly nourreth, cockereth, and pampereth hir derlynges, suche as by hir wil, she myndeth and labourreth to corrupt with wealth, idlenesse and vanitee, and leste of all from a Quene beeyng sette in place, where if she would become fortunes wanton, she might without coũptrollemente swimme in the delices of all suche prosperitee as might occasion hir to dote on worldly felicitee, & to forgeat God. But the psalmes and contẽplatiue meditacions, on whiche your highnesse in the lieu and place of vain courtely pastemps and gamyng doeth bestowe your night and dates studie, and whiche ye haue set foorth aswel to the incomparable good ensaumple of al noble weomen, as also to the ghostely cõsolacion and edifiyng of as many as reade theim, doe wel declare not onely the thing to be true whiche Socrates affirmed, that is to wete, that weomen, if they dooe so applye theyr myndes, are no lesse apte, no lesse wittie, no lesse hable, no lesse industrious, no lesse actiue, no lesse fruicteful and pithie in the acquiryng or handleyng of all kyndes of disciplines then men are: but also how godly ye bestowe your tyme, how litell ye sette by the world, how muche ye thirst righteousnesse, how carefully ye seke the kingdome of God in the middes of a thousand occasiõs, whiche otherwise might withdrawe your high estate therefrõ. And because ye so muche tendre the glory of God, that accordyng to the lesson of Christ ye doe first of al other thinges & principally seke the kingdome of heauẽ: therefore hath he accordyng to his promisse in the same place conteined, and dooeth, and still wil, of his own prouision, encreace vnto you all kyndes of necessarie coumforte & consolacion, in muche better wyse then your grace could deuise, in muche larger manier then your owne self would wysche, and in ferre other sorte then ye could imagin to looke for. These blissinges hath his eternal trueth and vnfallible promisse performed vnto your highnesse, because ye seke him more then ỹ worlde, because ye more minde godly contemplacion then courtely solaces, because ye more tendre his glorie then any temporal commoditees, because ye esteme the knowelage of his woorde more precious then perle, golde, or any treasoures subiect to corrupcion, because ye preferre the auauncyng of his holy woorde before & aboue all other thinges, because ye ceasse not with all your power, with all your diligence, and with al your industrie, to sette foorth to all mens knowelage his holy ghospell and testamente, the onely foode and coumforte of our soules. And not onely dooeth your grace with moste earneste zele from the first houre of the daie to the twelfth, labour in the vineyarde of Christe, sustenyng the burden of all the wholle daie, and the parchyng heate of the smouldreyng noonetyde in your owne persone: but also at your exceding great costes and charges dooe hire other werkemẽ to labour in thesame vineyarde of Christes gospell, to the ende thesame maie fruictifie & so plenteously bring foorth, that all Englishe people maie to their healthy and ghostely consolacion bee aboundantely replenished with the fruict therof. And as a good captain partely to the encourageyng of his forward soldiers, and partely to the shamyng of dastardes or falseherted loytrers, ledeth and guideth his armie and goeth hymself before theim: so your grace, ferre otherwyse than in the weake vessels of woman sexe is to bee looked for, dooe shewe vnto men a notable exaumple of forwardenesse in settyng penne to the booke, partely to the great coumfortyng of suche as fain would dooe good if they durst, and partely to the shame and contumelie of sluggardes, who hauyng good talentes dooe kepe theim fast lapped vp in theyr napkins, and lineldely. And by this meanes dooeth your highnesse right well declare that all your delite, all your studie, and all your endeuour is by al possible meanes enployed to the publique commoditie of all good Englishe people, the kynges moste louing and obediente subiectes, to bee nouzled and trayned in the readyng of Goddes woorde, and in the meditacion of his moste holy ghospell. For this ghospell is thatsame treasour hidden vnder the cloddie hard grounde in the fielde of the lettre, which your grace after ye had found, did for ioye selle all ỹ ye had to bye thatsame field withall. And well maie suche persones bee saied to haue sold all that thei had, who sette lesse by all the worlde then by the gospell, and aswell for the obteinyng of the knowelage to theimselfes as also of desire to helpe make thesame common to others, dooeth not spare to spende out the treasoures of their golde and substaunce. This is that same precious margarite that Christe speaketh of, whiche your grace sekyng for with great desire, (whan ye had once found) solde al that ye had to bye, and thought your treasoures

beſtowed if it might ſo fortune that ye might finde meanes to make al Engliſh men whiche woulde reade or heare it, to bee partakers of the ſame. This is the graine of muſtardſede whiche whan it was ſo fine and ſo littel that the vnlearned ſorte of Engliſhe men could ſcarce poſſibly ſee or ſee it, ye of your excedyng charitee and zele towardes your countrey folkes did in ſuche wyſe help to ſowe in the fielde of Englãde, and did ſo cheriſhe with ỹ fatte batleing yearth of the paraphraſe, that where before it was in the yies of the vnlettred the leſte of al ſedes, it is now ſhot vp & growē muche larger in bredth, then any other herbe of the fielde, ſo that it now ſpredeth ỹ braũches in ſuche a coumpace, that all Engliſhe readers maie therin finde many places where to light, & to builde theim neſtes, in whiche their ſoules & conſciences maie to their ghoſtely coumforte quietely repoſe theimſelfes. This is the ſpiritual leaue whiche your grace beyng a ghoſtely houſewife for the behouf of all the wholle royalme of England & other the kinges maieſtees domintons, hath in ſuche wiſe hidden in all the wholle fower peckes of Engliſhe meale, Eſt, Weſt, North, and South: that by the benefite & meane of this paraphraſe it is now all made ſauourie & of a pleaſaũt reliee to al Engliſhe peoples taſte. Where the texte of the ghoſpell afore was in ſome partes (though al waies ſpeciall good and holſome foode, & berai reſtoratiue to ſuche as wer hable to brooke it,) yet to the cõplexion of groſſe, rude & grene ſtomaked engliſhemẽ diſagreyng and hard of digeſtion, yet ye by procuring the wholle paraphraſe of Eraſmus to bee diligẽtly trãſlated into Engliſh, haue minced it, & made it euerie Engliſh mans meate, though his ſtomake bee neuer ſo weake or tendre. Where afore in ſome partes again it ſemed to bee ſo light meate, that the groſſe ſtomakes did no leſſe lothe it, then ỹ children of Iſrael did Mãna in deſerte, whan thei ſaied: Our ſoule is qualmiſh ouer this meate beyng toto light, & is readie to caſt it vp again, your godly cure in cõſeruing it with the paraphraſe of Eraſmus in Engliſh, hath made ſo ſound and ſubſtaunciall meate for al cõplexions of people, that it maie be to euerie bodye like the aboundaunce of quailes rayning down in wilderneſſe frõ heauen, ſuche as beſt ſtood with euerye bodyes ſtomake, appetite, & moſte deſire to bee pleneouſly fedde withal. Where of it ſelf it is a meate moſt pure & ſimple, and therefore to ſome deintie mouthes vſed to none but fine termes, to the peincted colours and ornamentes of rhetorike, it ſemeth dry and vnpleaſaunt, it is now by the ragredouice ſauce of the paraphraſe made more liquide to renne pleaſauntly in the mouth of any man whiche is not to muche inferted with indurate blindeneſſe of herte, & malicious rancadeneſſe, & with toto muche peruerſe a iudgemẽte. For Eraſmus lyke as he dooeth in all his workes excelle and paſſe the moſte parte of all other writers: ſo in this worke of the paraphraſe vpon the newe teſtamente he paſſeth hymſelf. Therefore moſte gracious Ladie although your demerites are ſo ferre aboue all prayſes of man, that how ferre ſo euer I wade in magnifiyng your vertuous diſpoſicion, your deuout ſtudie and endeuour to dooe good thynges, I ſhal bee ſure not to encurre any ſuſpiciõ of flaterie: yet dooe I at this preſent omittyng all other thynges, onely in Englandes behalf make one emong the reſt in rendreyng publique thãkes to your highneſſe, al well for your other godly trauaill in ſtirreyng the knowelage of Goddes woorde, as alſo moſte ſpecially in ſetting men in woorke to trãſlate the paraphrase of Erasmus vpō al the new Testament wherin ye doe both to the young and to the old, aswell to the high as to the lowe, & no lesse to ꝑ ryche then to the poore, shewe muche more bounteous liberalitee in delyng about & in making cōmon vnto al good English people the heauēly iewels of Christes doctrine, then if ye should opē all kinges cofers of worldly treasoures, and dele to euerie one suche aboundaunce as might make theim all welthie and riche for euer in this world. And as ye haue herin dooen a dede worthie suche thankes and rewardes as lyeth in none but only God to repay, and a dede to vs your most louing and obediēt subiectes so beneficiall as no herte can estieme, (muche lesse any toungue or pēne expresse:) so doubte I not but that ye haue dooen a thing to your most regall spouse the kinges Maiestee so acceptable, that he wil not suffer it to lye buiryed in silence, but will one daie, whā his godly wisedome shall so thinke expedient, cause the same paraphrase to bee published & set abrode in prient to the same vse that your highnesse hath ment it, that is to saye, to the publique cōmoditee & benefite of good english people now a long time sore thirstyng & houngreyng the sincere & plain knowelage of Gods woorde. For his most excellēt Maiestee beyng a man after the herte of the Lorde, beeyng a right Dauid chosen to destruie Goliah the huge and coumbreous enemie of Israel without any armour, & with none other weapon but the stone of Gods woorde cast out of the slyng of the diuine spirite worcking in him and his lawes made here in Englande, and beyng the elected instrumēte of God to plucke down the Idolle of the Romishe Antichriste, who kolowing the steppes of his father Lucifer hath not onely vsurped a kynde of supremitee and tirannie ouer all princes on yearth, aswell Christē as Heathen, but also hath ensourged against heauē, and hath lift vp and exalted hymself aboue all thing that is called God, makyng void the plain commaundementes for the aduaunceyng of his owne more then Pharisaicall traditions, peruertyng the true sense of the holye scriptures and wrestynge theim to the mainteynaunce of his abominactions beeyng both afore God & man detestable: his highnesse beeyng our Ezechias by the prouidence of God deputed & sent to be the destruier not onely of all countrefaict religions (who swarmed emong vs like disguised maskers & not mummers, but mumiers, who vnder the cloke of holinesse seduced the people, & deuoured the houses of riche wedowes, and wer mainteiners of al superstition, idolatrie & rebellio) but also to roote vp all idolatrie doen to dead images of stone and tymber as vnto God, & committed to other creatures in stede of the creatour, directly against the expresse woordes of the precepte: Thou shalt haue no mo goddes but me: his most excellent maiestee (I saye) from the first daie that he wore the Emperiall croune of this Royalme, forsawe that to the executing of the premisses it was necessarie, that his people should bee reduced to the sincerite of Christes religion by knowyng of Goddes woorde: he considered that requisite it was his subiectes were nouzled in Christe by readyng the scriptures, whose knowelage should easily induce theim to the clere espiyng of al the sleightes of the Romishe iuglyng. And therfore as soone as might be, his highnesse by moste holsome and godly lawes prouided that it might bee lefull for all his moste feithfull louyng subiectes to reade the woorde of God, & the rules of Christes discipline, whiche thei professed: he prouided that the holy bible ſhould bee ſetfoorth in our owne vulgare language, to the ende that Englād might the better atteigne to ꝑ ſincerite of Chriſtes doctrine which thei might drawe out of the clere fountaine & ſpring of the goſpell rennyng euermore clere without any mote or mudde, rather then out of the muddie lakes & puddles purpoſely infected wᵗ the filthie dregges of our Philiſtines the Papiſtes, who had ſtopped our ſpringes to drieue vs to their poiſoned muddie gutters and furrowes. By this his mateſtees moſte godly prouiſion it hath come to paſſe, that the people whiche long tyme had been led in errour and blindeneſſe by blinde guides, mounkes, friers, chanons, and papiſticall preachers, doe now ſo plainly ſee the clere light, that thei doe willingly abhorre idolatrie & ſuperſtition: thei doe now knowe their duetie towardes God and their Prince: thei doe now enbrace the veritee for veritees ſake, they ſee where and how the leaue of the papiſtes hath by continuāce of time & for defaulte of ſcripture coured al ꝑ wholle batche of Chriſtes doctrine, thei ſee how beyng led by blind guides & paſtours in ꝑ derkeneſſe of ignorāce, thei fel daily in the diepe pitte of manifold errours wᵗ the ſame guides, thei ſee ꝑ like as the olde Phariſees in the tyme of Chriſtes beyng vpō yearth had corrupted that ſincere doctrine of Gods word, and the pure vnderſtanding of the law, teaching the people to leaue their poore fathers & mothers deſtitute cōtrarie to the plain cōmaundemēt, rather then to leat their treaſourie to be not enriched, which kind of offreing themſelfes of mere couetiſe had inuēted, & did apply theſame to the mainteinaūce of themſelfes in gluttonie & ſenſualitee, ſo now had the wicked papiſtrie deuiſed a meane to picke the riche folkes purſes, & the poore vulgare people clene to deuour vnder the colour of goyng on pilgrimage to this or ꝑ ſtocke of māy hādie making, & vnder prētēſe of ſeking health of the ſolle & remiſſiō of ſinnes, at the hādes of Petur, James, Jhon, & Marie whiche could not geue it, but whā ſuche thinges wer aſked them, bluſhed to heare god the only autour & geuer of al good thinges to be ſo blaſphemed. Thei ſee now that like as the couetous Phariſees paſſed leſſe at the violacion or breaking of gods preceptes, then of their tradiciōs, & put more iuſtice in waſhing ꝑ outſide of their diſh or their cuppe, then in the innocētie of life & puritee of the conſciēce with in, in offreing of mintes & rue for their lucre, then in perfourming ꝑ office of charitee to ꝑ neighbour, ſoner to winke at their owne blaſphemies againſt God, then to remit a ſmall treſpace cōmitted by their weake brother againſt the fond ceremonies whiche thei & the lawiers had deuiſed & added beſides ꝑ lawe, ſo the beaſt of Romiſh abominaciō to had clene ſubuerted ꝑ true interpretaciō of Chriſtes goſpel, & by his mere tirannie ioyned wᵗ moſt craftie deluſion, to had inuected into Chriſtes churche & holy cōgregacion, al thinges ꝑ wer cōtrarie to Chriſt, ꝑ is to wete, in ſtede of pure feith ſuche as Chriſt requireth, a feith lapped in a patched cloke of beggerly weorkes & ceremonies of his owne deuiſing, & ſetting forth in ſtede of religiō, ſuperſtition, offerinnges in ſtede of charitee, building of chauntreys in place of reliefing & mainteining the liuely tēple & image of God in ꝑ poore, encenſing of images i ſtede of ꝑ pure ſacrifice of an innocēt life: in ſtede of truſtig in gods mercies, truſting in trētals & maſſes of ſcala celi: in ſtede of heaue, a purgatorie cōſiſting of materiall fier, & theſame to bee redemed wᵗ money geue to hym: in ſtede of declaring our free redempcion in Chriſte & by Chriſt ſealed with his moste precious bloud, the Antichriste of Rome seduced the simple people to putte their affiaunce for remission of sinnes & obteining the ioyes of heauen, by his pardones cõteined in a piece of parchemẽt or paper with a lumpe of lead hãging at it, & to bee bought of hym or of his generacion the mounkes & fryers for money: in stede of the holy Bible, legẽda Sanctorũ, the miracles of our ladie, and martiloges, whiche themselfes deuised, & neuer durst sette foorth vntil the partie of whom thei wer made, had been an hũdred yeres dead, for feare of beyng taken in a lye: in stede of obeying our liege lord & soueraigne, to be subiect to forein potẽtates, wt other abuses so innumerable, that no time or wordes maie suffise to declare or reken theim by. And in this blindenesse had Englande still cõtinued, had not God of his infinite goodnesse & botomelesse mercie reised vp vnto vs a newe Ezechias to confound all idolles, to destruie all hille altares of superstition, to roote vp all counterfaict religions, & to restore (as muche as in so litell time maie bee) the true religion & worshipp of God, ỹ sincere preaching of gods worde, & the booke of the lawe, that is to saie, of Christes holy Testamente to bee read of the people in their vulgare toungue. That if in so littel time hauing no more help but the mere texte of the bible, the people through the goodnesse of God and the instincte of his holy spirite haue had the yies of theyr herte & colle so opened, that thei haue not onely espyed the abuses afore mẽcioned, and thousandes mo in whiche the Romyshe Babylon hath certain hundred of yeres holden all Christendom captiue and thrall: but also haue so conformed theimself to the syncere doctrine of Christe, that thei doe with moste glad wille, with moste earneste zele, and with most studious diligẽce embrace the trueth, abhorre the errours wherin thei wer afore drowned, detest the superstitions wherwith thei wer afore delited, houngre & thirst the sincere knowelage of Goddes woord by the goodnesse of God and the gracious prouision of our most noble Ezechias kyng Henry the eight, now daily ministred vnto theim: how is it lykely that they woulde profite in godly knowelage if thei had some other godly exposicion or declaracion of some good sincere writer vpon the newe testamente for their further edifiyng? Of whiche sorte truely there cannot any one man bee picked out more apte and mete then Erasmus, especially in this his paraphrase, which your highnesse of a moste godly zele hath thus procured to bee turned into English: whose doctrine as it is not in any poincte (after my poore iudgemente) corrupt, so dooeth it without violence or extremitee of wordes vtter the doctrine, edifie the conscience, declare many abuses, detectyng the enemies of Goddes woorde and supplanters of his ghospell, by suche true & liuely markes that they maie be easily knowen, so that it cannot be doubted, but it shoulde bee incredible furtherance towardes the ripyng of the knowelage of Goddes woord, if it might or shal so stand with the pleasure of our said moste gracious soueraine lord, beyng next and immediately vnder God our supreme hed. Which thing verily I would wishe & praie to god might so frame for two cõsiderations, the one, because that the people hauing the paraphrase of Erasmus, shall haue the pith of all the doctours and good writers that haue any thyng setteforth for the declaracion of the Ghospels, the Actes, & ỹ epistles, so that Erasmus maie stãd one alone in as good stede as a great noumber of other expositours setteforth together: & the other, because my

herte dooeth wisshe that the settyng forth of goddes glorie, the destruiyng of idolles, the confounding & defacing of al popishe trupperie, the publishing of the Bible and ghospell of Christe, so godly by his highnesse entended, so stouely entreed, and so luckely begoon, mighte by thesame our moost gracious soueraigne bee in suche wyse prosecuted and brought to effecte, that whan heauen no longer willing to spare him to the world, but that he must geue place to nature shall calle hym to receyue a crowne of immortalitie, & he for desire therof shall willingly surrendre and geue vp this emperiall croune of worldely dignitee, to the moste regal Impe his soonne our noble Prince Edwarde, he maie deliuer to thesame a people so well framed, and framed to his hande, that thesame maie with all ease and prosperous successe, and without any lette of stumbiyng blockes to be laied in his ways by papistrie, continue the Godly trade now at this date well begoonne and (thankes to God) luckily proceding. I would wisshe (as in dede I hope no lesse,) that he might not nede to bee putte to any kerther trauaill or cure, but well to cõserue and kepe thynges in the same staigh and ordre that his moste noble father myndeth to leaue all vnto hym. Our Dauid Henry the eight hath alreadie so substauncially cast the foundacion, & reised the buildyng of the Tẽple, that I truste it shall be no burden for our young Salomõ to cõsummate and finishe thesame whan his tyme shall come. But now I perceiue my self, while I entre into openyng the desyre and praier of my herte, to haue entreed into suche a large fielde of talke, whiche the experience of king Henryes exaumple cõcerning the trade of religiõ, & the hope of Prince Edward to bee a right folower of so right a leding father, dooeth ministre vnto me, that except I here soodainly breake of, I am drawen to wade so ferre in their praises, that I wer not hable in long tyme to fynde any waie out again. Omitting therefore at this present the moste woorthie and most iustely deserued praises of theim bothe, I shall turne my style some what to treacte of Luke whom it pleased your highnesse to committe vnto me to be translated. Whiche cõmaundement whãne came first vnto me in your graces name, although I knewe how litel it was that I could do in this kind, yet was I glad þ your cõmaundement did so iustely concurre with the determinacion of myne owne mynde and purpose. For I had long tyme afore with mature deliberacion & also with aduised election appointed with my self to translate this paraphrase vpon Luke, as soone as any suche libertee might bee, & to make it vnto your grace a testificacion of my duetie & thãkefull remembraunce of your manyfolde benefites afore dooen to me of your mere bountie. And two thinges there were that had moued me to take this prouince moste specially in hande, the one because that as Luke is the lõgest of al the Euãgelistes, so is he of al men noted to haue writẽ his gospel most exactely as wel by þ relacion of þ Apostles whiche wer present & cõuersaunt with Christ while he liued on yearth, as also by þ enstrucciõs of Paul who was most earnest & full in the iustificacion of feith, & moste pithithie against the iustificacion of weorkes (albeit thei dooe all in this pointe of doctryne throughly cõsent & agree.) The secound was, for that Erasmus who did in this paraphrase bestow more diligẽce thẽ in most of þ others, had specially dedicated þ same vnto our moste noble king Henry þ eight. And I thought I could not deuise any apter gifte to presente his moste dere beloued wyfe

withall beyng of the lyke zele, affection, godlynesse, and deuocion that he is, then the same woorke translated into Englishe, whiche I certainly knewe his maiestie to had singularly well allowed and moste graciously accepted in Latin, & in perusing thereof to bee daily exceedyng muche delited. And I nothing doubte most gracious Ladie, but ỹ the reading therof should cause no lesse delectacion of minde to you, if the thyng were so wel doen as some mā of more learnyng perchaunce could haue doen it. And in this behalf none other refuge I haue but to your moste benigne fauour and pardone well to accept myne honest herte, myne earnest zele, & willing labours. For as touchyng the trāslacion self, though I iudge & plainly cōfesse my self to bee by many degrees inferiour in knowelage & facultee to all the others whom I heare ỹ your highnesse hath appointed to the trāslating of the other partes and though I cannot of my self promisse any hablenesse to take suche a prouince in hande: yet (my herte better seruyng me herunto then perchaunce my hāde hath dooen) when I sawe that your graces resolucion & pleasure did help to ministre courage to myne owne hertes desire, I conceiued boldnesse to attempte and enterprise the thyng, and thought it moste expediēt to shewe myne obedience and prompte good will to dooe your commaundemēte, trusting that though I haue not been hable in all behalfes & poinctes requisite fully to discharge the office of a good translatour, yet I haue expressed the sense & mening of the autour. As for the grace of the Latin tounge I thinke vnpossible to bee liuely expressed, as this autour doeth it in the Latin by reason of soondrie allusions, diuerse prouerbes, many figures, & exornacions rhetoricall, with Metaphores innumerable, whiche cannot to the like grace bee rendred in any other lāguage then in the Latin, or Greke, besides that an infinite sorte of woordes there be, whose full importing can not with one mere Englishe woorde equiualently bee enterpreted. And this imperfection I haue to my litel power so laboured to redoubbe, that I trust there bee not any poincte of pithithie signification any where conteyned, whiche I haue not in one or other place of the sentence by some meanes throughly touched. And forasmuche as I consider it to bee a paraphrase, ỹ is to saie, a plain setting foorth of the sense of the texte with as many woordes as the circumstaunce therof for the better linkyng of one sentence to an other doeth require, I haue not so precisely bound my self to euerie woorde & sillable of the letter, but that I haue takē more respect to the explanacion & declaring of the sense, then to ỹ noūbre of the Latin sillables. In translatyng of the verai texte I thinke it requisite to vse some scrupulositee (and yf the trāslatours were not altogether so precise as thei are, but had some more regarde to expressing of ỹ sense, I thynke in my iudgemēte they should doe better) but in a paraphrase, whiche of it self is a kynde of expo ſcion and of commentarie, I thynke it nothyng nedefull to be so precise in the woordes, so the sense bee kepte. And this I dare auouche, that if any interpretour should in some places bee as brief in the Englishe trāslacion as the autour is in the Latin: he should make therof but a derke piece of woorke.

For that is the onely thing that maketh the verai texte self so derke as it appereth to be. In Luke I haue had somwhat the more businesse, bicause that the Latine exemplaries (through whose defaulte or negligence I am vncertain) doe varie and not well agree, some hauyng more or lesse then others, some hauyng an other woorde than an other copie hath, some beeyng otherwise pointed then the rest. Wherby I haue in some places been driuen to vse myne owne iudgement in rendryng the true sense of the booke, to speake nothing of a great noumber of sentences, whiche by reason of so many membres, or parentheses, or digressions as haue come in place, are so lõg, that onlesse they had been somewhat diuided, they would haue been to hard for an vnlearned braine to conceiue, muche more hard to conteine and kepe it still. As touchyng the stile (because the iudgemẽtes of readers be diuerse, and some loue length, some desire breuitee, some can well away with elegaunt speche, some hate all curiositee, some commende an eloquent stile, some thinke nothing to bee plain inough, some will be busie iudges of other mens writynges and doe nothing theimselfes:) it maye please your most gracious patience to suffer me to saye my poore iudgemẽte, for ꝑ flattiyng of theim that are reasonable. First I woulde not haue euerie reader to require in euerye writer to bee like his owne witte, or conueighaunce, or stile or phrase of speakyng: but rather to consider that euerie man hath a veine of his owne eyther by imitacion so confirmed, or by long vse so rooted, or of desire to bee plain and clere, so growen into an habite: that he cannot otherwyse wryte then he dooeth. Some writers hate breuitee, and some thinke all long thynges to bee tedious, and yet is neyther of these twoo sortes to be reproued, so the matier be good, the making fyne, the termes apte, and ꝑ stile flowing without curiositee or affectacion. For like as Cicero was so copious that nothing myght be added vnto hym, so was Demosthenes so brief that nothyng might bee taken awaie. The same in Latine is betwene Cicero and Salust. But Tullie would not leaue til the eie, the eare, & also the mouth of the reader wer ful euen in euery sentence: Salust was lothe to tyer any of these with a whole oracion. The Lacõs could abyde no lẽgth the Sophistes of Grece could through their copiousnesse make an Elephãt of a flygh, & a mountaine of a molle hille. And this I speake, rather in commẽdacion of eloquẽce, of copie, of elegãcie of stile where it is, then to claime that there is any suche here. Ouide, Tullie, Erasmus could haue proceded in any theyr inuẽcion euen infinitely: some other wittes could not so. Some loue it whan it is style lyke, and some care for no more but the bare sense. But eloquence of it self, and copie (that is to saie thikke of termes) is a vertue in an oracion, & that thing chiefely geueth to bookes that the Latin men call genium, that is like & continuaunce that euerie mã will an hundred yeres after set store by it, & esteme it worthy many tymes reading ouer. What other thing cõmendeth Chaucer and causeth his woorkes to bee more set by then thousandes of other freshe hastie bokes hastily shootyng foorth like Maie floures, & not withering but vttrely dyyng with the first readyng. Neuertheles no man of our tyme & in our Englishe tounge (whiche none but our selfes for our owne vse do much passe on,) writeth so ornately, but ꝑ he hath in soondrie woordes and phrases some smatche of his natiue countrey phrases, ꝑ he was borne in. Yet this notwithstãding some there be, whiche haue a minde to renewe termes that are now almost worne clene out of vse, whiche I dooe not disallow, so it be dooen with iudgemẽte. Some others woulde ampliate and enrythe their natiue language with mo vocables whiche I also commẽde, if it be aptely and wittily allayed. So that if any other doo innouate a thyng by a woord to me afore not vsed or not heard, I would not dispraise it: and that I doo attempte to bring to vse, an other man should not cauill at. For an easie thing it is to depraue, and a smal glorie for one man in matiers of nothyng to labour to deface an other. But for asmuche as bothe doe our best, we ought rather thus to thynke the one of the other. This man hath seen that I haue not: I see no man is so barrain, but he is able with some woord or other to helpe garnishe his mother tongue, with other lyke sayinges procedyng from humanitee and fauour to encourage suche as are studious. And what if one labour to enryche his cõtrey language, as Tullie glorieth that he did amplifie the Latine tongue, is he therefore to be blamed, and not rather to be commẽded. Thus muche I saie for the defense of writers & stiles in generall. As touchyng myne owne stile in this present woorke, if I should be so streightly examined, I am (as the Greke prouerbe saieth) in lyke case as a man y should hold fast a wolf by bothe eares. For if he hold him still, he hath a shrewe in handleyng: & cannot so continue euer: if he leat hym go, he is in ieoperdie: so should I in this matier stande in a streight brake, either to incurre suspicion of arrogãcie if I mainteine myne owne, and by standyng in defense therof to be deemed opinatif or ambicious of singularitee: or els muste I bee driuen to graunte an errour where perchaunce none is. Leattyng passe therefore all suche kynde of trauersyng, I shall remit this whole cause (as Tullie doeth of his booke whiche is entitled Officiis,) to the iudgemẽt first of your highnesse, whom if my labours doe satisfie, I shall the better lyke my self, & than of others, others I saie, in whom resteth humanitee to take and enterprete all thinges to the best: in whom is moderatiõ rather to pardone some faultes, than to condẽne the thing whiche though they can they will not emẽder: in whom is facultee and knowelage to iudge right, in whõ resteth fauour to winke at a litell trippe or stoumbleyng in a long piece of woorke, in whõ learnyng and skilfulnesse doeth woorke indifferencie of affection, and finally in whom dwelleth reasonable consideracion of mannes infirmitee, that the best learned doeth sometymes erre, and no mã at all times doeth al thinges right. For vnto suche an one as will bee a more seuere and heauie iudge on an other mannes labours, then himself either would bee, or would haue others to bee on his owne, I can saye nothyng but this: I for my parte can doee no better, if I could I would, and in case ye will either for respecte of the publique benefite whiche is ment herin, or els for loue towardes me or els for any other iust consideracion take your penne and emende any faulte that ye shall see: I shall not onely not thynke any wrong doen to me, but also I shall with all my herte geue you thãkes for that ye so muche tendre either my poore honestee, or the thyng self, that ye would put to your helping hande to make it well. And thus I surceasse with my vain talke any longer to deteine your highnesse from the fruicteful reading of Erasmus, wherof may redounde suche edifiyng and encreace of knowelage to the same, as the labour of readyng maie bee well bestowed, and the booke through your Graces commendation bee one day sette foorth to the publique vtilitie and benefite of all the whole deuout congregation of this churche of Englande. Geuen from London the last daie of September, in the yere of our Lorde,

Unto the moste puissaunt and moste victorious Prynce Henry the eight kynge of England, Fraunce, and Irelande, and defendour of the Catholike feith, Erasmus of Roterodame wysseth long health with all honour and prosperous continuaunce.

MOste Regall and pryncely kyng Henry, I send vnto your highnesse Luke ỳ Physician, not any other Luke then ye had of hym heretofore, but thesame Luke speakyng somewhat more playnly and also more at large vnto the eares of suche as are vsed to good latyn. Neither doe I suppose it any thynge nedefull for me here now in this matter to spende laboure in appeasyng & satysfiyng these kynde of People, which commonly allege vnto suche as I am, that it was a sentence by ryght great learned menne, verye well taught, that in geuing of gyftes or presentes men ought to haue a specyall eye and regarde, that the thynges whiche we geue be apte for the partyes that they are geuen vnto. I for my parte dyd thys thyng not long sence, at what tyme I dedicated the Paraphrase vpon Matthewe vnto Charles the emperoure: yea and before my tyme also it hath of ryght excellente clerkes by prescrypcion of auncient custome and vsage, ben playnly declared, that anye kynde of argumente what euer it be, is ryghtlye and well dedicated vnto prynces, whom though we know that they will neuer reade it, yet is thus muche vtilitee and benifyte gotten thereby, that vnder the tytle of theyr names the weorke is the better habled to the handes of studyous persones, accordyng as Plinius finely wrote, certayne thynges ere for suche onely respecte to be reputed verye precyous, because they are dedicated for Jewels in Temples. But certes the waywardenesse of some persones towardes bookes, whan they cumme newly forth, is so great, that they wyll byd awaye with the bookes out of theyr syght, ere they take any allaye or taste of the same. And by this meanes there perysheth alwel to the wryter the fruicte whiche he hoped to haue thereby, as also to the reader, his due profyte and vtilitee. And at suche mennes handes, one thynge at leste wyse shall the tytle of noble princes obteyne whan it is sette in the fyrst rounte of any booke, that they wyll not geue sentence on it to be vtterly naught, that they wyll not disdaigne it, that they wyll not spytte on it, before they haue read it. Albeit euen otherwyse also the godly zele and affection of some prynces dooeth make, that whoso sendeth the ghospell to any kynge for a present, shall not seme to doe agaynst good reason. For by men of ryght good credite, and suche as vse not to lye, it hathe bene reported vnto me, alwel that Charles the Emperoure, in case any vacaunt tyme of leasure may in so great vnquietnesse and troubleous state of the world be gotten, doeth gladly bestowe the same in readyng the ghospell booke: as also the moste renoumed Prynce Ferdinãdo brother to the same Charles, muche & often to haue in his handes the paraphrase vpon the ghospell of saincte Jhon, whiche not verey long agone I dedicated vnto hym: yea & ferthermore ỳ the ryghte noble kynge of Denmarke Chrystierne, whiche thyng may to your hyghnesse also be well knowen, hath bookes of christiã religion often tymes in hys handes, & that he vẅ great desyrefulnesse vseth to read my paraphrase vpõ the ghospel of Mathew. Why than should the ghospell seme to be vnaptely sent vnto those which are hãdlers and louers of the ghospell, whiche ghospel certes is to be had and vsed in the hãdes of all persones as many as remembre & thynke themselfes to be Chrystians. Now although after the rate of worldly dealyng, suche a thynge is moste chiefly to be geuen, as the partye hath nede of to whome it is sent, yet after the rule of the ghospell, who so hath alreadye, to hym must nedes be geuẽ, that he maye haue plentye. Wherfore me thought I shoulde doe but as might best stande with congruence, to sende this euangelycall physycyan vnto your hyghnesse, forasmuche as the same is so ferre from disdeygnyng holy scryptures, ỳ (as your owne wrytynges doe testifye,) ye haue aboue the meane rate profyted in the same, so that if a man geue vnto your grace any thyng to holy scrypture apperteynyng, he shall not seme so muche to geue a gyfte, as to make emendes and recompense for a pleasure receyued. Moreouer if this be a thyng specyally aboue others in al haste prouyded for, that in kynges & Empetours courtes there may from tyme to tyme be physycians readye & prest at hande (beyng men exactely learned and of approued fidelytee) to take charge that the prynces body be preserued & kept in health: howe muche more dooeth it stande with congruence, ỳ Luke the Physician should there beresiaũt, who doeth not vẅ scammony or ellebour preserue ỳ healthful state of the bodye, but doeth with an heauenly pocion deliuer ỳ solle frõ diseases that violetly hale men to death euerlasting, that is to wete, ỳ vnknowing of the truth, mistrustfulnesse & vnbelief towardes god, ỳ loue of thys worlde, ambiciõ, auarice, ryottous excesse, hatred, enuy, & suche others. For these diseases is all the lyke of mortall mẽ subiect vnto, and daily in daũger of falling into thẽ, as Jhon ỳ Apostle saieth, where he bewaylieth that all ỳ whole worlld is set in naughtinesse, neyther any thing els to reygne therin, but cõcupiscẽce of ỳ, flesshe concupiscẽce of the yes, and pryde of ỳ lyfe. And in so much ỳ more peryl and hasard of ỳ sayde diseases doe prynces stand, as they are more thẽ others made wantons and derlynges of fortune, & haue lybertee vvout checke or coumptrollement to fulfyll theyr owne sensuall lustes and appetites. But nowe me semeth I shall not spende my labour in vayne but to good purpose, if I shal in a fewe woordes commende and sette forth vnto your hyghnesse kyrste Luke hymselfe beyng the physycyan, & then the pocion or medicine that he bringeth vẅ him, albeit I putte no doubtes but that aswell the one as the other is alreadye (as in dede they ought to be) vnto your godlyzele and deuocyon in moste best wise accepted. Forsouth thilkame is ỳ excellent mã Luke an Antiochiã by the countrey & nacion ỳ he was borne in. And Antyoche is a cytee which was in olde tyme of so great fame & power, that so muche parte of all the coũtrey of Syrya as reacheth vnto Cicilie & butteth vpon it, had the name geuen it therof. And the sayde Antyoche was in this behalfe more happye & fortunate then verey Rome it selfe, that Petur the Apostle had his fyrst see here in thys citee of Antyoche: and that Paule, and Barnabas dyd in ỳ

same citie receiue theyr dignitee of the charge and funccyon Apostolicall. Now to our present purpose this Luke was of familiar acquaintaunce & conuersacyon with all the Apostles, but moste specially a folower and disciple of Paule, and also a coumpaignion of his in all his peregrinacion, neuer seperated nor diuided from his coumpaignye. By liuyng in coumpaignye with the Apostles he wrote hys ghospell: & by the thynges whiche Paule wrought and dyd, Luke beyng a present witnesse of theym, he wrote the booke whiche he entytled, the actes of the apostles. And that hystorye of the Actes he continued vntyll the secounde yere of Paule abydynge at Rome, that is to saye, vntyll the fowerth yere of Nero the Emperoure there. Whereof men gather a conjecture, that the booke was wryten in the same cytee. And fully agreed it is emong the learned menne, that thysame veray Luke it is, of whome Paule the Apostle doeth so often tymes make mencyon: as for exaũple, in hys secound epystle to the Corynthyans, wher he thus sayeth: We haue sent with hym our brother whose laude is in the ghospell throughout all the congregacyons. Agayne, where he writeth to the Colossians, he sayeth: dere Lukas the physician greteth you. And agayne in the secound epystle to Timothe: For Demas hath forsaken me, louyng thys present worlde, and is departed vnto Thessalonica: Cresces is gon into Galacia: Tytus into Dalmacia: onely Lukas is with me

ii. Tim. iiii.

Yea and this poynct moreouer is leaft to vs by auncient wryters, that as often as Paule calleth it by the name of his ghospell, (as he doothe to Timothee, where he sayeth: Remembre that Jesus Chryste of the sede of Dauyd arose agayn from death accordynge to my ghospell. &c) he meneth of the ghospell of Luke, because that lyke as Marke wrote the hystorye of the ghospel at Peturs word & by hys setting on, so dyd Luke at the word and bydding of Paule. Hierome is of the oppnion and iudgemente that Luke was more expert in the Greke tounge then the others wer, and by reason therof wrote the discourse and processe of the storye after a more exact and groundely sorte then the others dyd, that is to wete, takyng his entraunce at the fyrste concepcyon of John the Baptyste, and makyng relacyon of verye muche matier touchyng the natiuitee, and concernyng the babehood, yea and certayne poyntes ferthermore concernig the chyldehood of Jesus, makyng also rehersall of manye parables and myracles whiche the other Euangelystes for loue of briefnesse had leat passe ne any thyng spoken of. And whereas not one of all the others went any whit ferther then the tyme of the Lorde Jesus beyng assumpted into heauen, thys man alone dyd in an other secounde booke make a ferther continuacyon of the storie concernyng the churche, howe it fyrste sprange vp, and howe it grewe more and more to spryede and shewe it self. This muche moreouer the wryters affyrme, that lyke as Mathew wrote his ghospell and Petur his epystle chiefely vnto the Jewes: so dyd Luke wryte his ghospel moste specyally to the Gentyles, as one that was a dyscyple of Paules, whiche Paule as he was the teacher of the Gentyles, so dyd he wryte all hys epystles vnto Gentyles except the onely one epistle to the Hebrewes, of the autour & wryter wherof it hath euermore ben doubted whether it wer Paule or not. He wrote hys ghospell after Marke, but yet before ỹ Jhon wrote his, by reason wherof beyng but a dyscyple he is set before Jhon who was an Apostle. And to conclude, it is wrytten that a longlyued man he was whiche thyng was in a physitian euen as of congruence it ought to be. For he kolowed the counsail of Paul which wrote: It is good not to touche a wyfe: he liued a syngle man fower score and fower yeres. The bones of hym after he was dead, were remoued and conueyed out of Achaia to Constauntinople, together with the bones of Andrewe the Apostle, in the twentieth yere of Constantius. Ye haue nowe a Physycian for the solle, of a physycian for the bodye, a man by hys familiaritee of conuersacion, with the Apostles habled, and by mooe testimonies than one of Paule the Apostle, commended and praysed, and by the wholle consent of al the feithfull congregacyons allowed. For where the ghospels of many were reiected and refused, Luke was by the consent of all the congregacyons voices receyued, to make vp that same holye and mysticall quaternytee, whyche Moyses in olde tyme limited out, whan he expounded vnto vs the fower fluddes or ryuers wellyng vp out of one spryng in paradyse, whiche fluddes doe water all the yearthe vniuersall: & the whiche quaternitie the prophet Ezechiell afterward sawe, whan he playnly sette out vnto vs (as it had bene in a picture) the fower mysticall beastes and the fower wheles in one. Nowe if it be so thought good, leat vs in fewe wordes somewhat speake of the pocyon or medicine that he hath geuen vs. He had bene wont out of Hypocrates to take medicines wherewith to remedye diseases of the bodye, but this medicine of the ghospell wherewith to cure and heale oure solles, he tooke of the Apostles whiche had bothe sene & hearde Chryst, yea or rather of the veray holy ghost hymselfe. There was emong the phisiciās of olde tyme a certeyn kynde of medicine of passyng great efficacye & vertue, whiche medicine they called in Greke theon cheiras, that is to say, Goddes handes, lyke as there is nowe a confeccion that is called manus Christi. But yet was there neuer any medicine inuented by the Physicians, that was able to remedye all dyseases of the bodye, thoughe they make neuer so muche vauntes and boastes of that same whiche they call, panacea, a medicine (as they affyrme) effectuall and of muche vertue, but knowen to no man. Once the syckenesse of olde age geueth place to no physicke. But thissame medicine of the ghospell is in verayе true dede the manus Christi, whiche through syncere feith dooeth once for altogether take awaye all diseases of the solles, and geueth immortalitee: whiche thynge appertyneth onely vnto God to doe. And certes it was a thynge not vnfeactly ne vnskilfully spoken in the prouerbes of the Grekes, that woordes and talke is the physician of a mynde beyng diseased and sycke: yea and some there hath bene, whiche beleued that the diseases of the body also myght be dryuen awaye with certeyne hertie woordes aduisedly spoken, hauyng a certayne magicall vertue and efficacie in theim. The Lord Jesus was a physician, who whyle he liued here on yearth, dyd with his woordes put awaye diseases of the bodyes, were they neuer so sore or of neuer so long contynuaunce rooted in theym. Yea and with his woordes he reysed dead folkes to lyfe agayn. For his woord was no woorde of magike: but the almightiful woorde of the omnipotent father.

ii. Tim. ii

The same Christe dyd also with his woorde dryue awaye diseases of the solles, whan he sayed: Soonne thy synnes are forgeuen the: and in an other place: Goe thy wayes, thy feith hath made the hole. And in consideracyon hereof the Prophecie had afore promised that Christ should be a physycian. For it sayth in the booke of Sapience: For neyther any hearbe ne any supplynge playstre hathe healed them, but thy word o Lord, which healeth all thynges. This same verely is that true panacea, that the physycians speake of, as afore is sayed. Also the mystical psalme hath this sentence. He sent hys woorde, and he healed theim from theyr vttre perishynges. The liuely woorde of the father is Chryste. He had sent Moyses and the prophetes: and by theim was the nacyon of the Jewes taken in cure to be looked vnto, but they were not clene healed. Onely the woorde of the father was of sufficient vertue and efficacie to heale the diseases of manne, and not onely the lyght diseases, but also the mortall and deadly syckenesses. For it is a marcke whereby to knowe that it speaketh of deadly syckenesses, whan the prophete addeth, from theyr vttre perysshynges. At suche tyme as the stomake is so cleane fallen awaye, that it abhorreth and refuseth all kynde of meate, than groweth ỹ sycke partie towardes his death. And of suche manier a disease was all the whole vnyuersall worlde sycke, before the comyng of the heauenly physician. Whiche thyng had the psalmiste a lytell tofore spoken: Theyr solle abhorred all kynde of meate, they were drawē nere, euen to the gates of death. There had ben many sondrye drenches tempered by the philosophiers, as for exaūple, by the secte of Pythagoras, by the Academikes, by the Stoikes, by the Epicureans, and by the Perepatetikes, promysing perfect health of the myndes, yea and heauens blysse too. Moyses tempered many potions, prescrybing and appoynctynge sondrye ceremonies of relygyon and of seruyng God: the prophetes also made muche and many temperinges to the same ende and purpose: but by reason of diseases growyng strong and preuaylyng, the physicke and medicynes auailled not, ne dyd any other good, saue that it encreaced the diseases, and bewrayed the same that it myght appeare.

The stomake of the solle beyng corrupted with naughty desyres, as it had bene with euyll & hurtefull humours, dyd on the one syde turne theyr face awaye from the moral preceptes and lessons of the philosophiers composed with great labour and studye: and on the other syde by the ordeynaunces and prescripcions of Moyses, they were made the more superstitious, but nothynge the better men. As for the bitter chydyng whiche ỹ Prophetes ministred, had no good relice ne taste in theyr mouthes, and therefore was there no credite geuen to theyr promysses. Whiche thyng the father of heauen whan he sawe, because he woulde not haue any thyng to perysshe of all that he had created, sent forth hys woorde, who should with an heauenly medicine delyuer all people from all diseases of theyr solles, onelye requyring of vs to acknowlage oure disease, and to put assured truste and confydence in the physicyan. And lyke as the louyng and frendely physycians, if at any tyme they cannot styll remayne to be euermore present with theyr pacyentes, doe commonly vse to leaue some boxe or receipte of physycke with theim, whereby the partyes that are sycke maye be theyr owne physycians, if the case shoulde so requyre: so the Lorde Jesus whan he returned into heauen, leafte vnto vs by hys Apostles a medicinable electuarie of the ghospell, bothe easye and ready for euery body that wyll take it but of great vertue & effect, if a man receyue it as it ought to be: and certes to take it to ones profite and benefyte, the chiefe thynge that worketh it, is his aſſured truſte & affiance in the phyſycian. Neyther is it enoughe to haue taken a ſlendre taſte or aſſaye therof, but it muſte be receyued and conueyghed into the verye bowels, that as ſoone as it is receyued within the ſtomake, the vertue therof maye haue full courſe to renne euery waye throughout all the veines. At ſuche tyme & neuer tyll than it begynneth to roumble and ſhake all the party from toppe to toe wt hatred of his former life: but after this great troublyng & conkulyon, immediatly enſueth great tranquillitee of mynde and quyet of the conſcience. The phyſycians of the bodyes, haue practycioners, and potycaryes that doo miniſtre theyr arte vnder theym: and themſelfes are the preſcrybers and appoyncters what it is that muſte be geuen to the ſycke: ſo Chryſte alone it is and none els, that hath preſcribed the medicine of euerlaſtyng ſaluacion. The Apoſtles, and theyr ſucceſſours the byſhops, are no more but myniſters, they temper in due proporcion, they fyne and beate to powder, they laye to the places diſeaſed, not receyptes of theyr owne, but of Chriſtes. They baptiſe in water, but Chryſte it is that waſheth the ſolle cleane: they teache the thynges whiche he taught and delyuered vnto theym, but Chryſtes owne ſelfe it is, whiche maketh that theyr woordes maye take effect. The corporall phyſycians doe often tymes varye alwel in theyr iudicials of the diſeaſes, as alſo in appoyncting medicines for the ſame: yea and manye tymes in ſtede of medicines they appoyncte thynges ꝑ are verye poyſon to the ſickenes accordyng to the ſaying of the Greke Poete.

Many of the medicines be good that are wrought.
And many of theym agaynſt are ſtarke ſtaryng nought.

But of ꝑ phyſicke & medicine Euãgelical there is but onely one receipt, whiche ought of no mortall creature to be eyther corrupted or altered. And fynally to cõclude it is rõkeicte of no mo but one ſimple, ſo ꝑ although they whoſe parte and ductie it wer to be miniſters of the ſame, woulde be ſlacke to doe theyr office, euery man may take it and miniſtre vnto hymſelf, ſo that he haue a mynde feithfully truſtyng, a mynde ſyncere, and deſyrous of health. For euen that ſame chyef and head phyſician of all, who alone and none but he is of power hable to heale all the wholle man, did at ſome ſeaſons geue healthe by hymſelfe in hys owne perſone, and many tymes alſo by the miniſterie of hys Apoſtles and diſciples. Nowe ferthermore all the wholle facultee and arte of phyſicke, hath twoo markes that it pryncipally ſhoteth at: the one that it maye delyuer the bodye from dyſeaſes, and from ſuche thynges as booe brede diſeaſes, and thys parte is by the phyſycians terme called therapeutica that is to ſaye, the arte of curyng or healyng diſeaſes: ſecondly theyr arte is to preſerue and contynue the healthfull ſtate of the bodye, and to encreace the ſtrength: and thys parte of phyſicke they place in the ordreyng of the diete. For the phyſicians doe not euermore ſere with hotte irons, or cutte, they doe not euermore geue pocyons of ſcamonye to conſume and waſte the fleaſhe as men in maner ſleyghyng and martiryng the bodye, to kepe it in lyke: but ſometymes they miniſtre ſuche thynges as maye make the herte lyght and mery, yea & alſo they geue the bodye ſuſtinaunce at large: So there is fyrſte of all mynistred vnto vs the potion of feyth, whiche troubleth the solle and conscyence with repentaunce, and emptyng vs, dooeth discharge and vnlade vs of our synne. Than immediately thervpon is geuen an electuarye of consolacyon, of exhortyng, and of more perfeyct doctrine.

For if a phisician, as he hath made ꝑ body emptye by purgacion, shoulde sodainly geue vp the sycke pacient and leat hym alone, it is an hazard and ieoperdy, leste whan it is destitute of all the strength, some power and rage of a greater sickenesse may take it, as for example, the paulsey, the generall taking or dissolucyō of all the limes and sinewes where vpon men lye bedred, or a consumpcion: So after that repentance hath cast down our cōbe, and hath well shaken our disease, whan baptisme hath scoured or purged, & made vs emptie and voyd from all synnes, there be suche thynges ministred, and geuen to vs, as maye holsomly replenishe the solle agayn beyng now wel clensed and made voyd. Wrathefulnesse is voyded out, and iētilnesse & meknesse is in stede thereof infused. Enuie is sucked out, & taking of all thynges to the best, putte in for it. Wicked & pollyng is voyded out, & in place therof succedeth liberalitee. The feruent desire of making warre, is consumed away, and the earneste zele of peace cometh in for it. The loue of sensuall pleasures of the fleashe is expelled, and in theyr stede entreth ꝑ loue of thynges celestiall. Wyll ye heare what is the stammonie euaungelycall? Doe ye penaunce: The axe is nowe alreadye settе at the roote of the tree. And euery tree that bryngeth not foorth good fruicte is cutte vp. And Paule in lyke manyer: Mortifie your membres vvhiche are vpon yearth: vvhoorehuntyng, vnclennesse, wanton luste, euill concupiscence, and auarice. And within fewe wordes after it foloweth: spoiling yourselses of the olde man with all his actes. He hath nowe voyded out the ill humours, how dooth he fil vp the empty place agayn? Doe vpon your selses, (saith he) as the Saynctes & the elected of god, the bowels of mercye, bounteousnesse, submission, humilitee, pacience, supportyng one an other, & forgeuyng your selses emonge you if any persone haue a querele agaynst an other, lyke as the lorde also hath geuen to you. And aboue all these thynges haue ye charitee, whiche is the bande of perfeccion, and leat the peace of Chryste reioyce in your hertes. Suche manyer an house swepte cleane with broomes, and replenished on euery syde withe suche ornamentes, the euyll spirite shall not eftsons entre vpon, whan he returneth with seuen wurse then hymselfe. Thus then the Euangelicall medicine hath wyne of it owne, wherewith to scoure the matter of our woundes that they smarte agayne. Auaunt, comē behynde me Satan, thou sauoureste not tho thinges whiche are of god, but whiche are of men. Now for the suppleing oyle of the same. Haue ye a perfeict trust and confidence, for I haue ouercomed the worlde. A heare of your heade shall not perisshe. Be ye not afeard litell flocke, for yours is the kyngdome of heauen. Paule hathe meate, wherwith he comforteth and cherysheth suche as are but newly conuerted to Chryste, that they maye not falle agayne into dyseases, forasmuche as they are yet weake: he hathe also sownd and substauntiall meate that maye keepe theym in perfeict strength, growyng forwarde from daye to daye vnto the measure of the fulnesse of Chryste. Those persones had gathered perfeicte strength, of whome it is thus wryten in the actes of the Apostles: They went reioyeryng out of the sighte of the counceyll, in that they had bene reputed worthye to suffre reproche for the name of Jesus. That manne also had gathered perfeycte strength whiche sayde: I canne dooe all thynges, in hym that maketh me strong. And for thys conſyderacion the Lord Jeſus in the gholpel exhorteth men to ỹ eating of the breade that was come from heauen, the eating wherof geueth immortalitee. He exhorteth men to the eatyng of his fleſhe, & to the drynkyng of his bloude, meanyng vndoubtedly of hys doctryne, which beyng as bread to the ſolle, dothe make the ſame luſtie and ſtrong, and (as effectuall ſtrong wyne) doeth inebriate men, & bryngе theym in a godly kynd of drounkenneſſe, euen to the contempte of this worlde, in lyke maner as fleſhe hath ſounde nourylhement for the bodye, and lyke as bloude hath a vertue and effect vnto lyke. And though all the ſcripture of god haue a medicinable vertue & power in it: yet hath it none a more effectuall electuarye or receite then that perteyneth to the gholpell. One and the ſame ſpiritte it is, that is in all the ſcriptures of God, but yet in the gholpell ſpecyally his pleaſure was, that the thyng ſhould remayne, wherin he myght ſpecially ſhew foorth his owne power, becauſe there ſhould appeare ſome difference betwene the ſeruauntes and the maiſter, betwene the puddles or litel gutters, and the ſpryng or fountayne. And truely it is a labour well beſtowed, to conſyder howe great a thyng the vertue of this medicine is. Euery common weale is (as ye woulde ſaye) a certayne bodye. The peſtilent diſeaſes and ſyckeneſſes of a common weale, are euyl maners. Agaynſt which diſeaſes ſuche men as haue excelled others in wiſedome, haue in ſondrye regyons ordeined and ſette lawes, as it were certayne medicines & remedies for the ſame. as for exaumple, emong the Athenians, Solon made lawes: emong the Lacedemonians, Lycurgus: emong the people of Crete, Minos: emong the Romaynes the tenne Comiſſioners, called in theyr toungue, decemuiri

Yet not one of all theſe men, was hable to bryng to paſſe, that other nacions alſo woulde embrace & receyue the lawes that he had made. No neyther dyd any of theym ſo muche as attempte ſuche a thyng, leſte beſydes ſpendyng of labour in vayne, he ſhould alſo haue woonne an opinion of a ſhameleſſe acte in his ſo dooyng. Solon was fayne to lyue tenne yeres a baniſhed man for thruſtynge hys lawes into the cytee of Athens alone to bee vſed there. Plato a man ſo well learned and ſo eloquent, coulde neuer bryng the people of Athens in mynde to receiue his lawes. And yet is there no doubtes to be made, but that euery one of theym perſuaded theimſelues, that the lawes whiche they had made wer true, and that they wyſhed (if it might poſſibly haue bene brought to paſſe) that all ỹ worlde ſhould haue embraced and receyued ỹ ſame. No nor the lawes of Moyſes neyther wer ſpred abrode or receyued any ferther then onely within one nacyon, although in dede the Phariſees did with great hyghe ſuite hunte to wyn and geat vnto theym a fewe proſelytes, that is to ſaye, forens and alyens woonne to theyr relygyon. Fynally not the violent autoritee of the Emperours neyther, was able by violence or compulſyon to obteyne, that theyr lawes myght haue weyght and force with all nacyõs. And the thing which all the layed perſones by the lawes that they made did endeuour to bring about, the ſame dyd alſo the philoſophyers attempte by theyr morall rules and leaſſons with great iudgement & with incomparable diligence and labour wryten & publyſhed. Of all whych neuertheleſſe, not one hath there bene ſo eloquent or ſo well learned, that he hath bene hable to bryng anye one nacyon in the mynde that he woulde haue theym in, ſo werilye and vneffectuall effectual was the vertue of the medicine of Physicke whiche they brought. Onelye the trueth Euangelicall dyd in processe of a fewe yeres possesse, perswade, and ouercome all nacyons of the worlde full and whole, drawyng vnto it the Grekes, and the barbarous peoples, the learned and the vnlearned, the inferiour common people, and kinges & al. So pithithie and so effectuall was the electuarie of thys trueth, that so many thousandes of people forsakyng the lawes of their owne countreys, renouncyng the relygion that theyr forefathers had vsed, leauyng aswell the sensuall pleasures and vices, whiche from their cradles they haue bene accustomed vnto: they enbraced a newe and a forein doctrine, and out of diuerse tounges, and ordeinaunces of contrarie sortes, they dyd consente to the receyuyng of a certayne lowe and basse philosophye: especiallye at suche a tyme as neuer was there any of the lyke sorte furnished nor armed eyther wyth the mainteinaunce and supportacion of learnyng and eloquence, or with the power and autoritie of prynces, & at suche tyme forthermore whan al the worlde with all the strength that it had, fought against the trueth of the ghospell beeyng vnarmed and naked: yet neuertheless it coulde not possibly bryng to passe, but that the sayd trueth after that it first entred possession vpon the countrey of Grece, inuaded also the citie of Rome, and the verai courte of Nero, and forthwith spred it selfe abrode throughout all and singular the prouincies of the Empier of Rome, euē vntil the Isles called Gades, lying in the ferthest parte beyonde Spaigne, and vnto the Indians, vnto the peoples of Afrike, and the Scithians, and the Isle of Britānia now called Englande, beeyng a countreye vtterlye diuided and cutte of from all the rest of the worlde. These nacions and peoples dyd verai muche differ one from an other in theyr languages, lawes, rites, vsages, ordeynaunces, Goddes, relygion, and factions: and anon beeyng from suche greate discorde brought to a generall vnitormitye, they begonne to syng all one song, extollyng with laudes and prayses Iesus Chryste the onelye Lorde and saluecoure of the worlde. And all this whyle, the spoylyng of their gooddes, theyr banyshmentes, enpryesonynges, tormentes, and deathes, were none other thyng but good procedyng and goyng forewarde of the ghospell. What persone hath there euer bene founde, that hath bene contente to suffre death for the lawes of Solon, or the morall preceptes of zenocrate? But for the simple and playne doctrine of Chryste, howe many thousandes of men, both olde and young, howe manye thousandes of matrones and virgins haue wyllingly offered and holden out their neckes to be chopt of? And yet how muche more woondrefull, and more abhorryng from cōmon reason, are the thynges whiche the gospel teacheth, then which the Paradoxes, that is to saye, the straunge opinions of the philosophiers dooe teache? And the sayed philosophiers doctrine not one of the princes did euer make any a dooe to destroye or suppresse, & yet of it owne accorde it vanished awaye, lyke as did also theyr lawes, and the art magicall, and the rites of sacrifices. For what creature dooeth at thys daye sacrifyce vnto the Goddes of the Heathen, or slaygheth beastes in sacrifice as the Iewes did? What persone dooeth nowe knowe of zoroastes? What man setteth ay heare by the mysticall ridels of Pythagoras? Who readeth the like of Apollonius Tyaneus any otherwyſe then as a certayn dreame: Yea or rather who vouchesalueth to reade it at all? For where Ariſtotell is at theſe dayes of great name and fame in the ſcholes, leat hym neuer thanke his owne ſecte therfore, but the Chriſtians.

For euen he had periſhed to, if ther had not ben made a medley of Chriſte and him together in our ſcholes of diuinitie. Againſt ỹ philoſophie Euangelicall beeyng yet but tendre & euen but newely ſpryngyng vp, the world aroſe at the firſt chop with al hys force and power by meane of the Iewes, vnder the preterte and coulour of religion fyghtyng againſt the fountain of all religion, by meane of the philoſophiers beyng hable muche to doe in al kindes of learnyng, by meane of the Sophiſtes beyng felowes vnpoſſible to be ouercomed in ſtiffeneſſe of holdyng argumentacions, by meane of the rhetoricians beeyng men meruaylous in the force of eloquence, by the tyrannes beyng armed wyth all ſortes of shewyng crueltie, by meane of kynges, lieutenauntes, magiſtrates, by ſuche as wer cunnyng in magike and ſorcerie, and perfect in the ſleight of caſting myſtes ouer mennes eyes and other ſenſes, and by meane of euill ſpirites beeyng the lordes of thys worlde. All ſuche tumultuous buſyneſſe, as theſe, (as a ſea of euuills ſwelling vp and ouerflowing,) did the power of the trueth Euãgelical receiue, endure, breake through, and vtterly ouercome. For at the light of the goſpell whan it came, it was reaſon that all counterfaictes of worldely power ſhould clene vaniſhe awaye. Up ſhot that ſame gholpel and ſhewed itſelf beeyng plain & lowe, whiche al men with great adooe endeuoured to ouertrede and kepe down. The bokes of ſuche perſones, as with ſingular high witte, with woondreful learning, & with exquiſite eloquence wrote againſt the gholpell, vaniſhed awaye of their owne accorde as it had ben certayn dreames, inſomuche that they are not at this day remaynyng to be had neither, except if any fragmentes or ſmall pieces haue bene ſaued of the Chriſtiãs, by reaſon of wrytyng againſt them in confutyng theim. The kynges and prynces do now bough down, to honour the thyng whiche tofore they wēt about to deſtruie: the power of magike is vaniſhed away and gon: the euill ſpirites are caſt out that thēr owle and rore againſt: philoſophie hathe confeſſed hir ignorauunce: & geuyng ouer the foolish wyſedome of ỹ worlde, it hath enbraced the wyſedome of the croſſe: the rhetoricians wryte oracions in the praiſe of Jeſ⁹ Chriſt: ỹ poetes dooe hille ỹ old goddes out of place, & in the lieu and place of Goddes innumerable, al their ſong and compoſing is now of Jeſus Chriſte alone. Thiſſaime ſo great a chaunge of the worlde begonne within a fewe yeres after Chryſt was putte to death, to bee made generall and common through all the whole world, & without any maynteinaunce or ſuppoztacion of man, it encreaced from tyme to tyme ſtill more and more, vntil ỹ piece of leauen beeyng mengled in thre peckes of meale did leauen and turne al the whole batche, and vntil the grayne of muſtardſede beyng digged into ỹ yearth, dyd ferre and wyde ſpreigh his boughes abrode ouer Aſia, ouer Affrike, and Europe. And ouer and beſydes al this, theſe perſones who laied their battrey againſt the trueth Euangelicall to caſt it down and to deſtruie it, not onely had diuerſe and ſoondry kindes of terrours, wherwith euen verai manly ſtomakes also myght haue bene quailled, that is to wete, open commaūdementes by proclamacion, conſiſtories and places of iudgemente, forfaicting of al theyr gooddes to the prynces, attaindres & depriuacions, banishementes, prisons, tormētes of burnyng plates, scourgeyng with roddes, axes wherewith to chop of their heades, iobettes, fyers to burne them, wild beastes to cast them to, ỳ they myght bee deuoured, deathes: but also they had diuerse and soondrie alluremētes, wherewith an herte though it wer right continent might be corrupted. Cesar would saye to some one of them: Reneague thou and forsake Christ, and be thou the chiefe emong all my piers, and excepte thou so dooe, all thy gooddes shall be forefaict to my behoue, I will shewe all extremitie of rigour towardes thy wyfe and thy children, and thyselfe for thyne owne parte shalt be cast to wylde beastes in a denne. Who did in suche cases as these perswade so many thousandes, and bryng theim in mynde wyth reioycyng to take it whan their promocions and dignities wer taken frō them, whan their gooddes wer spoyled, that whan thei sawe those parties haled with al violence to huge tormentes and execucion of death, who next after god wer moste derely beloued vnto them, thei should geue thankes to God, and finally that themselfes, whan thei myght easily haue escaped, and whan thei might haue enioyed suche high commodities, should of their owne voluntarie willes offre themselfes to be cruelly martyred? No power of humayn eloquence could this haue doen: but the godly power of the trueth was hable, whiche lay hidden in the grayne of mustardsede. Neyther did ỳ philosophiers doctrine lacke alluremēt. The Stoikes promised libertie & freedome, true ryches, health, reygne, and other thynges magnificent & royall to be spoken. The Epicureans made high woordes and promises of pleasure to the eares of men. The peripatetikes did couple the good giftes of ỳ body with vertue. But ỳ doctrine of ỳ ghospell as it did not drawe any bodye vnto it with any worldely terrours: so on the cōtrarie parte, how ferre was it from hauyng any thyng commendable in outwarde shewe to see to, nai rather how many thynges did it conteine vtterly vncredible? It telleth newes of one Jesus nayled on the crosse, who had by his death delyuered mankynde, and this Jesus to be bothe God and man, borne of a virgin, & one that had retourned again from death to life, and was now sitting at the right hande of God the father, and the same Jesus to had bene a man that had taught suche persones to be in blissed case as for the profession of hys name did mourne & wayle, did suffre thirst or houngre, wer putte to affliccion, were euill spoken of, or wer putte to death: & that all men shal in tyme to come arise to life again, and that the godly sorte at that day (thesame betray Jesus beeyng theyr iudge,) shall haue immortalitie to theyr lotte, and the wieked shall haue the peines of hell for euer wythout ende to endure. What philosophier durst haue interprised to propoune suche thynges as these so ferre contrarie to all mennes opinion or thynkyng, and thynges so vntouthsome for men to be fond on, or to make any great countenaunce vnto? Yet all these thynges neuertheless did the lawe talke of, the ghospell did in suche wyse perswade, that suche an one is taken for mad & clene oute of his wittes, as dooeth not beleue it: and that so many thousandes of people will sooner forsake their life, then the profession of the trueth Euangelicall. And by what manier felowes at last did so great a chaunge of the worlde first come vp: by meane of a fewe disciples beyng men vnknowen, men of lowe degree, men of pouertie, and vnlearned.

To what purpose is it to speake of the rest, whan Petur the chief of theim was a fisher, and of no ferther knowlage but hys bare mother toungue, Paule a leather sewer, and not one of theim all a man of rychesse, or a man of power, or a gentil man? And eyther nothyng at all had they of this worldes, or in case they had afore tymes had, they clene forsooke it.

And by what wayes was it possible for suche mē to bryng so great a matter to passe? certes thei brought a medicine i a vile boxe, but it was through godly vertue, a medicine of great power and efficacie.

The talke euangelicall is of a plain homely sorte, and of no eloquent composing, whiche in case a man examine and trye by the storie of Thucidides in greke, or of Titus Liuius in latin, he shall fynde a lacke of many thynges, and with many poyntes shall he be offended. What a noumbre of thynges dooe the euangelistes leat passe, howe manye thynges dooe they touche with thre woordes and no more, in howe manye places dooeth the ordre disagree, and in howe many places dooe they appere to be one contrarie vnto an other? It was possible that suche thynges shoulde haue turned awaie the mynde of the reader, from the readyng of it, and should haue caused it neuer to be beleued. Contrariewyse they that haue wryten stories of worldely affaires, how carefull are they wherof to make the first begynnyng of the matter, what labour and diligence doe they bestowe, that they may not tell any thyng otherwyse then is semyng, that they maye not tell any thyng vnlykely, ẏ they may not tell any thyng not well standyng together, or any thinges contrarie vnto reason. Than ferther wᵭ what euidence dooe they laye the thing plaine before mennes eyes, with what swete pleasaunt knackes and conceiptes do they content and reteine the readers mynde, ẏ no poynte of tediousnesse maye come stealyng vpon hym? But ẏ monumentes of all this sorte of wryters hauing bene composed with great labour and studie, are a greate porcion of thē lost, and those ẏ remaine are read neither of all persones, & yet without geuyng any credite vnto theim. For what persone is there so light of beliefe, that he will auouche and warraūt that in al Titus Liuius there is no poynt conteined of telling an vntrueth? But so many thousandes of people there haue bene found, whyche would with better wille tenne tymes suffre death, then to admitte or graūt any one falle clause to bee conteined in the wrytynges of the ghospell.

Haue we not than of these premisses an euident marke whereby to knowe the matter not to be of worldely autorite or wysedome, but of the vertue and power of God? There is a secrete vertue and efficacie lying hydden in the medicine, whyche whan it was once poured into the bodye, spred itself abrode ouer all the vniuersall nacions of the worlde, as it were by resemblaunce throughout all the membres.

We haue nowe the cause, why the veritie euangelicall did within so fewe yeres by men of lowe degree spreade it self abrode all the worlde ouer, whan the same worlde rebelled agaynst it with all kyndes of extreme crueltie.

And nowe maye it come in some mannes mynde greatlye to meruayle by what reason it hathe come to passe that in those later seasons, whan the world had Christian princes, Bishops, men of learnyng, welthie and ryche persones, & endued with great autorite, the diction of Christe is so shronken together into a narowe roume.

For the cause of this matier being well knowen, a remedie might perhappes the sooner bee found.

But I haupng a good while sence forgotten my self, dooe passe the limites and boundes of a preface. I therfore returne now to oure physician Luke, whome lyke as I doubte not to be right acceptable vnto youre grace: so would I by my good wyll haue hym by meane of thesame youre grace, to bee made the more acceptable vnto all people. The wyse Ecclesiasticus speaketh in this manier: Honour thou the physician for necessities sake. Howe muche more than ought condigne honour to be shewed to this physician, who hath lentilly geuen vs so effectuall a receipt of phylike, whiche is to euerye creature necessary, except yf any suche persone there be, whiche is without all faulte and hath no nede to weaxe a better man then he was: And certes it will also be effectuall, if we beyng vtterly werye of our diseases and infirmities, shall often tymes byte of his medicine, yf we shall continually chawe it, if we shall cõueigh it to passe into our stomacke and into the botome of our herte, if we shall not vomite vp again that hath bene taken therof, but shall kepe thesame still in the stomake of our soule, vntill it cast abrode the vertue that it hath, and chaunge vs altogether into it selfe. This poynte haue I by experience founde in myne owne selfe, that lytell fruicte there cometh of the ghospel, yf a man reade it but sluggishely, and superficially renne it ouer. But in case a manne dooe with diligente and exquisite meditacion kepe himselfe occupied therin, he shall feele a certayn vertue and pith suche as he shall not fele the lyke in any other bookes.

Now to preuent making of myne aunswer vnto the suspicious dempnges of men, for that I haue dedicated euery particular paraphrase of the gospels seuerallye to particular princes, it is verai chaunce & not anye ambicion or seekyng on my behalfe. For thesame thyng hath fortuned vnto me in this matier, that fortuned in the epistles Apostolical. Whan I wrote the paraphrase vpon Mathewe, I looked for nothing lesse, then that Jhon should be earnestely required and immediately after him this Lukas.

But nowe to thentente there shall not anye glasewyndooze or gappe be sene emong the Euangelistes, I wyll adde Marke also vnto the other three: albeit he that dedicateth soondrye ghospells to soondrye men, maye seme to dooe neuer a white more contrarye to reason, then dyd Sainct Hierome who dedicated, yea euen the lesser prophetes vnto seuerall persones. I haue elswhere geuen aduertisemente, and dooe nowe eftsones geue warnyng vnto the reader, that he esteme no more auctorite to be in anye paraphrase of myne, then he woulde geue to the comentaries of other wryters. For I doe not for any suche purpose wryte paraphrases, because I would shake or strieke the ghospel out of mennes handes, but to thentente it may be reade the more commodiouslye to a mannes mynde, and with the more fruicte, lyke as meates are sauced to the ende they maye be taken wyth the better will and the more delectacion. Yea and of one ferther poynt also must I here warne a reader that is some what grosse of vnderstandyng, whiche is, that it bee not myne owne woordes that I dooe anye where speake in the paraphrase, lest the thyng whiche vnder the persone of the Euangelist is humbly and truely spoken, maye seme to bee arrogauntly spoken vnder myne owne persone.

Luke a phisician, ꝛ borne in Antioche, was not ignorant of the greke toungue (as his wrytinges do shewe) he was a folower and disciple of the Apostle Paule, and a companion of all his peregrinacion: He wrote a volume of the gospel, of whom the same Paule saieth in this manier: We haue sent with him a brother whose prayse is in the gospel throughout all the congregacions. And agayne to the Colossians: Moste dere Luke the phisicion greteth you. And to Timothe, Luke is with me alone. He sette foorth also an other speciall goodly booke whiche is entitled the actes of the Apostles, the storye wherof came euen ful to Paules tyme beeyng and tariyng two yeres at Rome, that is to saye, vntill the fowerth yere of Nero the Emperour there. Whereby we do well perceiue that the sayd booke was made in the same citie. Therfore as for the circuites of Paul and of Tecla the virgin, and all the tale of Leo by him baptised, we rekon emong the scriptures ꝑ are called Apocrypha. For what manier a thing is it, that a companion whiche neuer went from his elbowe, should emong his other matiers be ignorant of this thyng alone? Tertullian whiche was nere vnto that tyme, reporteth that a certayne priest in Asia beeyng an affeccionate fauourer of the Apostle Paul, was conuicte before Jhon for beyng autour of the same boke, and that the preeste confessed hymself to had doen the thing for the loue that he bare to Paule, and the booke by reason therof to had escaped hym. Some wryters deme, that as often as Paule in hys epistles saieth: according to my ghospell, he signifieth of the weorke of Luke, and that Luke learned the ghospell not onely of the Apostle Paule, who had not bene conuersaunt with the lord in the fleashe, but also of the reste of the Apostles, whiche thing Luke hymself also declareth in the begynnyng of his owne weorke, saying: As they haue delyuered theim vnto vs, which from the begynning sawe them themselfes with their iyes, ꝛ were ministres of the thynges that they declared. The ghospell therfore he wrote as he had heard: but the Actes of the Apostles he composed as he had seue. He lined lxxviii yeres not hauing any wife. Buryed he was at constantinople, vnto whiche citie hys bones were remoued and conueighed out of Achaia, together with the bones of Andrewe the Apostle, in the .xx. yere of Constancius the Emperour.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Ghospel of S. Luke.

The Prologue.

¶ Forasmuche as many haue taken in hande to sette foorth the declaracion of the actes that are come to passe emong vs, lyke as thei deliuered theim vnto vs that first sawe theim theimselues, and wer ministres of the woord: I thought good also (now that I had gotten the knowelage of al frō the beginnyng) to write them diligentely vnto the in ordre good Theophilus, to the ende that thou mightest knowe the trueth of those woordes, of the whiche thou art enfourmed.

IN the historyes of worldely affaires, vpō consideracion, that not a litell aswell delectatiō as also profite is taken of the knowelage of thynges: there is customably required an vpright trueth of reportyng ẏ same. But muche more ought this vpright trueth to bee in makyng relacion of ẏ Ghospell: the whiche not onely doeth muche delite the mynde hauyng litell els to dooe, & is verai commodious and profitable vnto this transitorie life: but also is necessarie vnto true godlynesse, without the whiche, no man achieueth eternall saluacion, and the blisse that neuer shall decaie of the life euerlastyng. For it wer no great matier of daungier, though a mā did not knowe what man Hannibal was, or Alexander: what actes Epaminondas or Scipio hath doen: what matiers Solō, Lycurgus, or Draco haue wryten: what doctrine Socrates, Plato, or Aristotle taught, (albeeit the knowelage of these thynges also, after the rate of mannes state & case in this worlde, hath their fruicte:) but what soeuer person shal not knowe ẏ father, the soonne, & the holy ghoste: whosoeuer shall not learne what actes the soonne of God Iesus Christ hath dooen on yearth for ẏ saluacion of mankynde, what he hath taught, what he hath promised vnto suche as dooe constauntely cleue to ẏ doctrine of ẏ ghospell, what he hath threatened vnto suche persones as dooe either litell regarde, or els dooe plainly despise thesame: suche an one shal not possibly bee hable to auoid, but ẏ beyng excluded out of ẏ cumpaignie of Goddes children, and shut out frō the ioyes of the heauenly life, he shalbee adiudged with the wicked, to the tormentes of the diepe pitte of hell, whiche neuer shall haue ende. And in dede at ẏ first, by meane of ẏ Apostles beeyng therūto chosen of our lorde himself, and by the residue of his disciples beeyng enspired with the holy ghoste, ẏ ghospell (in dede by liuely voice & by mouth onely, but yet with moste vpright certaintee and assured trueth) is begoon to be spred abrode thorough out all coastes and countreyes of the worlde, and dooeth daily yet still ferther and ferther renne abrode. Yet forasmuche as the synceritee of reportyng (the whiche goyng from man to man by mouth onely issueth successiuely to a great noumber) is more lightely corrupted, thē suche reporte as is sette out & left from one to an other i writyng: therefore Matthewe the Apostle, one of the twelf, whom our Lord Jesus beyng yet cōuersaunt on yearth, had specially appuincted and chosen to this office: & also Marke the disciple of Petur the Apostle, wer by inspiratiō of the holy ghoste admonished to putte the summe of the whole storie of ỹ ghospel in writyng: not mindyng ne goyng about by preuēcion to take away frō others any libertee to wryte of ỹ same matiers: but rather, leste any persone beeyng craftily deceiued by false Apostles, should folowe the Jewes facions or fonde fables in stede of the ghospell. Notwithstādyng, lyke as not euery mā dyd at that time with eguall synceritee & purenesse preache ỹ ghospell: so those that write dooe not euerie man with lyke feithfulnesse & trueth handle the storie of the ghospell. For many an one hath attempted after like sorte to patche & to make a medley of the discourse of reporting Christes ghospel, as other wryters are woont of mortall mēnes actes: ỹ is, entremedlyng ofttymes false thynges emong the true, and telling for matiers of approued certaintee, suche thynges as thei had afore taken onely of ỹ vncertain rumoures & voices of ỹ commō people, yea, & many tymes inuentyng of their owne braynes some thyng to tell, eyther of a delite & lust to lye, orels beeyng corrupted with some other affeccion. And (as mortall mens matiers are of nature apte and readie to bee corrupted) there shal perchaunce here after also some persones stert vp, whiche through makyng lyes on the actes and doctrine of Christe and of his disciples, shall cause, that true matiers shall not be credited neither. Therefore the spirite of Jesus hath (as it wer) nypped my herte also with a litel twynge, that after Matthewe and Marke, (whiche two with all possible trueth and vprightnesse, wrote as muche as at that tyme thei iudged to bee sufficient, and yet neuertheless of a sette purpose & entente, lefte vnto others certain thynges to be writen, supplyng in ỹ meane tyme with the office of liuely voice, that lacked in their writynges (& after some others whiche haue not with sembleable vprightnesse attempted the same: of whiche persones some haue euery where entermyngled many punctes muche cōtrarie to ỹ doctrine of ỹ ghospell: & many haue rather had an yie to fil vp the holes of the storie with fables & tales vnsemyng for the grauitee of the ghospell, thē to tell suche thynges as the holy ghost hath iudged to be auailable towardes ỹ blisse euerlasting: I Luke also should by compolyng a certayn ordre & processe of the storie Euangelical, bothe supplie suche matiers as haue been omitted by the others, and also debarre ỹ autoritee of other persones whiche either heretofore haue wryten, or hereafter shall write for matiers of certaintee & for matiers of euident trueth, either fantasies of their owne imaginyng, orels thynges none otherwyse knowen but by the rumour & bruite of the people, who is commonly an authour and bringer vp of thynges, not all of the finest. And yet dooe not we our selues so frame ỹ processe of this storie, that we leat passe nomanier puincte at all of the thynges that haue been saied or dooen: but we make relacion of suche thynges onely, as we knowe to concerne ỹ godly deuocion of ỹ ghospell, and the fruicīō of the life euerlastyng. For, an infinite & endlesse matier it wer, throughly to wryte euerie thyng that Jesus

ſus hath dooen or taught. Some puinctes there bee, whiche without the preiudice of ſaluacion maie not bee vnknowen: ſome other thynges again there bee, the knowelage wherof bringeth verai muche profite to the Zele and deſire of perfeict godlyneſſe: and ſome puinctes finally there bee, that maie bee vnknowen without any perill of ſaluacion, and vithout any grieuous empechemēte or hindrеaunce of a chriſten mānes perfection: as in dede (for an exaumple) all that euer we knowe in diuine matiers, is but a litell litell porciō, in reſpecte & comparaiſon of that that we knowe not. Therefore neither will we touche & traicte of euerie matier to the vttermoſte, nor yet tell or recite thynges vncertain: but thoſe thynges onely will we declare, of which there hath been moſte aſſured & euidēt certaintee ſhewed vnto vs by the vndoubted Apoſtles and diſciples of Chriſte, the whiche had not onely theimſelues with their owne yies ſeen a great parte of the thynges ỹ thei told vnto vs, & had heard the ſame with their owne eares, and had the handelyng & dooyng of muche parte therof with their owne handes: but alſo had theimſelues been a parte of theſame actes that thei reported wer dooen, as men that had dooen many thynges at ỹ commaundemente of the Lorde, & had ſuffred not a fewe thynges for his ſake becauſe thei wer in al matiers inſeparable compaignions & folowers of Jeſus Chriſte, almoſte neuer out of his preſēce. Neither ought there the leſſe credite to bee geuē vnto me, for that I dooe wryte ſuche thynges not as I haue ſeen my ſelf, but as I haue learned of others. It was requiſite to a matier beyng ſo ferre out of all vſe, and ſo ſtraunge, & ſo vncredible: that feith ſhould firſt bee acquired & woonne out of all the ſenſes of ỹ bodye, & than theſame feith to bee confirmed with euident woonders & miracles. But this kynde of tokens or prouffes cānot euermore cōtinue ne endure: For on ỹ one ſyde Chriſte did not long exhibite hymſelf to bee ſeen in this worlde, & on ỹ other ſyde miracles are thynges but for a tyme geuen to mēnes hardeneſſe of beliefe, & afterward once to ceaſſe & to haue an ende. It is ſufficient that the rudimentes and firſt principles of the feith, proceded from ſuche begynnynges as theſe. Thomas the Apoſtle ſawe Chriſt after his reſurrection heard hym, & felt hym with his handes, and than belieued: but our Lorde & maiſter Chriſte pnounceth ſuche perſones to bee bliſſed, which although thei haue not bodyly ſeen the thynges dooen, yet neuertheleſſe dooe geue as muche credite to ỹ woordes of the ghoſpell, as if thei had perſonally been preſent at ỹ dooyng of theſame. For otherwyſe, if onely the yies ſhould bee belieued, euē verai thei that wer bodyly conuerſaunt with our Lorde, dooe reporte many matiers, at ỹ dooyng of whiche theimſelues wer not preſent, but learned it of other perſones beyng ſubſtanciall, credible, & true of their reporte: as (for an exaumple) of the natiuitee & petigrewe of Chriſt, of the wyſe men that wer called Magi, (whiche came from the Eaſte to ſee Chriſte beeyng newe borne) of ỹ fleyng of Joſeph and Marie with Chriſt into Egypte, of Satan how he tempted Chriſte. We Euangeliſtes, though we ſawe not the beginnynges of thynges, yet haue wee ſeen the ſequeles and endes of theim. We haue ſeen in the Apoſtles, all ỹ euer our Lorde had promiſed of theim in the ghoſpell. We haue ſeen theim beeyng enſpired with the holy ghoſte, geue theſame holy ſpirite of God to other pſones alſo, receiuyng baptiſme that it might not bee denyed but that they had ſeen hard, and felt theſe thynges.

by laiyng their handes ouer theim: yea, and in our owne selues haue we found and felt the effectuall power and strengthe of the holy ghoste. We haue seen deuilles driuen out of men at the name of Jesus: we haue seen diseases put awate: we haue seen poysõs void of all effecte or force to dooe harme. We haue seen that the maiestee of the ghospell, by men of slender substaunce in worldely rychesse, by men of lowe degree borne, by men priuate, that is to saie, by men hauyng no seculare autoritee at all, is yet neuertheless i a fewe yeres famously notified thorough out the wholle vniuersall yearth, and that the great and mightie princes of the worlde haue in vain striued and wrastled to suppresse it.

And verily euen the same thyng also, had our Lorde spoken afore and prophecied, vvhan I shall bee lifted vp from the yearth (saied he) I shall drawe all thynges to my self. Suche authours and auouchers of thynges, and the growyng of the same thynges to suche an ende & prouf as afore is saied, dooeth not suffer vs to doubte, neither of tho thynges that haue passed before our tyme, ne yet of suche thynges, as for many hundredes of yeres to come are promised. Whatsoeuer had of long tyme afore been foresaied by the godly saiynges of the prophetes, Jesus at his comyng into the worlde did perfourme and fulfil: and whatsoeuer thing Christ toward his departure from hens vp to heauẽ, said afore to the Apostles that it should come to passe, hath in dede come to passe: neither is it to be doubted, but ẏ he wil with semblable vprightnesse, & trueth, accomplishe all other thynges, whiche he hath differred vntill his second comyng to be perfourmed concernyng the resurrection of our bodyes, & concernyng the rewardes of the Godly persones, & of the wicked. Therefore as for the ordre & processe of ẏ ghospell matiers, I haue with earnest studie thoughly boulted out of the mouthes of suche whose wordes are vndoubted & certain to wyte vpõ. And out of these haue I picked suche puinctes as semed to bee moste effectuall and moste helping to the feith, and to the deuout godlynesse of the ghospell: not geuyng it a slender litell touche here & there as it wer at rouers, and as menne gather flowres here and there one at auẽture as thei come to hand: but folowyng the ordre of the tyme, & the due course or processe of matiers, I haue diligently compiled the storie, yea euen some what ferre fettyng the matier from the first grounde, that is to wete, from the concepcion of hym, whiche went before the comyng of our saueour lyke as in birth, so in preachyng also, and in death.

And then furthermore I traicte of the straũger concepciõ of Christ within the wombe of the virgin, of the birth of the childe, of his circuncisiõ, of the purification of Marie, of soondrie prophecies spoken vpõ the childe, & of certain tokens of godly towardenesse whiche euen verai than alreadie did like certain litell sparkes appere in the childe: of whiche thynges the other Euangelistes that with vpright trueth and certaintee wrote before, had touched almoste nothyng at all. After all this, how John baptised and preached, and than of the baptisyng of Jesus, of his beeyng tempted, of his doctrine, of woondres that he wrought, of his death, of his beeyng laied in graue, of his arisyng again from death to life, and of his returnyng vp into heauen. These thynges well sette in an ordre eche in his moste conuenient place, I shall in an other traictise

adde, how he lent the holy ghoste, and what wer the first rudimentes and principles of the primitiue churche whan it first came vp, and begoonne, and also as it grewe from tyme to tyme greatter and greatter. what the chief Apostles Petur, James, Paule & Barnabee did, what thei taught, by what miracles, and by what afflictions thei glorified the name of our Lorde Jesus: not for that I suppose that these thynges wil bee straunge vnto thee, moste honest Theophilus, but partely to thentente that thou maiest eftsones perule in an order tho thynges whiche thou hast by piecemele learned of others: and partely to thende that thou maiest of a more perfeicte and assured credēce, throughly perceiue by my writyng, thesame thynges, whiche thou haddest heard of others aforetymes by their liuely voice and woorde of mouthe, and maiest refuse the fablynges of a great sorte whiche dooe at this present, vnder ỹ false counterfaicte name of the gholpel, sette out their owne peincted sheathe: & not ỹ alone o (for we dooe not wryte these thynges to any one sole pson onely but also al other persones either at this present time liuyng, or hereafter to come, whiche either be or shalbe the same in dede, that thou art called in name, that is to wete, the louers of god, whiche renouncyng and vtterly geuyng vp the deuil, dooe with earnest readinesse of beleuyng, & with godly aplyng theimselues, sue to the frendeship of God: and the whiche despisyng aswell the euils as also the good thynges of this transitorie worlde, dooe bende all their desire to tho thynges, that are euerlastyng and heauenly.

Theophilus, In Greke is in Englishe ỹ louer of God,

The first Chapter.

WHan the tyme by the purpose and appoyntement of God prefixed, & by soondrie saige sawes of the prophetes aforetold and promised, & by the space of so many hūdred yeres, greatly wished for of holy & deuout people, was now come, that the soonne of God should take vpon hym the nature of māne, for to redeme mākynde by his death, & aswell by his doctrine as also by his exaumple of dooyng, for to enstructe vs towardes the knowelage of the trueth, and the earnest loue and desire of the godly trade of the Gholpell, and finally by his promises for to sette vp our hertes towardes the hope of the life euerlastyng in heauen: forbecause all this same that was to bee dooen, was straunge, nor the lyke heard of in any age or tyme afore, (the wysedome of God by secrete wayes and meanes ordreyng all thynges) there was leat passe no puincte at all of any tokens or euidente signes, whiche might to a matter of it selfe incredible, purchace credite, and cause it to bee belieued emong men. For who hath euer heard a man to haue been borne of a woman on yearth whiche should for euermore reigne God in heauen? The histories euen of ỹ Gentiles also bee ful of straunge thynges ỹ haue happened against ỹ cōmon course of nature. In ỹ bookes of the olde testamente wee learne that ỹer hath been cast downe frō heauen: we learne the sea to haue opened & diuided it self in twoo partes: water to haue been gotte fourth of a dyre rocke by touchyng it with a long rodde: and dead menne to haue been restored again to life. But who hath euer heard a virgin to haue brought fourth a childe without mannes helpe? Yet in dede the chief article of our saluacio̅ it was, that this same puincte wer to all persones throughly perswaded, that is to wete, Iesv to bee thesame Messias, whose comyng, all foretellynges of the prophetes had promised, and whom all the lawes of Moses had by waie of a shadowe expressed, and of whom onely all persones must hope and truste to haue their saluacion,

The texte. ¶ There was in the daies of Herode the kyng of Jewrie, a certain priest named Zacharie, of the course of Abia, and his wife of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth.

Wherefore by the high wisedome and prouidence of god, there was one prepaired the whiche beeyng for his owne parte also borne into this world after a woondrefull straunge sorte, should goe before the heauely childebearyng of the virgin Marie: and the whiche through the noblenesse of his linage, through suche his holynesse of liuyng as had not afore ỹ tyme been heard of, & by his authoritee, through his rare giftes of grace gotten emōg al the people, might vnto Christ beeyng not yet borne, procure the first knowlage & feith emong the Jewes whiche wer hard of belief, euen as the doctrine of the ghospell (wherof Christe was the head, the first foūder, & first bringer vp) was at the first beginnyng made acceptable vnto the worlde, by the testimonie of the olde lawe, the figure of the whiche old lawe, Zacharie and Jhon did represent. But in short processe of tyme, (the course of thynges beeyng chaunged a contrarie waie) lyke as Christ, whā his vertues and giftes of grace wer shewed fourth, did derken the glorie of Jhon: so the brightenesse of the maiestee of the ghospell, as soone as it ons opened it self vnto the worlde, did (as ye would saie) clene abrogate ỹ authoritee of Moses lawe. And so it was, that where Jacob the Patriarke a litell before he should dye, beeyng endowed with ỹ spirite of prophecie, did foresaie verai many thynges whiche should afterwarde come to passe: whan it was nowe come to the mencionyng and namyng of Juda, (out of whose tribe our Lord Jesus should issue and procede by lineal descent) he spake these wordes of ỹ prophecie folowyng. The sceptre (saied he) shall not be taken from Iuda, ne the head rewler from the thighe of him, vntill he come that must be sent, and verai he shalbe the expectacion of all nacions. This prophecie did euidētely enough betoke̅ that Messias should at suche tyme come, whan the people of the Jewes (whiche had afore from tyme to tyme euermore been rewled & gouerned by Capitains, Judges, Kynges, & Priestes of their owne nacio̅) should now be subiect to a prince borne i a forein coūtrey. And thesame prophecie did all vnder one geue a token, that the grace of ỹ Ghospell (whiche the Jewes would despise & sette at naught,) should passe and goe from theim vnto the Gentiles. But first of all others, Herode ỹ soonne of Antipater, wheras he was neither descended of ỹ bloud of the Jewes, and yet was besides fourth an vngodly & a wicked persone, was not onely enfraunchised and called to the honour to bee a denisen of the countrey of Jewrye, but also throughe the fauour of Cesar Augustus than thã Emperour of Rome, obteined the kyngdome and rewle ouer the Jewes. Therefore euẽ by this tokẽ alone (though there had been no mo, nor no other) the Scribes and the Pharisees, (whiche tooke vpon theim the exacte and perfect knoweledge of the lawe,) might haue geassed, that the tyme was now come, whã that same man should bee borne, who defacyng and vanquishyng all terrene or yearthly kyngdomes, should bring into the worlde an heauenly kyngdom, & whiche in the place and stede of tyrannes, should create pastours, & i stede of lordely maisters, should make tẽdre fathers. Furthermore whereas the dignitee of the Judaical priesthood was in exceedyng high honour, and in wondrefull estimacion emong all persones: the holy ghoste had by the prophetes declared afore, that this priesthood also of the Jewes should bee abrogated and abolished, after that he wer ons come, the whiche not beeyng enoynted by mẽ with material or bodyly oyle, but beyng enoynted by God in spirite with the oyle celestiall, should through a sacrifice (beeyng in dede no mo but one sole sacrifice, but the same neuertheless a sacrifice of moste absolute efficacie and vertue) take awaye all the synnes of the worlde: and should through the feith of the ghospell, and the bounteous geuyng of the spirite of God, sanctifie and make holy all thynges. For Daniel had prophecied, that after the wekes or seuenfold doubles of yeres, that is to saie, after seuẽ tymes seuen yeres by god prefixed, it should come to passe, that the holy of all holyes should bee enoynted, and than from thensforth should the hostes and sacrifices of the olde lawe ceasse. When the thinges eternall shall bee ons come, thynges transitorie shall haue an ende: whan ghostely thynges shall bee come, thinges carnall shall ceasse: whã the trueth shall bee come, feigned countrefaictes shal geue place: whan the light shall bee come, shadoes and derkenesse shal vanishe awaye: whan Christe shall haue begonne to speake, the voice of the grosse lawe shall plaie mum, vntill that it too, dooe openly professe him, whom vntill now, it did rather (as who should saie) with certain tokens of beckyng, nod at, or puincte vnto, then by expresse woordes pronounce & declare to bee he. At suche tyme therefore as Herode, beeyng first a forreinour and an aliene borne, and secondarily a wicked persone, and with many manslaughters and hainous mourdres polluted, had all vnder his rewle and obeisaunce emong the Jewes, not by the autoritee of God, but by the fauour of Cesar Augustus: and at what tyme the religion of the Jewishe temple, whiche consisted in externall figures and ceremonies, did moste chiefly of all flourishe emong men: at what tyme extreme wickednesse and all vngodly facions did before the face of God reigne emong the Scribes, the Pharisees, the elders, and the bishoppes, vnder the false pretensed coulour and cloke of holynesse: euen than did ỹ comyng of the lorde Jesus, after this sorte as we shall now tell, begynne first to bee notified to the worlde. There was vnder a wicked kyng a godly priest, euen (as ye would saie) the last remaines that was left of the old ordre of priesthood, not beeyng yet corrupted with so many vices: this priestes name was Zacharie, whom ỹ ordre of lottes comyng about again by course, did at that present tyme calle to the ministryng of the sacres and holy rites in the Temple. For so had Dauid sorted all the wholle ordre of priestes into two principall families, that is to wete, of Eleazar, and of Ithamar. The other families beeyng subiect vnto these twoo, he diuided into fower and twentie lottes, that euerie of theim in ordre one after an other, should in their courses ministre the sacres in the Temple, eight daies space a piece: absteinyng all that whyle from all thynges, whiche by the rites of Moyses prescripcion, semed to make a man vnclene: refreinyng also frō coumpaignyng with their wiues, nor commyng ons within their owne house, but abydyng still in the Temple, to thende that thei might with the more chastitee and with the more puritee handle the seruice of god: but to all the residue of the priestes (beside hym whose course it was to ministre for that weke) it was leefull in ỹ meane space to attende to their wiues and their children, and to bee occupied about their other secular affaires, so that it wer thynges necessarie and requisite to bee dooē. And so it was, that whyle this ordre was thus i diuidyng by lottes emong the fower and twentie families, the eight place fell by lotte to Abia, of whom zacharie was lineally descended, and into whose place zacharie had by course succeded. All thissame, though it semed to bee dooen by mere chaūce at auenture, yet was there no one puincte therof, but it was wrought by ỹ high wysedome and prouidence of God, yea not so muche as the veraie noumbre of the course, but it was for a purpose and a consideracion. For lyke as the noūbre of seuē for many causes hath the figure and signification of the old lawe, so dooeth the noumbre of eight well accorde to the grace of the gospell, for asmuche as the euerlasting blisse of heauen is now geuen, not through the workes of the lawe but freely and frankely through feith. And zacharie had also a wife named Elizabeth, not onely the better to bee estemed for ỹ respecte of her noble birth (for she came of the stocke & bloud of Aaron the first priest of the people of Israel) but also woorthie to bee had in reuerence & worship for hir integritee & perfeict goodnesse of behaueour, to the entente that suche an holy man as zacharie was, should not bee without a wife accordyng.

The texte. ¶ Thei wer bothe righteous before god: & so walked in all the cōmaundementes and ordeinaunces of the lorde, that no man could fynde fault with theim. And thei had no childe because that Elizabeth was barain, and thei bothe wer now well stricken in age.

For it was in veraie dede an holy wedlock knitte & made vp not so muche by copulacion of their bodyes, as by lykenesse of theyr myndes and hertes, & by the felowship of godlynesse, because thei wer bothe of theim veray good folkes and iust, not with the iustice of the Pharisees (which Pharisees vnder a false coulour and a countrefaict shewe of holynesse, did sette foorth their peincted cheathe to the yies of men for lucre and for worldely praise, defourmyng their faces & makyng theim vnsightly for the nons, a troūpet blowyng before theim, at all suche tymes whan they gaue their almes, sekyng to bee estemed holy by reason of long praiers made in corners of the stretes, whan their herte was drouned in all fylthynesse of hainous offenses and trespaces against God:) but zacharie and Elizabeth with vncorrupt hertes did i suche wyse obserue and kepe all thynges whiche the lorde had commaunded by the lawe: that neither thei gaue vnto men any holde or title to fynde faulte with theim, and yet (the whiche is a puincte of no small difficultee) thei did also by the puritee and cleanesse of their liuyng, shewe theim selfes pleasyng in the sight of God. yea & this veray puincte also was wrought by the high wysedome of God, of a special prouision, to the ende that suche an one as should afterward geue testimonie vnto Christe at his cōmyng, might on his owne behalf bee in al manier degrees worthie acceptacion emong the people of the Iewes: first for the noblenesse of his linage, beeyng descēded of the ordre of priesthood

aswell on the fathers syde as on the mothers syde: secoũdaryly for the liuyng of bothe his parẽtes beeyng vnreprouable: thirdly for the vertues and giftes of grace in his owne self, beeyng woũdreful, and such as wer but in fewe persones to bee found: and finally for his glorious death whan he should suffre for the truthes sake. Ferthermore by the prouidence of God, this puincte also was wrought, that the straunge manier of his natiuitee should stiere vp the myndes of men to haue a special regarde of Jhon: and no suche common maters or facios, as wer in other folkes, to bee looked for at his hãde, ỹ whiche wer borne into this worlde not after the common course of nature, but by the onely benefite of God. For although the holy conuersacion of zacharie & Elizabeth was specially well approued and allowed of all persones: yet in this one puincte their godlynesse semed to haue but hard happe, that bothe of thẽ wer veray ferre growen in age without hauyng any issue or childe in al their tyme. For emõg the Jewes, lyke as the fruictefulnesse of matrimonie was reputed for a certain thyng of great royaltee, so was barainnesse in as muche reproche as any thyng, & was rekoned in the noũbre of the chief missehappes and euils of this life. For the moste parte of the people did interprete and take those persones to bee reiected and cast out of the fauour of God, whiche had not had the fortune & happe, with some kynde of issue to encreace & multiplie the people of the Jewes, beeyng a people specially chosen and dedicate vnto God. For the Jewes beeyng altogether grosse and carnall, had not yet learned, that a spiritnall and ghostely people it was, whiche God would haue by an heauenly generacion still from tyme to tyme more & more, to bee multiplied with continuall succession of issue. Thei had not yet heard, that blissed wer tho persones, whiche had gelded theim selfes for the kyngdome of heauẽ. And this matier did not a litteli grieue theim bothe in their myndes, and especially Elizabeth, who was now euen alreadie by a muche reprochefull name in euerie bodyes mouth called barain, and was rekoned in the noumbre of women of hard happe, as one of suche barainnesse, that she was now past all lykelyhood or hope to haue any childe, because that verai many yeres hauyng passed i the coumpaignie of her wedded housebãde, she had yet brought foorth no fruicte of matrimonie. For the reproche of barainnesse is woont moste specially to light on the weomen. And this despair of hauyng any childe, the olde age of theim bothe had encreaced. But the bounteus goodnesse of God, did of tendre fauour geue vnto the deuout praiers and desires of their hertes, that thyng whiche the strength and power of nature did not geue to the coumpaigniyng of their bodyes.

And thei had no childe.

Because Elizabeth was barain.

And thei bothe wer now well stricken in age.

¶ And it came to passe, that whan zacharie executed the priestes office before God, as his course came, accordyng to the custome of the priestes office, his lotte fell to burne ieẽse. And he went into the Temple of the lorde, and the whollе multitude of the people wer without in praier, whyle the incense was in burnyng.

The texte.

Therfore whan zacharie executed the office of the prieste in the ordre of his course, whiche (as we haue saied) was in the course of Abia: and continuyng within the Temple in the sight of God, attended the ministryng of the sacres, lyke a pure and a chaste man: and now accordyng to the custome and manier, there was one to bee chosen to goe into the innermoste and prineest place of the Temple (whiche is called Sancta sanctorum, that is to saie, the holy of holyes, or the principall holy place) the chaunce of the lotte so fell: that he was chosen

But all the residue besides ỹ prieste that did execute, taryed without, beeyng separated and diuided from that place with a vaille, makyng their deuout praiers all the meane whyle, that God would vouchesaulue to ratifie that, that was than i offeryng for the helth and safegarde of the wholle people: & so remained they without, vntill the prieste after the sacrifice in the inner place completed, came foorth again to the people, to finishe the residue of thynges whiche to the ordinarie obsequies and rites of sacrifice did apperteine. And the prieste did not onely praie for the people, but also for himself, accordyng vnto the prescripcion of the lawe, as one beeyng a mortall man hym self aswell as the others, and in daungier of fallyng into the errours and vices of this worlde.

The texte. ¶ And there appered vnto hym an Aungell of the lorde, standyng on the right syde of the altare of incense. And whan Zacharie sawe hym, he was abashed, and feare came vpon hym.

Therfore where as Zacharie had many yeres afore oftẽ tymes with moste earnest desires, cryed vnto God to deliuer aswell his wife frõ the reproche of barainnesse, as also himself from the grief and pensifnesse of beeyng without issue: yet (not withstandyng a certain despair of hauing any children many a daye sence conceiued in his mynde,) he did euẽ at that present tyme with moste ardent praiers, require of God as though he had than been present before his face, the publike redẽption of the people, whiche had now many hũdred yeres been looked for. And in dede the fume of the incense mountyng vp from the altare, was cast abrode in the aier on euerie syde, but the desire of this deuout bishop, perced vp euen to God, the Aungels carryng it, whose office it is to conueigh vp to almightie God the praiers of the godly, and again to bryng

Zacharie, whã he had soodainly espyed this Aungell shynyng with celestiall brightenesse, (for he came not in openly in a bodily fourme as mẽ vse to dooe, but sodainly & vnawares shewed hymself visible) truely he was sore dismaied in his mynde, and takẽ with a great feare: not that the Aungel made a shewe of any manier thyng to bee feared, but for that the infirmitee of mãnes bodye is not able to abyde the maiestee of the spirites or Aungels of heauen.

The texte. ¶ But the Aungell saied vnto hym: feare not Zacharie, for thy praier is heard. And thy wife Elizabeth shall beare a soonne, and thou shalt caile his name Ihon. And thou shalt haue ioye and gladnesse, and many shall reioyce at the birth of him. For he shall bee great in the sight of the Lorde.

But

But lyke as it is a puincte of mãnes weakenesse to fall in a trembleyng and quakyng at the sodain sight of an Aungell, so is it the propertee of the great goodnesse of theim, with tentile & familiar speakyng vnto vs, to take awaye our feare. The Aungell therefore with a gracious looke, and with tentile fair woordes speaking vnto zacharie, saied i this wyse: zacharie, there is no cause why thou shouldest bee afeard, but there is cause why thou maiest bee glad and ioyfull. For I bring glad tydynges bothe vnto thee, and to all the people for whom thou art now makyng intercession. God hath graũted thy deuout and godly petició. That same Messias the deliuerer and sauer of his people, whiche long & many daies gon hath been promised, and many hundred yeres alreadie looked for, is now at hãde to come in dede. And not onely that thyng whiche ỹ hast made petition for, is obteined: but an other thyng also dooeth the goodnesse of God adde to the heape of thy desires, whiche thyng thou durst not bee so bold to aske, because thou wer now clene out of all hope that it might by any possibilitee come to passe. Thou madest petition for the redemer of the worlde: thou shalt receiue also, one that shall declare and publishe the redemer vnto the worlde. The fruictefulnesse of thy wife Elizabeth that hath been hitherto by the wysedome and prouidence of God delaied and put of, shall bryng vnto thee no small encreace of ioyes: and a general gladnesse of all the people, shalbee coupled with the particular reioycyng of thyne owne priuate householde. Hir fruictefulnesse that all folke despaired of, shall haue a commoditee, and dooe good for this purpose, that all persones maie vnderstande thilsame childebearyng not to bee of the common rate, but the childe whiche shal be borne, to bee borne God beeyng the worker and dooer of it. In dede thy wyfe shal bryng foorth to thee a childe, but she shall not bryng foorth childe to thee alone: she shall bryng foorth to the whole people in generall: She shall bryng foorth to God, by whose prouidẽce all this matier euerie whit of it is tempered and wrought. So muche the more to the woondre of the worlde shall she bryng foorth, that it is so ferre past tyme of hir age ere she bryng foorth: so muche the more to the pleasyng and reioycing of all parties, that she had no suche hope: so muche the more to hir good happe and fortune, that she shal bryng foorth a soonne, and not a soonne at all aduentures, but the great publisher, and foregoer, and (as who should saie) the husher and maker of waie, & the pursenaũt of the moste great Messias that is to come: To the office of suche an high preeminence is he by the free and franke fauour of God, picked out and deputed, and for that cause shalt thou calle his name IHON, that the people maie euen there by at lestewyse bee aduertised, that he shalbee veraie well accepted of God, and plenteously heaped with many heauẽly gifres of grace. Therefore the sorowe whiche the barainnesse of thy wife hath hitherto brought vnto thee, shall be redubbed with plentifull ioye, and with muche rẽioycyng. Neither shal this ioye bee kept or enclosed within the walles or precincte of thyne owne house. There shall at thy ioye a great maignie of thy frendes reioyce, whiche wer sorowefull afore for thy sorowe. There shal leape for ioye at the birth of thy soonne, all suche as dooe thirstỹ comyng of Messias. This Messias beeyng as it wer the sunne in the skye, thy soonne shall goe before, as it wer a certai daie sterre, to geue knowelage afore by his woondrefull brightenesse, that the aryseng of hym is euen at hande, whiche shall on euerie syde, put awaye the derknesse of all the wholle vniuersall

For he ſhall in verai dede bee great, not onely in the opiniō of mē, but alſo in the yies of the lorde, vnto whom no man is great, but by the vertues and gyftes of grace whiche hymſelf dooeth frākely geue. For he ſhall bee great, not in worldely rycheſſe and ruffleyng porte of this life, or in worldely dominion, but rather by the cōtempte and deſpiſyng of thoſe thinges, whiche make certain perſones great in the yies of mē. And for this puincte he shall of a great maigny bee thought to bee Helias. Neither shall he without good cause be said to bee Helias, in that he shall in the spirit and power of Helias come before the comyng of the Lorde: to thende that (as the prophete Malachias hath wryten) he maie turne the hertes of the fathers to the children: whereby the Jewes, who haue so ferre growen out of kynde, and fallen frō the holy trade of theyr forefathers, maie emende, and come againe to better grace: and that the same Jewes beleuyng in the woordes of Messias (by whom God shal speake vnto theim) maie truely deserue to bee called the children of Abraham, in that thei folowe the prompt readynesse of beleuyng, whiche was in Abraham: and also that suche persones, as whyle thei cleue fast to the outward rynde or barke of the lawe, dooe not vnderstande the mynde & effectual pith of the lawe, he may conuert and bryng vnto the wysedome of the iust, whiche haue learned that vnder the vtter plaister or pergett of the lawe there lyeth hidden some higher poinct, and some holyer matier the whiche shall ere long, be vttered abrode by the preachyng of Messias, who shal perfeictely accomplishe and fulfille the lawe in the right kynde as it ought to be, but thy sonne beeyng as a way leader vnto the heauenly preaching of thissame Messias, shall prepaire the hertes of men, that he may deliuer vp vnto Messias at his comyng, a people not vtterly vntraded or vnentred i his discipline, but somwhat prepaired already, & instructed therunto with ỹ agnisyng & knowlageyng of theyr owne synfulnesse, with ỹ expectacion of ỹ kyngdome of heauē & with felyng a great misse & lacke of the Messias to come. For so was it thought best vnto almightie God, by castyng first of all, certaine entreynges & principles, to bryng man, whiche had been fallē to vtter ignorraunce and wickednesse, a lytel & a lytel by degrees, vp to the highest puinctes of godly perfection.

¶ And Zacharie saied vnto the Aungel: By what tokē shall I knowe this? For I am olde and my wyfe is wel stricken in age. And the Aungel aunswered, and saied vnto him: I am Gabriel ỹ dooe stande in the presence of God, and am sent to speake vnto thee, and to shewe thee these glad tydynges. And beholde, thou shalt bee dumme, and not hable to speake vntil the day that these thynges come to passe, because thou diddest not beleue my woordes, whiche shalbe fulfilled in their tyme.

childebearyng hoped for of hir bodye. How shal that thyng now chaunce vnto me and hir, beeyng bothe of vs old and pall hauyng any fruicte, the whiche did not chaunce vnto vs whan we wer young, and in perfeict lustynesse of our bodyes. Then saied the Aungel again: If a mortall man beeyng sent from another mortal man should promise vnto the suche thynges as these, thou mightest wel, and not without good cause, doubte of the promisse. For I graunte that thissame thing, whiche I promise, is aboue mannes power, and aboue the common ordre and courle of nature. But neyther is it possible for an Aungel to bryng a message of vanitee: nor any thyng there is so vncredible emong men, but that God can easily perfourme it vnto theim, that beleue in his promisses. For I am the same Aungel Gabriel, many yeres gon, sent to the prophete Daniel, the which from tyme to tyme dode stande in the sight of God, emong the seuen principall seruitours of heauen, in a readynesse to do almanier obedient seruice at the wil and pleasure of God: and at this present tyme especially deputed and appuncted of God vnto this office, to bee the messagier betwene God and man in this present matier, then the whiche, neuer was there at any tyme any other acte dooen, more greatter, or more to be marualled at. Therfore that thou maiest not be in any manier distruste, it is God that is the maker of this promisse: and I the messagier sent from the same, to make relation of the matier vnto thee, and to bryng the glad tydynges. And sens thou doest so muche require, thou shalt haue geuen vnto the, that shal bothe be a true token of the promisse in tyme comyng to bee perfourmed, and also a punishmente for thy mistrustfulnesse at this present declared. Behold, thou shalt soodainly, euen from this instaunt become dume nor shalt not haue power to bryng any woorde out of thy mouth, vntil thy soonne beeyng borne to this worlde, shall haue discharged my credite and promisse, of the whiche there ought not any doubt to haue been made on thy behalf. For the tyme is now at hand, that the synagogue whiche is so hard to be brought to belief, shall kepe silence, and no persones shall haue toungue to speake with at libertie, sauyng onely suche as with readye towardenes to beleue, shal obeie and folowe the preachyng of the ghospel.

And the Aungel answered and sayd to hym.

I am Gabriel that do stande in the presence of God.

And am sent to speake vnto thee.

And behold thou shalte be dumme.

Becaulethou diddest not beleue.

The texte.

And the people wer awaityng for Zacharie, and marualled that he tarved in the temple. And whan he came foorth, he could not speake vnto theim. And thei perceiued that he had seen a vision in the temple. And he beckened vnto theim, and remained dumme.

And the people wer awaiting for zacharie.

And they marucilled that he taried in the temple

But whi he came furth he could not speake.

And thei perceiued that he had seen a vision.

Whyle these thynges wer in dooyng betwene zacharie and the Aungel, within in the innermoste tabernacle of the temple, all the wholle bodye of the people stoode awaityng & lookyng, that the priest should come foorth accordyng as the manter was, to execute and minister the rest of the rites that wer yet to bee dooen abrode i the presence of ỹ multitude. And truely thei wer stricken in a great woondre, that he made suche tarying in the tabernacle a longer space, then the woont vse was. At length foorth cometh zacharie, with a countenaunce in dede shewyng an vnwoont gladnesse, but the vse of his speache clene taken from him. By the whiche thinges the people right wel vnderstood, that some vision had appered vnto him whyle he was within. For the presence & beeyng together with any parte of the maiestee of God, or with any Aungel of heauen, is woont to make

make a great alteracion in the state and moode of a mortall mannes face and countenaunce, as in olde tyme it chaunced also vnto Moses. And forasmuche as he had no power to speake with his toungue, he wrought by signes & tokens of puinctyng & noddyng with his head: whiche was, that the sacrifice had been dooen to the contentacion of God, & that God was highly pleased therewith, & that thei should therefore rendre tankes vnto him, in that he had graciously heard ỹ deuout praiers of his seruauntes. And he beckened vnto thē.

And than did Zacharie (euen dumme as he was) remain still within ỹ temple executyng his office in ministryng the sacres, vntil the noumbre of his eight daies wer completed and ended. The people of the Jewes, all that meane whyle duryng, had a prieste that could not speake, as an incling and a token of the lawe in shorte processe of tyme afterward to ceasse, and to geue place vnto hym, whiche bryngyng the trueth abrode to light, should put awaie all shadoes of thynges and make theim to vanishe. And remained dumme.

And so it was, that whan the daies of his ministryng wer expired, he departed into his owne house. And after those daies, his wife Elizabeth conceiued, and hidde hir self fiue monethes, saying: Thus hath the Lorde delt with me in the daies wherin he hath looked vpon me, to take awaie my reproche emong men.

But the ordinarie tyme of his ministryng in the temple beeyng expired, zacharie returned home to his owne house: and there vpon confidence and trust of the Aungels promisse, he enbraced his barain and aged wyfe Elizabeth. For here in this case, there was no geuyng of theim selfes to the wanton desire of the fleashe, but great lacke and desire ther was of that child whiche should bring the glorie of God to light & knowelage by his life, and his preachyng, and whiche should bee the foregoer of him, who hauyng been a long season looked for, should at last bryng perfect saluacion vnto all creatures. Chaste enbracynges of the housebande and wife it is, whiche the promisse of God dooeth couple, and not the wantō lust of the bodye: an holy compaignying together of man and wife it is, that seketh not hyng els but the fruicte of issue: & godly is the loue and desire of suche issue, as is borne, not to our owne pleasures and appetites, but to the publique benefite and welth of all creatures. Now whan Elizabeth had accordyng to the Aungels promisse conceiued she hidde hir self out of compaignie, keppyng the matter close from the sight of the people by the space of fiue monethes, in dede no lesse thā a glad womā that she was conceiued with childe: but yet (as vertuous disposicion & shamefastnesse commonly goe together) more then half ashamed, forbecause that to suche persones as did not yet knowe all thissame matter to be dooen God beeyng the worker and dooer of it she beyng now already an aged womā, might seme to had wholly geuen hir self yet stil vnto the satisfyng of the wāton lust of hir bodye. For she was not ignorant, how muche enclined ỹ moste parte of folkes are, aswel to misdeme the wurst, as also to speake naughtyly. And the prudent mynde of the woman, had also a further yie, and regarde vnto this puincte too, that there was no vaūtes ne braggues to be made emong the people, of ỹ gift of God, vntil it wer assuredly knowē to bee of certauntee, lest if ỹ thyng had afterward quailled or gon awry i any behalf: ỹ reproche of hir barainnesse should bee double, for ỹ beyng so fer And so it was, that whan the daies. &c. And after those daies his wife Elizabeth conceiued. And she hidde hir self fiue monethes.

Saiyng: thus hath the lord delt with me in the dayes &c.

Neuertheless, whan by sondry assured tokens, she perfectely knewe hir self to be with childe, she did in suche wise at all tymes shewe hir self glad of hir happie chaunce, that all this matier euery whit of it whatsoeuer it wer, she referred vnto the onely goodnesse of God. I haue hitherto (saith she) been diffamed with the reprochful name of a barain woman, and one that neuer should haue childe, emong the people of Israel, in whose opinion the barainnesse of the bodye is a thyng of more dishonestee & shame, then naughty disposicion of the mynde. But the Lorde (I see well) hath for this purpose made a delaie of my fruictefulnesse, that a childe borne now whan noman looked for it, not onely might deliuer me from the reproche of barainnesse, but also should cause vnto me ꝑ more aumple ioye. For plainly the free gifte of God it is, who, at suche tyme as best pleased himself, hath vouchedsafe to cast a fauourable yie on me his simple hãdemaide in suche sorte, that by reason of my childe (though beeyng but one alone, and borne whan it was by the course of nature past season, yet neuertheless a childe specially to bee marked and regarded) whom I haue borne in Goddes behalf, I shall from henssurth in folkes communicaciõ bee reported to bee a mother muche happier thẽ a great many of others, ꝑ which dooe with a great sorte of childrẽ a piece, enryche their housebãdes.

In the daies wherin he hath looked vpon me to take awaie my reproche emong men.

The texte. And in the sixth moneth was the Aungel Gabriel sent from God into a citie of Galile, the name wherof is Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Ioseph, of the house of Dauid, and the name of the virgin was Marie. And the Aungel came in vnto hir, and said: hail thou ful of grace, the Lorde is with the. Blissed art thou emong women.

These thynges thus dooen, it remained, that the holyer & greatter piece of this mysterie should be procured by the Aungel, that is to wete, that the soonne of God beeyng God imortal should of a virgin, beeyng a creature subiecte vnto death, be borne a man mortal: the lyke wherof neuer had afore, sens the creacion of the worlde, been heard, ne to the last ende of the worlde again should be heard. Therefore whan the tyme, from without beginnyng by God prefixed, drewe nere, that God the father would by his soonne deliuer thewholle vniuersal worlde from the tyrannie of death & of synne: he sent the selfe same Aungel Gabriel, as a broker or procurer and a maker vp of this godly copulacion and iuignyng with the said virgin. And this was dooen in the sixt moneth after that Elizabeth was conceiued with Ihon.

And in the sixt moneth was the Aũgel Gabriel sent frõ God.

Vnto this heauenly matier there was specially deputed a tendre young virgin, not set furth to the worlde with aboundance of rychesse or possessions, not by famousnesse of name, not with portlynesse of life, ne with the other thynges whiche this worlde vseth to haue in high regarde: but endewed with excellent vertues of the mynde, the whiche dooe make a manne acceptable in the sight of God: that is to sate, with puritee of life vndefiled, with maidenly demurenesse, and with godly deuocion. Hir habitacion was in an homely basse litel toune of Galilee called Nazareth, a people nothyng regarded ne setby emong the Iewes. And the virgin was espoused vnto a man of no fame ne porte i any behalf, to the worldes estimacion: but for his vertues of ꝑ mynde, a man to be accepted afore God. a alſo picked out perſones of moſte faulteleſſe and moſte pure behaueour, to thende that no puincte of cryme might be laied to their charge. He had picked out perſones coupled together in chaſte and leeful matrimonie, to thentente partely that the priuitee of a childe to be borne by a pure virgin might bee ſecrete vntil the due tyme therof: & partely that ỹ caſe (beeyng hir priuie cloſet (as virginitee loueth to be ſecrete) the Aungel Gabriel apperyng viſible with muche brightneſſe came in vnto hir, & hailled hir with a ſtraunge ſorte of ſalutacion: Reſt thou wel (ſaieth he) and reioyce ¶ Whan ſhe ſawe him, ſhe was abaſhed at this ſaiyng: and caſt in hir mynde, what manier of ſalutacion this might bee. And the Aungel ſaied vnto hir: Feare not Marie. For thou haſt found grace afore God. Beholde, thou ſhalt conceiue in thy wombe, & beare a ſoonne, and ſhalt calle his name Jeſus. He ſhalbe great, & ſhalbe called the ſoonne of the higheſt. And the Lorde God ſhall geue vnto him the ſeate of his father Dauid, & he ſhall reigne ouer the houſe of Jacob for euer, and of his kyngdome there ſhal bee none ende.

The texte.

But the virgin, at the ſoodain ſight of the Aungel, & again alſo at the fourme and tenour of his ſalutacion beeyng ſtraunge and ſuche as neuer had been heard of afore, foraſmuche as ſhe on hir owne behalf conceiued no great opinion of hirſelf, was right muche diſmaied in hir mynde. For that ſhe was ſore adrad at the entreyng of one in the lykeneſſe of a young man not looked for, was a puincte of certain verai true maidenly & tendre ſhamefaſteneſſe: that ſhe made not anſwer out of hande, but caſt with hir ſelf in hir mynde, what thyng ſo ſtraunge & ſo high a ſalutacion might mene, was partely a puincte of wyſedome, and partely of demure ſofteneſſe. But foraſmuche as the Aungel right well knewe what ſhe was caſtyng in hir mynde, he would not ſuffre hir any longer to ſtande in doubte or perplexitee: but bothe tooke awai hir feare with ſpeakyng ten-tilly vnto hir, and alſo declared at large the cauſe of that his vnquouthe bee afeard. The iewell of thy virginitee & maidenhood, whiche thou art ſingularly in loue withal, is ſafe vnto the without any daũgier of leſyng

it. Neither am I come to pleaſe thee, or to ſet the agog with a vain ſalu-tacion: but I am come vnto thee as a meſſagier of a matier bothe paſſyng fauour of God it is that is offered vnto thee, & not of thyne owne merite. And euen in this verai puincte thou dooest please God, that thou standest in no conceipte of thyself. And leat this suffise thee, that thou hast atteigned grace and fauour at Goddes hande. And now herken a thyng neuer heard afore, but yet a true thyng. Thou shalt conceiue a babe in thy wõbe and shallt bring foorth a soonne, & shalt call his name IESVS, because he shall bring saluaciõ vnto his people. And although he shall bee borne in an homely place, of a maiden estemed to bee of lowe degree: yet by reason of his heauẽly giftes of grace, he shall euery waye be moste greatest: insomuche, that after he shall once be knowen to the woorlde, he shall be called, not by the name of a prophete, but the soonne of the highest. The surname shall bee greatter thẽ any other man maie haue: forbecause the chylde that must bee borne, shall ferre surmounte the common rate & degree of mortall mannes state. In this chylde certes will the Lorde God perfourme and accomplishe the thyng, whiche the prophecie, beeyng to the not vnknowen, hath promised: A man borne of the stocke of Dauid shall sitte in the throne of his father. He shall not through the aide and maintenaunce of the worlde, vsurpe or take vpon him a transitorie dominion and reigne of this worlde: but his heauenly father wyl geue hym the heauenly reigne of Dauid: and he shall reigne ouer the people of Israell for euer without ende. Neither shall there euer come any ende of this reigne, as the prophete Esai hath prophecied.

Beholde, thou shalt conceiue in thy wombe,

He shalbe great.

And the Lorde God shall geue vnto him the seate of his father Dauid

And of his kyngdome there shall be no ende. Esai. vii.

The texte. Then said Marie vnto the Aungel: how shall this come to passe, seeyng that I knowe not any man? and the Aungel answered, and said vnto hir: The holy ghoste shall come vpon thee, and the power of the highest shall ouershadowe thee. And therefore the holy that shall bee borne, shall bee called the soonne of God.

The herte of this virgin did not through these so high promisses of the Aungel, weare any whit the more hault to take vpon hir: neither did she of the highnesse of the matiers cõceiue any distrust. She conceiued not in hir minde any suche presumpciõ, that whã hir soonne should bee a kyng, she on hir partie also should bee made a quene: neither was she vnknowyng, that nothyng there was of suche high difficulte to bee dooen, whiche God was not hable with a mere becke to bryng to passe. All hir care and thought was onely for the iewel of her virginitee on whiche she had so muche sette hir loue. And therefore she dooeth not require a token of the Aungel, as Zacharie had dooen: but dooeth with maidenly shamefastenesse, & also accordyng to wysedome, no more but enquire, to knowe of the Aungel the manier how the thyng should bee wrought & dooen: & maketh aunswere vnto him in this maner: By what meane or waie shall it come to passe (saieth she) ỹ I shall bryng foorth a soonne, forasmuche as I am in suche sorte espoused to my good man whom I dooe now liue withall, ỹ yet neuertheless I haue no conuersaciõ of his bodye, suche as wedlocke requireth? For cõtinẽcie lyketh vs bothe, & this puincte of blysfulnesse, if it might bee, we would bothe of vs ful fain haue perpetually to endure betwene vs. The Aungel therefore teacheth how it should bee dooen, and taketh awaie frõ ỹ virgin all doubtefulnesse cõcernyng hir virginitee. O virgin (saieth ỹ Aungell) nothyng shall i this matier bee dooẽ or wrought after ỹ cõmõ course of nature. An heauẽly childe bearyng shall it bee, & by an heauenly weorker shall it from the first ende to the last bee executed. Thou shalt cõtinue i chaste loue towardes thy chaste spouse. Fruictefulnesse of issue the yappiest that euer maie bee, shall come to thy lotte without any detrimẽte or violacion of thy virginitee. For thou hast not an housebande geuen vnto thee for any suche purpose, either that he should make thee a mother, or els thou make hym a father: but the prouidence of God hath thought good by this meanes to make a sure waie for thy safegarde and preseruacion, for thy good name and fame, for thy virginitee and maidenhood, and for thy conuenient quietnesse. It was Goddes pleasure that an vndoubted witnesse of this straunge childebearyng should bee bothe present and assistent to the thyng: he would in no wyse, but that thou shouldest haue one, who with chaste and cõtinent lyuyng in thy cõpaignie, and with all pointes of feithfull seruiceablenesse, should geue diligent attendaunce aswel on thee, as on the childe that is to bee borne: and finally, it was his pleasure, that by this deuise and pretẽse, this mysterie should bee kept secrete from the vnbeleuyng sorte, and also kept secrete from the wicked spirites. And this holy copulaciõ of the diuine nature with the nature of mã, shall not violate thy chastitee, but shal make it altogether holy. The father of heauen hath determined, after a straũge sorte eftsons to begeatte his soonne on thee. Neither shal there any sede of a man mortal be requisite or nedefull to this diuine concepcion, but the holy ghoste shall from heauen come down into thee: and in thy wombe, (as it wer in an heauenly workehouse) shall accomplishe the weorkyng of this holy babe: and in stede of the bodily or carnall embracyng of an housebande, the highest shall ouershadowe thee, in suche wyse temperyng and qualifying his infinite power and vertue to the measure and capacitee of mannes nature: that it maie be hable to abyde the metyng together and the coniuignyng therof. Where filthie lust is in the carnal copulacion of man and wyfe, there whatsoeuer is borne, is borne vnclene, and thrall to synne. But this that shalbe borne of thee, (because it shall be conceiued of the moste holy embracyng of the highest: because it shalbe cõceiued by the weorkyng of the holy ghoste, who maketh all thynges holy: because it shalbe conceiued of a virgin moste pure, whom of all weomen God hath purposely therefore picked out, beeyng clere from all spotte of sinfulnesse:) shall immediately bee holy as soone as it shall be conceiued. And at the first, by reason of the humain bodye taken of the substaũce of thy bodye, it shall rightly be called the soonne of a virgin, & the soonne of mã: but after the mysterie of this birth once perceiued and vnderstãded, he shall not bee called the soonne of Joseph, but the soonne of God: and that truely, not after ỹ common guyse, as iust persones beyng pourged from sinnes, and iustified by the free fauour of God, are by adopcion called the soonnes of God: but he shall by a singular reason and manier, bee called the soonne of God, of whom he is in verai true dede double begottẽ: once without begynnyng or tyme, and eternall, of his eternall father: and now i tyme mortall, of a mortall mother, and a verai naturall man of a verai womã. And lyke as in this iuignyng together, the diuine nature shalbee vnited and knitte with the nature humain: so shall the childe resemble the nature bothe of the one parent whiche is God, and also of the other whiche is man. This mysterie of goddes deuises and cõueighaunce is of an higher sorte, then that it maie be perceiued euen of the verai Aungels. It is for thee sufficiẽt, to shewe a mynde beliefefull and readie

And ỹ power of the highest shall ouershadowe thee And therfore the holy that shall be borne shall be called the soonne of god.

The texte. ¶ And beholde, Elizabeth thy coulin, ſhe alſo hath conceiued a ſoonne in hir old age. And this is the ſixt moneth with hir that is called barain. For nothyng ſhall bee vnpoſſible with God. And Marie ſaied, beholde, I am the handmaiden of the Lorde, bee it vnto me accordyng to thy woorde. And the Aungell departed from hir.

And beholde, Elizabeth thy coulin. &c. And now to the ende that bothe thy ioye maie bee more aboundaunt, and thyne aſſiaunce of the more certauntee: take a freaſhe exaumple euen verai nere at hande. Beholde, thy couſin Elizabeth, that aged womã, beeyng now a long tyme of barainneſſe vncurable, hath (euen I my ſelf beeyng the meſſagier) otherwyſe then euer ſhe hoped for, and aboue the power of nature, conceiued a ſoonne: whiche ſhall bee as a troũpette & an opener of thy chyldebearyng, hir beeyng conceiued with chylde is now a good whyle ſens of vndoubted certauntee: hir bealie is vp, and the chylde is quickened, and ſtirreth within hir.

And this is the ſixt moneth with hir that is called barain. For this ſame is the ſixt moneth, ſens ſhe is cõceiued with chylde whiche was cõmonly called by the name of barain, euen before that ſhe was ferre ſtrieken in yeres, yea & now ferther growẽ in age, then that ſhe might hope to haue any iſſue, although ſhe had not tofore been barain. This to almightie God hath ſo been thought good, to thentẽte that al creatures maye vnderſtãde, nothyng to bee ſo vnbeleuable emong men, whiche the power of God is not hable to bryng to effecte if it bee his pleaſure. As eaſily ſhall he geue concepcion to thee a virgin, as he hath geuen to hir beeyng barain, ſauyng that it hath pleaſed hym, that thy exaũple ſhould bee ſingular & piereleſſe, becauſe thy chylde muſt bee alone without piere. Certain barain weomẽ haue hereto fore by the ſpecial gifte of God, brought foorth chylde, but thei haue brought foorth nothyng but mere mẽ. Neuer hath any virgin yet vnto this daie brought foorth chylde, nor neuer ſhall any dooe after thee: becauſe that he, whiche beeyng but one perſone ſhall in himſelf comprehende bothe the nature of God, & the nature of mã, is no more but once to be borne. After that Gabriel had all this ſaied, the maidẽ made aunſwer in fewe woordes, but woordes of ſuche ſorte, as might bee a witneſſe of excedyng great demureneſſe coupled with paſſyng great affiaũce & zele towardes God. I knowe it (ſaieth ſhe) to haue been promiſed by the mouth of Eſai, that a maiden ſhould cõceiue & bryng foorth a ſoonne: & I haue no doubte, but ỹ God is hable to dooe all thynges that his will is, & ỹ he wyll not be falſe in his promiſſes. That if it hath ſo pleaſed hym, to ỹ executyng of this myſterie, to chooſe & depute me, beeyng a maiden of the loweſt ſorte & degree of all others, there is nothyng ỹ I cã hereby chalẽge or clayme vnto my ſelf, either of merite, or els of grace. It ſhall euery whit come of the goodneſſe of God: it ſhal euery whit come of the mightie power of God: I dooe nothyng but willyngly offre myſelf as an hãdemaidẽ to ỹ Lorde, (vnto whom I am for altogether dedicated) readie to bee at all his cõmaũdemẽtes. I beleue the thyng that thou dooeſt promiſe: & I wiſhe that with all ſpede it maie fortune vnto me, accordyng as ỹ dooeſt promiſe. And euẽ wh ỹ woorde ſpeakyng, ỹ ſame heauẽly cõceiuyng of chylde, was without any hir felyng or perceiuyng accõpliſhed: ſhe had in hir wõbe the ſoonne of God: ſhe was repleniſhed of ỹ holy ghoſt. And anõ ỹ Aũgell leaft hir. Of this holy cõmunicatiõ of a virgin wh an Aũgell it was ỹ will of God to begynne all ỹ matier of reſtoryng mãkynde, becauſe ỹ ſame firſte peſtiferous talkyng of a virgin wh the ſerpẽte, had brought ĩto ỹ worlde ỹ groũde & matier of mãnes cõfuſiõ & miſchief.

Bee it vnto me accordyng to thy woorde.

And maie Marie ſaied: Beholde I am the hãde maiden of the Lorde.

For nothyng ſhall bee vnpoſſible with God.

And

¶ And Marie arose vp in those daies, and went into the mountaines with haste, into the citee of Juda: and she entred into the house of Zacharie, and saluted Elizabeth. And so it was, that whan Elizabeth heard the salutacion of Marie, the babe lept in hir wõbe. And Elizabeth was filled with the holy ghoste, and cryed with a loud voice, and saied, blissed arte thou emong weomen, and blissed is the fruicte of thy wombe. And wherof happeneth this same vnto me, that the mother of my Lorde should come to me? For loe, as soone as the voice of thy salutaciõ souned in myne eares, the babe leapeth in my wõbe for ioye. And blissed arte thou, that thou hast beleued, for those thynges shal bee performed in thee, whiche haue been told thee from the Lorde. The texte.

Marie beyng by reason of this gifte of God, become the more sad & womanly, and also the more ientil and readie to doe any thyng that she ought to doe: because she had of the Aungels woordes, learned Elizabeth to bee with childe, and this now to bee the sixt moneth therof: she leaft hir owne house, and tooke hir waie vp into the high countrey, and with great spede came into the citee of Juda where zacharie did enhabite: and entryng into his house, she offred and gaue vnto hir cousin Elizabeth woordes of gretyng, and how that she did muche reioyce and was verai glad that Elizabeth was with chylde. For true godlynesse dooeth rather reioyce at the happie foortune of an other bodye, then set the mynde to make vauntes or braggues of it owne. Virginitee loueth secrecie: it commeth not foorth of the inmoste partes of the house for any callyng, vnlesse duetie moue it therunto: and beeyng abrode it maketh haste, in dooyng any puincte of duetie it taketh more laisure. Marie in all hir iourney visited ne saluted not one bodye by the waie, vntill she was come to Elizabeth. Neither was that same a salutacion or gretyng of the cõmõ sorte. All good happe and blisfulnesse did of this gretyng either other, encreace vnto theim bothe, and the efficacie of the spirite of God, did i theim bothe the more plenteously abounde. Marie carryed with hir in hir wombe the fountaine of all ghostely giftes of grace, and through the inspiracion of the babe in her bealye, she was now altogether in case that nothyng came out of hir herte or hir mouth, but onely of God. Therefore it came so to passe, that as soone as the salutacion of the virgin Marie had once souned in the eares of Elizabeth, the babe whiche she beeyng an aged woman had than in her bealye, dyd leape and spryng, (as ye would saie) skippyng for ioye & gladnesse. Jhon not yet beyng borne, felt the diuine power of his Lorde but euen a litel afore conceiued: and within the enclosure and tabernacle of his mothers wombe dooeth with gesture magnifie hym, whom he should afterward sette foorth and magnifie with his voice. Neither did Elizabeth without fruicte perceiue and fele the holy leapyng of her litel babe within hir. Through her babe enspired from heauẽ, the mother also is inspired, and altogether is full & wholle sodainly taken with an happie and blissed kynde of infeccion. Through the voice of Marie, the heauenly power of God perceth into the babe within the wombe of Elizabeth: and through the babe with this soodain blastyng so taken, the mother too is adblasted, in suche sorte, that she on hir partie also beeyng replenished with the holy ghoste, did not now kepe in the ioyes of hir herte: (although she had afore kept hirself within doores not hauyng any talke or woordes with hir, as one that would not for shame bee acknowen to bee conceiued with childe:) but with a mightie great voice (whiche voice hir mightie great affeccion and zele did worke in hir) she cryed out, and vttered suche thynges through the mocion of the spirite, as she neither could deme of the swellyng of hir bealie, ne yet had learned of any mortall man. And euẽ as though though ſhe had heard the Aungell talkyng with Marie, thus dooeth ſhe begynne hir gratulacion. O happie and bliſſed maide (ſaieth ſhe) thou ſhalt haue and enioye the chief praiſe emong all weomen woorthie commendacion. And holy is the fruicte alſo of thy virginly wōbe, out of whiche ſhall come foorth that ſame woondrefull floure, who by the voice of all nacions, ſhall bee preached throughout all the wholle vniuerſall worlde: of whom long and many a daie gō, the Prophetes haue prophecied: and he ſhall haue the chief laude & praiſe emong all thynges, bothe that are in heauen, and that are in yearth. I ackno welage it to bee a greatter thyng and of more excellencie, then a mortall man, that thou beareſt encloſed within the chaumbre and tabernacle of thy wombe. If age or yeres onely bee eſtemed in vs twain, it is not vnmete for a young damoſell or maiden to come to an aged woman: but if the dignitee or woorthyneſſe of bothe our babes that we goe withall, bee compared: it had been my duetie in all haſte to come and viſite thee. I truely on my parte was happie and fortunate enough with this benefite of God, that I goe with a childe, the whiche ſhal in tyme to come, be a perſone of no ſmall dignitee and eſtimacion: but of what my deſerte is ſo great happineſſe chaunced vnto me, that ſhe whiche muſt bee the mother of my Lorde, ſhould thus of hir owne accorde take peines to come to me: For by an vndoubted token haue I felt the comyng hither of my Lorde. For loe, immediately whan the voice of thy ſalutacion ſouned in myne eares, I felt my young childe ſtiere and leape vp in my wombe, as one ſhewyng an earneſt deſire of gladneſſe to goe mete his Lorde, and to dooe vnto hym his boūden duetie of reuerence and homage. And thou too forſouth beeyng a mother dooeſt not vnlyke to the childe in thy bealie, for he beeyng the Lorde and maiſter, dooeth voucheſafe to come ſee his ſeruaūte, of purpoſe to ſanctifie hym, and to repleniſhe hym with the holy ghoſte: and thou beeyng ſo ferre the ſuperiour in dignitee, dooeſt not thynke it peinfull to come to me that am thyne inferiour: ſo muche the more lowely behauyng thy ſelf, as thou dooeſt ſurmounte and excelle in heauenly giftes of grace, whiche giftes, thou dooeſt verai well, in that thou dooeſt not impute theim to thyne owne merites, foraſmuche as thei are thynges geuen thee of the free bounteouſneſſe of God. And certes in this behalfe art thou muche happie, that thou diddeſt not myſtruſt the promiſſes of the Aungel, though thei ſemed neuer ſo muche vnlykely to bee beleued. Thou haſt conceiued without helpe of man, & doubte is there none, but that the reſidue of thinges whiche the Aungel hath promiſed vnto thee in the Lordes name, ſhall with ſembleable trueth & fuertie bee perfourmed vnto thee.

For loe as ſoonne as the voice of thy ſalutacion ſouned in myne eares, the babe leapeth in my wombe for ioye.

And bliſſed art thou that thou haſt beleued. For thoſe thinges ſhall be perfourmed in the. &c.

¶ And Marie ſaied, My ſolle maguifieth the Lorde, and my ſpirite hath reioyced in God my ſaueour.

Whan Elizabeth had by the ſpirite of Prophecie ſpoken theſe woordes, Marie alſo, (who through maidely ſhamefaſtneſſe had hitherto conceled the ioyes of hir herte,) beeyng now ſoodainly rauiſhed with the holy ſpirite of God, (of whom ſhe was full and had been a good whyle erſt,) could no lōger temper herſelf ne forbeare, but that with an hymne of reioycyng and thankes geuyng ſhe muſt braſt out into the laude and praiſe of God, to whoſe goodneſſe it is to bee attributed, whatſoeuer high or eſpeciall good thyng dooeth chaūce to mā or womā of this worlde. O Elizabeth (ſaieth ſhe) not without good

good cause dooest thou reioyce in my behalf: but yet this cometh euery whit of the gyfte of God, yea and of his free gifte, and not one iote of it there is, that I can presumptuously impute to myne owne deserues. And therefore not my tongue onely, but also my soule acknoweleagyng it owne weakenesse, doeth euen from the botome of my herte roote magnifie and exalte the Lorde with praises: and howe muche the lesse of merite it acknoweleageth in it self, so muche the more vehemently doeth it meruaille at the greatnesse of Goddes benefite. I haue cause wherefore to geue hym thākes. I haue cause why to talke largely of his beneficiall goodnesse, but cause haue I none wherefore to reioyce as though this came of myne owne self. Yet neuertheless my spirite beeyng enflamed with the spirite of God, doeth for ioye not possible to be vttered in wordes, skippe and leape within my bodye, not in it self, but in God, who is bothe to me and to all persones the onely cause and worker of all saluacion.

My soule magnifieth the Lorde.

And my spirite hath reioyced i God my sauioure.

¶ For he hath looked vpon the lowe degree of his handemaiden: for beholde, from henceforthe shall all generations call me blessed: because he that is mighte hath doone great thynges for me, and holy is his name.

The texte.

For wheras I was the moste abiecte of all women, yet he of his owne mere goodnesse, hath cast a mercifull yie on his poore handemaiden beyng of lowe degree, and hath vouchesalued to geue me suche a great and high gifte, that from this tyme forthward accordyng to the wordes of thee and of the Aungel, I shal in folkes talke, be called a womā moste happie and fortunate, not onely of the Iewes that are now at this present daie aliue, but also in al yeres and ages to come, and of all nacions of the wholle worlde, to whom a saueour shall happen to be borne of my bodye. For we maye truely bee called happie and blessed in any suche thyng as is bestowed vpō vs, not by meanes of our owne industrie, not for our owne merites, but of the free fauour of God. All the laude & praise therefore of this happie fortune, shall redounde to his laude and glorie, that hath freely conferred and geuē the same. I shalbe reported happie and blessed, but yet happie through his mere bountie & goodnesse. And what shall the nacions of the whole worlde in all the processe of yeres to come talke of me? verily that he whiche by his excedyng great power is hable to dooe all thynges, hath in me beeyng the meanest of all maidens, wrought and performed a thyng woonderous, and suche as neuer tofore hath been heard of. And therefore shall my name be noūbred emōg the weomē of good happe: but his name shall euerie where be holy, and to bee adoured & worshipped: at the whiche name euerie knee of thynges heauenly, yearthly, & also infernall shall humble it selfe and bowghe down: & through whiche name onely, saluacion shall come to the vniuersall worlde. For the profession of this name, shall perfectely geue saluacion and holynesse vnto all creatures. At the callyng on of this name, shall diseases bee driuen awai, venomes shall lese their strength, deuils shall flee, and dead bodyes shall reuiue again.

From henceforth shall all generations cal me blessed.

Because he that is mighte hath done great thinges for me.

¶ And his mercie endureth from generacion to generacion vpon theim that feare hym.

The texte.

And this also shal bee a thyng of free gifte and mere gratuitee, and not of debte or dutie: it shall bee of mercie, & not of merite: whiche he shall moste largely poure forth, not onely to ỹ nacion of the Iewes whiche hath looked for his comyng to theimselues and no mo, ne to one age alone: but his mercie shall spreade abrode euery wale, and issue frō nacion to nacion, vnto the fertheste endes of the worlde, and frō age to age vntill the last daie of this worlde. In dede the Israelites onely wer once they that looked for this saluacion whiche was promised by the Prophetes: but whatsoeuer persone (in what nacion soeuer it bee) hath forsaken vices, and begynneth to haue in hym the feare of God: the same shalbee rekoned in the felowship and brotherhood of the Israelites. This saluaciō shall extende vnto all suche, as myslykyng theimselues shall submitte theim thrōugh feith vnto the Lorde, whether thei bee Grekes, or Frenche men, or Englishe men, or Scythiās. And cōtrarie wyse, suche persones as puttyng their affiaunce and trust in their owne dedes, shall proudely sette vp theimselues against the greatnesse of God: shal bee repelled and put awai from the felowship and partakyng of this benefite, yea, though thei shal bee descended euen of Abrahams owne self, or els of Dauid. For this benefite of God is not bestowed or geuen, either for the valuacion of substaūce and rychesse, or for the estimacion of kynred, or for the weorkes of the lawe, or for any other desertes or hablyng of mannes power, but by the cōmendaciō of an humble herte, and an herte that is sorye in itself, that it is so corrupt, and suche an herte, as thrōugh syncere and perfeict feith, depēdeth on Goddes mere mercie.

The texte. The hath shewed strength in his arme, he hath scattered the proude in the imaginaciō of their owne herte.

For God beeyng in mynde and will to cast down the arrogaunt presumciō of worldely wysedome & power thrōugh his soonne beeyng now brought in state and fourme of humilitee, hath stretched foorth the strength and puissaunce of his arme: & the wysedome of this worlde he hath made foolishe: the power of this worlde he hath cast down and discountenighted: declaryng hymself euen whan he dooeth humble hymself moste lowely of all, yet neuertheless to bee of more might and puissaunce, then the highest state emperiall of all worldely power: and that same whiche in hym semeth foolishe, to bee more wyse thē any wysedome of this worlde bee it neuer so woōderfull great. yea and those persones, who beatyng theimselues bold on their owne wysedome, and trustyng in their owne power, haue sturdily lifted vp their neckes agaynst God, he hath woondrefully disperpled and scattered with their verai owne deuises and appuinctementes, accordyng as he had long afore promised by the Prophete, saiyng: I will take and entrate the wyse in their owne wysedome. For whyle thei dooe with their subtile wylynesse striue against the purpose & weorkyng of God: thei haue bothe bewrated their owne foolishenesse, & also vnawares renoumed the sapience of God. And whyle thei dooe by the mainteinaunce and supportacion of this worlde, attempte and labour to oppresse the ordeinaunce of God: thei haue declared, how muche vnhable this worlde is, any thyng at all to dooe against the puissaūce of God, whyche by their rebellion thei haue established and made strong for euer.

The texte. The hath put downe the mightie from their seate, and exalted theim of lowe degree.

So, (the course of thynges beeyng chaunged the contrarie waie,) suche persones as in foretymes sate lyke men of high estate in their thrones, puffed vp in pryde of their worldely wysedome, and to bee feared as touchyng the power and authoritee of mā: he hath plucked down out of their high seate: and suche as to the worldeward wer of lowe degree, those hath the boūteous goodnelle of God, exalted vp and lette aloft. Thei that appered to bee in the toppe of the caltell of godlynelle, are manyfeltly found to bee wicked: & they that lemed to bee luche as had nothyng to dooe with God, no? God with theim: are now loodaunly made the child?en and loonnes of God.

The texte. The hath filled the houngry with good thynges, and the ryche he hath leat goe emptie. His leruaunte Iſrael he hath taken to hym in remembr?aunce of his mercie. Euē as he ſpake vnto our fathers, Abr?aham, and to the ſede of hym for euer.

Suche perſones as acknowelageyng their owne vnrighteoulnelle did houngre the iuſtice of God, thole hath god plēteouſly filled with his heauenly treaſoures of all goodnelle: and on the other ſyde, ſuche as in their owne conceiptes thought theim ſelfes to bee great ryche men and highly to abounde in good wo?kes, (and therefo?e did nothyng hungre the grace of the gholpell:) thole hath he caſt of from hym houngreſterued. Fo? circumciſion is turned into vncircumciſion: an vncircumciſion hath ſucceded into the glo?ie and honour of circumciſion. The Iſraelite bo?ne, truſtyng to hym ſelf, is ſhutte aparte & debarred frō the kyngdome of God: and the Gentiles are elected and taken to the honou? of the child?en of Ab?aham. The p?oude Pharilee is refuſed and caſt of: the harlottes, & the lowely publicane is receiued and taken in. The ſtif ſtanders, & the ſturdie holders vp of their ſnoute he hath caſt down: thole that late as outcaſtes nothyng regarded, & ſuche as wer in perrill of myſcarryng, thole he puttyng foo?th his mercifull hande, hath reiſed vp & holpē. Suche as had their ſight, he hath made blynde: & to ſuche as lamēted they? blyndenelle, he hath opened their yies. To thole that acknowelaged their infirmitee & ſickenelle, he hath geuen health: and ſuche as i their owne conceiptes lemed to bee perfeictely hole, he hath euen leaft to their diſeaſe. Thole that vaunted theim ſelfes to bee the child?en of Ab?aham, he hath plainly declared to bee the child?ē of the deiuil: & ſuche as had no puincte of kynred with Ab?aham (as touchyng the fleaſhe,) thole hath he th?ough the feith of the gholpell, made the verai true child?en of Ab?ahā in dede. Thole that vaunted theim ſelfes by the glo?ious name of Iſrael, thole hath he reneagued and put awaie from the inheritaunce of the p?omiſſes made vnto Iſrael: but whatſoeuer perſone of whatſoeuer nacīō, whether beeyng bond o? beeyng free, did willingly offre hym ſelf to the gholtely ſeruyng of God: hym hath God taken vnto hym, & in euerie ſuche hath he perfeictely ſhewed his long delaied mercie, whiche mercie he had afo?e p?miſed by his woo?de (beeyng vttred by the mouthes of the p?ophetes) to the people of Iſrael: whom as a people mo?e derely beloued and fanſied euen fo? his owne tothe, he dooeth i ỹ holy Scriptures calle his ſeruaūte. He had neuer been fo?getfull of his p?omiſſe: but by reaſon of the long delaie, as though he had fo?gotten it, deſpair had creped vpon men, but now hath he euidētely declared hym ſelf to be in no puincte vnmyndeful of his people. Fo? this is that ſame verai true ſucceſſion of Ab?aham. This is that ſame true Iſrael, whom not the nereneſſe of bloud dooeth make acceptable to God, but the ſyncerite and pureneſſe of feith, by whiche feith onely is God ſeen. And theſe thynges are not w?ought ne dooen by chaūce o? by caſualtee, but the thyng is now ſhewed in facte, whiche long & many yeres paſt, God hath p?omiſed vnto our fathers, Ab?aham: and his succession. For to Abrahã it was saied: In thy sede shall all nacions bee blissed. And to Dauid it was saied: of the fruicte of thy bodye will I sette vpõ thy seate. These thynges, long tyme afore promised, of good men looked for, and of many an one despaired, it hath pleased God now in these daies to perfourme vnto the true posteritee of Abraham, the stocke & kynred of whiche posteritee shall neuer decaie ne faill vnto the ende of the worlde.

For euer.

The texte. And Marie abode with hir about three monethes space, and returned again to hir owne house.

All these thynges whiche wer yet to come, Marie did in the spirite of prophecie, speake foorth i plain woordes, euẽ as though it had been come to passe and effecte alreadie. And than muche lyke about the space of three monethes did she make her abode with her cousin Elizabeth, coũfortyng the olde woman bothe with holy and vertuous communicacion, and also with all louyng and frendely attendaunce. And euen but a littell before the tyme of her said cousins deliueraunce, Marie returned home to her owne dwellyng place again. For onẏ one syde to helpeto plaiẽ̏ midwifes parte at a womans labour, was no fitte nor decent office for a maidẽ that had neuer borne childe: and on the other syde, she gott her awaie from the great resorte of weomen that wer to come shortely after, to bee at Elizabethes childebearyng.

And returned again to her owne house.

The texte. Elizabethes tyme came that she should be delyuered, and she brought foorth a soonne: And hir neighbours and kynsfolkes heard how that the Lorde had shewed great mercie vpon hir, and they reioyced with hir.

And now was the full tyme come, that Elizabeth should bee deliuered of childe. And a soonne in dede borne did assuredly verifie the promisses of God. The matter was by a cõmon bruite or noise spred abrode by meane of her neighboures and kynsfolkes, whom, euen lyke as the barainnesse of Elizabeth had grieued afore, so did it now reioyce the same, that of the great mercie of God, by reason of a manchilde now borne, the name of a mother had happened vnto an olde woman of barainnesse desperate, and semyng to bee past all recouerie, to whom it had been an happie chaunce to haue brought foorth a wenche, but a muche more luckie happe it was, to had brought foorth a soonne. And euen in this puncte also appered the promisse of the Aungel, who had saied, that it should come to passe, that many an one should bee glad in the birth of that childe. For thither came rennyng many an one, and declared theim selfes to reioyce that she had well sped, and had brought forth a soonne. And good reason it was that many should reioyce in the birth of him, who had been borne to the high benefite of a verate great maignie.

The texte. ¶ And it fortuned that on the eight daie thei came to circumcise the childe, and thei called hym Zacharie after the name of his father. And his mother makyng aunswer, saied: not so, but he shall bee called Jhon. And thei saied vnto hir: there is no man in thy kynsred that is called by that name. And thei made signes to his father how he would haue hym named. And he called for writyng tables, & wrote, sayng: Jhon is his name. And thei did all meruaill. And immediately was his mouth opened and his toungue also, and he spake and praised God. And feare came vpon all theim that dwelt nigbe vnto theim. And all these sayinges wer noised abrode through out all the wholle coũtrey of Jewrie. And all thei that heard the same, laied theim vp in their hertes, sayng: what manner maner a childe trowe ye, shall this childe bee? And the hãde of the Lorde was with hym.

And now was come the eight daie after Elizabeths deliueraũce, in the whiche daie by the prescription, and appoinctemẽte of the lawe, the childe must bee circumcised, and haue his name geuen hym. Her kynsfolke therefore resorted thither, whiche by the ordre & course of kynred, thought it their partes to see that the childe wer duely circumcised as it ought to bee. And because the childes father had his speche taken from hym, (who commonly vseth at his pleasure to appoincte how the childe shall bee named,) the kynsfolkes supposyng & demyng the father to bee of the mynde, and wille to haue that that commonly is woont to bee moste to mennes contentacions: called hym zacharie after the name of his father. But his mother contrarye wyse beeyng taught that thyng by the inspiratiõ of the holy ghoste, whiche of her housebande beeyng than dumme, she could not learne, contended that he should not bee called zacharie but Jhon: wherin the holy ghoste did signifie, that he whiche was borne should bee a publisher of a newe lawe, whiche newe lawe should abrogate the tradicions of men of old tyme, and should turne the carnall vsage therof, into grace of the spirite. For Zacharias souneth in Hebrue, myndefull of the Lorde, & IHON hath his name, of grace. The righteousnesse of the lawe did cõsiste in workes prescribed and appoincted: & the righteousnesse of the ghospell cõsisteth in grace through feith. The kynsfolkes did not geue place to the autoritee of the mother, but on ỹ contrarie parte contended that he ought rather to bee called zacharie because that in all the stocke of zacharie there was not one that was called Jhon. And in any childe it is a commonvse, that the remembraunce either of the father or of the graundefather, or of the vncle by the fathers syde, or of some other nere kynsmã, bee renewed. yea and yet at this present daie, some suche there bee, whome the name of zacharie dooeth more delite, then the name of Jhon: that is to wete, suche persones as can not yet well abyde, that circumcision, newe chaunges of the moone, washynges, holy daies, fastes, choice or difference of meates, and sacrifices should bee abolished, euen as it wer men in dede and facte cryng with open mouthes: The name of Jhon, we will non: of it: our olde zacharie will we haue. For asmuche therefore as the woman that laie in childebed, and her kynsfolke could not agree, it was requisite to haue the autoritee of the father to ende this contencion. The father had not yet the vse of his toungue, although it was now muche necessarie for hym to saie his mynde. In suche sorte therefore as it might bee, he had beckes & signes made vnto him to declare by some meanes what name it pleased hym to haue geuẽ to his soonne. Zacharie as soone as he vnderstoode the matier made signes to haue wrytyng tables, to thentente he might by dum letters, in wrytyng signifie vnto theim, the thyng, whiche he had as yet no power with liuely voice to expresse.

And thei called him zacharie after the name of his father.

And thei saied vnto her: there is noman in all thy kynred, that is called by that name

And thei made signes to his father how he would haue him named.

Whan the tables wer brought hym, he wrote in this wyse: Jhon is his name, signifiyng & mening that same name to had been geuen vnto hym by the Aungell before he was conceiued. And thei did euerie one of theim muche woondre, aswell that a straunge newefound name did lyke him, as also that the mother whiche had her toungue at libertee, and the father who could not speake, did so agree vpon ỹ childes name. And now

Jhon is his name.

did the tyme drawe nere, that the lawe of Moses should begyn to speake whiche hitherto onely by figures & dum paternes had after a sorte puincted and marked out the grace of the ghospell. The tyme was now come, that belief should open the mouthe of zacharie, whiche the hardenesse of belief had accordyng to the promisse of Gabriel, shutte vp. As soone therefore as he had wryten in the tables, byanby also was the tyng of his toungue looced.

And he spake and praised God.

And the first power that he had to speake, he did of none other thyng begyn, but of praisyng God, by whose free bounteousuesse so great an heape of ioyes had chaunced vnto hym. Onlesse the Jewishe tōgue kepe silence, beeyng bothe the doctrine and auauncer of carnall obseruaunces, and also an auoucher of mannes righteousnesse: the euangelicall tōgue hath no power to speake, whiche is a preacher, and a setter foorth of grace, of feith, of charitee, and preacheth not the workes of the lawe, whiche lawe dooeth not recouer or geue vnto any man the praise of righteousnesse by his owne factes, but preacheth the righteousnesse of God by innocēcie freely conferred, and geuen through feith. But all these thynges, hertes of all folkes in those parties. For of these preaumbles thei gathered in their myndes, ỹ this childe whiche was now borne, was lyke i processe of tyme to doo great thinges, and thinges that had afore not been heard of, forasmuche as his concepcion and birth too was so soone made notable by woondres and miracles. Thei sawe his father to bee so ferre stricken in age, that he was verai vnlyke to haue been a geatter of children: and as for his mother, besides that she was an old woman, thei sawe hir barainnesse to bee suche, that euerye bodye thought it past all hope that euer she should haue brought foorth any childe: thei considered the miracle of zacharias speche, whiche had been soodainly taken from hym, and soodainly restored again: thei had heard that the Āungell Gabriel was a worker and a dooer in the matier: thei wel perceiued the inspiracion of the holy ghoste to bee bothe in the father and in the mother of the childe: thei perceiued euerie whit of the matier to bee aboue the common rate and sorte of the birth of other children, and euerie parte therof to haue great tokens of the vertue and power of god. All these puinctes euerye bodye in their owne herte, earnestly consideryng and weighyng, saied secretely within theim selfes: whatmanier one is this childe lyke to bee an other daie? Not one of the prophetes was borne after suche a woondrefull straunge sorte. For the verai miracles of thynges that haue been wrought about his birth, dooe euidently declare all thissame geare to bee doen by the power of god, whiche shall assiste the childe beeyng one specially appuincted by god to ỹ executyng & doyng of some veraie high thynges. Neither did thei without good cause thus reason these matiers with theim selfes. For the hande of God did in verai dede extende & shewe foorth his heauēly power into the childe, & by the childe into the parētes, myndyng no lesse thē in due tyme to shewe thynges of greatter woondre.

And the hāde of the Lorde was with him

¶ And his father Zacharie was filled with the holy ghoste, and prophecied, saiyng: Praised bee the Lorde God of Israel: For he hath visited and redemed his people.

The texte.

And to thentent that all together might bothe bee full of miracles, & also replenished with all ioyfulnesse, Jhons father Zacharie also beeyng altogether enspired with the holy ghoste, brast out into this hymne, sounyng wholly to the honour & praise and magnifiyng of almightie God.

Openly to bee shewed and spoken (saieth he) is the goodnesse of God, and with all kyndes of praisynges to bee magnified: who, wheras he is the God of all peoples, yet his pleasure was to bee of a speciall purpose called the God of Israel, not as though he wer not the Lorde of all other nations also, but because it hath pleased hym that the people of Israel shall bee a figure of that heauenly people, whiche by renouncyng & despisyng the yearthly thynges of this worlde, dooe labour to atteigne and to come vnto that eternall citee of Hierusalem, where God is wurshipped with thinges inuisible.

Praised bee the Lord god of Israel.

Of all suche, what countrey so euer thei liue in, and out of what nacion so euer thei bee borne, is God to bee praised, who after so long processe of tyme hath at last vouchesalued in suche sorte as hath not been seen afore, to visite his people beeyng now in great agonie, and almoste clene tiered with the tediousnesse of moste carefull and long continued bondage, and beeyng euen now at the veraie puincte of vtter despair. Against ỹ whiche people, Sathan, synne, and the worlde, had so mightily preuailled, that nomanier hope did now remaine, neither in the pharisees, nor in the philosophiers, nor yet i the ceremonies of Moses lawe. He hath now cast his pie lyke a mercifull lorde vpon his said people, and hath freely redemed theim from all these euils.

For he hath visited and redemed his people.

¶ And hath reised vp an horne of saluacion vnto vs, in the house of his seruaunte Dauid.

The texte.

A mightie tyrāne it was, whiche hauing a traine of an houge coūpaignie of souldiers to garde hym, did ruffle & plaie ỹ kyng ouer al sortes of men, out of whose clawes it was not possible by any power of mā to recouer ỹ deliueraūce of ỹ Israelites. Onely god beeing of more puissaūce then our ghostely enemie, gaue strēgth vnto theim ỹ wer weake, sendyng a captain most victorious, who through ỹ puissaūce of his godly mightinesse should ouerthrowe the power & strength of his aduersaries: and by ouercomyng death, should freely through feith geue vnto all persones euerlastyng saluacion. And this sure waraunte & fortresse of saluacion he hath reised vp for vs in the house & generacion of Dauid, who truely serued & wurshipped hym: vnto the whiche Dauid he had afore made sure promisse, that from his sede should this benefite assuredly come vnto all suche persones as after the spirite deserue to bee the children of Dauid, not growyng out of kynde, nor swerueng from the tender loue that their said father Dauid had towardes God. Dauid valiauntely & luckily fought against forain nacions, and against the enemies of the people of Israel. And semblably vnder this our captayne must she fight against enemies much more pernicious & hurtefull, that is to wete, against suche enemies, as destruie and sleagh mennes solles, Sathan with his armie of wicked spirites. And suche lyke enemies be also the corrupt affections, and naughtie desires of the mynde, prouokyng & buisily stierynge me to suche thynges as are odious & hatefull afore god. Suche enemies also are those persons (what so euer thei be) whiche haue more loue & desire to ỹ thinges of this worlde, then to suche thinges as are godly: by whiche persones, as by his instrumentes & tooles, the deuil putteth his power and strength in vre.

The texte. Euen as he promised by the mouth of his holy prophetes, whiche wer sens ỹ worlde began. That we should bee saued from our enemies, & from the hãde of all that hate vs.

Euen as he promised by ỹ mouthes of his pphetes

Whiche wer sens ỹ world began

That we should be saued from our enemies.

Neither dooe these thynges by chaunce or at all auentures cũme thus to passe: but the thing that God dooeth now perfourme, ỹ same had he many a long yere sens promised by the mouthes of all the prophetes, whom he had endewed with his spirite, as many as haue prophecied sens the first creatiõ of the world. For he had made promisse, that by a captain of might and puissaunce, whiche should one daie bee sent, we should bee saued from our enemies, and should bee deliuered out of the hãdes of theim all, which did beare vs suche extreme malice, that thei did continually wrastle & labour to drawe vs vnto death euerlastyng.

The texte. That he would deale mercifully with our fathers, & remembre his holy couenaunte. And that he would perfourme the othe, whiche he swore to our father Abraham, for to geue vs, that we deliuered out of ỹ hãdes of our enemies might serue hi without feare, in suche holynesse & righteousnesse, as are accepted before hym, all the dayes of our life.

That he woulde deale mercifully with our fathers

And yet was not this of the merite or deseruyng of vs, that are nowe at these present daies liuyng, to whõ god hath perfourmed this same so high a benefite: nor yet of the deseruing of our fathers, to whõ he had afore promised thesame thyng whiche he hath now doen vnto vs. But thus hath it pleased his gracious goodnesse, bouteously to geue this so great a thing vnto vs not deseruyng thesame. Thus hath it also semed good vnto his righteousnesse, at suche tyme as best pleased himself to perfourme ỹ thing that he had promised to thentent he might therby of all creatures be perceiued to be not onely mercifull & beneficiall, but also true and iust in kepyng his promisse. For besides his earnest promise, he did also make a plain bergain & couenaunt wt our fathers. For beyng delited with ỹ wõderful affiaunce & trust of our chief father Abraham towardes him, (which was so great, that bearyng himself bold vpon goddes promisse, he made nomanier bones ne stickyng, but went in hande to offre vp his onely sõne Isaac in sacrifice,) he swore by his owne self, to thesame Abraham, saiyng in this wyse: I make an othe, & do sweare by my verai own self, because thou hast doen this same thyng, and for the respecte of me and my cõmaũdemẽt hast not spared thyne onely begotten sonne, I shall blisse thee, and I shal multiplie thy posteritie and issue, as the sterres of the skye, & as the sãdes that are lyng on the sea shores. Thy sede shall possesse the gates of theyr enemies, & through the name of thee, shall al nacions on the yearth be blissed, because thou hast been obediẽt vnto my voice. For in verai dede, this is the true posteritee & the right sede of Abraham, whiche is obedient vnto vnto God not by the ceremonies of the lawe, but by the obediēce of beleuyng in God, who, by the meane of the ghospell, doeth speake vnto the worlde. And vnto suche of vs is geuen the promised victorie ouer our enemies, as beeyng deliuered from the tyrannie of synne, deliuered from all errours, deliuered from the yoke of the deuil, haue the grace and happe to renoūce our former naughtie liuyng, to the ende that from henceforth beeyng out of al care and feare, vnder the wyng and safegarde of our captaine, we maie now serue no mo maisters but hym alone, (to whom onely we are bounde debtours for all the goodnesse that euer we haue) where in tymes paste we had been bondeseruauntes to ambicion, (whiche is the desire of worldely honour, pompe and glorie,) we had bene bonde seruauntes to the carnall lust of concupiscence, to couetise, & vnto the deuil. Therefore we must now truely serue our said captain, not as our forefathers did, with idle solēnisyng of holy daies, not with superstitiō of honouryng the first daie of euerie newe moone, not with abstei-nyng from one meate more then from an other, not with killyng of beastes in sacrifice, whiche thynges haue nothyng but an outward semblaunce and shewe of holynesse in the sight of men: but with pureneſſe of conscience, and with perfect clennesse of life, whiche is the seruice most acceptable in the sight of God, who hath no regard vnto carnal oblaciōs, but vnto the godly deuocion of the herte, as one that loueth to haue sacrifice dooen vnto hym, of his own giftes. Neither must this seruyng of God be shewed or dooen, at these or that daies by our own ordenaunce therunto prefixed or appuincted (as hitherto customably hath been vsed:) but continually all our life throughout. For at no tyme should there bee any ceassyng or slackyng from dooyng suche sacrifice as this: but loue and zele to godward beeyng ons freely geuen vs, ought with holy conuersacion, and with deuout appliyng of our selfes from tyme to tyme, to bee still more and more encreaced.

That we deliuered out of the handes of our enemies.

might serue him without feare.

In suche holynesse rightteousnesse, as ar accepted before God.

All the daies of our life.

The texte.

And thou childe shalt be called the Prophete of the highest, for thou shalt goe before the face of the Lorde, to prepaire his waies, to geue knowelage of saluaciō vnto his people, for the remission of synnes, through the tender mercie of our God, whereby the daie-spryng from an high hath visited vs, to geue lyght to them that sate in derkenesse, and in the shadowe of death, to guide our fete into the waie of peace.

Happie therefore by the free goodnesse of God and blessed are we, to whom, according to the saiynges of the Prophetes, is now thus geuen a mightie redemer, and a saliour, whom no power maie banquish or withstande. But by the free goodnesse of the same God, happie and blissed arte thou also o my litell babe, whiche art thus specially chosen and appuincted to be the foregoer and messagier of so great a captayne. For lyke as the daie sterre goeth before the arisyng of the sunne, causyng men to awake that lye sluggyng in slepe, and to loke for the clere day light whiche draweth nere: euen so the commyng of the Lorde beeyng now at hande, who hath fully decreed and entended by his onely sonne to come and visite this present worlde, whiche we are in: thou shalt goe afore him, to prepaire mens hertes to the receiuyng of suche a great saluacion, leste if the same commyng of the Lorde should fynd the hertes of men slouthfully sluggyng, and vtterly vnto warde, the health that is now offred, might percase be turned into a manifold castyng awaie & perishyng of the solle. For truely by thy baptisyng, & by thy preachyng, thou shalt bryng to passe that men shal well perceyue themselfes to bee sinners that they shal knowe theimselfes to haue neede of a Physician, and that

And ꝓ childe shalt be called the Prophete of ꝓ highest. For ꝓ shalte goe before the face of the Lord to geue knowelage of saluacion vnto his people.

For remissiō of sinnes. that they shall knowe hym to be now presente here, who alone will through the feith of the ghospel, boūteously geue vnto all persones euerlastyng health and saluacion, freely remittyng and pardonyng our sinnes, (whiche cause the death of the solle,) and frely conferryng and geuyng his righteousnesse vnto vs. And vnto al true beleuers shal this same come, not by any possible merites of men, but for thexcedyng great mercie of the Lorde our God, who would not haue thē to perishe, whom he had created. Of the almightie wer we created, and by ꝑ moste merciful are we restored. We had vtterly been lost onlesse he, accordyng to the goodnesse that of his propre nature is rooted in hym, had extended his mercie vnto vs: onlesse he in manier of the bright sunne arisyng to vs from heauen, had on euery side driuen awaie the derkenesse of our ignorance: onlesse he had put awaie the dimme myste of synne, and had enkiendled our cold hartes with the feruente burnyng fyer of his dere loue and charitie. We were lyng in derkenesse, and had no power to lyfte vp our yies towardes hym: he humbled hymselfe doune to vs, and by sendyng doune his bright shinyng beames vpon our hertes, he gaue clere and healthfull light vnto vs, where as we afore sate in the derkenesse of synne, and in despaire of any recouerie, as in the blacke shadowe of death: we wer vtterly blinded with manifold idolatries, and all derkened ouer and ouer with worldely desires, we ranne from wickednesse to wickednesse, gropyng in most foggie mistinesse, embracyng yearthly thynges in stede of heauenly, the shadowes of thynges in stede of the thynges selfes, thynges carnall i stede of ghostely thynges, pestiferous and full of poison, in stede of holsome. And loe in the botomelesse night of despayre is now arisen vp vnto vs that same euerlastyng sunne, to directe and to set the fete of our hertes into the waie of the ghospell, whiche is the waie of peace, that through feith and charitie maketh a perfect agreement and vnitie betwene God and man: breakyng the strife and enmitie that was afore betwene theim: knittyng all nacions of the worlde together in the profession of one name, and of one feith: and finally in suche wyse qualifyng and appeasyng all the troubleous affeccions of the mynde, that euery man maie be at a perfect staigh of quietnesse, and of atonement within himselfe.

Thorough the tender mercie of our God. Whereby the daispryng frō an high hath visited vs.

To geue light to theim that sate in derknesse.

And in the shadowe of death.

To guide our feete into the way of peace.

The texte. And the chylde grewe and weaxed strong in spirite, and was in wildernesse till the daie came, whan he should shewe hymselfe vnto the Israelites.

These thynges did this godly old man pronounce out of his prophetical breste: and folowyng the exaumple of the olde auncient Prophetes, did in suche a plain sort declare and sette foorth thesame thynges before thei came, as though all together had been euen at that verai presente houre alreadie dooen. And with these so wonderfull begynnynges of the matier, the procedynges of thesame did in moste beste wyse agree. For the chylde John, whiche had been after a wondreful straunge manier borne, lyke as he grew in bodye accordyng to the rate of his yeres, euen so did he through the inspiracion of God from tyme to tyme prosper still better and better in stedfastnesse, and strength of the spirite. Neither did he any long tyme kepe hymselfe at home with his father and mother in their house: but euen byanby from his childhood, withdrewe hymselfe awaie from the common haunte of people, to the entent that he might not take so muche as the leste spotte of fylthynesse that maie be, by coumpaignyng with the multytude,

And ꝑ chylde grewe & waxed strong in spirite.

And was in wyldernesse.

for as muche

forasmuche as he had been sanctified in his mothers wombe: He neuer droke wine nor any other strong drinke, wherby to be distempered, he neuer tasted of of any worldely pleasure: he neuer tasted of any worldely honour. All worldely desires and carnall appetites he passed not vpon, but vtterly refused the, and liued emong the saluage beastes with locustes and wild honey, his wede and clothyng was of Camelles hydes, and not of sylkes or veluettes: his girdle was of an hearie thong of leather: his communicacion was continually with God. And forsouth suche a lyfe was comely for hym that was ordeyned to be a preacher of repentaunce. And the place whiche he picked out, did accordyngly agree with the Prophecie, that calleth him the voice of one cryng in wyldernesse. In this place did he kepe hymself out of knowelage by the space of many yeres, here did he liue in silence, to the ende that whan his due tyme should be, he might shewe hymself, and speake with the more authoritie. He did not of his owne head hastily steppe foorth to the office of a preacher: but at suche tyme as the spirite of God had putte in his mynde to shewe forthe his lighte, and to open vnto the people of Israell how great a man he was: then did he streight waies begynne to dooe the part of a forgoer, with no small authoritee.

Untill the day came that he should shewe himself vnto the Israelites.

The seconde Chapter.

¶ And it chaunced in those daies, that there went out a commaundemente from Augustus the Emperour, that all the worlde should be taxed. And this taxyng was the first, and executed whan Syrenius was lieutenaunte in Syria. And euery man went vnto his owne citie to be taxed. And Joseph also ascended from Galilee, out of a citie called Nazareth, into Jewrie, vnto the citie of Dauid whiche is called Bethleem, (because he was of the house and linage of Dauid,) to be taxed, with Marie his spoused wife, whiche was with childe.

THus hast thou hearde the wondrefull birthe of Jhon, whiche was as a foregoer to Christe, and as a messagier afore hys commyng: nowe shalte thou heare the muche more wondrefull birthe of Jesus Christe hymself: who should afterward be the onely Prince of all the wholle worlde, and should moue all nacions on the yearth to the profession of his name, not by meane of threatenyng or puttyng them in feare, but with benefites and with holsome doctrine. By the workyng therefore and prouision of God it was so conueighed, that vnder the Emperour Augustus, (who at that tyme was Lorde of many countreies and realmes in all partes of the worlde, and all thynges beeyng euery where in perfeict peace and tranquillitie, held and gouerned the Empire of the Romaines,) al the prouinces and countreies, as many as held of the Empire of Rome, shoulde be surueighed and noumbred by the Polles, to thentent they might acknowelage Augustus for their Lorde and king, and that (as we cal it here in England) they might be sworne to be true liege people to themperoure Augustus, and to his successours Emperours of Rome. Whiche thyng God wrought euen of purpose, that it might appere how muche wyder in circuite and larger the dominion of Christ did reache, then the dominion of Cesar: & how muche more quiete and tender Christes manier of reignyng ouer men is, (who taketh nothyng thyng awai from vs, & yet geueth vs heauenly thynges too) then the reigning of Ceaſar, who although it lye not in his power to geue heauenly thynges, yet neuertheleſſe catcheth awaie our worldly cõmodities, and by extort power enforceth men to take him for their kyng, wheras the heauenly Emperour Chriſt dooth ientilly allure men vnto him by his beneficiall goodneſſe towardes theim. They that are regiſtred or booked emong the ſubiectes of Ceſar, what other thyng do they, but acknowelage a verai ſtate of ſeruitude and bondage, and daily fynde their worldely ſubſtaunce pared awai and diminiſhed: But they that regiſtre themſelfes as ſeruauntes to this newe Prince, do receiue perfect freedom, with a ſure waraunt of euerlaſting ſaluacio: And, fewe woordes to make, the Emperour Octauius Auguſtus, although he was emong all the Emperours of Rome, a man of moſte good policie and conueighaunce in paſſyng all his affayres, yet many nacios there wer, whiche he could not ſubdue for all his great armies, and for all his valiaunt men of warre: where as our Captayne Chriſte hath without any force of armes, and without any garriſons of worldely puiſſaunce, gathered together into one churche, as into one kyngdome, all the wholle vniuerſal worlde, ſo many ſundry languages, ſo many ſondry rites, ſo many ſondry ſectes of ſeruyng this God and that God, of mennes owne deuiſyng, and ſo many barbarous nacions liuyng in ſondrie priuie corners. But now (to goe foorth in our matier) for the executyng of this general ſurueighe and taxe that ſhoulde bee taken in the countrey of Syria, there was ſent aſwell by thauctoritie of Ceſar Auguſtus, as alſo by a decree of the wholle Senate of Rome, one Quirinus, the rewler and lieutenaunte of that prouince. And this was euen the verai firſt taxe that euer this rewler toke in Syria, for diuerſe and ſondrie others were taken afterward in the ſame prouince, within the tyme of the ſame mannes beeyng lieutenaunt there. At the commaundemente than of Ceſar, whiche this Quirinus had cauſed to be euerywhere proclaimed, all perſons take their iourney, and goe euery one to their owne tribe and kynred that they came of, and to the citie that properly belonged to theſame tribe. And thither reſorted they euery one to acknowelage Auguſtus ỹ Emperour of Rome for their Lorde and head gouernour on yearthe, as the cuſtome was to do. And ſo it was, that Joſeph the ſpouſe of the virgin Marie, wheras he was of the tribe of Juda, and his wyfe Marie of theſame tribe alſo, yet neuertheleſſe dwelled in Nazareth: whiche was a poore litell citie in Galilee. Joſeph therefore ſhutting vp his doores and leauyng his houſe, reſorted towarde his owne tribe, that is to wete, into Jewrie, towardes a litel preatie citie called Bethleem of kyng Dauids buildyng: becauſe that both Joſeph and alſo the virgin Marie, did not onely belong to the tribe of Juda, but alſo wer by lineall deſcent come of the progenie and ſtocke of Dauid, of whoſe ſeede it was promiſed that Chriſte ſhould be. But of all theſe thinges was there no one puincte that chaunced by mere caſualtie, but euery whit of it was procured and purpoſely dooen by the prouidence and determinacion of God, to thentent that thende & concluſion of altogether, ſhould in euery behalf agree with the holy ſaiynges of the Prophetes, whiche diuided the glorie of ſo great and ſo high a matier betwene two cities, that is to wete, the kyng of the worlde to be conceiued and bred vp in Nazareth, and the ſame kyng to be borne in Bethleem accordyng to the Prophecie. beeyng great with chylde, and now euē verai nere hir tyme, accompaignie hir spouſed houſebande Joſeph. This virgin though ſhe had a great dealie, yet refuſed not to trauail ſuche a great iourney with hir houſebande: ſhe foꝛboꝛe not to be ſeē to come in the ſight of men, knowyng hirſelf in hir owne cōſcience to be clere from al ſpotte of ſynne: ſhe thought not ſkoꝛne to be obedient and ſeruice able to hir houſbande, though ꝑ tyme was at hande, whā ſhe ſhoulde be a mother and bꝛyng foꝛth God: ſhe diſdeigned not to be taken and vſed as the wyke of a pooꝛe Carpenter, though ſhe wer a woman full and wholle conſecrated to God. wyke, whiche was with chlde.

¶ And it foꝛtuned, that while thei wer there, hir tyme was come that ſhe ſhould be deliuered. And ſhe bꝛought foꝛth hir firſt begotte cōne, & wꝛapped him i ſwadlyng clothes and laied him in a maungier, becauſe there was no roume foꝛ them in the ynne. The texte.

And ſo, whyle thei by occaſion herof made their abode there foꝛ certain daies, and remained in the citie of Bethleem: it foꝛtuned that the full monethes of hir goyng with childe expired, and the tyme of hir deliueraunce was now come, whiche thing God wꝛought, to thentent it might the moꝛe euidētely be knowen and ſeen to al perſons, that he whiche was than boꝛne there, was naturally verai man in dede. The Lꝛde of heauen and yearth picked out foꝛ hymſelfe to be boꝛne in a ſlendꝛe and baſſe litel toune, in whiche neuertheleſſe he had no houſe at all: he choſe out parentes of the pooꝛeſt and loweſt ſoꝛte. It was alſo his pleaſure to be boꝛne in a ſtraūge place frō his owne home, to the entente that we ſhould be aſhamed both of our pꝛide, and alſo of our auarice, and that we might at leſte wyſe, by his exaumple, learne, that mans felicitie is not to be meaſured oꝛ eſtemed by theſe common gooddes of this tranſitoꝛie woꝛlde, whiche if they be not taken awaie from vs, yet we firſt oꝛ laſt are taken awai frō them: but the bliſſe of man to be eſtemed by ſuche good thynges and treaſures, as endure foꝛ euer: yea and that it might ferther be a leſſon foꝛ vs to gather and laie vp treaſures to that ſame countrey ward, to the ende that we maie there continually without ende, haue the fruicion of theim. Foꝛ yf we will vpꝛightely make compariſon of the matier with true iudgementes, there was moꝛe dignitie and high eſtate, moꝛe powꝛer, and moꝛe maieſtie, in this ſame moſte humble and pooꝛe birth of Chꝛiſte, then in all the pompes, triumphes, and ſolemne ſhewes of royaltie, of al the Emperours that euer wer. Thus than in Bethleem (whiche is called the houſe of breade) did this holy yong virgin bꝛyng foꝛth vnto vs, that ſame heauenly breade, of whiche who ſo eateth, doth neuer dye. And this was ꝑ ſame onely chyldebearyng of a virgin, the like pꝛeſident oꝛ enſample wherof, was neuer afoꝛe, noꝛ neuer after folowed. And the childe was to his mother hir onely ſonne, and in reſpecte to vs hir firſt begotten, in reſpect of vs (I ſaie) whom he hath in ſpirite ioyned to hymſelf, and made vs bothe his bꝛethꝛen and alſo partakers with him of his euerlaſtyng inheritaunce, becauſe he would not come alone to his father, but he, as the firſt begotten ſonne on his owne partie, would bꝛyng with hym many mo bꝛethꝛen beſydes himſelf to the felowſhip and partakyng of euerlaſtyng ſaluacion. Now whan this litell babe was boꝛne, the mother did not put it foꝛthe to the nourcyng of other women, (foꝛ on the one ſide, foꝛ tender motherly loue that ſhe bare to it, ſhe would none other nources but hir ſelfe, and on the other ſyde, by reaſon of hir pouertie ſhe had none,) but hir verai own ſelf with hir owne owne hādes, lapped it vp in swadlyng bandes and cloutes suche as she had. And because that in the common ynne, where hosterie and lodgyng was kept, there was by reason of the great resort of welthier geastes, none other roume ne place voide for hir beeyng but newe deliuered of childe, she laied doun hir young babe in a māgier that was thereby, in stede of a cradle. Geue eare thou proude ryche man what euer thou be, that heapest together possessiōs & lādes vpon landes, and that art in euery corner a builder of houses, of fermeholdes, of mainours, and of palaices. Ye that is bothe the Lorde and also the maker of heauen and yearth, and to whom thou thy self hast in baptisme professed and acknowelaged thy self a disciple & seruaunte, is borne in a straunge place from his owne home, and hath not ne can geat so muche as a litel corner of good roume in a cōmon hosterie. If thou acknowelage thy soueraigne Lorde and maister, whose commaundementes thou hast by a feithfull othe bounde thy self to obey and fulfyll: leat it not grieue thee to folowe his exaumple, but rather be thou ashamed of thyne owne proude mynde.

And laied him in a maūger, because there was no roume for them in the ynne.

The texte. ¶ And there were in thesame region, shepeheardes watchyng and keepyng their flocke by night. And loe, the Aungell of the Lorde stoode hard by thē, and the brightnesse of the Lorde shone round about thē, & they were sore afrayed. And the Aungell saied vnto thē: bee not afrayed: for beholde, I bryng you tidynges of great ioye, þ shall come to all people. For vnto you is borne this day in the citie of Dauid, a saueour, whiche is Christ the Lorde. And take this for a signe: ye shall fynde the childe wrapped in swadlyng clothes, and laied in a maungier. And streight way there was with the Aungell a multitude of heauenly souldiers praisyng God and saiyng: Glory to God on high, and peace on the yearth, and vnto men a good wille.

Herken now in what sorte this humble poorenes of birth is altogether ful of all Princely royaltee. There was a toure not ferre from Bethleem, called in the Hebrue toungue the toure of Ader, (as if ye should saie in Englishe, the toure of the flocke) and it was so named, because that by reason of the good pasture groundes that laie in those parties, there was verai great store of shepe and other catal pastured there. And in dede of this toure Ader dooeth the Prophet Micheas also make mencion, lyke as he dooeth of Bethleem. There were therefore i those quarters diuers shepeherdes þ watched abrode in the night seasons for safegarde of their flockes. Veryly euen by the thyng self geuyng a good lesson, what thyng bishops ought of their bounde duetie to do for the helth of the people cōmitted to their spiritual charge, if they will folowe the ensample or steppes of Christ the Prince and head of all shepeherdes. And in the night tyme was that same moste bright soonne of righteousnesse borne, whiche shoulde on euery syde put awai the derkenesse of þ worlde. And his pleasure was, first of all to haue his birth knowen, rather to men of lowe degre, because he was borne after a poore sorte, and to shepeherdes, because hymself was a ghostely pastour, then to Emperours, to kynges, to rulers or deputies of cōtreys, to Pharisees, to Scribes, to Bishops. And loe, soodainly the Aungell Gabriel stood on high directely ouer their heades, and besides him also a certain straunge light soodainly flusshed and shone round about the shepeherdes, whiche was neither the light of the sunne, nor of the moone, ne of any candel. But although thilk same wer a thyng þ semed nolesse then to betoken some good luckie thyng to bee toward, yet the shepeherdes, by reason of the vnwoont and soodain miracle, wer all at ons throughly taken with a verai great feare. But the Aungell anon taketh awai this feare with speakyng amiably vnto them. Dooe awai all feare (saieth he) there is no cause

why ye ſhould drede. For I am cũme to be vnto you a meſſagier of a mooſt gladſome matter, and ſuche ioye as neuer yet hath bene heard of, do I bring, not to you onely, but alſo to all the people of Iſrael. The godly mouthes of the prophetes long and many yeres gon had promiſed you a ſaluegour. Many a long yere hath Meſſias bee loked for. And this nyght is that ſame Meſſias borne, and borne he is vnto you all. And this is the verate true Meſſias, the prince and Lorde of all, a kyng & a prieſt anoynted of God from aboue. And in dede borne he is in the cytie of Dauid called Bethleem, accordyng to the holy ſayinges of the Prophetes, euẽ this ſame verate nyght. Goe ye, and enquire of him. I wyll geue you a token wherby he may be knowen. Goe ye to the common ynne, and there ſhal ye fynde the litel ſuckyng babe lapped in ſwathyng cloutes, and laied doune to reſt in a maungier. Aſſone as Gabriel had thus muche ſayd, immediately was heard a great multitude of heauenly ſouldiers, that is to ſay, of Aũgels, who are the miniſtres and ſeruantes of the Lord beyng mightie and puiſſaunt in battaill, and the whiche alſo do warre and fight for vs againſt the princes of this world. Theſe Angels with ſuche an heauenly ãrmonie and with ſuche a melodious ſwete noiſe as no tongue can expreſſe, did ſyng ſonges of praiſe vnto God, magnifyng and ſettyng furth his vnſpeakable lous towardes mankynde, and declaryng the great ioy and gladnes that they had conceiued on the behalf of the ſame mankynd, to whõ ſo great bliſſulnes had through Goddes mere fauour and mercy ſo happened. And the hymne forſouth whiche that ſame heauenly quier of Aungels with ſuche ſwete tunes ſyng all together in one charme, was this: Glorie on high to God, and on yearth peace, and in men good vville. Which ſong of the Aungels doth thus muche in effect ſignifie vnto vs, verailly, that in this matier no poinct at all of glory is due neither to the Aungels ne yet to man, but all the whole glory and laude thereof, is due vnto the onely goodnes of God, who of his mercy and loue towardes vs whom he hath created, doeth by wonderfull waies and conueighaunce prouide for vs from heauen, to the entent that we ſhould well perceiue, that whatſoeuer thing either for our honour and auauncement, or els for our helth & ſaluacion doeth happily chaunce vnto vs, it cummeth vpon vs from heauen: and that we ought here on yearth to wiſhe or deſire none other thyng but peace whiche may aboliſhe ſynne, and bryng vs into the fauoure of God, and the whiche may knit vs together with mutuall loue and charitie of one towardes another. For thiſſame is truely the peace, (not of the worlde, but of God) whiche doeth excede and paſſe all the compace and reache of mans vnderſtandyng, and ferre outweigheth all poinctes and degrees of any bliſſful ſtate that may be in this preſent worlde. And this peace is frely offred vnto vs through this reconciler and maker of atonement betwene God and man, not by any meane or helpe of oure owne merites and deſertes, but of the readie and willyng goodnes of God towardes vs, whom it hath pleaſed after this wonderfull maner to prouide for the recouerie and ſauyng of mankynde.

For vnto you is borne this day in the citie of Dauid a ſaluegour which is Chriſte the lord.

Praiſyng God.

Gloxie to God on high

And peace on the yearth, and to men good wille.

And it fortuned, aſſone as the Aungels wer gone away from them into heauen, the ſhepherdes ſayd one to another: Leat vs go now euen vnto Bethleem, and ſee this thyng that we heare ſay is happened which the Lord hath ſhewed vnto vs. And they came with haſt and found Marie, & Joſeph, & the babe laied in a maungier. And whan they had ſeen it, they

it, they published abrode the saying whiche was told thē of that childe. And all they that heard it wondred at those thinges whiche wer tolde them of the shepeherdes. But Marie kept all those saynges, and pondred them in her heart. And the shepeherdes returned, praisyng and laudyng God for all the thinges that they had heard and seen, euen as it was tolde vnto them.

The Aungels assone as they had with their mooste ioyful and gladsome noise begonne vnto the shepeherdes with singyng this song in honour of the childes birth, returned again into heauen. This done, the shepeherdes beyng a sort of good homely plain folkes, came & laied their heades together in counsaill, not doubtyng of the wordes that the Aungels had spoken but couetyng more fully to knowe the thing that they had heard. Thus therefore spake they emong them selues, and sayd one to another: Leat vs dooe as the Aungel hath aduertised vs, leat vs goe hens euen streight to Bethleem, that the thyng which we haue with our eares heard to be happened, we may euen there presently see and behold with our iyes, to the entent, that we may with the more readie and perfeict truth & credite, speake, and declare vnto others, the thyng that the Lorde hath vouchesalued to geue vs knowlage of, by his Angels. This godly deuise liked them all. And so furth on their way go the shepeherdes with al hast, deuocion, and godly zele was a spurre to theyr heartes to pricke them forwarde: anon wer they come to Bethleem, and come thei wer into the ynne appointed. And there (euen as the Aungel had promised) they fynd Marie newly deliuered of childe, and Joseph a witnesse of the virgins deliueraunce, and the babe also bound vp in swathyng clothes, and laied there by in a maungier. These deuout and godly shepeherdes are nothing at all offended, neither with the bare pouertee of the tender young virgin, nor with her husbande beyng to the sight and estimacion of the worlde a man of the meanest and basest sorte, ne yet with the poore litell babe, whō for default of a more commodious place, the parentes wer faine to laie doune in a maungier, (which thinges would haue made the proud Pharisees and Scribes to take vtter scorne and disdaine at the matier,) but ꝑ shepeherdes are by all these thynges the better confirmed to beleue ꝑ matier more stedfastly, whan thei by witnesse of theyr owne yies perfeictely knewe and found, that it wer no fables ne lyes that the Aungel had told them tidynges of. And here may we note, that tender loue and zele towardes God, hath in all persones (be thei neuer so slender or lowe of degree) a certain wysedome and worldly cast of it owne in thynges. For these shepeherdes did not euen byanby publishe abrode the thyng that they had heard: but assone as thei perfeictely knewe the thyng to be certaine & out of doubt, than did thei not feare to talke the thing that thei had heard, abrode also emong other cōpaignies. Christ loued to haue the talke of his birth, and his commyng, first to arise and begynne of suche reporters, and publishers, as wer men of suche simplicitee & plainnes, that no mā would suspecte or mistrust any of them either of fablyng and lyng, orels of clokyng & countrefeictyng. They had no suche wit as to inuent a lye of theyr owne braines, they could no skille to deuise or to put any thing more then trueth to that that they had seen, but the thing that they had heard & seen, euen as they had heard and seen it, euen so and none otherwyse did they shewe

The shepeherdes sayd one to another.

Leat vs go now euen vnto Bethleem, and see this thing.

And they came with haste.

And whan they had seen it &c.

shewe tidynges of it vnto men of good heartes and disposicion. And among no smal numbre of menne, did the wordes of the shepeherdes finde credence, in somuche that it made a great maignie verie desirous & fain to haue sight of the childe. And here in this behalf marke thou and considre the wyse sobernes and demurenes of the holy tendre virgin Marie. She learneth of the shepeherdes what newes the Aungel told them, and what song the quier of the heauenly souldiers did syng, and she alone on her owne partie, holdeth her peace, keping close in her breste, and with diligent cõsideracion weighyng and conferryng in her owne heart, al these thinges that had fortuned aswel now at this present, as also afore whan the Aungell appered vnto her self. She kepeth secrete (vntill the due time should come to open it,) all the mysterie of her being conceiued with child, while she was yet a pure virgin, she maketh no vauntes ne braggues in compaignie emong other folkes, of her happie fortune. She had afore vnto the aũgel Gabriel promised her selfe a ready handemaiden for God to worke his will vpon, and euen like an humble handemaiden she vseth her self. She maketh no wordes at al, but depely cõsidereth in her minde, the straunge course of Goddes working and drift in this matier. She cõsidereth all thinges to be ful of straunge miracles, she seeth in euery part of it two extreme contraries mingled together, that is to wete, on ỹ worldes behalf excedyng lowenes, pouertie, and abiection, and on Gods behalf vnestimable highnes and maiestie. For a young babe is conceiued in the wombe, but an angel was the messagier that so it should be, and the holy ghost ỹ worker of it: A childe is borne, but ỹ mother of it is a maide: it is laied in a maunger, but the Aungels beyng ful of al godly reioycyng do syng from heauen in honor of it. It lyeth vnknowen in a blynde corner of no regarde, but all heauen bougheth doune to wurship the maiestie of it, allone as it is borne. Now these thiges thus beyng dooẽ, ỹ shepeherdes returne backe againe to theyr flockes, glorifiyng and praisyng God as concernyng all the thynges that they had heard of the Aungels, and for that they had truly founde euery thing euen as they had heard afore of the same Aungels.

And all they that heard it &c.

But Marie kept all those sainges, &c.

And ỹ shepeherdes returned praisyng and laudyng God, &c.

¶ And whan the eight day was come, that the child should be circumcised, his name was called Iesus, whiche was named of the Aungell, before he was conceiued in the wombe.

The texte.

But assoone as the eight day after her deliueraunce was come, at the whiche eight day, the lawe of Moses commaũdeth euery manchilde to be circumcised, that is to say, to haue the foreskynne of his flesh pared away round aboute, (for this thyng from Abraham furthward it pleased God that it should be the signe and the marke of all suche as should be reputed or taken to be of his sede and generacion) the lawe was satisfied in this poinct also, in cõsideracion that he was not come to breake or to fordoe the lawe, but to fulfyl it. Neither did he disdeigne to take the accustomed remedye appuincted by the lawe, euen as though he had been subiect to synne as his parentes wer, wheras he alone and none but he, was fre and clere from all corrupcion of synne, and he alone that should take away all the sinnes of the worlde, and should chose vnto him a newe people, which should haue an heart well clensed from all the desires of the flesshe, and

Fo⁊ he was called in Heb⁊ue Jesus, whiche souneth in Englishe saluecour. And this name was not by a casual chaunce at all auentures, o⁊ els by mannes wille geuen vnto this childe, but by the auth⁊itie and commaundement of God it had been appoincted and geue̅ him afo⁊e of ꝑ Aungel Gab⁊iel, ere he was conceiued in the virgins wo̅be: whiche was done to the ende that men might euen at the first, by the verate wo⁊de of his name, bee aduertised and dooen to wete, that thissame was verate he, whiche should th⁊oughly geue vnto all persones true health and saluacion, & should in suche wyse rep⁊esent ꝑ true guide and capitain Josue, that whan his people were clene pourged from al filthynesse of vice and synne, he should conueigh and b⁊yng them into the land of heauen, flowyng most plenteously with iopes euerlasting.

His name was called Jesus. &c.

The texte. ¶ And whan the tyme of their purification (after the lawe of Moses) was come, they brought him to Hierusalem, to p⁊esent him to the lo⁊de (as it is written in the law of the Lo⁊d: Euerie manchilde that first openeth the matrice, shalbe called holy to the lo⁊de) and fo⁊ to offre (as it is sayd in the lawe of the lo⁊d) a paire of turtle doues, o⁊ two yong pigions.

Hitherto (that is to say vntill the circumcision of Jesus the eight day after his birth) all that was done, was nothyng but as it were makyng of signes and p⁊okes vnto the ghospel vnder certain figures, the whiche ghospell was of necessitee to be p⁊eached first vnto the people of the Jewes. On the fifth day after the circumcision, there came th⁊e Magians (that is to say Philosophiers of high learnyng in the p⁊iuitees of Astronomie, and the other sciences mathematical) and these Magians had by the shewyng and poinctyng of a certain new sterre been halfe enfo⁊ced to come fro̅ a ferre place out of the East countreyes, purposely to see this childe. They kneled doune and wurshipped the newe bo⁊ne soueraigne of the wo⁊lde, and honoured the same with mysticall p⁊esentes o⁊ giftes, signifiyng by a certayne shewe & semblaunce of thinges (suche as might be made,) that the Gentiles shoulde in tyme to come, enb⁊ace the grace of the ghospell, whan the Jewes beyng manquillers and murderers of Jesus had wilfully cast of and fo⁊saken the same. Again, whan the .xl. daie from Maries deliueraunce was cum, at whiche .xl. daie, the lawe of Moses willeth and biddeth any manchilde, beyng the fy⁊st bo⁊ne childe of a woman, to be p⁊esented vnto the lo⁊d, and ferther appoincteth a gift o⁊ a p⁊esent to be offered fo⁊ the purifiyng as wel of the childe newe bo⁊ne, as of the woman that laie in, (because the common childebearyng and deliueraunce that women haue, is not without muche vnclenes of the body) this tend⁊e young virgyn beyng one of mooste singular demurenesse and mildenes, refuseth not in this behalf, neither to seme like vnto other women whiche after the common course of nature do b⁊yng furth child⁊en. ne auoideth to do as they do: wheras in this her childbearyng there was nothyng at all defiled with any spotte of vnclenes, but euerye part of it replenished with heauenly puritee and with holynes. Fo⁊ what point of vnpurenes coulde suche a woman haue in bearyng childe, as without so muche as ons touchyng of any man had conceiued by the onely power and vertue of God enbracyng her through ꝯ worckyng of the holy ghost. And as touchyng the childe, I pray you, was it possible for any spotte of filthynes to be in suche a childe, as beyng borne from heauen, was come into this worlde euen for this onely purpose, that he alone & onely might pourge all mankynde from al filthynes of synne? But partely it was the wille and pleasure of God by suche notable exaumples of sobernesse and humilitie as these be, to breake the pride of man: and partely it was conuenient that he whiche was come to pergette and close vp both the broke walles, that is to say, was come to iuigne & knit the people of the Iewes and the people of the Gentiles bothe together into one profession of the ghospel, should in all behalfes and in all poinctes satisfie the law of Moses, from whiche the fyrst faith and authoritee shoulde afterward procede and come vnto the ghospell. The mother therefore and Ioseph (who by the determinate and aduised worcking of God was yet still thought & supposed of euery man to be the father of Iesus) brought theyr young babe vnto Hierusalem, to thende he might in the temple there be presented in the sight of the Lorde, to whom he was dedicated and halowed: not as though God wer not lord and true owner of all thynges, but by a mysticall figure, to teache vs, that such hertes and none others, be throughly accepted afore God, as after the subduyng and vanquishyng of all the inordinate desires of the flesh, in which reigneth naught but the corruption of nice tenderenesse) do with manly strength of the spirit, stoutly set furth towardes those thynges whiche are heauenly and euerlastyng.

They brought him to Hierusalem, to present him to the lord.

The lawe of Moses menyng thilsame thyng, had prescribed and appointed, that euery male kynde, as soone as it had ons opened the matrice of the dame, and were come into the worlde, should be reputed and taken for halowed and consecrated to the Lorde, whether it wer broughtfurth by a woman or by any other brute beastes, to the entent that euen of these also the fyrst fruites should be allotted vnto the priestes, and yet vnder suche condicion, that the fyrst borne of mankinde might be redemed with a small offreyng and bought out of the priestes handes, except it wer a childe of the tribe of Leui. But the law selfe doth openly discharge and deliuer this holy childwife from the band of the law, whan it sayeth in the third boke of Moses entitled Leuiticus: If a vvoman haue conceiued, and borne a manchilde. &c. For this mother was neither properly to be called a womã, forasmuche as she knewe no part of any mans body, nor had brought furth childe by receiuyng seede frõ any other partie. And againe whan it sayeth: Euery one of the male kynde that first openeth the matrice. &c. It doeth sufficiently declare it self to mene of the cõmon manier of deliueraunce that mothers haue of theyr children, whiche mothers, by reason ꝯ the seale of theyr virginitee is broken vp afore by the man, do bring furth childe neither without muche vnclenes, nor yet without a certaine kynd of beyng put to shame. And as for this heauenly childe, neither whan it entred, nor whan it came furth, did by any meanes pollute the enclosure & tabernacle of the maidenly wombe of his mother, but rather did consecrate the same and seale it vp: that frõ henceforth neyther her bodye beyng a temple ons for euer dedicated vnto God, ne yet her soule beyng (as ye woulde saye) a closet for the holy ghost replenished with all odoriferous swete sauoures, might bee open to receiue any stainyng or corrupcion of worldely filthynes. He therfore whiche was the Lorde of al thinges that are both in heauen and in yearth, was presēted and offreed in the temple, as one subiecte and bound vnto the lawe. And he was agreed for and redemed out of the priestes handes againe for a smal price, whiche should afterwarde redeme all the whole vniuersall worlde with the price of his bloud. For the lawe had prescribed, that the parentes might bye out their first borne manchilde with a lambe of one yere olde, whiche was geuen to be a burnt offreyng: and than besides the lambe, there shoulde be brought a male pigion or a turtle doue for the pourgyng & doyng away of synne, if any spot therof had bene gotten, either in the carnall copulacion at the begeattyng of the childe, or els afterward. For it ought on euerie syde to be pure, whatsoeuer thyng is to be offreed vnto the Lorde. That if the penurie and lake of substaunce on the parentes behalf, coulde not well sufkre a lambe to be geuen, than in stede of the lambe there was geuen a turtle doue, or a young pigion for the redemyng and biyng out of the child, and the other birde was offred for the pourgeyng of synne. They offred therefore the gift of poore folkes. And there is no doubt but that they would haue geuē a more bounteful offreyng, had not theyr pouertie bene a lette therof. They had hertes ryche with good loue and zele towardes god, but for an ensample to be prepared for vs to folowe, their profession and open knowlagyng of their pouertie was more expedient, and serued better. And all these thinges wer by the dispēsacion of Goddes ordenaūce thus executed and doen, partely for many other causes and cōsideraciōs, and moste specially for this cause and purpose, that the veraie trueth of our humayne nature might by so many euident proufes and tokens bee declared to bee in the childe. Marie was seen with her great bealie in the ynne: within a litell space, as soone as she had brought forth childe, her great bealie was gon again: the chylde beeyng but euen new borne, was knowen and founde out by the shepeheardes: he was sought out and worshipped of the Magians: he was circumcised after the solemne custome vsed in that nacion: and eftesons brought he was into the temple, & there openlye presented vnto the priestes: by these thynges it came to passe, that neither any bodye might doubt of his byrth, and yet he by litell and litell came to ỹ notice and knowlage of mo and mo, but moste chiefly of meane folkes, yea and of none but godly and deuout persones onely. For mete it was, that suche a thing should neither with a fewe proufes bee enforced, nor yet with onely common pointes of euidence bee confirmed, the which beyng credited and beleued, should vnto all ages and tymes aswell past as to come, and to all persones, bryng euerlastyng health and saluation. and beeyng not beleued should cōtrarywyse bryng euerlastyng death. An Aungel therefore cummeth in message from God, and bryngeth worde of the thyng afore vnto Marie: her spouse Joseph is ioyned vnto her afore, to the ende he maye bee a true witnesse of the matier: Elizabeth which had liued barain till she was an aged womā, bryngeth furth childe: Zacharie, whan he had a long tyme continued dumme, is restored to the vse of his tongue, and hath his speche agayne: bothe of them aswel zacharie as Elizabeth zabeth are soodaynly rauished with the spirite of prophecie: Jhon leapeth in his mothers wombe for ioye: a virgin without mannes help conceiueth chylde: Magians beeyng straungiers of a ferre countrey come rennyng to haue a sighte of the childe, and doe worshyp hym on theyr knees: Shepehardes talke of hym abrode, and declare openly that he is come. By suche a great noumbre of euident tokens, and by so many straunge wonders and miracles is the new birth of this childe approued and aucthorised.

¶ And behold there was a man in Hierusalem, whose name was Symeon. And the same man was iuste and godly, and looked for the consolacion of Jsraell. And the holy ghost was in him. And an aunswere had he receyued of the holy ghost, that he should not see death, except he first saw the lordes Christ. And he came by inspiracion into the tẽple. And whan the father and the mother brought in the chylde Jesus, to doo for hym after the custome of the lawe, then tooke he hym vp in his armes, and saied. Lorde now leattest thou thy seruaunt departe in peace, accordyng to thy promise. For myne yies haue seen the saluacion, whiche thou hast prepared before the face of all people. A light to lyghten the Gentiles, and the glorye of thy people Jsraell. The texte.

Now to the entente that there shoulde bee no sexe, no age, no state or degree of men, nor no professiõ, but that Christe should haue testimonie and witnesse of euerie one of them: neither any one body left behynde, but that he might assuredly promise vnto hymselfe health and saluacion at the handes of the same Christe: there was at the same tyme in Hierusalem a certayne manne named Simeon, a man by reason of olde age colde in his bodye, but in spirite feruent hotte: of bodye feble and impotente, but of soule quiuer and lustie: of yeres drye and wythered, but in all perfecteneſſe of good liuyng as freshe as floures: that is to wete a veraie iust and and vpright man, and in veraie dede a deuout man, and ful of Godlyneſſe: not huntyng aboute for glorie and lucre at the hãdes of menne after the exaumple of the Phariseis, but right desirous and muche hungryng for the health and saluacion of al mãkynde in general: whom no delite or pleasure dyd make willyng to continue in this lyfe, sauyng onely that he myghte with his owne yies ons see the veraie selfe Messias, whõ the holye sayinges of the Prophetes had promised to come for the verai entẽt and purpose to reconforte the people of Jsrael, whiche people had been long tyme afore manye wayes in muche distresse, and dyd euen verai than liue in greuous affliccion. This Simeon (as in dede a good man he was) had assured knowelage afore by inspiracion of the holy ghoste, that the same date and tyme was now alreadie come. And wheras he had with moste ardẽte prayers besoughte the Lorde to geue hym the gyfte, that he might but euen ons with his bodyly yies beholde the Messias nowe so many hũdred yeres looked for: he had in the secrete closet of his godly breste receiued an aunswere of the holy ghoste, that he should bee sure not to departe out of this present lyfe, but that he should first see with his bodyly yies that same blessed babe, whom he had seen many a daie afore with the yies of his feith, to the ende, he might witnesse hym to bee come in dede, whõ he did nothyng doubte but that come he should: that same blissed childe (I saye,) whom for a veraie south God had syngularly aboue all other men enoynted, that he might haue & enioye both a kyngdome for euer to endure, and also a priesthood neuer to bee abrogated or abolished. Therefore whan the tyme shoulde come that the childe Jesus shoulde bee brought into the Temple (as we haue sayed,) the blissed olde man afore named, beeyng secretely warned by the mocion of the spirite, came euen a litle before before into the temple. And whā Marie the mother of the childe, and Joseph, who was yet styll beleued to bee his father, brought the babe into the Tẽple, there to execute and to doe suche thynges as vnto the accustomed rites of purification dyd apperteine: as soone as the childe was offered vp, and the priest had receiued it as the manier was, and had blissed it: the godlye zele of ỹ olde man could no longer forbeare, but that he also would nedes take in his armes the litell young babe, whom he had so greatly longed for: and euen furthwithal, his voyce (beeyng in case not long after to continue, but to fayll by reason of age,) sodaynly brast out into the praysing of God, syngyng out a moste swete and melodious song muche after the sorte (yf ye wyll so lyken it) as in the Poetes & Philosophiers it is wrytten, that the swannes vse to doo a litell before they shall dye: and thus he sayed: All my desires o Lorde are now fully satisfied. Now will I bee wyllyng and glad to dye: For now thou geuest thy seruaunt leaue to departe with a restefull and a quiet mynde, not felyng ne hauyng any ferther want at all or lacke in this lyfe, but euen delirous and fain now to passe out of this feble olde carkesse vnto the blissed coumpanie and felowshyp of the godly persones, whiche haue long afore now looked for this daie, and yet neuer had the happe to see it, but with the spirituall yies of their feith. My praiers are now more aboundauntly satisfied, who haue had the happe euen with my bodily yies also to see, and to whom it hath been geuen in myne olde armes to embrace thine onely sonne, by whom, and through whom, it hath pleased thee to geue true health and saluacion, not onely to the people of Israel, but also to all nacions of the vniuersall worlde. In this babes litell bodye (though it bee but homely and symply borne to ỹ sight of the worlde) I acknowelage, o Lorde, thy vertue and power. I acknowelage this babe to bee the lighte of the worlde promised by ỹ holy sayinges of the Prophetes. I acknowelage this chylde to bee the bright sonne, whiche it was thy holy wyll and pleasure, to haue sprung vp and arise vnto the worlde, that it might on euerie syde driue cleane awaye the derkenesse of all the Gentiles, and that thy people Israell mighte haue wherof not without good cause to glorie: thy people Israel (I saie) beeyng in true dede thy veraie owne, not after the flesshe onely, (wherhens in dede the begynnyng of this saluacion hath proceded) but after a spirituall kynred, whiche is acquired and purchased through the feith of the ghospell. For suche an one verayly is to bee called by the name of Israell, whosoeuer earnestely fixeth deuout and godly yies vpon this same lyght, and with the violence of feith, forceably breaketh into the kyngdome of heauen. In tymes past hitherto, the people of ỹ Jewes hath gloried and made great bauntes of Moses, of their Temple, and of the Prophetes: but now from henceforth the ghostely Israel, (whiche is here and there in sondry places dispersed throughout all the worlde,) shall glorie on thy sonne, whom thou hast vouchesalued to send after al the others here mencioned, as one that in greatnesse, in vertue, and in power is ferre aboue them all. Now at this presente in dede he lyeth hidden in a corner, not knowen as he ought to bee, but of veraie fewe persones: but in tyme to come the lighte of hym shall blase abrode, and he shall with his bright shynyng beames, lighten all quarters and coastes of the worlde.

Thō toke he him vp in his armes, and sa yed.

Lorde now leattest thou thy seruaunt departe in peace.

For myne yies haue sene the saluacion &c.

Before ỹ face of al people.

A light to ligh ten the Gentiles.

And the glory of thy people Israel.

seen with theyr vrode phylacteries: but they hyde in theyr hartes a thyng ferre contrarie to that that they shew in outward semblеaunce. But the wilie and wicked thoughtes of suche, the light of the trueth of the ghospell whā it ariseth, shal plainly finde out and detecte. Publicanes, harlottes, and synners are by these countrefayters of holynesse, debarred from all sacres or holy rites of the Temple. But suche shall god receiue fyrst of all into the kyngdome of heauen. The Gentiles whiche haue been geuen to idolatrie, soodainly chaungyng their life, shal with gredie zele and affeccion embrace the doctrine of true godlinesse: the Pharisеis and Bishops, in whose hādes and power the keye of the lawe and of religion did reste, shall with moste obstinate endeuour, resiste it, and bee against it. The night hath no perfecte iudgemēt of thynges, but ofte tymes in stede of the thynges selfes, it sheweth to the yie the onelye shadowes and vaine counterfaytes of thynges: but the sonne, whan it is vp and geueth clere light, it driueth awaye al blynde castyng of mystes before mennes yies, shewyng euery thyng in his owne lykenesse, and geuyng to euerie thyng his owne colour. Al this dyd that same godly olde mā speake, reioycyng and makyng glad chere from the botome of his herte, whiche the holy ghoste had throughly enspired.

The texte. ¶ And there was a prophetysse, one Anna, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser: whiche was of a great age, and had liued with an housebande seuen yeres from her virgintee. And she had been a wedowe about fower score & fower yeres: whiche departed not from the Temple, but serued God with fastynges and prayers night and daie. And she came foorth that same houre, and praysed the Lorde, and spake of hym, to all the that looked for redempcion in Israel.

Now had the Lorde Jesus receiued witnesse of his comyng into this worlde, of Aungels: of the virgin Marie: of her spouse Joseph who had neuer had to doe with her: of zacharie beeyng a priest: of the young babe Jhon beeyng yet in his mothers wombe vnborne: of Elizabeth beeyng a maried woman: of shepeherdes: of wyse men called Magians: of Scribes who gaue vndoubted sentence and iudgemēt out of the Prophecie, in what place Christe should bee borne: of Herode beeyng in drede and feare leste some euill should growe to hym by Christes Natiuitee: of Simeon, who was neither priest, ne leuite, but an vpright lyuyng man and nothyng els: now remayned that he myght haue semblеable testimonye of a wedowe too. So great was the efficacie and vertue of this young babe not yet shewyng foorth his full might & power, that he rauished all thynges with ỳ spirite of God, enspiryng the humble and poore sorte with the holy ghost, strickyng the proude with sore trouble of mynde and with feare, so that of these preambles of thynges it might without any difficultee be gathered, what chaūge of the worlde was lykely in tyme commyng to bee, whan the same childe beeyng ons come to ful age, would openly vtter foorth that same godly voyce of his: and whan he should through dooyng miracles daily more and more weaxe famous: whan he shoulde dye, & arise agayne to lyfe: and whan he shoulde plenteouslye poure foorth the holye ghoste from heauen vpon all suche as beleued on hym. So then nexte after an olde man that had long tymelyued without any wyfe, followeth an old womā ỳ had many yeres liued a widowe withoute an housebande. For a certaine woman there was, called Anna, whiche had that name geuen her of the thyng that was in her, that is to saye, of Grace, for highly endued she was with the spirite of Prophecie. She was the daughter of Phanuel beeyng a man of good fame and muche commended, and of the tribe of Aser: whiche tribe beeyng the eyght in ordre emong the twelue, dooeth vnder a certayne priuie figure signifie the blissednesse of the resurrecciō, whiche solemnitee the doctrine of the ghospel hath added to the halowyng of the sabbothes that the Jewes did vse. For Aser in Hebrewe, is as muche to saie in Englishe, as Blissed. This Anna in that she was so ferre striken in age, semed to haue been delayed frō dying and preserued in this life for none other purpose, but that beeyng an old woman, she might (accordyng as she had afore tymes with moste feruent praters wished and desired) see the young babe, that was promised, whiche should bryng health and saluacion to the people of Israel. For the holy ghoste had put in her mynde, that he was alreadie borne, & euen by the same suggestion of the spirite of God, whiche Simeon had tofore been enspired withall, came this Anna vpon theim euen in the verai same houre, whyle these thynges whiche we haue already tolde, wer in doyng within the temple. This Anna in the tyme whan virginitee was not yet honorable, ne to be gloried of emong the Jewes, had liued with an housebande of her owne, by the space of seuen yeres from her maidenhood. So muche tyme she was content, because of ỹ custome, to bestowe in hauyng an housebande for bryngyng furth of chyldren. But all the residue of her lyfe she consecrated to the onely seruyng of God in contemplacion. For she continued in the state of wedohood about the space of fower score and fower yeres. After that she had ons assaied wedlocke, although she wer yet of lustie age, & in the verai floure of her tyme, yet had she no manier mynde ne thought to marie any more agayne, but euen as a woman beeyng dead to the worlde, and now wholy dedicated vnto God, she almoste neuer departed frō the Temple, but was there bussily doyng sacrifyce vnto hym with euangelicall oblacions, not onely in the daye tyme, but also by night, offeryng herself vnto the Lorde a liuely, a reasonable, and an acceptable hoste. For her body she offred with often fastyng, and her soule she offred with deuout meditaciōs and prayers. And euen whyle the afore sayde rites and ceremonies of purificacion wer in doyng within the tēple, in the verai houre while Simeon is in his prophetical talke, in the verai momente whyle all thynges are full of holy and godly wordes, bothe of reioycing and of thankes geuyng for this heauenly young babe: this Anna to, (euen as God would haue it) commeth in emong thē, that she also might bee a witnesse of the same childe, that borne he was, and that she might tuigne the affeccions of her hert with the ioyfulnesse of the others, extollyng and highly praysing the bounteous goodnesse of God, for ỹ he had cast so merciful an yie vpō his people. Neither dyd she whā she was ī coūpanye & presence of others, kepe secrete the thyng that she had seen with her yies, & ỹ whiche she had learned by goddes inspiracion: but she woulde euermore be speakyng and talkyng of this chylde, vnto all suche as wer in Hierusalem, and looked for the redempcion of the people of Israel. And this was enough for a woman beeyng a wedowe, onely in the Tēple to talke and to auouche that Christe was come, & the same to intimate & disclose vnto a fewe persones abrode beeyng desirous and houngrie of it. For that same tyme was not yet come, whiche was reserued for the Apostles whā they should bee replenished with the holy ghost, of ỹ whiche Apostles it is saied in the Psalme of Dauid: Into al the yearth is their soune gon foorthe, and their vvordes into all the endes of the vvorlde throughout.

The texte. ¶ And whan they had perfourmed all thynges accordyng to the lawe of the Lorde, they returned into Galilee, to their own citie Nazareth. And the childe grewe, & waxed strong in spirite, and was fylled with wisedome, and the grace of God was vpon hym.

All thynges beeyng at the last fully and ordrely executed, as muche as the lawe of Moyses had prescribed for the purificacion of women late deliuered of childe: they returned into Bethleem where the chylde was borne. But whā kyng Herode beeyng done to wete by the Magians, ỹ there was a newe kyng of the people of Israel borne, had commaunded all the infauntes to bee slain, as many as within two yeres date, nexte afore passed, had been borne in Bethleem, and in all the circuite of the same lordeship or coūtie: Joseph beeyng aduertised and warned in his slepe so to doo, cōueighed awaie priuely bothe the childe and the mother that bore it, into Egypte, & there made their abode vntill the death of the wicked kyng. That thyng dooen, thei eftsons returned at the warnyng of an Aungel, not into Bethleem, leste some occasion of shewyng ferther crueltee might perchaunce thereby haue been geuen to the sonne of Herode, (who had at ỹ tyme succeded his father, in a porcion of his kyngdome) but thei returned into the coūtrey of Galilee vnto the citie of Nazareth, where the babe was first conceiued in his mothers wombe. For his mynde was to liue in a corner out of the waie for a tyme: and in dede kepyng hymself in the poore citie of Nazareth, it was an easie thyng for hym to beguile the crueltee of theim that dreded the arisyng of a newe kyng. And thus hitherto that same our heauenly soueraigne Lorde and Prince, who had for our sakes abbassed and humbled hymself down euen to swadlyng cloutes, to the cradle, to cryng in his swathyng bandes as other children doo, and to the strengthlesse babehood of the bodye, was preached and declared to the worlde by the onely testimonie of other folkes talkyng. But his age by little and little growyng vp, did from tyme to tyme encreace the bignesse of his stature, and the strength of his bodye: in whiche bodye as ī a tabernacle, there clerely appered a certain woondrefull towardenesse and naturall inclinacīō to vertue, euidentely declaryng that somewhat there was in hym, more then a man. The strength also of the spirite cōtinually encreaced in him, daily more and more shewyng it self foorth in his countenaunce, in his passe, in his talke, and in his doynges: in all whiche, there was not so muche as any one puincte, but it was euen full of the spirite of mildenesse and humilitee, of chastitee, of amiablenesse, and of godly zele. For he was nothyng subiect to those vices, which the yeres of childehood is commonly woont to bee encoumbreed with: that is to wete, fondenesse of speakyng, and dooyng thynges, wantonnesse, inconstauncie, and folye: but the heauenly wysedome wherewith he was replenished, not taryng for the yeres and age that discrecion ought to bee in, did euen than alreadie in suche wyse shewe it self: that wheras he was afore commended, and sette foorth by the testimonie of others, now by his owne vertues and giftes of grace (beeyng suche as fewe other men had,) he was made bothe woondrefull to all persones, & also worthie to bee loued. Wysedome, holynesse, perfeccion of liuyng, rypenesse of discrecion, beeyng in hym suche and so great, as cannot in any other man of right aunciente yeres bee found, made hym woundrefull vnto all mē: and the delectable swetenesse of his conuersacion, his ientile familiar facion towardes all folkes, and his humble softenesse, made him vnto all mē amiable.

Into Galile to their owne citie Nazareth.

And the child grewe.

And weared strong in spirite.

And was filled with wysedome.

Neither was the fauour that men did beare hym, fauour of the cõmon sorte, or for a litte season, suche as that same age of childehood dooeth ofte tymes gather through humain qualitees, (as in exaũple, for the respecte of beautie and welfauouredneſſe, or otherwyſe for aptitude and quickeneſſe of takyng ỹ is taught theim, whiche is in some childrẽ before their tyme) but in hym there shyned a certain godly and woondrefull grace, mightily drawyng all men to the loue of his vertuousneſſe.

¶ And his father and mother went to Hierusalem euerie yere at the feaſte of Eſtur. And whan he was twelue yere olde, thei went vp to Hierusalem after the custome of the feaſte daie. And whan thei had fulfilled the daies, as thei returned home, the childe Jesus abode still in Hierusalem, and his father and mother knewe not of it, but thei supposyng hym to haue been in the compaignie, came a daies iourney, and sought hym emong their kynſfolke and acquaintaunce. And whan thei found hym not, thei went backe again to Hierusalem and sought hym. And it fortuned that after three daies, they founde hym in the Temple sittyng in the myddes of the doctoures, hearyng theim, and oppolyng theim. And all that heard hym, wer astouned at his vnderſtandyng and aunſwers. The texte.

And although Nazareth was somewhat ferre in diſtaunce from Hieruſalem, yet neuertheleſſe the parentes of Jesus beeyng folkes of muche deuocio, went thither euerie yere ons, and ỹ was at the feaſtiual daie of Eſtur, whiche feaſte was emong the Jewes kept high and holy with all possible deuotion and solẽnitee. And this was the daie, at whiche that same lãbe not knowyng any manier spotte of synne, was marked and appuincted to bee offred vp in sacrifice at his due tyme. The childe also beeyng vnder the guydyng of his mother, and his fosterfather, euen than as young as he was, accuſtomed himſelf to deuout seruyng of God, for our enſaumple: puttyng all fathers and mothers in remembraunce of their dueties, who are bound to reſtreigne their children that are come of theim, from all wantonneſſe euen at the firſt daie, yea euen in their verai cradles, and the same to enure to holy conuerſacion and to earneſt appliyng of true godlyneſſe, while their age is yet tendre, and their naturall diſpoſicion yet ientile, ſofte, & plyaunt vnto al manier trainyng in vertue. The childe Jesus neded not the ſchoolyng or ordreyng of any other perſone: but it was an exaumple ordeined for other parentes how to bryng vp their children chaſtely and vertuously: and also a fourme or trade shewed vnto all young children, how thei ought to vſe theimſelfes obediente to their parentes whan thei are by theſame exhorted and aduertiſed to thynges that are holy and godly. But whan his childehood by reaſon of a more noumbre of yeres, was now growen to a litteli more ſtrength, and begoon to drawe wel towardes the ſtature of a young strieplyng, he beeyng of the full age of twelue yeres olde: and his parentes, accordyng to the auncient custome had gon to Hieruſalem at the daie of Eſtur, and the childe awaityng on theim in their compaignie: as ſoone as al thynges wer finiſhed that to the ſolemne obſeruyng of that feaſte did appertein, and the daies throughly expired, in whiche due attendaunce muſt bee geuen to the diuine ſeruice in the Temple: wheras his mother and Joſeph wer returned homeward toward Nazareth, the childe Jesus remained still at Hieruſalem: euen than before his full age shewyng hymſelf glad and readie to accompliſhe the commaundementes and meſſage of his father, for the dooyng wherof he had been ſent into the world. But his parentes knewe nothyng of his tarying behynde. But whan they ſawe that he came not home again to Nazareth, thei accordyng to the common rate of care that other parentes take for their children, greatly mused and woondred, what had befalle. And in dede at the first, thei demed that he had hanged on the coumpaignie of some of his feloes and kynsfolkes, and by reason therof had been the slacker in commyng. Thei geat theim therefore backe again euen thesame waie that thei had come, to the mountenaunce in manier of one wholle daies iourney, makyng serche for hym emong their acquaintaunce and kynsfolkes, in coumpaignie of whom suche littell children are oftentymes woont to make taryaunce and lyngreyng, because the affectionate desire of their kynsfolke or alliaunce dooeth commonly kepe theim backe and maketh theim to tarye. But emongst all these, was Jesus not found, who taught men euen than alreadie as young as he was, that suche an one as is willyng to take vpō hym the profession & teachyng of heauēly doctrine, must renounce & clerely forsake all worldely or carnal affeccions, bothe of father and mother, & also of kynsfolkes. Their hope therefore beeyng beguiled in seekyng Jesus here emong his kynsfolkes, now ỳ carefulnesse for their child did somewhat more earnestely pricke and bere their stomakes (as in tendre parentes it wil doo) backe thei went again to Hierusalē, demyng and supposyng it to bee possible enough, that he had there remained still in the house of some frende or acquaintaunce of theirs. But whan the childe was in vain sought here also emong their acquaintaūce and kynsfolkes: after three daies space, it chaūced that his parentes whā thei had no suche hope at all, found hym in the Tēple not idle, nor playng this or that childyshe toye: but sittyng styl in the middes emōg the Doctours, whom he beeyng but a childe, dyd by course bothe heare teachyng, and also did appose: & beeyng by course opposed of theim again, did make aunswer: not for that it was nedefull for hym to demaūde of any mortall creature what to learne, but to the ende that by wysely ministryng his oppositions, he might rightely enstructe and teache theim, that professed the perfecte knowelage of the lawe, wheras in dede thei knewe not the strength, the pith, and the effecte of the lawe: and all vnder one, enflamyng vs vnto an earnest zele to take good instrucciōs: and also geuyng a good lesson, that no age is ouer young or ouer soonne put to the learnyng of suche thynges, as maie auaill or serue towardes godly perfection. For some artes and occupations there bee, whiche euerie age is not apte, but ouer young to learne: onely deuocion and godlynesse is to bee learned byanby from the cradle, and the earnest diligence in applyng thesame, not to bee slacked or releassed at any tyme, vntill the verai last daie of a mannes life. For there is in it higher degrees and higher to growe vnto, as long as a mannes life dooeth endure. And as for Jesus, although he wer vnknowē bothe to the Doctours & also to the people that stood about, yet did he make theim all to mervaill at hym, that beeyng a childe of a small age, and stature, he could in his saiynges & aunswers shewe foorth a certain woondreful wysedome: yea and ferre excedyng the wysedome of sage oldemen. They sawe the age of his bodye to be tēder, & ferre vnripe to haue any great wysdome, & thei heard a young childe with singular humilitee and sobrenesse, vttreyng foorth & speakyng suche thynges, as the great Doctours of aunciente yeres, & thei that semed now to bee as hygh in wysedome as any mē might bee, thought not tedious to learne. And yet al the while there was in hym no pride ne haultenesse, there was in hym no malapertenesse of cockyng or geuyng taūtes, there was i him no manier bostyng or vaūtyng of hymself,

And whā thei foūd him not thei went backe again to Hierusalē & sought him.

And it fortuned that after three daies thei foūd him in the temple, sittyng in ỳ middes of the doctours, hearing theim and opposing theim.

And all that heard him wer astouned at his vnderstandyng and aunswers.

hymselfe, whiche yeres are not woont to lacke in boyes whose wittes are ripe before their tyme. But he would question with theim, as one desirous and faine to learne: & beeyng demaunded any question, he would aunswer with all possible sobrenesse, yea and also with moste excellent wysedome. And on this maner taught he theim without any spice or sembleaunce of arrogancie, that is to saie, of presumpteous takyng of autoritee bpõ hym. And by these thynges it came to passe, that aswell the Doctours with whom he disputed, as also ꝑ parties that stood round about and wer witnesses of the same disputacion, wer verai muche astouned, not onely for respecte of the childes wysedome, (beeyng suche as had not afore been heard of,) whiche he in demaundyng any questiõ, and in shapyng any aunswer, did plainly declare: but also for the rare and singular sobrenesse of his countenaunce, of his gesture, & of his toungue, whiche thynges gaue a more ferther grace of acceptacion vnto his vnderstandyng. And yet is not this poyncte neither, without a fruictefull mysterie, that Jesus, who couldenot with any sekyng bee found emong his familiar acquaintaunce and kynsfolkes after the fleashe, was soodainly foũd by chaunce at Hierusalem within the Temple. For the saied citee of Hierusalem, beeyng of great name and fame, (by reason that the worlde had conceiued an opinion, that God was serued there best of all places,) did represente aswell the churche militaunt on yearth, as also triouphaunt in heauen. For this same Hierusalem is our countrey that we make all our sighyng to bee at, forasmuche as we dooe well vnderstãde, that here in this trãsitorie worlde, we liue but as it wer in a place of exile or banishemente, not hauyng a citee wherin to dwell for euer. Wheresoeuer therefore all goeth by carnall affections of man, wheresoeuer the earnest studie of the mynde is applyed vnto suche thynges as perishe and dye with this worlde: in suche a place neither is Hierusalem (whiche Hebrewe woorde is to saie in Englishe, the sight of peace,) neither a Temple dedicated to the Lorde. And therefore is not Jesus in any suche place to bee sought, who is altogether heauenly. But wheresoeuer is a breste and an herte, whiche despiseth tho thinges that perteine to the carnalite of fleashe and bloud, and panteth for haste that he maketh towarde that same blissed tranquillitee and quietnesse of mynde, whiche the bounteous goodnesse of God dooeth through the feith of the ghospell assure and warraunt euen here in this present life, and maketh perfect in the heauenly Hierusalem aboue: in suche a place is Hierusalem, in suche a place is the Temple that Jesus is delited with: in suche a place there is bothe propounyng of questions, and aunsweryng entrechaungeably, not concernyng how a round circle maie bee made iust fower square, not of that whiche in Aristotels Philosophie is called Materia prima, (as if ye should saie in Englishe, the first originall stuf wherof and out of whiche all thynges in the worlde are produced and made) nor of that that thesame Aristotel and others dooe call primum mobile (wherby thei mene hym that gouerneth the worlde, and rolleth the skye about without begynnyng or endyng, not namyng it God, but estemyng it to bee some other naturall thyng of it self) of all whiche thynges a man maie bee ignoraunt, and yet come to heauen wel enough: but in suche a place as we speake of, the oppositions and aunswers are concernyng the knowelage of holy scripture, by the whiche God sheweth vnto vs, the waie wherby we maie attaigne euerlastyng saluacion. In suche a place are slain hostes and sacrifices moste acceptable vnto god, that is to wete, carnall luste, enuie, wrathe, desire of worldely auaunce-ment, and auarice. In suche a place there is withall godly peticions and with pure praiers, continuall burnyng of swete sauours and incense to the moste high contentacion and pleasyng of god. It is therefore ỹ parte of euerie bodye to see and prouide, that he haue Hierusalem within his owne breste, and that he there make readie a tẽple mete for the holy ghost, to the ende that he maye bee woorthie to haue Jesus to his geaste.

The texte. ¶ And whan thei sawe him, thei merualled. And his mother saied vnto him: Soonne why hast thou thus delt with vs? Beholde, thy father and I haue sought thee sorowyng. And he saied vnto theim, how is it that ye sought me? Wyst ye not that I must goe about my fathers busynesse? And thei vnderstood not that saiyng whiche he spake vnto theim. And he went down with theim, and came to Nazareth, and was obedient vnto theim. But his mother kept all these saiynges together in hir herte. And Jesus prospered in wysedome and age, and in fauour, with god and men.

And beholde, euen in the meane tyme whyle the said meruaillous childe Jesus dooeth with this foundacion and entreyng make a preparatiue to the executyng of the heauenly busynesse of restorying mankynde to saluacion, whiche to dooe he was come down from heauen: his father and mother cũmeth sodainly in place, to whom the mysterie of goddes entente and purpose, was not yet fully knowen. There was yet still remainyng in theim, some litle spiece of humain affeccion, although thei had with a naturall louyng carefulnesse, sought about for the childe. And Joseph for his parte holdeth his peace, who knewe verai well in his conscience, that he had no right ne title to the childe that his spoused wife had borne: but the mother (as she thought she might well dooe by authoritee) maketh halk a querele to hym: Soonne (saieth she) why dooe ye handle vs after suche sorte as this? why did ye priuely steale awaie from vs? loe, your father & I beeyng now by the space of twoo or three dayes in great care and heauynesse, haue been sekyng all about for you, fearyng on your behalf the daũgier and perill of all suche misauentures, as the naturall tenderenesse of parentes dooeth commonly vse to feare the chauncyng of, vnto their childeren that thei loue, whan thei bee absent from theim.

Soonne why hast thou thꝰ delt with vs? Beholde thy father and I haue sought thee sorowyng.

And he saied vnto theim: how is it, that ye sought me?

To these woordes of Marie, whiche had proceded of an affeccion in dede right tender and naturall, but yet somewhat humain and worldely (for respecte wherof it was not conuenient to interrupte or breake the godly talke, that was than in hande) Jesus aunswered halk roughly: not that he was in any fume or indignacion with his parentes, but to shewe, that in the affaires of the ghospell (whiche to dooe he was sent of his heauenly father,) no manier authoritee of any man (what euer he bee) ought to haue place. The authoritee of parentes ouer their childrẽ hath certain due limites and boundes, how ferre it maie extende, whiche authoritee it is lawfull and also necessarie to renounce and vtterly forsake as often as any matier of eternall saluacion cometh in place. For mete it is, that thynges worldely geue place vnto godly thinges, & that the respecte and regard of god (to whom we are bounden debtours aswell of bodye as of soule, and of whose bounteous liberalitee wee looke for the inheritaũce of the life euerlasting) bee aboue theim, of whõ after the fleashe we are borne & brought vp, to succede theim but in some portion of good and substaũce worldely. In dede greatly bounden we are euen to our parẽtes too: but a great dele moze are we bound to god, to whom we are bound euen that euer we had any fathers oz mothers at all. So lykewyse at an other tyme after this he made an aunlwer not all of the tentileſt manier vnto his mother, whā ſhe at a mariage ſpake vnto him, & moued him of ſome wyne foz ꝑ feaſte, & did with a certain autozitee, becauſe ſhe was his mother, require hym to ſhewe a mtracle, wheras miracles wer not to bee ſhewed but to the glozie of his heauenly father. So did he alſo at an other tyme moze ſnappiſhely make aunſwer vnto theim, ꝑ frō preachyng the gholpell called him fooꝛth of the thꝛong & preſſe of the people, in the name of his mother and of his kinſfolkes. But the aunſwer that he made at this tyme, was in manier & fourme here folowyng. What was the cauſe (q he) why ye did with ſuche penſif carefulneſſe ſeke about foz me? did ye not remēbze in your mindes, that I muſt nedes be aboute my fathers buſyneſſe, as often as he calleth me to the office and funccion appoincted vnto me? But what thyng theſe wooꝛdes of Jeſus might mene, his parētes did not euē berai well vnderſtand. Foz it eppreſſed in him a certayn excellēcie aboue the cōmon rate of a man, eſpecially at ſuche a tendze age of childehood. And albeit ꝑ of a likelyhood of thynges ꝑ had afoze paſſed, thei loked foz no cōmon trade, ne yet no meane thing at the hādes of their childe: yet foz all ꝑ did they not fully & thzoughly vnderſtād the high excellencie & maieſtie of the power of god, thei did not yet perfeictely knowe by what wōdzefull dzifte & cōueighaūce god the father had determined to redeme mankinde by hys owne ſonne. They heard in theſe wozdes of Jeſus, a namyng of his father: whereas thei berai ſurely knew ꝑ he had no father in this wozld on yerth: thei here him ſpake of his fathers affaires & buſyneſſe, of whiche affaires he had neuer ſpokē wozde ne made mēcion to thē afoze ꝑ daye. But they, (though they wer ꝑ parētes) are al huiſht, & ſpeake not a wozde, but do reuerently take ꝑ wozdes which thei vnderſtode not. And Jeſus ſeeyng this, hūbled himſelf, & ſhewed himſelf obediēt to his mother & to Joſeph his foſter father: not ꝑ he ought vnto theim any duetie of obedience, but of his owne goodneſſe he ſubmitted himſelf foz a ſeaſon to their weakeneſſe, to be rewled & oꝛdzed by them: & therwithal he alſo gaue vnto al childzē a fourme & an exaūple, wt what earneſt endeuour, & wt what great reuerēcethei ought to be at theyz parentes cōmaūdement: foz aſmuche as ꝑ childe Jeſ, who ought no ſeruice ne obediēce to any body, ſauing onely to his heauēly father, did in ſuche wiſe obei a father ꝑ was but coūtrefaicte, & his mother ꝑ boze him without any harme oz diſpleaſure of empatryng her chaſtitie & maidenhod therby. Thus did ꝑ lozd Jeſus thynke it good, in ſuche wyſe to tēper al his ſayinges & doynges: ꝑ nowe he woulde ſhewe furth, (as ye would ſay,) certai litel ſparkes of his godly power: & an other time again would he hūble himſelf to the low degree of a mā, poozely bozne into this wozlde. Uerayly his ſo doyng was expediēt foz vs, to ꝑ ende ꝑ it might by al manier waies be perſuaded vnto mākynke, ꝑ veritee & true ſubſtaunce both of ꝑ diuine nature, & of the nature of mā, to be coupled together in his one perſone. The felowſhip of a nature beyng common both to hym & vs, did greatly make foz the purchacing of loue. We do moze earneſtly & alſo moze fruictefully loue thinges ꝑ be nere to our owne nature, & familiat to dele wt: euē by ꝑ olde pzouerbe, which ſaieth: ꝑ like wil euermoze vnto like.

* Luc. viii. Matth. xii. Marc. iii.

Wiſt ye not that I muſt go about my fathers buſineſſe?

And thei vnderſtood not that ſaying whiche he ſpeake vnto them.

And he went downe & was obediēt vnto them.

 But as

But as for putting our affiaunce and truste, we doe more safely putte it in god, who, (forasmuche as lye he cannot, and is of power all thinges to doe,) maie in no manier wise be doubted of, but ỹ he wil perfourme what soeuer he dooeth promise. And in dede our loue towardes Christ doeth first spring vp of the cousinage and likenesse of our nature: but from these begynnynges it groweth better and better to the loue of thinges beeyng higher aboue vs. For like as the cõmon sorte of men, is at the first beginning by the onely seeyng of the beautie of ones bodye, enflamed and sette on fyer, to beare his good will to the partie, and shortely after, whan by keepyng compaignie and by talkyng with the same partie, the good qualities of a more beautifull mynde and solle, lyyng hidden in his beautiful bodie, are once throughly perceyued, thei begin more truely and also more ardentely to be in loue with the thyng that thei see not, then with ỹ thyng that thei see: euen so the felowelhip and equalitee of our humain nature in him, was vnto vs, as ye would saie, a lure to the conceiuyng of loue towardes the Lorde Jesus: but from this loue we growe vp more higher to the loue of his diuine power, & of his godhed. Therefore whether he hũble himself down to our weakenesse, orels mounteth vp to his owne highnesse aboue, he buisily attendeth ỹ labouryng and worckyng of our health and saluacion. So than Jesus went from the temple, and from Hierusalem: and obeiyng the gouernaunce of his parentes, returned home again to Nazareth. Leat childzen and young strieplinges whan thei heare this, be ashamed, as many as make light at the good lessons and counsailes of their parentes exhortyng them to honest waies, seyng that Jesus did for a space leaue of from dooyng his fathers buisinesse, because he would not shewe any exaumple of a disobedient soone. Leat the priuate commoners and parisheners blushe, that vse to rebell against their godly pastours, (beeyng their spirituall fathers) seeyng that Jesus beeyng the greatter in dignitie, was content to bee ordred by his inferiours, and beeyng God, submitted hymselk to the gouernaunce of creatures mortal. But ỹ mother again on hir partie, forasmuche as she perceiued & founde a certain power of the godhed to glittre & shewe forth in him, was well contẽt to folowe the mynde & ordring of hir soonne: and beeyng myndeful of hir owne wise & discrete sobrenesse, did as yet make no blabbyng out abrode of any thig, (as other weomen vse to be full of clattreyng and bablyng) ne take vpon hir to geue any sentence or iudgemẽt vpõ these matiers, whiche she did rather meruail at, then vnderstand the mysterie of it, what it ment: but al ỹ euer had chaunced from the beginning about or concernyng the childe, & al that euer was by hym saied or dooen, she gathered & conferred altogether, and laied it vp safe in hir breste: coniecturyng & castyng of these wõdrefull begynnynges, what ende of all matiers was lyke to ensue. Neither did she leaue any one puincte vnmarked, to the ende that she mighte afterward with the more perfeict trueth and assuraunce, make reporte of al thinges vnto the disciples, that should in tyme comyng preache the lyfe of Jesus all the worlde throughout. In the meane whyle Jesus beyng yet hitherto knowen but vnto few folkes, continued dweilyng in ỹ poore citie of Nazareth, liuyng as ye might saie vnder ỹ gouernaũce of his parẽtes, vntill ỹ time should come, that was sette of his father, in whiche he should with miracles and with preachyng, shewe forth hymselfe abrode vnto the worlde: geuyng to vs in the meane while a lesson by his owne example, that no mã should vnaduisedly and vndiscretely, orels out of tyme & without due occasion come rushyng in, or make presse to take in hande thoffice of preachyng the ghospel, before ỹ he do through sufficiẽt groweth of yeres, through vnculpable behaueour, through dewe learnyng and knowelage in holy scriptures, and thorough Goddes vocation, gather vnto hymselfe a good autoritee to become a teacher. For Jesus vntil he was in manier ful thirtie yeres of age, neuer did any veray notable acte, sauyng that aboue the rate of other mortall men, lyke as he grewe and prospered in stature of bodye, in strength, and in groweth of yeres: so did that same heauenly wysedome, stil more & more plenteously shewe forth it selfe in hym: and so did his other manifolde giftes of grace also, through whiche, lyke as he was most highly accepted vñ God: so did he daily more and more growe in fauour and estimacion with men. An vnlyke man verily and of a muche cõtrarie sort vnto the Scribes and Phariseis, who by a countrefaicte pretense of holynesse and of wysedome, vsed to sette out theimselfes to the yies of men, wheras in the sight of god thei wer as full as thei might swarme of al filth and vncleneſſe of vice. Neither was it onely auaillable to the saluacion of mankynde, (who was to bee redemed by a straunge conueighaunce, and suche as the lyke had not been heard of afore,) but also to the good instruccion and trainyng of our life, that Jesus did by litell and litell, and by certain degrees, shewe forth to the knowelage of men his heauenly giftes of grace, that he was moste aboundauntly repleniſhed withall. For that thyng verily he did, to geue vs a lesson, that from those first preceptes and rules of righteousneſſe, (whiche we ought, euen streightwaie whyle we bee young cradle children, to drynke in,) we should with continual goyng forward, vnceassauntely dooe all our possible endeuour to atteigne vnto thynges of more and more perfeccion. For lyke as the bodye hath his degrees of growyng bygget and bygger to the full rate of his stature, & to his full strength, that is to wete, shootyng vp first from infauncie or babehood, to the stature of a young strieplyng, from the stature of a strieplyng, to the degree of a yoũg man, frõ the degree of youth to the full perfeccion of mãstate: euen so hath godlyneſſe his degrees of encreacyng, vntill we maie bee full growen vp to the perfeict substancial strength of the fulneſſe of Christe. For Christe groweth bigger and bygger in vs, and shooteth vp more and more to manstate, whan we from the first enstruccions and articles of the feith, dooe encroche forward to a more depe hidden wysedome of the scripture of God, whan we forsake the milke of the fleasche, and begyn to haue a stomake or appetite to the sound and strong meate of the spirite: whã we leaue ỹ vnsauerie lettre, & thirst ỹ mysticall sense & menyng: whã we nothyng esteme ne regarde thynges yearthly, but mount vp & take our flight to thynges celestiall. For it is euẽ plain settyng ỹ cart before the horses, if the bodye shall by the course of nature growe frõ tyme to tyme forward to better & better: & the solle shall by our sluggisheneſſe continually renne hedlong backeward to wurse & wurse. For thus dooe we see it cõmonly come to passe. Big laddes and strieplynges growe quite awaie frõ the pureneſſe of babehood to boyisshe wantonneſſe: the youth than again groweth forward apace to brableyng in the lawe, and to makyng of affraies: mãstate emendeth to ambicion & couetise. And so cometh it to passe, that euerie mā ꝑ neuer that he draweth to the state of age, so much the ferther goeth he backeward from innocent liuyng. But suche persones, as haue once put on Christ on their backes, ought accordyng to the example of thesame Christe, with all their strength to heaue forewarde vnto better and better: to the ende that thei maie bothe with the pure clenesse of the solle make theim selfes acceptable in the sight of God: and also by the vncorruptenesse of their liuyng, geat theimselfes an honeste fame and reporte emong men.

The thirde chapter.

The texte. ¶ In the fiftenth yere of the reigne of Tiberius the Emperour, whan Poncius Pilate was lieutenaunte in Jewerie, and Herode the Tetrarche of Galilee: and his brother Philip the Tetrarche of Jturia, and of the region of the Trachonites: and Lysanias the Tetrarche of Abilene, whā Annas and Caiphas wer the high priestes, the woorde of the Lorde came vnto Jhon the soonne of Zacharie, in the wyldernesse. And he came into al the coastes about Jordane, prechyng the baptisme of repentaunce for the remission of sinnes. as it is written in the booke of the woordes of Esai the Prophete, saiyng: The voice of a cryer in wyldernesse, prepaire ye the waie of the Lorde, & make his pathes streight. Euery valley shalbee filled, and euery mountaine and hille shalbee brought lowe, and thynges that bee crooked, shalbee made streight, and the rough waies, shalbee made plain: and all flesshe shall see the saluacion of God.

Thou hast heard good Theophilus wt what begynnynges bothe Jhon the forerenner, & also the Lorde Jesus made a waie, and a preparatif vnto the office of preachyng the ghospel. Now heare by what meanes, and with what successe thei enterprised and entred the matier, to the ende that thou maiest well vnderstande, that nothyng was dooē by happe or casualtie, ne through mānes wysdoome, but euerie whit by the prouidēce of God, temprеyng and ordreyng his owne matier after a newe maner of facion of his owne. For now was the tyme already come, ꝑ the heauenly kyngdome beeyng reuealed and published, the worldely kyngdome should abate and decaie: ꝑ spiritual priestehood beeyng disclosed, ꝑ shadowie priestehood, (wherein the Jewes had vntill that tyme made many glorious vaūtes & braggues of theimselfes) should vanishe clene awaie. Cesar the Emperour of Rome surnamed Augustus, had now ended his life, by whose proclamacio ꝑ whole worlde had afore been surueighed, and the names of euerie bodye within the empier registred in bookes, and in the tyme of his reigne Jesus Christe was borne. Wicked Herode also was now deceassed, who had sought Jesus beeyng an infaunte for to haue slain him. And Archelaus Herodes soonne for his behaueour ouer muche resemblyng his fathers wicked prankes, was exiled from his kyngdome into an other countrey. Tiberius Cesar had succeded Augustus in the empier. And in the fiftenth yere of his reigne Poncius Pilate a Romain was presidente of Jewrie. And Herode the brother of Archelaus by the election and appuinctement of the saied Tiberius the Emperour, had Galilee alloted vnto hym. Philip had receiued the rewle and gouernaunce of that parte of Syria, whiche is called Jturia: and it was called also Trachonitis, of the roughnesse of the mountaines, because that countrey is full of vphilles and dowonhilles, and almost no parte of it euen, or plain champian ground.

ground. For it goeth al alongst in hilles and dales from Libanus, and frō the mountaines of Idumea, vnto the west coaste of Syria. Thā moreouer that parte that is called Abilena, (of Abila the principall citie of thesame region,) was by assignemente come to the handes of Lysanias for his portion, who afterward chaunged the name therof, and called it Lysanion. For Augustus in his tyme, because he would sumwhat breake and enfeble the puissaunt force of that kyngdome, had made a diuision of it, and distribute it emong fower brethren, Herode, Philippe, Incipater, and Lysanias: whiche therefore wer called Tetrarches, that is to saie in Englishe, the fower Princes, or the fower head rewlers. For the name of a kyng was long afore abolished by a lawe of the Romaines, who would haue no kynges. And this was a token or rather a figure that the kyngdome of the Iewes should shortly after banishe awai accordyng to the Prophecie. But the holyest parte of Iewrie (wherein Hierusalem, and the Temple stood, and in whiche the Lorde of al was borne,) one Ponce Pilate a Romain, had the administracion and gouernaunce of: beeyng as it wer a figure plainly betokenyng euen by the verai case and thyng as it stood, that the Gētiles should breake into the kyngdome of heauen, whiche the Iewes would reiecte and vtterly despise. Likewyse the priesthood as a thyng that should soone after ceasse and haue an ende, went wādreyng and shifryng from one to an other out of due ordre, and was bought, and solde, and made euen a market matier: wherin at that tyme twoo notable vngodly men, Annas, and Caiphas had the highest & the chiefest roumes. Emiddes these matiers of diuidyng and mangleyng the countrey into soondrie rewlers handes, & in the middes of this verai troublesom state of thynges emōg the Iewes, the kyngdome of heauē, and a newe priestehood sprang vp, wherof Jhon the soonne of Zacharie was chosen and specially appuincted to bee an open preacher, and proclamer. This Jhon before laie hidden emong the wylde beastes, and passed a life of woōdreful streightnesse, cladde with a Camelles skynne, girt with a belte of a rough leather thong, feedyng vpon wyld honey and grassehoppers of that countrey, not so muche as tastyng any wyne or strong drynke, to the entente he might bee a mete preacher of repentaunce: and might teache the people by his life, before he should teache theim by his woordes: & might bee clere without all crimes hymself, who should so freely reprone the faultes & trāsgressions of other men: but now beeyng enspired with the holy ghoste, and admonished by thesame, he came out of the dēnes of wylderneste, and gat hym, not into the Temple, whiche place was reserued vnto Christe, but into all those quarters and coastes, whiche lye about the riuer Jordane, to the ende that he might haue the more plentie of water for suche as should bee baptised. And he preached that the kyngdome of heauen was at hand, exhortyng that the people should prepaire them selfes to the saluacion, (whiche approched) through repentaunce of their former liues: and that with ỹ baptisme of water, (whiche he in his persone gaue, beeyng but as a foregoer & a messagier of Christe,) thei should make theimselfes mete for the baptisme of the spirite, whiche spirite he should geue, whose comyng approched. These thynges wer thā dooen by inspiracion of ỹ holy ghoste, who long before had prophecied the same by the mouth of Esai the Prophete. For in this manier speaketh he of Jhons preachyng. The voice of a cryer i ỹ wilderneste, ỹ Lord approcheth, prepair his waies, make his pathes streight, leste beeyng offēded with with the vnto ward crookednesse of your condicions and behaueour, he spedily sterr backe awaie frō you. He cometh to al, all muste goe foorth to mete hym. All thynges must bee made plain and euen. Euerie valley shalbee filled vp, and euerie mountain, and hille shalbe brought down and made flatte. Thei whiche wer high emong men, because thei wer in a great opinion and estimacion of righteousnesse, or wysedome, shall abate their stately & proude countenaunce, that thei maie bee hable and apte to receiue the righteousnesse, and wysedome of God. And thei whiche as idiotes or men of no knowelage ne regarde, & as synners, wer out of all reputacion, vtterly despised as abiectes emōg mē, shall soodainly through their obedience to the ghospell bee reised vp vnto the felowship and communion, of the kyngdome of heauen. Suche thynges also, as tofore wer warped and wrieched soondrie waies, and stoode all crooked, shall in a moomente bee made euen and streight again with the squiere of the ghospell: and where places wer rough by reason of the thornes of manifolde vices, and naughtie desires and lustes, they shall now be made verai smoothe, and plain waies. For by & in suche myndes dooeth the Lorde loue to walke. And to suche extreme contraries shal the courses of all thynges at ỹ comyng of hym bee chaunged. Thei that wer in despaire, shalbee set vp in coūforte and hope again. Suche as trusted in theimselfes not caryng for any other helper or saliour, shalbe cast a waie and perishe, impossible to be recouered again. Thei that wer beforetimes estemed & reputed for wise, shall become fooles: and suche as wer accoumpted for fooles, shalbee endued with the gift of heauenly wysedome. Thei whiche tofore were idolatres, shal become true seruers and worshippers of the liuyng God: and thei whiche in outward semblaūce appered to bee true worshippers of God, shalbee found idolatres. Those that before wer wrathefull, shalbee quiete of mynde, and beneficial to others: and suche as serued the lustes of concupiscence and lecherie before, shall now loue and embrace all chastitee. Thei whiche before wer pollers & catchers awaie of mēs goodes, shall now freely without sparyng geue awaie of their owne. To this man therefore that shal make suche an alteracion & chaunge of thynges, prepaire your selfes. The Lorde will euen within a litell while bee here present in this worlde: and not onely the Iewes shall see hym, but all the nacions of the whole worlde shal with the yies of feithe, beholde hym that is the autour and geuer of saluacion: by and through whom, God maketh a free offre of the blisse of heauē, vnto al suche persones as through godly prōpterneesse and readinesse to beleue, and through correccion and emendement of their former liues, shall receiue hym whan he cometh.

The texte. ¶ Thē saied he to the people that wer come foorth to bee baptised of hym: O ye generacion of vipers, who hath taught you to flee frō ỹ wrathe to come? bring ye foorth therefore the due fruictes of repentaūce, & begyn not to saie with your selfes, we haue Abraha to our father. For I saie vnto you, God is hable of these stones, to reise vp children vnto Abraha. Now also is the axe laied vnto the roote of ỹ trees, euerie tree therefore whiche bringeth not foorth good fruicte is hewen down, and cast into the fyer.

All this had Esai so many hundred yeres before prophecied of Ihon: and nothyng there was, but in the ende it came to passe, and proued agreable vnto the Prophecie in euery behalf, and in euerie pointe. For at Ihons preaching, a great multitude of people leauyng their houses (& declaryng by thesame their dooyng as plainly as if thei had spoken it in woordes, that whoso erneslly myndeth or desireth to atteigne to saluacion, must dooe awaie and forsake the carnall affeccions that he hath at home in ỹ house of his herte,) dyd by heapes reſorte vnto the shore of fluime Jordane, that thei might bee diepped in water by hym: not that Jhon was a forgeuer of synnes, or coulde so dooe: but because that he with this begynnyng and preaũble, did prepaire folkes hertes & myndes vnto the redempcion and saluacion that was commyng. For a good great parte and towardnesse of health it is, to acknowelage ones self to bee sicke: and a great auauntage & forederle towardes recouerie hath that persone, whiche is apte & willyng to take ỹ maie bee a remedie for his disease. And for asmuche as the first steppe & degree to emẽdmẽte springeth out of the feare of God, (so that we first feare the iuste punishemẽte at the hãdes of ỹ righteous auenger, & than loue the liberalitie of so bounteous a Lorde,) Jhon cryed out with a great boldenesse & plainnesse against the proude Phariseis, & Scribes, who tofore had euer sticked fast and continued in the steppes of their wicked fathers, & thorough the false persuasion of righteousnesse, wer puffed vp in pryde, though thei wer strong enemies vnto true religion, settyng other men at nought, & standyng highly in their owne conceiptes for none other cause so muche, as for the respecte that thei wer descended of Abraham, by the lignage & descent of ỹ fleashe, as though God estemed men after their kynred or linage, & not rather accordyng to the vertues & godly qualities of their myndes. O ye generacion of vipers (saieth he) moste vicious and corrupt children, descended of moste vicious and corrupte auncestrie: whereby haue ye perceiued and found out, that the vengeaunce of God hangeth ouer you, onlesse ye in season emende your liues. What person hath geuen you any bywarnyng or watche woorde to flee from the moste sharp punishemente & scourge of God, whiche shall spare no age, whiche shall pardone no nacion, nor shall shewe fauour to no degree or estate of men high or lowe. Lyke as remedie is offreed vnto all suche as will yelde theimselfes to be cured and healed: so doeth punishemente abyde al persones indifferẽtly without exceptcion, as many as refuse to emẽde from their olde naughtie behaueour & conuersacion. Why did not entier loue towardes God allure you hither before, as wel as ỹ feare & drede of punishemente dooeth violẽtly hale you hither now at this presente? your myndes and hertes are as yet nothyng chaunged at al. Wherefore yf ye without any feignyng or dissimulacion bee penitente & sorie for your wicked life past, chaunge your condicions, and be ye of an other sort of conuersacion, thẽ heretofore ye haue been, and declare plainly by your verai dooynges, that ye are reformed & emẽded. Ye haue vnto this daie hitherto lyke wylde trees, brought foorth ỹ soure and pestilent fruictes of euill woorkes, that is to wete, pryde, wrathfulnesse, auarice, enuie, hypocrisie, & contẽcion. Now if ye be in verai dede turned frõ euill trees into good trees, bryng ye foorthe good fruictes, suche as maie testifie your hertes to bee truely altered into a better frame. It is not here now requisite nor any thyng materiall, that ye chaunge your garmentes, or to leaue and take this or that kynde of meate: but ye must chaunge the euill lustes of your hertes. This is in verai dede the roote of the tree, whiche roote if it haue a bittur and a venemous sape, than spryng there none but euill fruictes out of the braunches: but contrarie wyse if the roote ministre and send vp a pleasaunte and holsome sape to the boughes: than dooe there growe foorth vpon the braũches those fruictes of the spirite, that are semely for God, & woorthie acceptacion: that is to wete, entier loue in stede of hatered: for bittur frou-

And he saied to the people.

O ye generacion of vipers.

Bryng ye foorth therefore due fruictes of repentaunce.

nyng,

nyng, godly ioye and lightenesse of herte: for discorde, peace: for fiercenesse, sufferaunce: for snatchyng and pollyng, liberalitee: for lecherousnesse, chastitee: for deceiptefull craftinesse, simplicitee and plain dealyng: for pe umptuous takyng vpon hym, humble sobrenesse: for superstition, true godlinesse. These are the thynges whiche declare who bee the true and vncorrupted Iewes: these be the thynges that declare who be circumcised as they oughte to bee, and who are the verai true children of Abraham in dede: these sacrifices they are, that God is delyted withall. Nowe is the lighte at hãde, leat shadowes passe awaie: the trueth is in place, awaie with all countrefaicte hypocrisie: doce awaie your vain confidence, whiche the figures of ghostly thynges haue nourysshed in you, and not the thynges selfes: as for exaumple, whan ye saie in the way of glorifyng: Hierusalem that holy citie of ours: the lordes Temple, the lordes Temple, the lordes Temple: also suche figures of thynges as here folowerh, that is to wete, slaughter of bruite beastes in sacrifice: ordeinyng and solẽne halowyng of sabbooth daies. obseruyng of newe moones: choice and difference betwene one meate and an other: brode gardes vpon vestures (whiche ye call your phylacteries) fastyng and abstinence, with heauynesse & louryng of countenaunce: and the residue of obseruaunces a great maignie, whiche either the lawe did for a tyme prescribe and appoynete as figures of thynges, to bee referred to the mynde: orels the Pharisees haue inuented for a vain pretense of holynesse: all these thynges euerie one, with circumcisiõ it self, and altogether, shall ceasse and bee abolished. And suche an one shal frõ hensfoorth bee estemed for a Iewe of the right sorte, whatsoeuer he bee, that shall confesse, and acknowelage hym, whose comyng shall now, ere lõg, bee seen to the worlde. And suche an one shalbee taken for a mãne rightly circumcised as he should bee, whosoeuer shall haue an herte pourged through feith, from al inordinate lustes and desires. Leat it therefore no more entre into your hertes to thynke with your selues vainglorioussly: It is we that are the heritage, the succession, and the children of Abraham: it is we and none els, to whom the inheritaunce of saluacion hath been promised: the lorde will not forsake vs that are his people. Naie I saie vnto you, that lyke as the wickednesse of your forefathers shalbee no thyng prẽiudiciall nor hurtefull to you, in case ye emende and take better waies: euen so shall the holynesse of your progenitour Abraham nothyng auayl you, if ye will still cõtinue in your olde vngodlinesse. ye will bee cast awaie, ye will surely bee disherited, ye will vtterly perishe to eternall damnacion, onlesse beeyng conuerted & turned to a better life, ye bryng foorth suche fruictes, as maie semely and woorthily stand with the ghospell. Neyther shall Abraham bee destitute of posteritee or succession, nor god want a people of his owne, of whom to bee condignely worshipped and serued, and to whom to performe the inheritaunce by hym promised, though ye should shrynke and fall awaie from him. For this dare I be bolde to auouche and to assure vnto you, God is not vnhable, but hath power enough, euen of these stones here, to reise vp children vnto his frende Abraham, to whom he promised issue and succession, lyke in noumber to the sandes of the sea, and to the sterres in the skye. In tyme herafter to come, the children of Abraham shalbee estemed and accepted, not after the kynred of bloud, but as euerie one shall folowe, and resemble Abraham in feith. Abraham shall acknowelage and accepte for his children, euen the Sogdians, the Gothians, and the woylde Scythians,

And beeynne not to saie with youre selues: we haue Abrahã to our father.

God is hable of these stones to reise vp children vnto Abraham.

Scythians, if thei embrace Messias, and shall coumpte and repute you for alienes and straunge borne bastardes, onlesse ye turne to the feith and beleue. God hath hitherto shewed pacience & suffraunce towardes you, though ye haue but euen soso brought forth the outwarde fruictes of the lawe, suche as thei wer: that is to saie, sacrifices, vowes, fastynges, washynges, differences of meates, and paryng awaie of the foreskyn in circumcision. But these thinges had no more but superficially an outward apparence of religion. And these are but leaues of the tree, detestable afore God, excepte the fruictes of the spirite be ioyned therwith. But now fromhensforth shal euery body be estemed a recordyng to the true treasures of the hearte and the solle, euē as they shalbe found good or euil. Now is there come a more streight and precise iudgement of God: and come heis, that seeth the botome of the diepest secretes of the herte. For now is the axe euen ready sette hard by the roote of ỹ tree, that hath so long tyme been suffred. Abrahams people shalbe hewen away from the stemme therof, and the heathen (so many as in prōpte readynesse of beleuyng shal resemble Abraham,) shalbe grafted in theyr places. Moses had no eare geuē vnto him: ỹ Prophetes wer not herkened vnto, of whom a great maignie ye slewe and put to death: at the voice of the lawe ye haue hitherto been of dul and deaf eares: now is he come whose greatter there can none be sent, and after whom there is none to be looked for. Utter perishyng for euer hangeth ouer the whole nacion of the Israelites, except ye repente betyme and growe to more goodnesse. For euery tree whiche shal not now bryng forth ỹ good fruicte of feith, shalbe felled doune, & cast into the fyer. Meane is there none, nor respecte is there none: but either through, true godlynes, to make haste vnto euerlastyng saluacion: or not so doyng remediles and vtterly to be damned for euer.

Now also is the axe layed to the rootes of the trees.

Euerie tree therefore. &c.

And the people asked him, saiyng: what shal we doo then? He answered and sayed vnto them, he that hath two cotes, leat him parte with him, that hath none, and he that hath meate, leat him dooe lykewyse,

The common multitude of the Iewes beyng sore adradde with these terrible, and manacyng wordes of Iohn, sayd vnto him: If it be so as ye say, what thinke ye than good for vs to dooe, whereby to avoide and escape the wrath of God, and to atteigne saluacion? Now beganne thei to weare somewhat curable, and toward to bee healed, when they acknowlaged theyr diseases, and earnestly desyred remedy. Iohn therfore sheweth them a remedy of perfect strength and efficacie at al assaies. For he calleth them not, ne exhorteth them to the sacrifices of beastes, and suche other Iudaical meanes of pourgeyng theyr sinnes: but vnto the workes of charitie. God is with no sacrifice in the worlde more sooner pacified, then with beneficial doyng to our neighbour. God hath no nede of any benefites of ours, but he suffreth it to be reckened as dooen to him self, whatsoeuer we bestowe vpon our neighbour beyng in necessitee or nede. He that hath two coates (saieth Iohn) leat him couer his naked brother with the one of thē. And he that hath asmuche meate, as may suffise for twain, leat him geue halfe therof to another that is hungrie. With these two examples Iohn taught the people of the grosse and blockishe ignoraunt multitude, that the most strongest and effectual meane to appeace God beeyng offended with vs, is, if we by all meanes bee franke and bountiful in doyng good to our neighbour, whatsoeuer thyng he hath neede of: whether it bee apparel, or meate, or drynke, or harbourgh, or aide & succour against violence, or comfortable wordes in tyme of sorowe, or doctrine for his enstruction, or good exhortacion and counsail. And bounde we be to helpe the present necessitee of our brother, not onely with part of those thynges wherof our selues haue superfluitee or more then we neede, but also we ought to cut of a litel share of suche thynges, as might otherwyse stande vs in good steede for our owne vses and occupiyng, as often as our neighbours necessitie requireth present helpe out of hand. This remedie thā it was that was geuen by Jhon to the common multitude, whiche remedie neuertheless serueth for al men indifferently.

The texte. Then came the publicanes also to be baptised, and sayd vnto him, Maister, what shal we doo? And he sayd vnto them, require nomore thē that whiche is appointed vnto you.

Then came also the publicans, that is to say, the customers and takers vp of tolles, beeyng semblably striken with great feare at Jhons preachyng, wheras otherwyse they wer a kynde of people geuen to pollyng, & rauine, & geattyng al that they might for theyr owne singuler auauntage and lucre, with all other mennes losse, dammage, & hinderaunce, men nothyng passyng on religiō or on the feare of God, but more ready to obeye ỹ cōmaūdemētes of worldly princes, then the preceptes of God: whiche sorte of men, wheras they haue an euil name emong all nacions, & be cōmonly il spoken of, yet amōg the Jewes thei wer specially aboue al other sortes of mē abhorred & reputed abominable. And yet the sore sharp preachyng of Jhon had striken suche an horrible great feare into them al, that euen thei too, as euil as thei wer, came to Jhon, requiryng baptisme, and desiryng to learne how & what way thei might appease the wrathe of God. And Jhon the true foregoer & messagier of him, who would driue backe or put away no man (wer he neuer so muche spotted or defiled with synne) made a softe and a ientile aunswer euen to publicans also: if ye cannot yet (saieth he) fynde in your hertes to geue out to the pore and nedie some parte of that that is your proper owne: yet at leastwyse make ye this one steppe towardes a better life, that from henceforth ye holde your handes from pollyng and catchyng away the gooddes of other men. Ye haue an annual stipende and an ordinarie fee of Cesar: and it is rated out vnto you by a plain rule, how muche or litel ye ought to require of the people for any duetie.

The texte. The soldiers lykewyse demaunded of hym saiyng: And what shal we doo? And he sayd vnto them: hurt ye no man, neither trouble any man wrongfully. And be content with your wagies.

The soldiers likewise demaunded. &c.

After the Publicans, came soldiers also, an vnrewly and an vngodly kynde of people, hauyng no regarde ne care of any lawes, headie & hastie to do wrong, and felowes that vsed to sel theyr life and solle for money, settyng al theyr delite and felicitie, in catchyng and robbyng from other men, fierce & presumpteous through ouermuche libertee & sufferaunce. Neuertheless the feare of Goddes vengeaunce fel vpō these men too, & therefore thei also came to Jhon. Thei acknowelaged theyr wicked state of soldiership (as they vsed it,) thei desyre baptisme, & require moreouer to be enfourmed, what possible meanes they might make, to haue God appeased towardes them. It was surely in this kynde of menne a great poinct of fertheraūce towardes health, that they would acknowelage theyr disease, and wer pricked with desyre of a better life. Therefore Jhon would not at the fyrst day auenture to require in suche as these wer, that thei should shewe beneficial liberalitee towardes theyr neighbour, because he thought it to bee a steppe sufficient and great enough for the fyrst settyng forward towardes God, if suche as thei wer, would honestely refraine and kepe themselues from doyng mischief about in places where thei came. And to speake more of this sorte of men, in dede thei are wont to be noisome and hurtefull in thre poyntes especially, that is to wete, in violente oppression, in laiyng to mennes charges, and burdenyng them with false crymes, and in pielage or robbery. For often tymes the weapons whiche the princes haue deliuered vnto them for defence and maintenaunce of the publike tranquilitee, thei turne to the hurte of theyr verai owne countreymen beeyng true subiectes, and do auenge theyr owne priuate malice with thesame weapon, wherwith the safetie of the whole people in general ought to haue been defended. So that oftentymes thei goe on theuyng for booties, and spoile the countrey, thei burne, thei drieue away mennes catalle, thei rauishe weomen, thei breake vp mennes houses, thei turne the good man of the house where thei haue lodged or been entretained, thei turne him clene out of his owne doores, and poumble him about the pāte. And he sayed hurte ye no man, 16.

And because thei dooe oftentymes plaie these partes, and haue nothyng sayd nor dooen to thē for it, thei thinke thei may do it lawefully. Again, some of them promote false plaintes against honest simple men before theyr princes or captaines, for none other purpose, sauyng that a portion of the parties gooddes beyng seased as a forfaict, may come to their snapshare in rewarde of theyr false accusacion maliciously and slaundreously prepensed. And at suche vngracious prankes the princes do oftentymes winke, while thei ernestely tendre the gratifiyng of theyr seruauntes. Furthermore some of this sorte of people, whan thei prodigally consume and waste out vpō harlottes, vpon dice, or in banketting, and reuellyng at the wyne, all that euer theyr prince doeth in the name of a fee or stiepende allow them, they make vp theyr losse again with pielyng and pickyng: and do not onely leaue suche duties as thei ough still vnpaied, but also dooe by plain extorcion pull frō poore housebandemen that, that is no duetie at al: and so vndre the name and colour of warre, thei thinke nothyng what euer it be, to be vnlawful for them to do, wheras in verai dede there is a due lawe of armes seruyng for batalle and warre, whiche warre in dede is not vtterly to be disalowed, in case it be attempted for a iuste and a righful cause, that is to say, if it bee made for the defence and maintenaunce of the publique tranquillitie of a realme and countrey: if the case so stande, ỹ it cannot be auoided: if it be enterprised by godly princes: if with the consente of them, for whose behouf it is expedient or necessary that the warre should be made: if it haue been denounced or proclaimed with al rites and circumstances accordyng to the lawe of armes: if iustice and moderacion be vsed in it, that is to say, if warre be so kept, with as muche sparyng of bloudshed, as possible may bee: if as fewe be lost, as may bee, especially of them that neuer gaue any cause to the warre: if the vnaduised wilfulnes and hastynes of the soldiers be bridled by the captaines: if ther be no buckling together of the two armies, sauyng onely by suche soldiars and men of armes, as haue geuen theyr othe afore to do as thei ought to do and none other wyse: nor without a signe to be geuen by commaunde-ment of the captain whā thei shal buckle together in fight: if euery bodye immediately holde theyr handes from fightyng, as soone as euer trompetes haue ons blowen retraicte: if also as soone as it possibly may, the warre be ended and so breake vp. Vnto this sorte of men therefore doeth Jhon nothyng but shewe, what theyr accustomed vse is to do, and what thyng from henssoorth they ought to eschew, if they mynde to escape ỹ vengeaunce of God. Strieke ne beate ye no man (saieth he) accuse no man falsely for lucres sake: but be ye contented with your ordinarie waiges that is allowed you.

The texte. As the people wer in a doubte, and all men mused in theyr hertes of Jhon, whether he wer verai Christ, Jhon aunswered and sayd vnto them all: I baptise you with water, but one stronger then I shal come after me, whose shooe latchet I am not worthie to vnlooce shal baptise you with the holy ghoste, and with fyer. Whiche hath his fanne in his hande, and he will pourge his flooze, and gather the corne into his barne, but the chaffe will he burne with fyer, that neuer shalbe quenched. And many other thynges in his exhortacion preached he vnto the people.

As the people wer in a doubte. &c. whether he wer verai Christ.

And with suche great authoritee wer the premisses handled and dooen by Jhon, that the people begoonne halfe to bee in opinion, that him selfe was the verai Messias, of whose comyng he preached vnto them. And this did a great maignie of theim with secrete thynkyng cast in theyr hertes, though Jhon on his owne behalf, by reason of his singular humilitee of herte, did as muche as he could to hide his owne greatnes. For this is the light & cockebrained facion of the common multitude, that suche persones as thei haue a special mynde and regarde vnto, thei sette more pryce by, then ther is cause or reason why: & suche as thei beare hatered against, suche do thei most slaunderously reporte, findyng faulte with all thynges in them. But this earnest good fauour and opinion of the people did wel declare verai perfeicte humilitee in this most holy man, who was so ferre from takyng vnto him the auauntage of an other mannes praise, that he stoutly refused the same beyng geuen vnto him of the peoples owne voluntarie offre. And the wrong opinion that the people wer in, did muche good for this one puincte, that the dignitee and worthynesse of Christ beeyng as yet knowen but to a fewe, was there allowed with a substancial and an open testimonie in the face of ỹ worlde. For Jhon as soone as he by inspiracion of the holy ghoste, wel perceiued the secrete thoughtes of the people, he spake in this manet: Sirs (saieth he) ye do esteme me by outward thinges that may bee seen, as for example, by the meate that ye see me eate, by my wede, and by this that I dooe ministre baptisme vnto you: but the thynges that bee not seen, are a great dele more effectual: euen after the same rate as in a man the vertue of the mynde whiche is not seen, is of muche more dignitie & worthynesse, then the power of the bodye that is seen with mennes yies.

I baptise you with water. I on my behalf, though I do baptise you with water, yet am I no remitter of synnes, I am nomore but a preparer of you to a baptisme of more efficacie and vertue, whiche ye shal receiue at the handes of him, whose commyng I preache vnto you, beeyng, as in dede I am, somewhat his elder in tyme, and somewhat afore him in order and course of preachyng: but in power a great way inferiour vnto him. For he that commeth after me, is so ferre better then I, that I (whom ye all beleue to bee some great high man of price) am vnworthy to vnbuckle the latchet of his shooes. And I am his seruaunt, not his felowe: I am a foregoer vnto him, but euen of muche

lyke rate, as the day sterre goeth before the sunne, and shal anon after bee derkened and drouned with the greatter light of the sunne when it commeth. And euen verai this that I haue, I haue of his bounteous goodnesse. My doctrine is but verai washe, if it be compared vnto his doctrine: my baptisme is of no vertue, if it be sette by his baptisme.

For he, because he is come from heauen, wyll teache heauenly thynges: I beeyng but an yearthly creature, dooe speake yearthly thynges and lowe matiers. I diep your bodyes in water, but he shal diep your soules, and baptise you with the holy ghoste and with fyer. And looke how muche the spirite is of more strength to entre and to perce, thē is water, looke howe muche the fyer is of more strength and effect than is water, of so muche more power shal his baptisme be, then myne is: hitherto hath it been vnknowen, who wer the true folowers of godlynes. An easie thing it is to be washed with water, a light matier it is to kille a beaste in sacrifice: an easy poynt it is to forbeare eatyng of swynes fleashe. But now doeth suche doctrine come to light, suche tymes dooe approche euen here at hande, that they can no longer be vnknowen who be good folkes in verai dede, and who be otherwyse. For he wyll come to dooe the thyng that he hath so often tymes thretened in the prophetes, whiche is, by a precise streight iudgement, to disclose a perfeict difference betwene the godly and the wicked. For he wyl haue in his hande a fanne, (for vnto this man is geuen al power in heauen and on yearth,) and with this fanne, whiche noman shalbe able to auoid, he shall make clene the flooze of his winnowyng place, and there winnowe euery creature, tryng them with the wynde of the crosse and of afflictions. And suche persones as are but chaffe, that is to say, in pretense of holynes, metely gaye, but withinfoorth voide and emptie of al deuocion, shal fligh about this way and that way, whither soeuer carnal desyre and affection shal carry them: but suche as are good wheate, hauing within thē substancial and true godlines, shal not be scattred abrode al about with the wynde: but whan the chaffe is tryed awaie, they shall declare the substancial stedfastnes of theyr mynde, whiche nothyng could moue. That tēpeste shal not make any persones euil, but shal shewe them openly to be knowen what they wer, euen when thei wer not seen, in like sorte as the clere light, where it is, doeth not make any persones blynd or defourmed, but sheweth who be defourmed or blynde. The trueth of the ghospel is bright lyght whiche they shal not abyde nor away withal, whiche did afore shewe furth theyr paincted sheathe vnder the counterfaict cloke of holines, whereas afore God they wer men of wickednes: and cōtrary wise they shall be embraced and muche made of, whiche wheras vnto the worldwarde they were reputed for abiectes, yet neuertheleſſe had a perfeict zele of godly deuocion in theyr brestes. Suche persones as at the strong force of the doctrine of god, whan they heare it, shalbe moued and stiered to dooyng of myschief, and to slaughter, shall not than first of al bee made wicked: but suche occasion beeyng geuen, it shall openly appere what manier felowes thei wer afore. For an occasion dooeth not make folkes wicked, but dooeth discouer theim and shewe theim as thei bee. Suche an one as whan the losse of gooddes is set before his yies, or whan peril of any crosse or of death is shewed hym, wyll fall from the professyng of the trueth, and forsake it, shall not euen than first of all begynne to bee wicked, but he shall at suche a tyme plainly declare what manier one he was afore. Neither shall euerie one by and by that is diepped in water, endure throughout in this examinacion or tryall: but suche an one as hath fully receiued into hym the spirite of god, and he that hath throughly conceiued the fyer of charitee & loue vnperishable: suche an one shall not be moued with any stormes of mysauentures or euyls, but shall rather be the more better pourged, and the more stedfast, in lyke sorte as wheate and other graine is pourged, and made clene with the fannyng of the wynde, and as golde is scoured by the vertue of ỹ fyer. Leat therefore euerie bodye prepaire theimselues to this rigourous & precise tryall, trustyng not a whit to his noblenesse of byrth, puttyng none affiaunce in the holynesse of his auncestrie, nor puttyng no truste in the carnall cremonies of Moses lawe, but armyng and fensyng his solle with fortresses, and wardes of more pithy substaūce to truste to. It shalbee no smal

Healthy euerlastyng, and euerlastyng damnacion shall trye out and diuide the sounde, from the lightones that are but puffes, and the right borne Israelites from the bastardes. For the well clensed corne shall he laie vp into the barne of the heauenly lyfe, and the chaffe shall he burne vp in fyer that neuer shall bee quēched. The iudgemente shall here in some piece bee shewed, but after this present life it is, that the wicked receiue the affliccion of endelesse peine and tormente. With these and many other saiynges mo, did Jhon exhorte the people to repentaunce of their former life, and to the desire of Messias, whiche was than shortely to come, now puttyng them in feare of perill, now stiryng theim to goodnesse with promisse of rewardes, and (as ye would saie) awakenyng the myndes of the people vnto the earneste zele of euangelicall godlynesse, with the gladsome newes of redempcion and saluacion.

The texte. ¶ Than Herode the Tetrarche (whan he was rebuked of hym for Herodias his brother Philips wyfe, and for all the euils whiche Herode did) added this aboue all, and laied Jhon in prison.

And this boldnesse of speakyng so plainly, the common vulgare people in consideracion of the notable holynesse of the man, could abyde veraie well: the Publicanes could suffre it wellenough: ỹ soldiers also tooke it i good parte: and all these whan they wer reproued, did willyngly acknowelage their disease, and beeyng brought in a feare, thei sought for remedie. But Herode
But Herode et laied Jhon in prison. could in no wyse awaye withall, who with his hault stomake (because he was a kyng) would haue all thynges to be lawfull for hym, that stoode with his lust or fansie. Yet did he beare veraie good fauour & loue to Jhon. He veraie well sawe and also dyd no lesse allow ỹ perfeccion of his lyfe, beyng suche as was in fewe men, yea & in many thynges would he also be rewled by the counsaill of Jhon. But yet in that poynte in whiche it had been chiefly of al expedient & behoueable to geue eare vnto Jhons saiynges, he did not onely not doo after his counsell, but also cast hym in prison for geuyng hym good aduertisemente. And brought Jhon to destruccion, whan Jhon was diligent to cal hym backe frō distruccion. Of this sorte are often tymes the hertes of suche princes, as the wysedome of the ghospell hath not throughly woonne ne recouered frō ỹ dominion of abominable lustes. Some suche mē bee lordes & rewlers ouer others, as on their owne behalfes are bondeseruauntes to their owne violent & strong affeccions: & suche thynke thēselfes euen for this poynte specially to bee kynges, that thei be slaues & bōde men to abominaabominacion, no mā saiyng blacke their yle. Thei many tymes call vnto their seruice to bee about thē, mē wel approued & knowen for their holynesse of liuyng, thei haue many tymes priuate cōmunicaciō wt thesame, & after ỹ coūsail or aduise of suche thei dooe many thynges: not that thei haue delite i true godlynes, but ỹ thei maie by suche a cloke purchase to thēselfes an opinion of perfeict liuyng, & ỹ thei maie some what mollifie mēnes repinyng & grutching at their naughtie dooynges: or to ỹ ēde, ỹ whā thei piele & polle ỹ people, whā thei reise wieked battail, whā thei plaie tyrānous partes towardes some ỹ beare good herte & wille to ỹ cōmon weale: thei maie seme to dooe these thynges too, by ỹ coūsail of moste approoued honeste mē. And euē in ỹ lyke sorte did Herode abuse ỹ pilche of Camels hyde, wher with Jhon was clad: in the lyke sort did he abuse the leatherne belt wherwith Jhon was girt: so did he abuse the spare diete ỹ Jhon vsed: so did he the innocētie of Jhōes whole lyfe lykewyse did he ỹ autorite of Jhon, through whiche he might dooe verie muche with the people, & altogether to ỹ maintenaunce of his owne tyrānie. And for this cause the lord Jesus dooeth afterward cal hym fore. For this is ỹ wylie craftinesse of euill prīces of this world: vnto whō if it shall at any tyme fortune right professours of ỹ gholpell to bee called to seruice, either ỹ gholpellers muste eschewe the coūpaignie & conuersaciō of suche maisters, i whose houses they shall sooner be marred & brought to naughtynesse on their owne parties, thē thei shall turne the others to better waies: or els thei must prepaire their myndes afore hande to the lyke rewarde, for shewyng the trueth without dissimulacion, that Jhon fortuned to geatte for his labour. For whan Herode nothyng growyng out of kynde frō the maniers & facions of his father & others his auncestoures, plaied many wieked & tyrānous partes pielyng & polling the people, pullyng awaie all libertee by oppression punishyng i others thesame thynges in whiche he was a cōmō offēder hymselfe, vsyng all offices of magistrates vnder him as sale ware for money, vsyng also to sell the ministraciōs of priestehood, & kepyng within his house openly in the face of all the worlde, one Herodias, the wyfe of Philippe beeyng his brother, & had by force of strong hande taken hir awaie frō his saied brother beeyng yet aliue, together with a doughter of thesame Philippe: this holy man because he could not abyde suche inceste and vnnaturallnesse of mariage in a kynges house, frō whens especially aboue all other places, it was cōueniente that exaumple of kepyng the lawes should procede, aduertised hym to refrayne hymselfe frō suche a wieked misdede. But with a deiulishe kyng, the deiulishe request of a gierle beeyng a minion dauncer together with the suggestion of a deiulishe woman, weighed more, then the holsome aduertisement of so vncorrupt a man: with the which good aduertisemēte he was nothyng the better, but remained still so ferre out of the waie from beeyng emended, ỹ vnto his hainous enormities afore past, he added one dede of myschief more, the moste vngracious that euer was: that is to wete, castyng Jhō in prisō, and procedyng so ferre at last in outragious woodnesse, that he caused the head of the moste innocent man to bee chopt of, and so gaue it to the wenche for a rewarde of hir vicious wanton dauncyng.

¶ And it fortuned that whan all the people receiued baptisme, (and whan Jesus was baptised, and did praie,) the heauen was opened, and the holy ghoste came down in a bodely shape lyke a doue vpon hym. And a voice came from heauen whiche saied: Thou art my beloued sonne, in thee dooe I delite.

But now, (to returne to the discourse of the storie) before that the
